Solomon's Dedication of the Temple.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

WHEN Solomon had finiſh'd the Temple, which was in the eleventh Year of his Reign, and in the eighth Month of that Year, even when all the ſolemn Feaſts were over, he thought it adviſeable to defer the Dedication of it, until the next Year, (which was a Year of Jubilee) and determin'd to have it done ſome Days before the † Feaſt of Tabernacles. To

† This Feaſt was appointed in Commemoration of the Children of Iſrael's dwelling in Booths, whilſt they were in the Wilderneſs, and of the Tabernacle, which at that Time was built, where God promiſ'd to meet them, to this Purpoſe, he ſent all the Elders of Iſrael, the Princes of the Tribes, and the Heads of the Families Notice to repair to Jeruſalem at the Time appointed; when accordingly all being met together, the Prieſts and Levites carry'd into the Temple, firſt, all the Preſents, that David had made to it; then ſet up, in their ſeveral Places, the Veſſels and Ornaments appointed for the Service of the Altar, and the Sanctuary; and, laſtly, brought the ‖ Ark of the Covenant, together with the † Tabernacle of the Congregation, into its new Habitation with great Solemnity; the King and Elders of the People walking before, while others of the Prieſts offer'd an † infinite Number of Sacrifices, in all the Places, through which the Ark paſs'd.

WHEN the Ark was plac'd in the Sanctuary, and the Prieſts and Levites, in their Turns, were celebrating the Praiſes of God, the Temple was filled with a * miraculous Cloud, inſomuch, that the Prieſts could not continue to officiate.

dwell among them, and to ſanctify the Place with his Glory; and might therefore be well reckon'd a very proper Seaſon, for the Dedication of the Temple, which was to ſucceed in the Tabernacle's Place. Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi. c. 2.

‖ The ſacred Hiſtory tells us, that in this Ark there was nothing, ſave the two Tables of Stone, which Moſes put there at Horeb, 1 Kings viii. 9. and yet the Author to the Hebrews affirms, that in this Ark was the Golden Pot, that had Manna, and Aaron's Rod that budded, as well as the Tables of the Covenant, Heb. ix. 4. Now, to reconcile this, ſome imagine, that before the Ark had any fix'd and ſettled Place, (which is the Time the Apoſtle refers to) all theſe Things were included in it, tho' it was chiefly intended for nothing, but the Tables of the Covenant; but that, when it was plac'd in the Temple, nothing was left in it, but theſe two Tables; all the other Things were depoſited in the Treaſury of the Temple, where the Book of the Law (as we read, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 14.) was found in the Days of King Joſias. Others however pretend, that, in the Time of the Apoſtle, i. e. towards the End of the Jewiſh Commonwealth, Aaron's Rod, and the Pot of Manna were really kept in the Ark, though, in the Days of Solomon, they were not. But this Anſwer would be more ſolid and ſatisfactory, if we knew for certain, that, in the Times of the Apoſtle, the Ark of the Covenant was really in the Sanctuary of the Temple, which Herod built, whereas Joſephus (de Bello Jud. lib. vi. c. 6.) tells us expreſsly, that, when the Romans deſtroy'd the Temple, there was nothing found in the Holy of Holies. Calmet's Commentary.

† But the Queſtion is, what Tabernacle, whether that, which Moſes made, and was then at Gibeon, 2 Chron. i. 3. or that, which was made by David, and was then at Jeruſalem? To end this Diſpute, ſome have imagin'd, that both theſe Tabernacles were, at this Time, carry'd into the Temple, and laid up there, that all Danger of Superſtition and Idolatry might thereby be avoided, and that no Worſhip might be perform'd any where, but only at the Houſe, which was dedicated to God's Service: But it is obſerv'd by others, that the Convenience, which David made for the Reception of the Ark, was never called the Tabernacle of the Covenant; it was no more than a plain Tent, ſet up in ſome large Room of the royal Palace, until a more proper Receptacle could be provided for it: But the Tabernacle, that was at Gibeon, was the ſame that ſojourn'd ſo long in the Wilderneſs. The Tent was the ſame, the Curtains the ſame, and the Altar the ſame, that was made by Moſes; or, at leaſt, if there was any Alteration in it, (as Things of this Nature could hardly ſubſiſt ſo very long without ſome Repair) the Reparation was always made according to the original Model, and with as little Deviation as poſſible. It is not to be doubted then, but that the Moſaick Tabernacle is the Tabernacle here intended, which, for the Prevention of Schiſm, and to make the Temple the Center of Devotion, was now taken down, and repoſited in the Treaſury, or Store-Houſe, where it continu'd until the Time that Jeruſalem was taken by the Chaldeans, when Jeremiah, as Joſephus informs us, (Jewiſh Antiq. lib. viii. c. 2.) was admoniſh'd by God, to take it, and the Ark, and the Altar of Incenſe, and hide them in ſome ſecret Places, (from whence, it is doubted, whether they have ever yet been remov'd) for fear of Profanation. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

† The Number of Sacrifices, which, upon this Occaſion, are ſaid to be offer'd, was two and twenty Thouſand Oxen, and an hundred and twenty thouſand Sheep, 1 Kings viii. 63. but we muſt not ſuppoſe, that theſe were offer'd all on one Day, much leſs on one Altar. The Continuance of this Meeting was for fourteen Days, ſeven in the Feaſt of Tabernacles, and ſeven in that of the Dedication; and becauſe the brazen Altar, before the Door of the Temple, was not ſufficient to receive all theſe Sacrifices, Solomon, by a ſpecial Licence from God, order'd other Altars to be erected in the Court of the Prieſts, and perhaps in other Places, which were to ſerve only during this preſent Solemnity, when ſuch a vaſt Number of Sacrifices were to be offer'd: For, at other Times, no other Altar was allow'd but this brazen one, which Moſes had made. It is no bad Obſervation however of Joſephus, (lib. viii. c. 2.) that, during the Oblation of ſo many Sacrifices, the Levites took Care to perfume the Air with the Fragrancy of Incenſe, and ſweet Odours to ſuch a Degree, that the People were ſenſible of it at a Diſtance; otherwiſe the Burning of ſo many Beaſts, at one Time, muſt have occaſion'd an offenſive Smell. Patrick's Commentary.

* When Moſes had finiſh'd the Tabernacle, according to the Pattern, which God had ſhew'd him, and ſet it all up, it is ſaid, that a Cloud covered the Tent of the Congregation, and the Glory of the Lord filled the Tabernacle, ſo that Moſes was not able to enter into the Tent of the Congregation, becauſe the Cloud abode thereon, and the Glory of the Lord filled the Tabernacle, Exod. xl. 34, 35. And therefore, when the Temple was finiſh'd, and the Ark brought into

This Solomon obſerving took Occaſion from thence to infer, that the Lord had taken Poſſeſſion of the Place; and, having for ſome Time fallen proſtrate with his Face to the Ground, he rais'd himſelf up, and, turning towards the Sanctuary, * addreſs'd his Prayer to God, and "beſeech'd him "graciouſly to accept of the Houſe, which "he built for his ſake; to bleſs and ſanc"tify it, and to hear the Prayers of all, "whether Jews or Gentiles, who, upon "any Occaſion, either of public or private "Calamity, might direct their Supplica"tions to him † from that holy Place. "He beſeech'd him likewiſe to fulfil the "Promiſe, which he had been pleas'd to "make to his Father David, in favour of "his Family, and the Kings his Succeſ"ſors;" and, having thus finiſh'd his Prayer, he turn'd to the People, and, after he had bleſs'd them, gave them a ſtrict Charge to be ſincere in their Duty towards God, to walk in his Statutes, and obſerve his Laws.

WHILE Solomon was thus addreſſing his Prayers to God, and his Exhortations to the People, a Victim was laid upon the Altar, and God, to teſtify his Acceptance of what was doing, ſent immediately a Fire from Heaven, which conſum'd it, and all the other Sacrifices, that were about it; which, when the People, who were Witneſſes of the Miracle, perceiv'd, they fell upon their Faces, and worſhipp'd the God of Iſrael: And it was, very probably, on the ‡ Night following, that he appear'd

the Sanctuary, God gave the like Indication of his Preſence, and Reſidence there. Hereby he teſtify'd his Acceptance of the Building, and furniſhing of the Temple, as a Service done to his Name; and hereby he declar'd, that, as the Glory of the Ark, (that ſacred Symbol of his Preſence) had been long eclips'd by its frequent Removes, and mean Habitations; ſo now his Pleaſure was, that it ſhould be looked upon with the ſame Eſteem and Veneration, as when Moſes conducted it into the Tabernacle. For this Cloud, we muſt know, was not a heavy, thick, opaque Body, ſuch as is engender'd in the Air, and ariſes from Vapours and Exhalations, but a Cloud, that was dark, and luminous at the ſame Time, whoſe Darkneſs was awful and majeſtick, and whoſe internal Part was bright and refulgent, darting its Rays upon Occaſion, and exhibiting its Light through its Obſcurity: So that, according to its different Phaſis, or Poſition, it became to the Iſraelites a Pillar of a Cloud by Day, to ſcreen them from the Heat, and at Night a Pillar of Fire, to give them Light, Exod. xiii. 21. Whatever it was that conſtituted this ſtrange Appearance, 'tis certain this Mixture of Light and Darkneſs was look'd upon as a Symbol of the Divine Preſence; for ſo the Scripture has inform'd us, that He, who dwelleth in Light, that is inacceſſible, made Darkneſs his ſecret Place, his Pavilion round about him with dark Water, and thick Clouds to cover him, Pſal. xviii. 11. Calmet's Commentary.

* The Prayer, which Joſephus puts into Solomon's Mouth upon this Occaſion, is to this Effect: —— O Lord, thou that inhabiteſt Eternity, and haſt raiſed out of nothing the mighty Fabrick of this Univerſe, the Heavens, the Air, the Earth, and the Sea; thou that filleſt the whole, and every Thing that is in it, and art thyſelf unbounded, and incomprehenſible; look down graciouſly upon thy Servants, that have preſum'd to erect a Temple here to the Honour of thy great Name. Lord, hear our Prayers, and receive our Sacrifices. Thou art every where, vouchſafe alſo to be with us. Thou that ſeeſt and heareſt all Things, look down from thy Throne in Heaven, and give ear to our Supplications in this Place. Thou that never faileſt to aſſiſt thoſe that call upon thee Day and Night, and love and ſerve thee as they ought to do, have Mercy upon us. There is another Prayer, in the ſame Hiſtorian, addreſs'd to God on this ſame Occaſion, wherein Solomon bleſſes him for the Exaltation of his Family, and implores the Continuance of his Goodneſs and peculiar Preſence in the Temple, well worth the Reader's Peruſal, though too long to be inſerted here.

† It is the ſame Thing, no doubt, to God, wherever we pray, ſo long as we pray with a pious Mind, and a devout Heart, and make the Subject of our Prayers ſuch good Things, as he has permitted us to aſk; but it was not conſiſtent with the Preſervation of the Jewiſh State and Religion, that he ſhould be publickly worſhipp'd in every Place. For, ſince the Jews were on every Side ſurrounded with Idolaters, led away with divers Superſtitions, but ignorant all of the true God, 'twas highly neceſſary, that, in all Divine Matters, there ſhould be a ſtrict Union between them all both in Heart and Voice, and conſequently, that they ſhould all meet together in one Place to worſhip God, leſt they ſhould run into Parties, and fall into Idolatry, as it happen'd when the Kingdom became divided into two. And therefore, tho' Solomon knew very well, that, in every Place, God was ready to hear the Prayers of every devout Supplicant, yet, for the Preſervation of Peace and Unity, he was minded to give the People a Notion, that God would be found more exorable to the Prayers, which were offer'd in the Temple of Jeruſalem, and thereby excite them to a Frequentation of that, rather than any other Place. Le Clerc's Commentary in Locum.

‡ 'Tis thus that we have plac'd the Time of God's ſecond Appearance to Solomon, but ſome are of Opinion, that it did not happen till two and twenty Years after God's firſt Appearance, and after that Solomon had accompliſh'd all his Buildings, to which the Connection of the Diſcourſe ſeems to give ſome Countenance; and, it came to paſs, when Solomon had finiſhed the Building of the Houſe of the Lord, and the King's Houſe, and all that he was pleaſed to do, that the Lord appeared to him a ſecond Time, 1 Kings ix. 1, 2. It ſeems a little ſtrange however, that God ſhould delay anſwering this Prince's Prayer for thirteen Years together, and then, when he appear'd to him, tell him, I have heard thy appear'd to Solomon again in a Dream, and * ſignify'd to him, "That he had " heard his Prayer; did accept of the " Temple, which he had built for him; " and would not fail to liſten to the Petitions, that proceeded from thence; " that, if he perſever'd in his Obedience " to him, as his Father David had done, " he would eſtabliſh his Throne, and " perpetuate a Race of Succeſſors in his " Family; but that, if either he, or his " Children prevaricated in this Matter, he " would cut them off, overturn his Kingdom, and deſtroy the Temple."

THE Feaſt of the Dedication, in Conjunction with that of Tabernacles, laſted for fourteen Days; and when all Things were thus perform'd with the greateſt Order and Solemnity, on the Morrow the King diſmiſs'd the People, who return'd to their reſpective Homes with glad and joyful Hearts.

His publick Buildings, great Revenues, and magnificent Way of living.

SOLOMON (it muſt be obſerv'd) had a ſingular Taſte for Building; therefore, after he had finiſh'd and conſecrated the Temple, he undertook a Palace for himſelf, * which had all the Magnificence that can be imagin'd, another for his Egyptian Queen, and a third, that was called † the Houſe of the Foreſt of Lebanon, where he chiefly choſe to reſide. Theſe were the Works of thirteen Years: And as thy Prayer, and the Supplication, that thou haſt made before me, and I have hallowed this Houſe, which thou haſt built, Ver. 3. And therefore, to ſolve this Difficulty, 'tis reaſonable to think, that the Diviſion of this ninth Chapter is wrong, that the firſt Verſe of it ſhould be annex'd to the Concluſion of the preceding Chapter, and ſo terminate the Account of what Solomon had done; and that the next Chapter ſhould begin with the ſecond Verſe, where the Hiſtorian enters upon a freſh Subject, viz. the Anſwer, that God return'd to Solomon's Prayer, which he continues to the tenth Verſe, and preſents us with it all at once, that he might not break the Thread of his Narration. Calmet's Commentary on 1 Kings ix. 2.

* Joſephus has made a very handſome Comment upon the Anſwer, which God made Solomon in his Dream. The Voice told him farther, ſays he, "That in caſe of ſuch an Apoſtacy, (as he had before mention'd his new erected " Fabrick ſhould, by Divine Permiſſion, come to be ſack'd, and burnt by the Hands of Barbarians, and Jeruſalem " itſelf laid in Rubbiſh and Aſhes by a mercileſs Enemy; inſomuch, that People ſhould ſtand amaz'd at the very Report of ſo incredible a Miſery and Diſtreſs, and be wondering one to another, how it could come to paſs, that a " Nation, which was but Yeſterday the Envy of Mankind for Riches, external Glory, and Renown, ſhould now, all " on a ſudden, be ſunk and loſt to the laſt Degree of Wretchedneſs and Contempt, and reduc'd to this deſpicable " State too by the ſame Hand, that rais'd them. To which Queſtions their own guilty Conſciences ſhall make this " Anſwer: We have forſaken our God; we have abandon'd the Religion of our Forefathers, and of our Country, and " all this is juſtly befallen us for our Sins." Jewiſh Antiq. lib. viii. c. 2.

* The Deſcription of this Palace, which we may gather from Joſephus, Lamy, and others, that have treated of Solomon's Buildings, is in this Manner related: ——— "Upon ſeveral Rows of Pillars, there was erected a ſpacious " Pile of Building, in the Nature of a common Hall, for the hearing of Cauſes. It was an hundred Cubits in Length, " fifty in Breadth, and in Depth thirty, ſupported by fifteen ſquare Columns, cover'd with Corinthian Work in Cedar, " and fortify'd with double Doors, curiouſly wrought, that ſerv'd both for the Security and Ornament of the Place. " In the Middle of this Hall was another Edifice of thirty Cubits ſquare, and underſet with ſtrong Pillars, wherein " was plac'd a Throne of State, on which the King himſelf us'd to ſit perſonally in Judgment. On the Right-Hand " of this Court of Juſtice ſtood the King's own Palace, and, on the Left, that, which he built for Pharaoh's Daughter, " both fitted up with Cedar, and built with huge Stones of ten Cubits ſquare, which were partly plain, and partly " overlaid with the moſt precious Marble. ——— The Rooms were hung with rich Hangings, and beautify'd with " Images, and Sculptures of all Kinds, ſo exquiſitely finiſh'd, that they ſeem'd to be alive, and in Motion. It would " be an endleſs Work (ſays Joſephus) to give a particular Survey of this mighty Maſs of Building; So many Courts " and other Contrivances, ſuch a Variety of Chambers and Offices, great and little, long and large Galleries, vaſt " Rooms of State, and others for Feaſting and Entertainment, ſet out as richly as could be, with coſtly Furniture, and " Gildings; beſides that, all the Services for the King's Table were of pure Gold. In a Word, the whole Houſe " was, in a Manner, made up, from Top to Bottom, of white Marble, Cedar, Gold, and Silver, with precious " Stones, here and there intermingled upon the Walls, and Ceilings, after the Manner of the Adorning of the " Temple." Jewiſh Antiq. lib. viii. c. 2.

† Some Commentators are of Opinion, that this Houſe was the ſame with the Palace, which Solomon built in Jeruſalem, and that it had its Name from the tall Pillars, that ſupported it, which look'd like the Cedars in the Foreſt of Lebanon; but the contrary is manifeſt, becauſe the holy Scripture ſpeaks of it as a diſtinct Building, tho' perhaps it might not be far diſtant from the other, on ſome cool ſhady Mountain, which made it reſemble Mount Lebanon. For 'tis an idle Fancy to think, that this Houſe was really built on Lebanon, ſince we read of Solomon's having his Throne, 1 Kings vii. 7. and the golden Shields, that he made, plac'd in it, 1 Kings x. 17. which he ſcarce would have remov'd to the very Extremity of his Kingdom: And therefore we may conclude, as indeed it appears from 1 Kings as Hiram King of Tyre was very kind in ſupplying him with Men, Money, and Materials to carry on theſe, and many more ſtately Structures; Solomon, to expreſs his Gratitude, or to clear off the Debt, which he had contracted with him, ‖ offer'd him twenty Cities in the Land of Galilee, adjoining to his own Country. But, as theſe Places † did not ſuit his Convenience, he refus'd to accept of them; and therefore Solomon, having made him, no doubt, ſome other Recompence more to his Satisfaction, took and repair'd theſe Cities, and having built Store-Cities likewiſe in the Country, he ſent Colonies of his own Subjects to inhabit them, that they might be a Curb and Reſtraint on the Syrians of Zobah, who had formerly been conquer'd by David, and, upon their Revolt, but lately reduc'd by Solomon.

To conclude the Account of Solomon's publick Buildings. He built the Walls of Jeruſalem, and a Senate-Houſe in the ſame City, called Millo. He repair'd, and fortify'd Hazor, Megiddo, the two Beth-Horons, Baalah, † Tadmor in the Wilderneſs

1 Kings vii. 2.) that this Houſe was near Jeruſalem, and called by the Name of the Foreſt of Lebanon, (juſt as many pleaſant and delightful Places in that Country were called Carmel) becauſe it was in a lofty Place like Lebanon, and the Trees, which grew upon it, made it very ſhady and cool, and conſequently, proper for Solomon to dwell there in Summer, as he did in his Palace in Jeruſalem in Winter. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentary on 1 Kings vii. 2.

‖ It is an expreſs Injunction, which God gives the Iſraelites, that the Land, wherein the People had a Right by a Divine Lot, and himſelf a Right, as being the ſole Proprietor thereof, was not to be ſold or alienated for ever, Lev. xxv. 23. How then could Solomon, without violating this Law, pretend to give Hiram twenty Cities in the Land of Galilee? Now to this ſome have reply'd, that Solomon did not give Hiram a Property, and perpetual Right to thoſe Cities, but only aſſign'd him the Poſſeſſion of them for a Time, until the Debt, which he had contracted for the ſeveral Supplies, he had from him, while he was building the Temple, was ſatisfy'd. Others think, that upon Suppoſition, that theſe Cities were inhabited by Iſraelites, Solomon did not give Hiram (as indeed he could not) their particular Poſſeſſions, but only his own Royalties over them, (which he might juſtly do) and all the Profits, he receiv'd from them, which, according to the Taxes then impos'd, 1 Kings xii. 4. were not inconſiderable. But there is no Reaſon for theſe far fetch'd Solutions, when the Scripture expreſly tells us, that theſe Cities were not in the Territories of Iſrael, nor inhabited at that Time by the Iſraelites, 2 Chron. viii. 2. They were indeed ſome of them conquer'd by the King of Egypt, who gave them to Solomon as a Portion with his Daughter, and others by Solomon himſelf, who, as Selden obſerves, (de Jure Nat. & Gent. lib. vi. cap. 16.) had a Right to diſpoſe of thoſe Lands, which he had conquer'd in voluntary War, without the Conſent of the Senate: And this may be one Reaſon, why he gave theſe, rather than other Cities, becauſe theſe were certainly in his Power to give, when others perhaps were not. A learned Author, upon this Subject, has given a quite different Turn to the Senſe of the Paſſage: For his Opinion is, that Hiram did not return theſe Cities, becauſe he thought them not good enough, but becauſe he was unwilling to receive ſo large a Renumeration for the few good Offices, he had done Solomon, and was minded rather, that his Favours of this Kind ſhould be all gratuitous. ' He therefore makes the Word Cabul (which is the Name, that Hiram gives to the Country, where theſe Cities ſtood) a Title of Reſpect, and not of Contempt; for he derives it from the Hebrew Chebes, which ſignifies a Bond, or Chain, intimating, that theſe two neighbouring Kings had mutually bound themſelves in a Bond of Friendſhip, Solomon by giving, and Hiram by returning the Cities, now under Conſideration. This is very pretty: But 'tis carrying the Point of Generoſity in the King of Tyre a little too high, in my Opinion, conſidering his Acceptance of, if not expreſs Stipulation for, ſuch a Quantity of Corn and Oil, in Lieu of the Timber, which he ſent Solomon, 1 Kings v. 10, 11. Patrick's and Le Clerc's Commentaries, and Pool's Annotations.

† The Reaſon is, becauſe the Tyrians, being very commodiouſly ſituated for that Purpoſe, were, in a Manner, wholly addicted to Merchandize; and therefore would not remove from the Sea-Coaſts, to live in a Soil, which was fat and deep, and conſequently, requir'd a great deal of Labour to cultivate it, which was a Buſineſs that they were very little accuſtom'd to. Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi. c. 2.

† Tadmor, which, by the Greeks, is called Palmyra, is ſituated in the Wilderneſs of Syria, upon the Borders of Arabia Deſerta, inclining towards the Euphrates. Joſephus places it two Days Journey from the Upper Syria, one Day's Journey from the Euphrates, and ſix Days Journey from Babylon: And the Reaſon he gives, why Solomon was inclin'd to build a City in this Place, was, becauſe, in all the Country round about, there was no ſuch Thing as a Well, or Fountain, but in this Spot only, to be found. If we may gueſs by the Ruins, which later Travellers give us the Deſcription of, this City was certainly one of the fineſt and moſt magnificent in the Eaſt, and 'tis ſomewhat ſurpriſing, that Hiſtory ſhould give us no Account, either when, or by whom it was reduc'd to the ſad Condition, wherein it lies at this Day. But the true Reaſon for his Building this Town in ſo deſolate a Place, was the Commodiouſneſs of its Situation, to cut off all Commerce between the Syrians and Meſopotamians, and to prevent their caballing, and conſpiring together againſt him, as they had done againſt his Father David. Le Clerc's Commentary. If the Reader is deſirous to know the preſent State of this ruinated City, he may find it related in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, for October, 1695, in a Letter from Dr. Hallifax, to Dr. Bernard, or in Wells's Geography of the Old Teſtament, Vol. III. who has borrow'd it from thence.

neſs of Syria, and Gezer, which the King of Egypt took from the Canaanites, and gave it in Dower with his Daughter. He fortify'd all the Cities, which he made his Magazines for Corn, Wine, and Oil, and thoſe where his Chariots and Horſes were kept. He ſubdu'd all the Hittites, and Hivites, and Amorites, and Perizzites, that any where remain'd in the Land of Iſrael, and laid on them all the Drudgery, and ſervile Labour: But [*] as for his own Subjects, he appointed them either to be Surveyors of his Works, or Guards to his Perſon, or Commanders in the Army, or Traders and Merchants, that ſo he might make his Nation as famous, and as rich and flouriſhing, as it was poſſible to be effected by human Policy.

BUT it was not only a Multitude of Hands, but a large Supply of Wealth likewiſe, that was neceſſary to carry on ſo many expenſive Buildings; and therefore Solomon took Care to cultivate the Trade to Ophir, which his Father had begun, from Elam and [†] Ezion-Geber, two Ports in the Red-Sea, whither himſelf went in Perſon to inſpect the Building of the Ships, and to provide them with able and experienc'd Seamen, which his good Friend and Ally, Hiram, was never backward to furniſh him with. So that by this Means his Subjects, who ſoon attain'd to the Art of Navigation, were enabled to make ſeveral advantageous Voyages; and, particularly in one Fleet, [*] brought him home no leſs than [‖] four hundred and thirty Talents of Gold, with many other Commodities, and Curioſities of great Value. In ſhort, Solomon was one of the richeſt, and moſt magnificent Princes, that was then on the Face of the Earth. In his Time, Silver was no more regarded, than Stones in the Street: His annual Revenues were ſix hundred and ſixty ſix Talents of Gold, beſides the Tributes, he receiv'd from the Kings, and Nations, that were [*] Hiſtory indeed takes Notice of the ſame Temper in Seſoſtris, King of Egypt, who, upon his Return home from his ſeveral Expeditions, took it in his Head to build Temples in all the Cities of Egypt, but would ſuffer no Egyptian to do any ſervile Work therein. All the Work of this Nature was perform'd by the Captives, that he brought with him from the Wars; and therefore, to perpetuate the Remembrance of his Kindneſs to his Subjects, as well as remove ſome poſſible Odium from himſelf, upon every Temple he order'd this Inſcription to be ſet up, οὐδεὶς ἐγχώριος εἰς ἀυτὰ μεμόχθηκε, No Native was ever a Labourer here. Diodor. Bibliot. lib. i.

[†] Joſephus will needs have it, that Ezion-Geber is the ſame with Berenice, which lies indeed upon the Red Sea, but then it is upon the Weſtern or African Shore thereof; whereas the Scripture is poſitive, that it was a Port of Idumæa, or Arabia Deſerta, ſituate upon the Gulf of Elam, which is on the oppoſite Shore. Elam, or Eloth, or Elath, (for it was called by all theſe Names) was ſituate upon the ſame, and might poſſibly have its Name from thence. When David conquer'd Edom, or Idumæa, he made himſelf Maſter of this Port, 2 Sam. viii. 14. His Son, we ſee, built Ships here, and ſent them from hence to Ophir for Gold, 2 Chron. viii. 17, 18. It continu'd in the Poſſeſſion of the Iſraelites about an hundred and fifty Years, till, in the Time of Joram, the Edomites recover'd it, 2 Kings viii. 20. but it was again taken from them by Azariah, and by him left to his Son, 2 Kings xiv. 22. His Grandſon Ahaz however loſt it again to the King of Syria, 2 Kings xvi. 6. and the Syrians had it in their Hands a long while, till, after many Changes under the Ptolomies, and the Seleucidæ, it came at length into the Poſſeſſion of the Romans. It was formerly a ſmall Town, with fruitful Fields about it, but now there is nothing left but a Tower, which ſerves as an Habitation for the Governor, who is ſubject to the Governor of Grand Cairo, and no Signs of Fruitfulneſs are to be ſeen in any Parts adjoining to it. Patrick's Commentary, and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Elam.

[*] As great a King as Solomon was, we find he turn'd Merchant; and yet the imperial Laws forbid Noblemen to exerciſe Trade and Commerce, as a Thing below them; and much leſs then (as Bodinus de Republicâ, lib. vi. c. 2.) does it become a King. But we muſt not meaſure Antiquity by our own Times: What might be then commendable may now have a different Appearance: But the ſame Author is very right in one Conceſſion that he makes, viz. that, tho' he would not have Kings now to be Merchants, yet, if he might have his Choice, I had rather a Prince ſhould be a Merchant, ſays he, than a Tyrant, and that Noblemen ſhould rather trade than oppreſs, and make a Prey of their Tenants. Patrick's Commentary.

[‖] In 2 Chron. viii. 18. the Number of Talents, brought home to Solomon, are ſaid to be four hundred and fifty: But this is a Matter that is eaſily reſolv'd, if we will but ſuppoſe, that the Charges of the Voyage to and fro coſt thirty Talents; or that Solomon gave Hiram's Servants, for conducting his Fleet, thirty Talents; or that in refining the whole Maſs of Gold, the Waſte might be thirty Talents: So that, tho' Solomon's Fleet brought him home four hundred and fifty Talents, yet by one, or more of theſe Deductions, there came clear to his Coffers no more than four hundred and thirty. Patrick's Commentary.

The Queen of Sheba bringing Preſents to King Solomon.

And when she was come to Solomon, she communed with him of all that was in her heart.

in Subjection to him; the Subſidies which his Subjects the Iſraelites paid; and the Sums ariſing from the Merchants for his Cuſtoms. The Bucklers of his Guards were of Gold; the [†] Ivory Throne, whereon he ſat, was overlaid with it; and all the Utenſils of his Palaces, and Veſſels of his Table (which, [†] for Magnificence, and Sumptuouſneſs of Proviſion, exceeded all, that was ever known before) were of the ſame Metal. Preſents of Gold, of rich Stuffs, of Spices, of Arms, of Horſes, and Mules, were ſent to him from every Quarter; and to ſee the Face, and hear the Wiſdom of the renown'd Solomon, was the prevailing Ambition of the great Men of that Age.

The Viſit which the Queen of Sheba pays him.

CAPTIVATED with this Deſire the Queen of Sheba came to Jeruſalem, attended with a great Retinue, and brought with her rich Preſents of Gold, Spices, and precious Stones. Her Purpoſe was, to try, if Solomon's Wiſdom was anſwerable to the high Commendations, ſhe had heard of it; and therefore in Diſcourſe ſhe propos'd to him ſeveral Enigmatical Queſtions. But when ſhe heard his clear and ſatisfactory Solutions, ſhe was not a little amaz'd at the Profoundneſs of his Judgment; and when ſhe had ſeen the Beauty, and Worſhip of the Temple, the Magnificence of his Court, and the Sumptuouſneſs of [*] his Table and Attendants, ſhe was quite aſtoniſh'd, and frankly own'd to him, that what herſelf had ſeen, did far ſurpaſs any, the moſt extravagant Report, ſhe had ever yet heard of him: And ſo, having made him very [*] great and noble Preſents, and, receiv'd others from him, that were not inconſiderable, ſhe took her Leave, and return'd to her own Country, highly pleas'd, and ſatisfy'd with her Viſit.

The Idolatry he fell into by the Influence of his foreign Wives.

HITHERTO we have ſeen nothing in Solomon, but what was truly great and wonderful; but the later Actions of his Life do ſadly tarniſh and diſgrace his Character. For he gave himſelf up to the Love of ſtrange Women, ſuch as were deſcended from idolatrous Nations, and, beſides Pharaoh's Daughter [†] mention'd before,

---

[†] We never read of Ivory, till about Solomon's Days, who perhaps brought Elephants out of India, or at leaſt took Care to have a great deal of Ivory imported from thence; for, in After-Ages, we read of Ivory Beds, and Ivory Palaces, &c. At this Time however, it was every whit as precious as Gold: And therefore we muſt not ſuppoſe, that this Throne of Solomon's was entirely overlaid with Gold, (for then it might as well have been made of Wood) but only in particular Places, that ſo the Mixture of Gold and Ivory, which gave a Luſtre to each other, might make the Throne look more beautiful. The like to this, the Text ſays, there was not made in any Kingdom, 1 Kings x. 20. and perhaps it was ſo in thoſe Days; but, in After-Ages, we read, that the Throne of the Parthian Kings was of Gold encompaſs'd with four golden Pillars, beſet with precious Stones; and that the Perſian Kings ſat in Judgment under a golden Vine (and other Trees of Gold) the Bunches of whoſe Grapes were made of ſeveral Sorts of precious Stones. Patrick's Commentary.

[†] The Proviſions of Solomon's Table, for one Day, were thirty Meaſures (which, according to the Hebrew Word Cor, as Goodwin has computed it, are ſix Gallons, above an hundred and ſixty eight Buſhels) of fine Flour, and ſixty of Meal, or coarſer Flour, for inferior Servants) ten ſtall-fed Oxen, twenty Oxen out of the Paſtures, and an hundred Sheep, beſides Harts, and Roebucks, and fallow Dear, and fatted Fowl, or (as Bochart tranſlates the Word) the choiceſt of all fatted Things, 1 Kings iv. 22, 23. and this, according to the Calculation, which ſome have made from the Quantity of Bread, that was every Day conſum'd, muſt make Solomon's Family conſiſt, at leaſt, of forty, or fifty Thouſand Souls. Calmet's Commentary.

[*] Our excellent Commentator, Biſhop Patrick, tells us, that a very great Man of our own (but is ſilent as to his Name) has obſerv'd, that ſuch Things, as the Difference of Apparel, the Order of ſitting at Table, and the Attendance of Solomon's Servants, and Miniſters, were juſtly admir'd by the Queen of Sheba, as an Indication of his Wiſdom; for they are the Outworks (as he calls them) which preſerve Majeſty itſelf from Approaches and Surprizals; and whatſoever Prince departs from theſe Forms, and Trappings, and Ornaments of his Dignity and Pre-eminence, will hardly be able, at ſome Time, to preſerve the Body itſelf of Majeſty from Intruſion, Invaſion, and Violation.

[*] After a very complementive Speech, in which Joſephus makes this Queen addreſs King Solomon, among other valuable Preſents recorded in Scripture, they ſpeak alſo, ſays he, of a Root of Balſam, which ſhe brought with her, which (according to a Tradition we have) was the firſt Plant of the Kind, that ever came into Judea, where it hath propagated ſo wonderfully ever ſince. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. viii. c. 2.

[†] Pharaoh's Daughter is generally ſuppos'd to have been a Proſelyte to the Jewiſh Religion, and therefore Solomon, in marrying her, incurr'd no Fault; but, in marrying ſo many Women beſides, and theſe of a different Religion, he committed two Sins againſt the Law; one, in multiplying Wives, and another, in marrying thoſe of ſtrange Nations, fore, marry'd Wives from among the Moabites, the Ammonites, the Hittites, the Idumeans, and the Sidonians. Nay, ſo unbounded was his Luſt, that he had ſeven hundred Wives, and three hundred Concubines, who conſpir'd not a little to pervert his Heart, and ſeduce him, in his old Age, to the Worſhip of their ſeveral Idols.

PROVOK'D at this his ſad Apoſtacy, God ſent a Prophet to upbraid him with his Ingratitude, and to pronounce this heavy Judgment upon him: —— "That, "as he had revolted from his Worſhip, "ſo the major Part of his Kingdom ſhould "revolt from him, and put themſelves "under the Government of one of his "Servants, though not in his Days, yet in "thoſe of his immediate Succeſſor:" And, to make him ſenſible, that this Judgment began already to operate, he rais'd up ſeveral Enemies to the Diſturbance of his Peace, which, as long as he continu'd in God's Service, he enjoy'd without Interruption.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

The Enemies, which God rais'd up to diſturb the latter Part of his Reign, and his Death.

* THE firſt of theſe was Hadad of the Blood-royal of Edom, who having fled from Joab, when he ravag'd the Country, and put the male Children to death, eſcap'd to Pharaoh King of Egypt, where he marry'd his Siſter Tephneh; but, upon David's Death, return'd to his own Country, and recover'd the Kingdom. † The ſecond was Rezon, who flying from his Maſter Hadadezer King of Zobah, gather'd together a great Number of Men, over whom he made himſelf Captain, and, with their Aſſiſtance ſeizing on Damaſcus, he there reign'd as King of Syria, and confederated with Hadad to diſtreſs Solomon in the declining Part of his Reign. But † the moſt dangerous Enemy of all was Jeroboam, the Son of Nebat, a bold and enterprizing Man, whom Solomon had made Overſeer of his Buildings, and who, for his great Abilities, was the chief Ruler in the Houſe of Joſeph, i. e. in the Tribes of Ephraim and Maneſſeh. † The Prophet Abijah, as he was walking in the Fields, happen'd to meet him; and, having who ſtill retain'd their Idolatry: And therefore the wiſe Son of Sirach, amidſt all the Encomiums, that he heaps upon Solomon, could not forget this heinous Iniquity, and terrible Flaw in his Character. Thou didſt bow thy Loins to Women, and, by thy Body, thou waſt brought into Subjection. Thou didſt ſtain thine Honour, and pollute thy Seed, ſo that thou broughteſt Wrath upon thy Children, and waſt grieved for thy Folly. Ecclus. xlvii. 19, 20. and Patrick's Commentary.

* Hadad was a young Prince of the royal Family of Idumæa, who fled into Egypt, when David conquer'd that Country: For David, having obtain'd a ſignal Victory under the Conduct of Abiſhai, who, at that Time, commanded in chief, ſent Joab afterwards with an Order to kill all the Males, that ſhould be found in the Land. But Hadad had eſcap'd into Egypt, where, finding Favour in the Eyes of the King, he marry'd his Wife's Siſter, and there ſettled. But, after the Death of David, he returned into Idumæa, and gave Solomon no ſmall Moleſtation. For, entering into a League with Rezon, a Fugitive from his Maſter Hadadezer King of Zobah, but who had now made himſelf King of ſome Part of Syria, he, by his Aſſiſtance, made ſo many Inroads upon the Land of Iſrael, that all Things were in the utmoſt Confuſion, even before Solomon died. Calmet's Commentary and Joſephus's Jewiſh Antiq. lib. viii. c. 2.

† When David made War againſt Hadadezer, Rezon, one of his Generals, eſcap'd from the Field of Battle, with the Troops under his Command; and, having liv'd for a little while by Plunder and Robbery, at length ſeiz'd on Damaſcus, and reign'd there. But his Reign was not long: For David took Damaſcus, as well as the other Parts of Syria, and left it in Subjection to his Son Solomon, till God was pleas'd to ſuffer this Rezon to recover Damaſcus, and there re-eſtabliſh himſelf, to the great Diſturbance of the latter Part of Solomon's Reign. Calmet's Commentary.

† As Solomon was engag'd in ſeveral great Buildings, he took care to ſet proper Perſons over the Works, among whom Jeroboam, was one, and the Workmen under his Command ſeem to be chiefly of the Tribe of Ephraim. How he acquitted himſelf in this Capacity, we are not told; but the Pretence of his being angry with Solomon, and fomenting Jealouſies among the People, was the Building of Millo. Millo was a deep Valley, between the old Jeruſalem, and the City of David, Part of which David filled up, and thereon made both a Fortreſs, and a Place for the People to aſſemble. Another Part of it Solomon filled up, to build a Palace for his Queen, the Daughter of Pharaoh. The prodigious Expence, which this Work coſt gave Rehoboam an Opportunity to infuſe a Spirit of Sedition into his Brethren of the Tribe of Ephraim; to complain heavily of hard Labour, they were forc'd to ſubmit to, and the Taxes they were oblig'd to pay; and to repreſent the whole Thing as a Work of Vanity, merely to gratify a proud foreign Woman, and a ſilly doting King; and, by theſe Inſinuations he wrought in the People a Diſaffection to Solomon, and his Government. Patrick's Commentary, and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Millo.

† Abijah was a Native of Shiloh, and one of thoſe who wrote the Annals of King Solomon's Reign, 2 Chron. ix. 29.

he

ing acquainted him from God, that he had appointed him to be Solomon's Succeſſor in ten Tribes out of twelve, and that, if he would adhere to his Service, the Government ſhould be eſtabliſh'd in his Family: As he was but ill affected to Solomon before, and now encourag'd by the Prophet's Promiſes, he began to ſtir, and ſollicit the People to a Revolt. † The King, having Intelligence of this, was thinking to take him into Cuſtody, but he made his Eſcape, and fled † unto Shiſhak King of Egypt, where he continu'd for the ſmall Remainder of Solomon's Life, † who, having reign'd forty Years, died about the fifty-eighth Year of his Age; was bury'd in the City of David; and was ſucceeded by his Son † Rehoboam.

REHOBOAM, as ſoon as his Father was dead, went to † Shechem, where he is thought to have been the Perſon, who ſpake twice to Solomon from God; once, while he was building the Temple, at which Time he promis'd him his Protection, 1 Kings vi. 12. and at another Time when he had fallen into all his Irregularities, and God expreſs'd his Indignation againſt him in bitter Threats and Reproaches, 1 Kings xii. 6. His Prediction to Solomon, that he would one Day be perverted by Women; and that to Jeroboam, that Heifers, (meaning the two golden Calves, which he ſet up) would alienate him from the Service of God, are both taken Notice of by Epiphanius, de Vitâ & Morte Prophet. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Abijah.

† How Solomon came to know, what was thus tranſacted between Abijah and Jeroboam alone, is a Queſtion of no great Difficulty: For perhaps the Prophet made no Scruple to report what he had deliver'd in the Name of the Lord; perhaps Jeroboam himſelf, being puff'd up with this Aſſurance, could not contain, but told it to ſome of his Confidents who ſpread it abroad; or perhaps his Servants, tho' they heard not the Words, that the Prophet ſpake, yet, ſeeing him rend the Garment into twelve Parts, and give ten to him, might ſpeak of this ſtrange and unaccountable Action, which Solomon, as ſoon as he came to hear of it, might eaſily underſtand, becauſe the ſame Prophet, very likely, had told him, but juſt before, that the Kingdom ſhould be rent from him, and given to his Servant, 1 Kings xiv. 8. Patrick's Comment.

† All the Kings of Egypt, from the Time of Abraham, are, in the ſacred Hiſtory, called by the Name of Pharaoh, unleſs Rameſes, that is mention'd in Gen. xlvii. 11, be the Name of a King, not a Country; ſo that this is the firſt, we meet with, called by his proper Name from the reſt of the Pharaohs. Who this Egyptian Prince was, the Learned are not agreed. The Opinion is pretty general, that it was the famous Seſoſtris, mention'd in Herodotus, and of whom we have ſpoke before, but his Life could hardly be extended to this Period. Our great Uſher ſets him a vaſt Way backward, even to the Time of the Iſraelites Peregrination, and ſome Chronologers carry it farther: But be that as it will, tis very probable, that the Prince had taken ſome Offence at Solomon, otherwiſe he would hardly have harbour'd ſuch ſeditious Refugees, as Jeroboam was. Patrick's and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

† Joſephus indeed tells us, (Antiq. lib. viii. c. 3.) that Solomon liv'd to a great Age, that he reign'd eighty Years, and died at ninety-four; but this is a manifeſt Error in that Hiſtorian, which our ſaying, that the Scriptures give us only an Account of Solomon while he continu'd in a State of Piety, but that Joſephus's Computation takes in the whole of his Life, is a poor and forc'd Way of Reconcilement. The Authority of Joſephus muſt never be put in Ballance with that of the holy Scriptures, from whence may be learned, that Solomon liv'd to the Age of fifty-eight, or thereabouts, becauſe we may very well preſume, that his immoderate Purſuit of ſenſual Pleaſures both ſhorten'd his Life, and left an eternal Stain upon his Memory: Otherwiſe the Character, which the Author of Eccleſiaſticus gives of this Prince, is very beautiful: ——— Solomon reigned in a peaceable Time, and was honoured; for God made all quiet round about him, that he might build an Houſe in his Name, and prepare his Sanctuary for ever. How wiſe waſt thou in thy Youth, and as a Flood filled with Underſtanding! Thy Soul covered the whole Earth, and thou filledſt it with dark Parables. Thy Name went far unto the Iſlands, and for thy Peace thou waſt beloved. The Countries marvelled at thee for thy Songs and Proverbs, and Parables, and Interpretations. By the Name of the Lord, which is called the Lord God of Iſrael, thou didſt gather Gold as Tin, and didſt multiply Silver as Lead: But thou didſt bow thy Loins unto Women, &c. Ecclus. xlvii. 13, &c.

† Notwithſtanding the vaſt Multitude of Wives that Solomon had, the Scripture makes mention of no more than three Children, this Son, and two Daughters, that are ſpoken of 1 Kings iv. 11, 15. and (what is ſtrange) in the Beginning of his Story, it takes no Notice (as uſually it does) of his Mother's Nation, or Family, tho' in the Concluſion of it, (1 Kings xiv. 21, ——— 31.) it twice reminds us, that ſhe was an Ammoniteſs by Birth, and that her Name was Naamah. Rehoboam was born in the firſt Year of his Father's Reign, and was therefore much about forty-one, when he enter'd upon the Government; but he was an unſkilful and imprudent Man, and therefore made a very falſe Step at his firſt Acceſſion to the Throne. The Author of Eccleſiaſticus gives us no advantageous Character of him, when he terms him A Man void of Underſtanding, who turned the People away with his Counſel, Chap. xlvii. 23. Nay, his own Son makes but a faint Apology for him, when he tells the People, that he was young (young in Underſtanding) and tender-hearted, and could not withſtand his Enemies, 2 Chron. xiii. 7. and therefore ſome have imagin'd, that his Father Solomon had him in his Thoughts, when he ſaid, in his Preacher, I hated all my Labour, which I had taken under the Sun, becauſe I was to leave it to a Man, that ſhould come after me; and who knoweth whether he ſhall be a wiſe Man, or a Fool, yet ſhall he have Rule over all my Labour, wherein I have labour'd: This alſo is Vanity, Chap. ii. 18, 19. Calmet's and Patrick's Commentaries.

† This City ſtood not only in the Center of the Kingdom of Iſrael, but in the Middle of the Tribe of Ephraim, wherein there was the greateſt Number of Malecontents. It was therefore very probably by the Management of Jeroboam, where all the Chief of the People were met together to proclaim him King; but, as the Nation had been burthen'd with ſome heavy Taxes during his Father's Reign, before they would agree to recognize him, they [†] deſir'd a Redreſs of their Grievances, and, in Hopes of awing him into a Compliance, ſent for Jeroboam out of Egypt to appear at the Head of the Aſſembly.

The Revolt of the ten Tribes, who make Jeroboam their King.

THE People accordingly preſented their Addreſs; but, inſtead of a gracious Anſwer, (which his Father's old Counſellors by all Means adviſ'd, as the only Way to engage them to his Intereſt for ever) ſome [†] young Politicians, that had been [*] brought up with him, were of a contrary Opinion, viz. that ſuch Conceſſions would look like Fear and Puſillanimity; that hard Words would frighten them into Obedience; and that, inſtead of redreſſing, his Buſineſs was to tell them, that he intended to increaſe their Grievances. This Counſel Rehoboam had the Imprudence to follow; which ſo diſguſted the People, that they threw off all Allegiance, and declar'd for another King. When Rehoboam came to underſtand this, he [†] ſent Adoram, his Collector, to appeaſe them, and probably to aſſure them, that their Taxes ſhould be abated; but this Pacification came too late: Their Paſſions were ſo exaſperated, that they fell upon the Collector, and ſton'd him to Death, without ſo much as once hearing what he had to ſay. Rehoboam ſeeing this thought it high Time to conſult his own Safety, by [†] haſtening to his Chariot, and fleeing to Jeruſalem; by which Means he ſecur'd the two Tribes of Judah and Benjamin, but all the reſt of the Iſraelites made choice of Jeroboam. And thus was this great and goodly Kingdom, almoſt in its Infancy, ſplit into two Parts; and, for ever afterwards, went under different Denominations, the Kingdom of Judah, and the Kingdom of Iſrael, tho' the latter included the whole before.

As

Jeroboam, or ſome of his Friends, who durſt not perhaps venture themſelves at Jeruſalem, that this City was made choice of for a Place of a general Convention, becauſe they might more ſecurely propoſe their Grievances, (which they were reſolv'd to do) and uſe a greater Freedom of Speech, than they could at Jeruſalem, where the Family of David was more powerful, more numerous, and better ſupported. Calmet's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

[†] What the particular Grievances were, that theſe People deſir'd to have redreſs'd, we may gather from 1 Kings iv. 7, &c. viz. the Tribute, Solomon exacted for his Buildings, the Expences of his Family, and the Maintenance of his Chariots and Horſes, which, being for the Honour of the Nation, ought to have been borne more contentedly by a People enjoying ſuch a large Share of Peace and Plenty, and from a Prince, who had brought in ſuch vaſt Riches to his Subjects, as made Silver to be of no Value at all in his Days, Chap. x. 21. But People are more ſenſible of their Preſſures, than of their Enjoyments, and feel the leaſt Burdens, when they are moſt at Eaſe. It is obſervable, however, that, among all their Complaints, they take no Notice of Solomon's Idolatry, or the ſtrange Worſhip, which he had introduc'd, tho' this, one would think, ſhould have been reckon'd among the greateſt of their Grievances. Patrick's Commentary.

[†] They were not ſo young, but they might have known better; for as Rehoboam was one and forty years old, when he enter'd upon his Kingdom, ſo theſe Gentlemen, having been brought up with him, muſt have been much about the ſame Age; but they were raw and unexperienc'd, and unacquainted with the Humours of the People, and therefore they gave the King ſuch unſeaſonable Advice. Patrick's Commentary.

[*] It was a common Cuſtom among the Kings of the Eaſt, to have their Sons educated among other young Lords, that were of the ſame Age, which, as it created a generous Spirit of Emulation, and both endear'd the Prince to the Nobles, and the Nobles to the Prince, could not but tend greatly to the Benefit of the Publick. Seſoſtris, the moſt famous Prince, that ever Egypt produc'd, is ſaid to have been educated this Way: And by the gallant Youths, that were his Contemporaries and Fellow-Pupils, it was, that he afterwards did ſo many ſurpriſing Actions. The ſame Cuſtom was in Uſe among the Perſians, as we may learn from the Life of Cyrus; and of Alexander the Great we are told, that his Father Philip had him train'd up, in his Youth, among thoſe young Noblemen, who became his great Captains in the Conqueſt of all Aſia. So that Solomon's Method and Deſign, in the Education of his Son, was wiſe and well concerted, tho' it fail'd of Succeſs. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] It was certainly a Piece of great Imprudence to ſend any one to treat with them, when they were ſo highly exaſperated; but to ſend him, that was an obnoxious Man, as having the principal Care of the very Tributes, they complain'd of, was downright Infatuation; becauſe nothing is ſo natural, as to hate thoſe, that are the Inſtruments of our Oppreſſion, or any ways employ'd in it. Patrick's Commentary.

[†] This is the firſt Time that we read of a King's riding in a Chariot. Saul, and David, and Solomon rode in none; but, after the Diviſion of the Kingdom, mention is frequently made of the Uſe of them, both by the Kings of Judah, and Iſrael. Patrick's Commentary.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

As ſoon as Rehoboam was got ſafe to Jeruſalem, he began to meditate Revenge for the Affront put upon himſelf in the Perſon of Adoram his Collector; and therefore (to reduce the Rebel-Tribes by Force of Arms) he put himſelf at the Head of an hundred and eighty Thouſand choſen Troops of the two Tribes, which continu'd faithful to him. But, while they were on their March, the † Prophet Shemaiah, by the Direction of God, adviſ'd them to deſiſt, and return every one to his own Home; becauſe by the Divine Will and Pleaſure it was, that this Diviſion of the Kingdom came to paſs. Hereupon all the Army, with Rehoboam's Conſent, was diſbanded; and he, to ſecure the Dominions that were left him, repair'd and fortify'd fifteen frontier Towns; built ſeveral Strong-Holds in the Heart of his Country; furniſh'd them with good Garriſons and Proviſions; and erected Magazines in ſeveral Cities, out of which the Soldiers might, on all Occaſions, be ſupply'd with Arms.

Jeroboam ſets up two Golden Calves at Dan and Bethel.

JEROBOAM, on the other Hand, was not idle, but enlarg'd and beautify'd Shechem, and made it a Royal City. After he had reſided there for ſome Time, he went to the other Side of Jordan, and repair'd Penuel, which was antiently a fortify'd Place, and there reſided likewiſe, in Hopes of gaining the Affections of the two Tribes and an Half. Amidſt all theſe Endeavours to ſettle himſelf firm on the Throne, there was one Thing he thought he had Reaſon to apprehend, viz. that his Subjects might return to their Allegiance to the Houſe of David, in caſe they were permitted to go up, thrice every Year, (as the Law directed) to worſhip at Jeruſalem; he therefore made a bold Alteration in Religion, and ſet up two golden Calves, (with Altars belonging to them) the one in Bethel, which was the moſt Southern, and the other in Dan, which was the moſt Northern Part of the Country, the better to ſuit the Conveniency of all their Votaries. The regular Prieſts, however, would not comply with him in theſe Idolatries, and therefore he inhibited them the Exerciſe of their own Religion, baniſh'd them his Kingdom, ſeiz'd on their Poſſeſſions, and appointed ‡ any, who was ſo minded, to officiate about theſe new-erected Idols: By which Means a great Acceſſion of Strength accru'd to Rehoboam's Party; for the Prieſts, that were baniſh'd, reſorted all to Jeruſalem, and as many of the other Tribes, as had any Regard to the true Worſhip of God, follow'd them.

At Bethel his Hand is wither'd, and reſtor'd by the Prophet from Judah.

To give the better Countenance to his new-invented Religion, Jeroboam himſelf was accuſtom'd ſometimes to officiate; and therefore, on a † ſolemn Feaſt, which he had appointed at Bethel, as he ſtood by the

† This Prophet was very well known in the Reign of Rehoboam: He is ſuppoſed to have wrote the Annals of that Prince; and, of what Authority he was in Judah, we may gather from this Paſſage, where he is ſaid to have prevailed with the King, and an hundred and fourſcore Thouſand Men, to lay down their Arms, and return Home, merely by declaring, that the Diviſion, which had happen'd, was by the Order and Appointment of God. Calmet's Commentary.

‡ The Hebrew Words, Miketzoth Haam, do properly ſignify out of all the People, and not the loweſt of the People. This Expoſition Bochart has juſtify'd by a great many Examples of the Uſes of theſe Words in other Places: So that their Meaning muſt be, not that Jeroboam employ'd the Refuſe of the People only, but that he employ'd any, though they were not of the Tribe of Levi, though they had no previous Qualifications to recommend them, to officiate as Prieſts about his Idols. To employ the meaneſt of the People only in this Office, had been bad Policy, and expoſing his new Inſtitution to Contempt; but to admit any, that offer'd themſelves, of what Rank or Quality ſoever; to lay open the Prieſthood, and deſtroy the needleſs Diſtinction of Men and Things, (as the modern Phraſe is) this had in it the Air of Free-Thinking, and muſt therefore be a very grateful Thing, and ingratiate himſelf, no doubt, with the People. Patrick's Commentary.

† As the Jews had their Feaſt of Tabernacles on the fifteenth Day of the ſeventh Month, ſo Jeroboam had a Feaſt on the fifteenth Day of the eighth Month, which he inſtituted of his own Accord. Some ſuppoſe indeed, that as this Feaſt was appointed by God to be obſerv'd after the Gathering in of the Fruits, which might be ſooner ripe in Jeruſalem, than in the Northern Parts of the Country; ſo Jeroboam might pretend, that the eighth Month would be a better Time for it, than the ſeventh, becauſe then they would every where be gather'd. Others imagine, that he might have this farther Deſign in the Alteration of this Month, viz. that the People of Judah, when their own Feaſt was over a Month before at Jeruſalem, might have Opportunity to come to his, if their Curioſity led them. But the plain Caſe is, that he did every Thing he could in Oppoſition to the eſtabliſhed Religion, and his chief Intention was to alienate the People from Jeruſalem. Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi. c. 2.

the Altar for that Purpoſe, a certain † Prophet, who came from Judah, foretold him, that that very Altar, which he had erected, ſhould one Day be polluted, and deſtroy'd by a Child, born of the Houſe of David, † whoſe Name, in future Ages, ſhould be Joſias; and, for the Proof of the Truth of his Prediction, he added, that immediately it ſhould be ſplit. Incens'd at this Freedom of Speech, Jeroboam ſtretch'd out his Hand, and called to thoſe that ſtood by, to ſeize the Prophet; but, as he ſtretch'd it out, his Arm grew ſo ſtiff, that he could not pull it back again, and the Altar, being ſplit aſunder, let the Fire, and the Aſhes, that were thereon, fall to the Ground.

JEROBOAM by this Means was ſenſibly convinc'd of his Impiety, and intreated the Prophet to intercede with God, for the Reſtoration of his Hand. The Prophet in this Particular comply'd with his Requeſt; but when the King deſir'd his Company to dine with him on Purpoſe to make him a Recompence for his miraculous Cure, he declin'd the Invitation, upon Account of a poſitive Divine Injunction, that he ſhould make no Stay in the Place, not ſo much as to eat or drink in it, or † return by the ſame Way.

The Prophet is ſlain by a Lion, for his Diſobedience to the Divine Command.

In the Town of Bethel there liv'd an old Prophet, who, when his Sons came and told him what the Man of God from Judah had done, † what had paſs'd between him and the King, and what Way he had taken in his Return home, went in Purſuit of him; and, under the Pretence of a freſh Revelation which he had had, countermanding the Injunction which the other thought himſelf under, invited him to his Houſe. After ſome ſmall Demur the young Prophet believ'd him, went with him, ſat down to Meat, and refreſh'd himſelf; but, in his Return, he paid dear for his Diſobedience; for † a Lion met him and ſlew him, but, when it had ſo done, it neither tore his Body, nor meddled with his Aſs; which when the † Who this Prophet was, Commentators are not agreed. The Jews would generally have it to have been Iddo; but, unleſs we may ſuppoſe that what is here related fell out in the latter End of Jeroboam's Reign, Iddo could not be the Perſon; becauſe Iddo was alive in the Days of Abijah, Son of Rehoboam, whereas the Prophet here ſpoken of died, in a Manner, as ſoon as he had deliver'd his Prophecy. Others therefore have thought, that this Prophet, who came to rebuke Jeroboam, was Abijah, the ſame, who had foretold him his Exaltation to the Crown of Iſrael: But, beſides that Abijah was alive after the Time, that this Prophet was ſlain, Abijah was certainly a Native of Shiloh, and liv'd in Shiloh, which is in the Tribe of Ephraim, and Part of Jeroboam's Dominions; whereas it it expreſsly ſaid of this Prophet, that he came from Judah: So that there is no Foundation, ſo much as for a Conjecture, what the Name of this Man of God was. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

† This is one of the moſt remarkable Prophecies that we have in ſacred Writ. It foretels an Action that exactly came to paſs above three hundred and forty Years afterwards. It deſcribes the Circumſtances of the Action, and ſpecifies the very Name of the Perſon, that was to do it; and therefore every Jew, who liv'd in the Time of its Accompliſhment, muſt have been convinc'd of the divine Authority of a Religion founded upon ſuch Prophecies as this; ſince none but God could foreſee, and conſequently, none but God could foretel Events at ſuch a Diſtance. Le Clerc's and Calmet's Commentaries.

† Why this Prophet was forbid to eat or drink with the People of Bethel, the Reaſon is obvious, becauſe he was to have no Familiarity with Idolaters; but why he ſhould not return by the ſame Way that he went, is not ſo very evident. There is a Paſſage in Iſaiah concerning Sennacherib, which helps (as ſome think) to elucidate this Matter, where God tells him, that he would return him back by the ſame Way that he came, Iſaiah xxxvii. 29, 34. i. e. he ſhould return home without doing any Thing: All his Threats and all his great Projects ſhould have no Effect againſt Jeruſalem. And, in like Manner, when God commanded the Prophet not to return by the ſame Way, 'twas as much as if he had ſaid, "See that thou be conſtant, and ſtedfaſt in executing the Charge committed to thee; let nothing hinder or divert thee, "but take abundant Care, that thou do thy Buſineſs effectually." But this Conſtruction is a little too much ſtrained; nor can I ſee, why we may not ſay, that God enjoin'd his Prophet not to return by the ſame Way, leſt Jeroboam, or any other of the Inhabitants of Bethel, either to ſatisfy their Curioſity upon an Occaſion ſo uncommon, or to do him ſome Miſchief for his ſevere Denunciations againſt their Altar and Way of Worſhip, might ſend Men after him to bring him back. Calmet's and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

† By this it appears, that theſe Sons of the old Prophet were preſent, when Jeroboam ſtood at the Altar, and therefore join'd in that idolatrous Worſhip, though their Father did not, and yet was too timorous to reprove it. Patrick's Commentary.

† Not far from Bethel there was a Wood, out of which the two She-Bears came, that deſtroy'd two and forty Children for mocking the Prophet Eliſha, 2 Kings ii. 24. And 'tis not unlikely, that out of the ſame Wood came the Lion, which ſlew this Prophet. Patrick's Commentary.

the old Prophet underſtood, he took, and bury'd him in his own Sepulchre, and gave his Children in Charge, that, whenever he died, they ſhould lay him in a Place contiguous to this Prophet; becauſe he was confident, that whatever he foretold concerning the Altar of Bethel, and [||] that Form of Idolatry, which Jeroboam had ſet up, would moſt certainly come to paſs.

Jeroboam's Wickedneſs, and the Death of his Son Abijah.

Not long after this, Abijah, the Son of Jeroboam, a young [†] Prince of promiſing Hopes, fell ſick: Whereupon Jeroboam prevail'd [†] with his Queen to diſguiſe herſelf in the Dreſs of an ordinary Woman; to go to the Prophet Abijah, who was then at Shiloh; and to enquire concerning the Fate of the Child. The Prophet, at that Time, was blind, and therefore they thought that they might very eaſily impoſe upon him: But, before the Queen came, God had diſcover'd the whole Matter to him, and therefore, as ſoon as ſhe enter'd the Door, he called her by her Name, and then deliver'd the Meſſage, which God had directed him to do. Therein he upbraided Jeroboam with Ingratitude to God, who had made him King; charg'd him with Impiety and Apoſtacy, in ſetting up Images for the Objects of religious Worſhip; foretold the Extirpation of his Race, and the Death of the Child then ſick; threaten'd ſore Judgments to the People of Iſrael, for their conforming to the Idolatry, which he had begun; and, with this doleful Meſſage, he ſent her away, who, as ſoon as ſhe enter'd the Palace-Door (according to the Prophet's Prediction) found the Child dying. But all theſe Judgments and miraculous Events wrought no Reformation in wicked Jeroboam.

Rehoboam's Wickedneſs and Death.

Nor was his Rival, Rehoboam King of Judah, much better. He, for three Years indeed, kept up the true Worſhip of God at Jeruſalem, but it was more out of a Principle of State Policy, than of true Religion.

[||] There is ſomething particular in the Expreſſions of the Text: The Saying, which he cried by the Word of God againſt the Altar of the Lord, againſt the Altar of Bethel, and againſt all the Houſes of the High-places, which are in the Cities of Samaria, ſhall ſurely come to paſs, 1 Kings xiii. 32. But how can they be called the Cities of Samaria, when Samaria itſelf was not now built, nor had the ſeparate Kingdom of Jeroboam as yet obtained that Name? But this only ſhews that the Author, or Compiler of theſe Books of Kings (whether it was Ezra, or Jeremiah) lived long after the Time of Jeroboam, and writes of Things and Places, as they were in his own Days. He knew full well, that Samaria was built by Omri, fifty Years after Jeroboam, ſince himſelf had given the Account of its Foundation, but he was minded to ſpeak in the Phraſe then current, and to make himſelf intelligible to thoſe that read him; and for this Reaſon no doubt it is, that, in 2 Kings xxiii. 18, the falſe Prophet of Bethel is ſaid to have come from Samaria, tho' at that Time there was no City of that Name. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] In 1 Kings xiv. 13. it is ſaid, that in him there was found ſome good Thing towards the Lord God of Iſrael; from whence the Jewiſh Doctors have deviſed the Story, that he broke down an Hedge (it had better been a Wall, I ſhould think) which his Father had made, to keep People from going up to Jeruſalem at the three great Feaſts. But, however this be, we may be permitted fairly to infer thus much from the Words:—That he was the only Perſon in the Family, who had expreſſed a Diſlike of the worſhipping of Calves, an Inclination and Intention to aboliſh it, whenever he ſhould come into Power, and to permit, if not oblige, his Subjects to go up to Jeruſalem, to worſhip accordingly as the Law preſcrib'd. Pool's Annotations.

[†] Jeroboam might be for having his Wife go to conſult the Prophet at Shiloh, becauſe this was a Secret not to be intruſted with any body elſe; a Secret, which, had it been divulged, might have endangered his whole Government: Becauſe, if once his Subjects came to underſtand, that he himſelf had no Confidence in the Calves, which he had ſet up, but, in any Matter of Importance, had Recourſe to the true Worſhippers of God, 'tis not to be imagined, what an Inducement this would have been for them to forſake theſe ſenſeleſs Idols, and to return to the Worſhip of the God of Iſrael, whom they imprudently had forſaken. The Queen then was the only Perſon he could have Confidence in. As a Mother, he knew, that ſhe would be diligent in her Enquiry; and, as a Wife, faithful in her Report; but there were ſundry Reaſons, why he might deſire her to diſguiſe herſelf. For, tho' Shiloh lay within the Confines of Ephraim, yet there is ſufficient Ground to think, that it was ſubject to the Houſe of David, and belonged to the Kingdom of Judah. It was certainly nearer Jeruſalem than Shechem, which Rehoboam had lately fortified, and made his Place of Reſidence: And therefore Jeroboam thought it not ſafe to venture his Queen in a Place that was under his Rival's Government, without her putting on ſome Diſguiſe. He knew too, that the Prophet Abijah was greatly offended at him for the groſs Idolatry he had introduced, and therefore he thought (as juſtly he might) that, if the Prophet perceived her to be his Wife, he would either tell her nothing, or make Things much worſe than they were. The only Way therefore, to come at the Truth, was (as he thought) to do what he did: But herein appears his Infatuation, that he ſhould not think the Perſon, whom he held capable of reſolving him in the Fate of his Son, able to ſee through this Guile and Diſguiſe. Calmet's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

Religion. For, when the Time of Jeroboam's Subjects coming over to him upon that Account was at an end, he threw off the Maſk, and diſcover'd his Inclination to Idolatry; And, as his Example was follow'd by his Subjects, they ſoon exceeded all that went before them. For they not only ſet up Images and Groves upon every Hill, and under every green Tree, but, to add to their groſs Impiety, introduc'd the deteſtable [†] Sin of Sodom, and all the other Wickedneſſes, that the antient Canaanites were expelled for.

UNDER theſe Provocations it was not long, before God ſent againſt them Shiſhak, King of Egypt, who, in the fifth Year of Rehoboam, [†] invaded his Dominions with a very numerous Army; and, having ravag'd the Country, taken moſt of the fortify'd Places, and enter'd Jeruſalem without Oppoſition, plunder'd the Temple and Palace of their rich Furniture and Moveables, he took away all the Money, that was found in the King's Treaſure, and the Treaſure of the Sanctuary, and, at the ſame Time, carry'd off the golden Shields, which Solomon had made; in the Room of which, Rehoboam by this Depredation, was reduc'd ſo low, that he [†] was forc'd to make Brazen ones, for the Uſe and Ornament of his Guards.

WE have little, or nothing more recorded of Rehoboam, but that he reign'd twelve Years, after this Conqueſt, and Devaſtation by Shiſhak; that he had eighteen Wives, and threeſcore Concubines, and by them eight and twenty Sons, and threeſcore Daughters; that moſt of theſe Sons, (who were grown to Maturity in his Life-time) he made Governors in chief of the fenc'd Cities in his Kingdom; that he appointed Abijah (who was the Eldeſt by his favourite Wife Maachah) to ſucceed him in his Throne, and, [‖] after a continu'd War with his Rival Jeroboam, died in the fifty-eighth Year of his Age, in the ſeventh Year of his Reign, and was bury'd in the City of David.

He is ſucceeded by his Son Abijah, who gains a great Victory over Jeroboam, but ſoon after dies.

ABIJAH, who ſucceeded his Father in the Kingdom of Judah, in the eighteenth Year of Jeroboam, King of Iſrael, was a Prince of an active and martial Spirit; and therefore, reſolving to put an end to the long Diſpute between the two Kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael, he rais'd an Army of four hundred Thouſand Men, while Jeroboam, whoſe Territories were of larger Extent, had got together one of eight hundred Thouſand. This notwithſtanding, Abijah determined to give him Battle; but, before they came to the Onſet, he thought it not improper to get upon an Eminence, and † to expoſtulate with the Iſraelitiſh Army the Injuſtice of their Cauſe in revolting from his Father Rehoboam; the Right he claimed on his Side, ſince God had given the whole Kingdom to David, and his Sons for ever; and the reaſonable Expectance he had of the Divine Aſſiſtance in what he was going about, ſince the Religion of Jeroboam was falſe and idolatrous, whereas he, and the Men of Judah, had the pure Worſhip of the living God, his Temple, and his Ordinances, among them.

[†] There are ſeveral Paſſages in Scripture, ſuch as 1 Kings xv. 12: 2 Kings xxiii. 7. Rom. i. 26, 27, &c. from whence it appears, that this Kind of Wickedneſs did frequently attend Idolatry. Among the Heathen, the moſt filthy Things were committed in their Groves, thoſe Places of Darkneſs and Obſcurity, by the Worſhippers of Venus, Bacchus, and Priapus; and, when the Iſraelites fell into the ſame Religion, they muſt, of courſe, have fallen into the ſame Practices, becauſe whatever they did of this Kind, was done in Devotion, and Honour to their Gods, who, as they imagined, were highly delighted with ſuch Obſcenities. Patrick's Commentary.

[†] It may ſeem ſomething ſtrange, that Shiſhak, who was ſo nearly allied to Rehoboam, ſhould come up againſt him, and take his royal City: But Rehoboam, we muſt remember, was not the Son of Pharaoh's Daughter, and therefore no Relation to Shiſhak. But, even had he been never ſo nearly related, as Kingdoms, we know, never marry, ſo 'tis likely, that Jeroboam, who had lived long in Egypt, ſtirred him up to invade his Rival, that thereby he might eſtabliſh himſelf in his new Kingdom: And for this Reaſon it was, that, when the Armies of Egypt had taken the fenced Cities of Judah, they returned, without giving Jeroboam, or his Dominions, any the leaſt Diſturbance. Patrick's Commentary.

[†] This ſhews, to what a low Condition the Kingdom of Judah was reduced. Theſe Shields were a Matter of State and Grandeur; and therefore it concerned them, if they were able, to have them of the ſame Value that they were before: And, as they were carried before the King to the Houſe of the Lord, it ſeemed likewiſe to be a Matter of Religion, that their Value ſhould not be diminiſhed. Now, in making theſe three hundred Shields we are told, that three Pounds of Gold went to one Shield, 1 Kings x. 17. This, at four Pounds per Ounce, or forty-eight Pounds Sterling to the Pound, amounts to no more than 43,2000 l. and therefore it was a miſerable Caſe, that they were reduced from ſo much Wealth to ſo much Poverty, that neither Reaſons of State, nor Religion, could raiſe ſo ſmall a Sum on ſo great an Occaſion. Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi. c. 2.

[‖] But how does this agree with what we read in 1 Kings xii. 23, &c. viz. that God commanded Rehoboam, and his People, not to fight againſt the Iſraelites, and they obey'd? Very well, if we will but obſerve, that, tho' the Jews were commanded not to make War upon the Iſraelites, yet they were not commanded not to defend themſelves, in caſe the Iſraelites ſhould make War upon them; and, conſidering that they were now become two rival Nations, they might, upon the Borders, be continually endeavouring to gain Ground upon each other, and ſo run into frequent Acts of Hoſtility, without ever once engaging in a pitch'd Battle. Patrick's Commentary.

JEROBOAM was no ways ſollicitous to anſwer him in thoſe Points; but, while he continued ſpeaking, order'd a Detachment to march round, and intercept his Retreat: Which when the Men of Judah perceiv'd, they addreſs'd themſelves to God in Prayer for Succeſs, and, while the Prieſts blew the Trumpets, the Soldiers gave a great Shout, and charged the Iſraelites ſo vigorouſly, that they ſoon gave Way, and (as the Enemy gave no Quarter) loſt, in the whole Action, no leſs than five hundred Thouſand Men, the greateſt Slaughter that was ever heard of.

THIS Victory Abijah took care to improve by purſuing Jeroboam, and taking from him ſo many ſtrong Cities, (among which, Bethel, where one of the Golden Calves had lately been ſet up, was one) that he was never thenceforward able to make Head againſt his Adverſary, who by this, and ſome other ſucceſsful Atchievements, grew great and powerful. But his Reign was but ſhort: He reign'd not quite three Years, before he dy'd, and was bury'd in the City of David; and the Reaſon, that ſome have aſſign'd, for God's thus ſhortening of his Days, was, his not deſtroying Idolatry, when, by taking of Bethel, he had it in his Power. For, however he might plead his Poſſeſſion of the Temple, and Prieſthood, to make his Argument good againſt Jeroboam; yet the Character, which the ſacred Hiſtorian gives him, is, (a) that he walked in all the Sins of his Father; nor was his Heart perfect with the Lord his God, as the Heart of his great Grandfather David.

Aſa ſucceeds his Father Abijah, and is a very religious Prince.

ASA however, who, in the twentieth Year of Jeroboam King of Iſrael, ſucceeded his Father in the Throne of Judah, was a Prince of a different Temper. As he enjoy'd the Felicity of a ſettled Peace for the ten firſt Years of his Reign, he wiſely made uſe of it in reforming many Abuſes, that had been tolerated in former Reigns. He expelled the Sodomites, broke down the Idols, and demoliſhed their Altars in all the Cities of Judah; || but he

But ſome have found Fault with him, for ſpeaking not ſo honourably of his Father's military Skill and Courage, which he might as well have omitted, becauſe (allowing it to be true) he ſeems to have ſerv'd no Purpoſe in mentioning it: But, this notwithſtanding, the Speech is very lively, and excellently well calculated to cauſe a Revolt in Jeroboam's Army. Joſephus, who was no mean Orator, and who in ſome Speeches has improv'd upon the ſacred Hiſtorian, is quite out done and ſurpaſs'd in this, inſomuch, that there is no room to introduce him, unleſs it be by Way of Foil to the Original. Patrick's Commentary. || This ſeems to be contradicted by a Paſſage in 2 Chron. xiv. 3. where we are told, that Aſa took away the Altars of the ſtrange Gods, and the high Places: But, for the right underſtanding and reconciling of this, we may obſerve, that there were two Kinds of high Places, the one tolerated for religious Purpoſes, the other abominable from their firſt Inſtitution; the one frequented by devout Worſhippers, the other made the Receptacle of the wicked and idolatrous only. Now theſe were the Altars, and high Places, which Aſa took away, even, where the People ſacrific'd to ſtrange Gods; but thoſe, where God alone was worſhipp'd, had obtain'd ſo long, and were look'd upon with ſo ſacred a Veneration, that, for Fear of giving a general Offence, (tho' he knew, they were contrary to a Divine Injunction) he durſt not adventure to aboliſh them. The Truth is, theſe high Places were famous either for the Apparition of Angels, or ſome other miraculous Event; had either been Places of Abode for the Ark of the Lord, or ſuch, as ſome Prophet, or Patriarch of old had been accuſtom'd to pray and ſacrifice in; and therefore they were look'd upon as conſecrated to the Service of God; nor was there Strength enough in the Government to overcome this inveterate Prejudice, till Hezekiah aroſe, who (to prevent the Calamities, that were coming upon the Nation) had the Courage to effect a thorough Reformation. Patrick on 1 Kings xv. 14. and Calmet on chap. xiv. 23.

he had not yet Power and Authority enough to deſtroy the high Places. The Veſſels of Silver and Gold, which † both he and his Father had conſecrated to the Service of the Temple, he preſented to the Prieſts; and, by all the Enforcements of regal Authority, compelled his Subjects to be religious.

THIS Time of Peace he likewiſe made uſe of, to fortify ſeveral Cities on the frontier Parts of his Kingdom, and to train up his Subjects in the Art of War; inſomuch that, in a ſhort Time, he had an Army of three hundred Thouſand Men of Judah arm'd with Shields and Pikes, and two hundred and fourſcore Thouſand Men of Benjamin arm'd with Shields and Arrows, all Perſons of Courage, and reſolv'd to defend their Country.

Gains a Victory over the King of Arabia, and makes a thorough Reformation in Religion.

IN this Situation of Affairs, Zerah, the ‡ King of Arabia, invaded Judea with an almoſt innumerable Army, but was vanquiſh'd by Aſa with a much inferior Force. For, as ſoon as the Battle began, God ſtruck the Arabians with ſuch a panick Fear, that they began to flee; and Aſa and his Army purſu'd them, took the Spoil of their Camp, carry'd away their Cattle, ſmote the Cities, that were in League with them, and ſo returned in Triumph to Jeruſalem.

AFTER ſo ſignal a Victory, Aſa continu'd in Peace for the Space of five Years more; in which Time he thought himſelf oblig'd, both in Gratitude to God, and in Compliance to the Encouragement, (b) which his Prophet Azariah had given him, to ſet himſelf about a thorough Reformation in Religion. To this Purpoſe he executed all that could be convicted of Sodomy: He deſtroyed all the Idols, that were to be found, not only in Judah and Benjamin, but in any of the conquered Countries likewiſe: He repaired the Altar of Burnt-Offerings, and ſummoned, not only Natives, but Strangers likewiſe to the Worſhip of the true God. On a ſolemn Feſtival, which he had appointed, he order'd ſeven hundred Oxen, and ſeven Thouſand Sheep, Part of the Spoil, which he had taken from the Arabians, to be ſacrific'd; and, at the ſame Time, engag'd in a Covenant with his Subjects, (which was confirm'd by Oath) that whoever ſhould forſake the true Worſhip of God, ſhould have (c) the Sentence of the Law executed upon him, and be infallibly put to Death.

† According to the Piety of antient Times, his Father had devoted ſome Part of the Spoils, he had taken in the War againſt Jeroboam, to the Service of the Temple, but had not Time to make good his Vow, or, upon ſome Account or other, had neglected it, ſo that his Son took care to ſupply that Defect. And, foraſmuch as himſelf had taken large Booty in his War with the Arabians, of this he likewiſe beſtow'd a conſiderable Part upon holy Uſes. Patrick's Commentary.

‡ The Scripture takes no Notice of what was the Cauſe of this War between Zerah and Aſa, nor are Interpreters well agreed what the Country was, from whence this Enemy came. The Country, in the Original, is called Cuſh, tho' we tranſlate it Ethiopia. Now there are three Countries, different from one another, all called by the Name of Cuſh; 1. the Land of Cuſh upon the River Gihon; 2. Cuſh upon the Eaſtern Shore of the Red-Sea; and 3. Cuſh ſituate above Thebaïs, and in the upper Egypt. It is very probable then, that the Country here ſpoken of muſt not be Ethiopia, properly ſo call'd, becauſe we can hardly imagine, how an Army of a Million of Men ſhould be permitted to march through Egypt (as they muſt have done to invade Judea) without ſome Oppoſition. And therefore the Country muſt be that Land of Cuſh, which lay in Arabia Petræa, upon the Eaſt Shore of the Red-Sea, and, at the Extremity to the Point of that Sea, inclining towards Egypt and Judea. And whereas ſome have made it a Doubt, how ſo ſmall a Country could have produc'd ſo large an Army, 'tis no hard Matter to ſuppoſe, that a great Part of the Army might perhaps have been Mercenaries. Calmet's Commentary, on 2 Chron. xiv. 9. and Dictionary, under the Word Cuſh. † The Words of the Text, both in 1 Kings xv. 13. and 2 Chron. xv. 16, according to our Tranſlation, are to this Effect: —— That Aſa removed his Mother Maachah from being Queen, becauſe ſhe had made an Idol in a Grove, both of which he cut down, and burnt. The Word which we render Idol is in the Original Mipheletſeth, but then the whole Difficulty into the Brook Kidron, (d) as Moſes did before by the molten Calf.

THE Fame of this Reformation, and the Bleſſings, wherewith God had hitherto diſtinguiſhed Aſa's Reign, made the Subjects of Baaſha (who was now King of Iſrael) come over in great Numbers to Jeruſalem; which Baaſha perceiving was reſolved, if poſſible, to put a Stop to it, and therefore he fortified Ramah, a Town in the Tribe of Benjamin ſo conveniently ſituated, that, by keeping a good Garriſon there, he might hinder all paſſing to and fro without Leave, and ſo cut off all Communication between his People and the People of Judah.

ASA hearing of this, and knowing the Intent and Purpoſe of the Stratagem, was reſolv'd to give him a Diverſion, if he poſſibly could, on the other Side. To this End he took all the † Silver and Gold, that was in the Temple, as well as what was found in Difficulty turns upon this, what the proper Signification of this Word is. The Vulgate Tranſlation has clear'd this Matter pretty well, by rendering the Paſſage, that this Queen Mother was the High Prieſteſs in the Sacrifices of Priapus; and, when the Septuagint (according to the Vatican Copy) informs us, that ſhe held an Aſſembly in this Grove, and that her Son Aſa cut down all the cloſe Arbours, or Places of Retreat; as the Word Σύνοδος, which we render Aſſembly, may have a more carnal Meaning, and the other Καλαδύους properly ſignifies Hiding-places, or Places of Retirement for wicked and obſcene Purpoſes: We may from hence infer, that both the Latin and Greek Tranſlators took the Miphe-letſeth of Maachah to be ſome lewd and laſcivious Deity, which lov'd to be worſhipp'd in filthy and abominable Actions; and that this could be other than the Roman Priapus (whoſe Worſhippers were chiefly Women) ſeems to be imply'd in the very Etymology of the Word, which properly ſignifies Terriculamentum or a Device to frighten other Things away; for this was exactly the Office of Priapus in all Gardens:

> Pomoſiſque ruber Cuſtos ponatur in hortis, > Terreat ut ſævâ Falce Priapus aves. TIBUL. Eleg. i.

But then the Queſtion is, who the Patriarch was (for moſt Idols were made for ſome Patriarch or other) that the Roman Priapus is thought to repreſent: And the learned Author (from whom I have compil'd this Note) is of Opinion, that it might properly enough denote Lot, who lay with his two Daughters when he was drunk, and of the former begat Moab, the Progenitor of that Nation, who were the greateſt Worſhippers of this obſcene Deity: Tho' for ſeveral Reaſons, that he there enumerates, upon Preſumption that Priapus was the ſame with Baal-Pehor, which ſignifies a naked or uncover'd God) he is more inclinable to think it was Noah, of whom it is ſaid, that he was an Huſbandman, and planted a Vineyard, and that he drank of the Wine, and was drunken, and uncover'd within his Tent, Gen. ix. 20, 21. Jurieu Hiſt. des Dogmes & Cult. Part iv. c. 2. & 3. Moſt of the Ancients are of Opinion, that Aſtoreth, which all allow to be the ſame with Aſtarte, was the Greek Κύπρις, and the Roman Venus. Tully, in his third Book de Natura Deorum, tells us expreſly, that Aſtarte, among the Tyrians, was the fourth Venus, who was marry'd to Adonis, and upon his, and ſome other Authorities, many Moderns have gone into the ſame Sentiment; but, as it is certain, that the Tyrians had their Theology from the Phœnicians, the Teſtimony of St Auſtin cannot but have ſome Weight in this Caſe, ſince he affirms with the greateſt Aſſurance, that Juno, without all Doubt, was, by the Carthaginians, called Aſtarte. Quæſt. 26. in Indices. That Juno was the great Deity and Patroneſs of Carthage is the receiv'd Opinion of the Gentile World:

> Quam Juno fertur Terris magis omnibus unam > Poſthabitâ coluiſſe Samo. &c. VIRG. Æn. i.

And therefore ſince we find Baal, who is the ſame with Jupiter, ſo frequently in Scripture join'd with Aſhtaroth, which is the ſame with Aſtarte, we can hardly refrain thinking, that ſhe muſt be the Roman Juno, and they conſequently Huſband and Wife. How extravagant ſoever therefore the Frolick of Heliogabalus (mention'd by Herodotus) was, in ſending for the Goddeſs of the Carthaginians to be marry'd to his God, who was the Jupiter of the Phœnicians; yet from this Piece of Hiſtory we may inform ourſelves, that the Goddeſs of the Carthaginians was no other than Juno, the ſuppos'd Wife of Baal, or Jupiter; and therefore we find her, by the Phœnician Hiſtorian, Sanchoniatho, call'd Baaltis, which is a Feminine Subſtantive, form'd from the Word Baal, and by the ſacred Writers the Queen of Heaven, Jer. vii. 18. and xliv. 18. We have ſufficient Grounds therefore to ſuppoſe, that this Aſtarte was Juno; but then what particular Woman this Juno was, before ſhe came to be deify'd, we are at a Loſs to know: Only the Conjecture of the learned Author (from whom I have extracted this Note) ſeems to be preferable to any other I have yet met with, viz. that as both Baal and Jupiter are generally allow'd to be the Patriarch Ham, ſo this Juno or Aſtarte, in all Probability, was one of his Wives, from whom the Canaanites and Phœnicians were deſcended. But in this we have the leſs Certainty, becauſe the ſacred Hiſtory ſays nothing of the Adventures of the poſtdiluvian Matrons, whereby we might be enabled to form a Compariſon between them and theſe fabulous Goddeſſes. Jurieu, ibid. Part iv. c. 5.

(d) Exod. xxxii. 20.

† In Caſes of extreme Danger, it was always held lawful to employ ſacred Things in the Defence of one's Country: But there was no ſuch Neceſſity in this Caſe. God had appear'd wonderfully in Aſa's Defence, againſt an Enemy much more powerful than Baaſha was. Nay, he had promiſed him his Protection at all Times, and Succeſs in all his Undertakings, if he would but adhere to his Service; and yet, forgetting all this, he ſtrips the Temple of its Treaſure, and bribes a heathen Prince to come to his Aſſiſtance, and break his League with another, to whom he ſtood engag'd: So that here were three Offences in this one Act of Aſa's. For, 1ſt, he alienated Things conſecrated to God without Neceſſity.

in his own Exchequer, and ſent it as a Preſent to Benhadad, King of Syria, requeſting his Aſſiſtance againſt Baaſha. The Largeneſs of the Preſent ſoon had its Effect: For Benhadad immediately attacks ſeveral Cities in Iſrael with ſuch Succeſs, that Baaſha was forc'd to abandon his new Deſign of fortifying his Frontiers towards Judah, in order to defend the other Parts of his Kingdom, that were thus furiouſly invaded; which gave Aſa an Opportunity to demoliſh the Works, that were begun at Ramah, and with the Materials, that Baaſha had prepar'd, to build him two Cities in his own Dominions, Gebah and Miſpah.

Grows peeviſh and paſſionate towards the End of his Reign, and, after his Death, orders his Body to be burnt.

This applying however to Benhadad for Aſſiſtance was, in Aſa, a Thing inexcuſable. It imply'd a Diſtruſt of God's Power or Goodneſs to help him, of which he had had ſo lately, ſo large an Experience, and therefore the Prophet Hanani was ſent to reprove him for it: But, inſtead of receiving his Reproofs with Temper and Thankfulneſs, he was ſo exaſperated with them, that he put the Prophet in Chains, and gave Orders at the ſame Time, for the Execution of ſeveral of his Subjects.

The Truth is, towards the Cloſe of his Reign, he grew very peeviſh and paſſionate, and uneaſy with thoſe, that were about him; which, Charity would be apt to think, proceeded from his Diſtemper, a ſevere Gout, (in all Probability) whoſe Humour, riſing upwards, killed him, in the one and fortieth Year of his Reign. He was ſucceeded by his Son Jehoſaphat: But, inſtead of being interr'd, (as the Manner of the Jews was) † he order'd his Body to be burnt, with great Quantities of Perfumes, and Spices, and his Bones and Aſhes to be collected, and bury'd in a Sepulchre, which he had provided for himſelf in the City of David.

The wicked Kings, who reign'd in Iſrael, during this Period.

During the long Continuance of Aſa's Reign, ſundry Succeſſions and Revolutions happen'd in the Kingdom of Iſrael, whereof the ſacred Hiſtory has given us but a ſhort Account. In the firſt, or ſecond Year of Aſa, dy'd Jeroboam, of ſome acute Diſeaſe, which the Scripture does not ſpecify. His Reign was famous (or infamous rather) for the Revolt of the ten Tribes, the publick Inſtitution of Idolatry, and the terrible Defeat, which Abijah gave him, and which he himſelf ſeems not long to have ſurviv'd. He was ſucceeded by his Son Nadab, a Perſon, who took care to imitate his Father in all his Wickedneſs; but his Reign was not long. In leſs than two Years he was treacherouſly killed by Baaſha, his Captain-General, who uſurp'd his Crown, and, to maintain himſelf in that Uſurpation, put every one, that was related to his Predeceſſor, to Death; which was certainly a very wicked and barbarous Act, tho' it prov'd the Accompliſhment † of the Prophecy, ceſſity. 2dly, He did this out of a carnal Fear, and Diſtruſt of that God, whoſe Power and Goodneſs he had lateſy experienc'd. And, 3dly, he did it with an ill Intent, even to hire Benhadad to a Breach of his League and Covenant with Baaſha. Pool's Annotations.

† The Words in the Text are theſe,——They laid him on the Bed, which was filled with ſweet Odours, and diverſe Kinds of Spices, prepared by the Apothecaries Art; and they made a great Burning for him, 2 Chron. xvi. 14. But then the Queſtion is, whether the Body itſelf was burnt, or only ſome Spices and odoriferous Drugs, to prevent any bad Smell that might attend the Corpſe. The Greeks and Romans indeed, when they burnt any dead Bodies, threw Frankincenſe, Myrrh, Caſſia, and other fragrant Things into the Fire, and this in ſuch Abundance, that Pliny (Nat. Hiſt. cap. xviii.) repreſents it as a Piece of Profaneneſs, to beſtow ſuch Heaps of Frankincenſe upon a dead Body, when they offer'd it ſo ſparingly to their Gods. The Jews, however, (ſay the Maintainers of this Side of the Queſtion) were accuſtom'd to inter, and not burn their Dead, tho' they might poſſibly learn from the Egyptians the Uſage of burning many Spices at their Funerals, as we find they did at the Funeral of Zedekiah King of Judah, Jerem. xxxiv. 5. but notwithſtanding this, ſome very able Commentators are of Opinion, that all theſe Spices and Perfumes were burnt along with Aſa's Body; and they remark, that, among his other Offences, the ſacred Hiſtory takes notice of this Vanity of his, in ordering his Body to be diſpoſed of according to the Manner of the Gentiles, and not of his own People. Tho' therefore they ſuppoſe, that Aſa was the firſt that introduc'd this Cuſtom; yet, in after Ages, it became very frequent, and was thought the more honourable Ceremony of the two, 2 Chron. xxi. 19. phecy, which Abijah had denounced againſt Jeroboam's Houſe.

Elah. Zimri.

‖ In the ſix and twentieth Year of King Aſa, Baaſha dy'd, and was ſucceeded by his Son Elah, a vicious and debauched Prince, that in the ſecond Year of his Reign, (as he was carouſing in his Steward's Houſe) was aſſaſſinated by Zimri, a conſiderable Officer of Horſe, who, to ſecure the Kingdom to himſelf, † cut off all Baaſha's Friends and Relations: But he had not taken care (as Baaſha did) to gain the Army (which was then beſieging † Gibbethon) over to his Intereſt, ſo that, when they heard of the News of the King's Death, they declar'd for Omri their General. He immediately rais'd the Siege, and marching to Tirzah, the then royal City, ſoon made himſelf Maſter of it; ſo that Zimri ſeeing all loſt, and deſpairing of any Quarter from the Enemy, retir'd to the Palace †, which he ſet on fire, and, after a Reign of ſeven Days only, was conſum'd in it.

Omri.

OMRI, however found it not ſo eaſy a Matter to get the Throne, as he expected. Half the Iſraelites declared for Tibni, the Son of Ginah, which occaſion'd a Civil War for four Years, till having vanquiſh'd and ſlain his Rival Tibni, he came to reign without a Competitor. But his Reign muſt be acknowledg'd to have been very wicked, when we find it recorded of him, that he not only walked in the Way of Jeroboam, (e) but did worſe than all before him. He very probably began to introduce other and more abominable Idolatries, than were then in Uſe, which are therefore called (f) the Works of the Houſe of Ahab. He compelled the People to worſhip the golden Calves; and, by ſevere Laws (which are called (g) the Statutes of Omri) reſtrain'd them voke me to Anger with their Sins; behold, I will take away the Poſterity of Baaſha, and the Poſterity of his Houſe, and will make thy Houſe, like the Houſe of Jeroboam the Son of Nebat: Him that dieth of Baaſha in the City, ſhall the Dogs eat; and him that dieth of his in the Fields, ſhall the Fowls of the Air eat, 1 Kings xvi. 2. &c. The only Difficulty in which Words is, how Baaſha's Exaltation to the Kingdom of Iſrael can be aſcrib'd to God, when it is manifeſt that he got it by his own Treachery and Cruelty. But to this may be reply'd, that tho' the Manner of invading the Kingdom was from himſelf, and his own wicked Heart; yet the Tranſlation of the Kingdom from Nadab to Baaſha (ſimply conſider'd) was from God, who, by his Decree and Providence, order'd it, and diſpos'd of all Occaſions, and of the Hearts of all the Soldiers and the People ſo, that Baaſha ſhould have Opportunity of executing his Judgments upon Nadab, and ſuch Succeſs thereupon, as ſhould procure him a preſent and quiet Poſſeſſion of the Kingdom. So that his Acceſſion to the Kingdom was from the divine Decree, but the Form and Manner of his Acceſſion was from himſelf, from his own Ambition and Covetouſneſs; and, as it was wicked and cruel, is therefore charged upon him as a wilful Murther. Ver. 7. Pool's Annotations

‖ And yet Baaſha's Expedition againſt Aſa, in order to build Ramah, is ſaid to be in the ſix and thirtieth Year of the Reign of Aſa, 2 Chron. xvi. 1. Now, to reconcile this, ſome would have that ſix and thirtieth Year to relate, not to Aſa's Reign, but to the Date of the Kingdom of Judah from the Diviſion of the Kingdom of Iſrael, at Rehoboam's Coming to the Crown, and to (be in Fact) no more than the fourteenth Year of the Reign of Aſa. But that cannot be, ſince this Expedition of Baaſha was ſome Time after Aſa had defeated the King of Ethiopia, or Arabia, and yet this Defeat happen'd in the fifteenth Year of King Aſa's Reign: So that that ſix and thirtieth Year of Baaſha's going up to build Ramah, can, by no good Computation, be the fourteenth Year of King Aſa's Reign. And therefore (without any more to do) we may, with Joſephus, and others, adventure to ſay, that the Occaſion of this Difference proceeds from the Miſtake of ſome Tranſcriber. Howel's Hiſtory, in the Notes.

† One Part of the Threat, which the Prophet Jehu denounces againſt Baaſha is, as we ſee, that God would make his Houſe, like the Houſe of Jeroboam, 1 Kings xvi. 3. and that exactly came to paſs: For, as Nadab, the Son of Jeroboam, reign'd but two Years, ſo Elah, the Son of Baaſha, reign'd no more: And, as Nadab was kill'd by the Sword, ſo was Elah: So wonderful a Similitude was there between Jeroboam and Baaſha, in their Lives and in their Deaths, in their Sons and in their Families. Patrick's Commentary.

† This was a City in the Tribe of Dan, and given to the Levites for their Habitation, Joſh. xix. 44. and xxi. 23. but they ſeem to have quitted it, as they did the reſt of the Cities, when Jeroboam would not ſuffer them to exerciſe their Office, and the Philiſtines, 'tis likely, then ſeiz'd upon it, as being adjoining to their Country. It ſeems however to have been a Place of no inconſiderable Strength, ſince we find, that it maintain'd a Siege for three Kings Reigns ſucceſſively, tho' with ſome Interruption, 1 Kings xvi. 15, 16.

† Some Interpreters would rather have it, that Omri ſet the royal Palace on fire, in order to burn Zimri in it, who had retir'd thither. The Hebrew Words indeed will bear that Conſtruction, but the other Senſe ſeems more likely. Nor has profane Hiſtory forgot to preſerve the Memory of ſome Princes, who have choſen to die in this Manner, rather than fall by the Sword, whereof Sardanapalus is one of the moſt antient, and moſt notorious Examples. Calmet's Commentary.

them from going up to Jeruſalem: And, becauſe the royal Palace at Tirzah was deſtroy'd, he bought of one Shemer a Piece of riſing Ground, whereon he built a Palace for his own Habitation, which, in a ſhort Time, increaſing to a City, was, from its firſt Owner, called in Hebrew, Shomeron, but, according to the Greeks, and our Tranſlation, * Samaria, and was ever after made a Place of the King's Reſidence, and the Metropolis of the Iſraelitiſh Kingdom.

In the eight and thirtieth Year of King Aſa, Ahab ſucceeded his Father Omri, and in Wickedneſs excelled all his Predeceſſors. But of him we ſhall treat at large in our next Chapter, and chuſe to conclude here with this Obſervation, —— that tho', while Aſa reign'd in Judah, Iſrael was in the Hands of ſeven or eight ſeveral Princes, viz. Jeroboam, Nadab, Baaſha, Elah, Zimri, Tibni, Omri, and Ahab; yet ſuch was their Hardneſs in Sin and Idolatry, that, in all theſe Changes, they never once thought of returning to the Houſe of David, or the Worſhip of the true God at Jeruſalem.

The OBJECTION.

"JEROBOAM, no doubt, was a very politick Man; and the Diviſion, which he brought about in the Jewiſh Monarchy, was a Matter of no ſmall Contrivance: But ſtill his ſetting up Calves, as Objects of Divine Worſhip, in order to keep his People at home, and to prevent their returning to the Houſe of David, and the Temple of Jeruſalem, was the moſt ſenſeleſs and abſurd Project, that ever enter'd into any wiſe Man's Head. The Temple of Jeruſalem had not, at this Time, been finiſh'd above thirty Years, and Perſons enough there were alive, who had been Eye-Witneſſes, at its Dedication, of the Glory of the Lord, which not only filled the Sanctuary, but the very Courts adjoining, (h) ſo that the Prieſts could not ſtand to miniſter becauſe of the Cloud: And how could he then think of making theſe People believe, that the Image of a Calf was equally a Symbol of the Divine Preſence? How indeed could they but think, that the King was making a Parcel of Dupes of them, when, upon the Erection of theſe dumb Idols, he could have the Confidence to tell them, (i) Behold thy Gods, O Iſrael, which brought thee out of Egypt!

"ISRAEL had already ſuffer'd too much by a dangerous Practice of this Kind. The Sin of the Molten-Calf had coſt their Fore-Fathers no leſs (k) than three Thouſand Lives; and in every Calamity, that befel their Poſterity, ſome Grains of this wicked Idol they always thought were mingled in it. And can we imagine, that they would ſo eaſily be inveigled into the like Abomination again; that they would make ſo quick a Tranſition from the Worſhip of the true God to the groſſeſt Idolatry, and not rather look upon Jeroboam, as

* It is ſomewhat wonderful, that, when Omri bought this Place of Shemer, whereon he intended to build a City, he did not call it by his own Name, unleſs we may ſuppoſe, that, when Shemer ſold it, he let him have the greater Bargain of it, upon Condition, that it ſhould be continu'd in its firſt Owner's Name. However this be, 'tis certain that, as Samaria was ſituated in the Midſt of the Tribe of Ephraim on a fruitful and pleaſant Hill, it ſoon became the regal and capital City of the Kingdom of Iſrael; nor did its Kings omit any Thing, to make it as ſtrong, as fine, and as rich as poſſible. What Fate it underwent by Benhadad King of Syria; by Salmanaſſer, King of Aſſyria; and by one of the Maccabean Family; by Herod the Great, who rebuilt and beautify'd it; by Auguſtus Cæſar, and by the Emperor Adrian, under whom it finally fell, we ſhall ſee, in a great Meaſure, in the Courſe of this Hiſtory. It is conjectur'd by Bochart (who trac'd the Ruins of it) to have been once larger than Jeruſalem, but now it conſiſts of nothing, but a few Cottages, and Convents, inhabited by ſome Greek Monks. Wells's Geography of the Old Teſtment, Vol. III.

“their mortal Enemy, that was going to bring upon them ſome heavy Judgment, by attempting to introduce a Thing, which, when they conſider'd the Fate of their Anceſtors, was enough to make them tremble?

“HAD he done indeed, as † Sanballat, we find, in After-Times did, built an handſome Temple, in ſome commodious Place, and taken in Prieſts and Levites to officiate therein; this might have been ſome Temptation for the People to ſtay with him: But, inſtead of this, to have Recourſe to that old Invention, for which their Fore-Fathers had ſmarted ſo ſeverely, was a Practice ſo abſurd, ſo unpopular, ſo dangerous, ſo odious, ſo ſure to give Diſguſt, and ſo apt to raiſe a general Revolt, that Jeroboam muſt certainly have been a Man too wiſe and politick, ever to attempt it.

“FOR the ſame Reaſon we can hardly credit the Story of Pharaoh's taking Cities from the Philiſtines, and giving them to Solomon, as Part of his Daughter's Portion. This King of Egypt (be he who he will) might poſſibly be a warlike Prince: But the Country of the Philiſtines (and Gezer in particular) lay ſo far diſtant from him, and ſo little deſerv'd any military Expedition, that we cannot but think, that there is ſome Miſtake in the ſacred Account, as to the Perſon, that was the Aggreſſor; eſpecially conſidering, that there is a palpable Error in the ſuppos'd Reſult of this Expedition, which was the beſtowing the conquer'd Cities, as a Portion for Pharaoh's Daughter; whereas it was a known Cuſtom in thoſe Days, for Women to have no Dower, but, whoever eſpous'd them, was to purchaſe them of their Parents.

“PHARAOH might do this in Gallantry perhaps, becauſe his Daughter was going to be marry'd to a Prince of Solomon's high Renown; but it looks as if his Eſteem for that Alliance ſoon abated, when we find him making his Country a common Refuge for all Solomon's diſcontented Subjects; and even not refuſing Protection to his moſt inveterate Enemy, Jeroboam. Strange it is indeed, that Solomon ſhould have ſo little Intereſt in the Egyptian Court, as not to be able to prevail with the King, who was his Father-in-Law, to deny his Protection to ſuch Perſons, as were conſpiring the Subverſion of his Government!

“BUT the ſtrangeſt Story of all is, the Queen of Sheba's coming to viſit Solomon, and bringing with her a Bundle of Ænigma's and Riddles, for this prodigious Prince to reſolve. For, ſuppoſing the Woman imprudent enough to leave her Kingdom (which is ſeldom ſafely done) merely to gratify a petulant Curioſity, yet can we think, that Solomon, who ſtudy'd ſo hard, as to become a perfect Maſter of almoſt all the learned Sciences, (for ſo the Scripture repreſents him, 1 Kings iv.) ſhould have nothing elſe to do, but to anſwer every impertinent Woman, that came with her Quibbles, and quere Queſtions to him? The Hiſtorian however has taken Care, that we ſhould not detect the Fallacy of this remarkable Adventure, by concealing the Age, the Religion, and the very Country, where this romantick Lady liv'd.

“SOLOMON, no doubt, was a very wiſe Man, and yet we cannot but think, that he laid the Foundation for his own Unhappineſs, as well as Impiety, when he multiply'd Wives to ſuch a pro-

† This Sanballat was a Native of Horon, or Horonaim, a City beyond Jordan, in the Country of the Moabites, and by Darius made Governor of the Cuthites, or Samaritans. He had a Daughter marry'd to a Son of the High-Prieſt Joiada, whom Joſephus calls Manaſſeh; but, when Nehemiah began his Reformation, wherein he oblig'd all, that had taken ſtrange Wives, either to diſmiſs them immediately, or to depart the Country, Manaſſeh, with ſome others, that were in the ſame Circumſtances, fled to Samaria, and there ſettled under the Protection of Sanballat, who obtain'd Leave (of Alexander, ſays Joſephus, but our learned Prideaux makes it of Darius) to build on Mount Gerizim, near Samaria, a Temple, in Imitation of that at Jeruſalem, whereof he made his Son in-Law Manaſſeh High-Prieſt. But of this we ſhall have Occaſion, in the Courſe of this Hiſtory, to treat more at large.

“digious Degree. For 'tis hard to conceive, to what Uſe and Purpoſe ſuch a Milliad of them ſhould ſerve, unleſs it were to ſcold and quarrel, and put the whole Houſe in an Uproar: And, tho' it muſt be own'd, that he is one of the top Characters of the ſacred Hiſtory, yet we cannot but wonder, why he is ſo far neglected at laſt, as to be dropt, all on a ſudden, without any, the leaſt Intimations of his Repentance, or Non-Repentance, of the Happineſs, or Miſery of his future State; which, conſidering the odd Mixture of the Man, and a Life ſo egregiouſly chequer'd with Good and Evil, (as his was) muſt not have fail'd of giving great Satisfaction to every pious Reader.

“WHATEVER wild Enthuſiaſts may think, the Spirit of God, in our Opinion, never takes Poſſeſſion of Fools; and yet how ſhall we account for that Humour of the Prophet Abijah, in tearing his Coat (and his beſt Coat too) into twelve Pieces, when he came to deliver his Meſſage to Jeroboam? Whatever Energy may be pretended in this emblematical Action, for our Hearts we cannot but think, that the Buſineſs might have been expreſs'd in Words at length, and the Man obtain'd a favourable Audience, and Attention to what he had to ſay, as well without it; for, (according to our Sentiments of Things) to ſee any one, at our firſt Salutation, fall a tearing, and rending his Cloaths to Rags, would make us turn from him as a Mad-Man, rather than liſten to him, as a Prophet.

“BUT whatever may become of the Conduct of this Prophet, our Study muſt be to preſerve the Attributes of God inviolate; and yet they ſeem to be in apparent Danger, if, after a moſt ſignal Manner, (l) God ſhould deſtroy a true Prophet, merely for ſuffering himſelf to be perſuaded by another Prophet, who pretended equally to a Divine Revelation, and came to aſk nothing of him, but what he might reaſonably have expected. For might not the Prophet from Judah (as he found himſelf hungry and weary) be apt to think, that God, in Compaſſion to him, had revok'd his Prohibition, and now, that he had executed the main Part of his Charge, allow'd him the Liberty of refreſhing himſelf? This the old Prophet affirms, and affirms that he had it from an Angel; and therefore, if there was any Iniquity in the Thing, on him ſhould the Puniſhment have fallen: And yet he is acquitted, or, at leaſt, no Harm lights upon him, whilſt the other, that is innocently deceiv'd, falls a Prey to a Lion, and (m) his Carcaſe does not come into the Sepulchres of his Fathers.”

Anſwer'd, by ſhewing how Jeroboam came to ſet up Idolatry.

THE Jewiſh Doctors have a Tradition, that after Rehoboam, the Son of Solomon, had left Shechem in haſte, and made the beſt of his Way to Jeruſalem, Jeroboam called a Council conſiſting partly of pious, and partly of wicked Men; that, in this Council, he propos'd whether they would agree, and ſubſcribe to all that he ſhould appoint; that to this they declar'd their Aſſent, and he thereupon conſtituted himſelf King; that when he propos'd farther, whether, if he ſhould eſtabliſh Idolatry, they would agree and conſent to it, the pious Party were ſhock'd, and began to expreſs their Indignation; but that their wicked Neighbours in the Council pacify'd them, by whiſpering in their Ears, “That Jeroboam had no Intention to ſet up Idolatry, but only mention'd it in a comparative Senſe, and with a Deſign to try the Extent of their Obedience:” So that by this Fraud, the pious People in the Council were drawn in, and even Abijah himſelf prevail'd on to ſubſcribe implicitly to whatever Jeroboam ſhould think fit to enact; by which Means he took an Occaſion (as the Iniquity of the Times favour'd him not a little) to eſtabliſh Idolatry by a Law.

(m) 1 Kings xiii. 22.

SOLOMON, we all agree, was a Man of great Fame for his Knowledge, and yet, in the very Maturity of his Age, he diſcover'd a ſtrong Inclination to Idolatry, which could not but make a bad Impreſſion upon the Minds of his Subjects, when they ſaw the Preference that was given to it by ſo wiſe a Prince. His Son Rehoboam was the Iſſue of a Woman, that ſprung from an infamous Nation, an Ammoniteſs by Birth, who (as far as it appears) was never a Proſelyte; and, having a great Hand in her Son's Education, might give him a deep Tincture of her own Sentiments: For, in his Reign, we read, that (n) the People built them High-Places, on every high Hill, and under every green Tree, and did according to all the Abominations of the Nations, which the Lord caſt out before the Children of Iſrael; which they durſt not have done, had the King diſcountenanc'd them by his own Example.

AFTER a Succeſſion of ſuch idolatrous Princes, in the Reign of King Joſiah, (o) the Book of the Law was found in the Houſe of the Lord, at which Hilkiah, the High-Prieſt, ſeem'd to expreſs an uncommon Joy and Wonder: And tho' this might poſſibly be the authentick Copy, (p) which, by God's Command, was laid up in the Sanctuary, yet how much the reading of it in any Copy was at any Time diſus'd, we may gather from what the Hiſtorian tells us of the King, viz. that (q) when he had read the Words of the Book of the Law, he rent his Cloaths; and, by Parity of Reaſon, we may infer, that, what through the bad Example of their Kings, who gave Life and Encouragement to idolatrous Practices, and what through the Negligence of the People, in not peruſing the Books, wherein the Tranſactions of former Times were recorded, the Generation, we are now ſpeaking of, might have forgot the Hiſtory of Aaron's molten Calf, and the Puniſhment purſuant thereupon, and might therefore be induc'd to worſhip another, without any Dread, or Apprehenſions of Danger.

Why he choſe the Figure of a Calf for his Idols.

How the Figure of a Calf, or any other Animal, can be a Symbol of a Deity, it is difficult to conceive. But a certain (r) learned Author, who ſeems a little ſingular in his Opinion, will needs have it, that the Golden Calves, which Jeroboam made, were in Imitation of the Cherubims, (in his Account theſe were winged Oxen) Moſes had plac'd upon the Ark of the Covenant, whereon the Glory of the Lord ſat inthron'd. Theſe Cherubims, in the Tabernacle of Moſes, and afterwards in Solomon's Temple, were plac'd in the Sanctuary, and ſecreted from vulgar Sight: But Jeroboam, to make his Religion more condeſcenſive, plac'd his Calves in open View, ſo that every one, who look'd on them, might, through them, worſhip the God of Iſrael, without repairing to the Temple of Jeruſalem.

THIS Notion (if it were true) would make the Tranſition eaſy from the Worſhip at Jeruſalem, to the Worſhip at Dan or Bethel; but we can hardly imagine, that Jeroboam had either ſo harmleſs, or ſo conformable a Deſign, in ſetting up theſe golden Images. Whatever his Deſign was, 'tis certain, that the Scripture all along repreſents him, as, of all others, the principal Perſon, that (s) made Iſrael to ſin; that (t) drew Iſrael from ſerving the Lord, and made them ſin a great Sin: And therefore we may obſerve, that, whenever it deſcribes a bad Prince, one Part of his Character is, that he imitated the Sin of Jeroboam, the Son of Nebat, (u) who (as the Prophet upbraids his Wife) went and made him other Gods, and molten Images, to provoke me to Anger, and to caſt me behind his Back, ſaith the Lord.

THE Truth is, Jeroboam had liv'd a conſiderable Time in the Land of Egypt, had contracted an Acquaintance with the King thereof, and form'd an Intereſt among the People; and therefore finding himſelf under a Neceſſity of making an Alteration in the eſtabliſh'd Religion of his Country, he thought it the wiſeſt Method to do it upon the Egyptian Model, that thereby he might indear himſelf to that Nation, and, in caſe he met with Oppoſition from his Rival Rehoboam, might hope for Aſſiſtance from that Quarter. For, as the Egyptians had two Oxen, which they worſhipp'd, one called Apis, at Memphis, the Metropolis of the Upper Egypt; and another called Mnevis, at Hierapolis, a principal City of the Lower; ſo he made two Calves of Gold, and plac'd one of them in Bethel, which was in the South; and the other in Dan, which was in the North Part of the Country of Iſrael.

And ſet them up at Bethel and Dan.

THERE were theſe farther Reaſons likewiſe, that might determine him in the Choice of theſe two Places. Dan was a Town, famous (x) for the Teraphim of Micah, unto which there had been a great Reſort for many Ages; and Bethel was, in every one's Opinion, a holy Place, that which Jacob had conſecrated after he had been vouchſaf'd the Viſion of the Ladder, and where God had ſo frequently appear'd to him, that he thought he had Reaſon to call it (y) the Gate of Heaven.

JEROBOAM, no Queſtion, was not inſenſible of the Advantage, his Rival enjoy'd, in having the Temple in his Poſſeſſion; and might many Times wiſh, that he had been able to have built one, that might have ſtood in Competition with it; but this was impoſſible. Seven Years and an half had Solomon been, in compleating the Temple at Jeruſalem, notwithſtanding the Multitude of Hands that he employ'd, and the vaſt Preparations of Money and Materials, that his Father had left him. To build one leſs magnificent, had been inglorious to Jeroboam, and to build one any Ways adequate, was more than he could hope to ſee finiſhed in his Days. The People were grown weary of ſuch publick expenſive Works: The Tax had been heavy and burdenſome to them. (z) Thy Father made our Yoke grievous, was the Complaint, they brought againſt Rehoboam. Upon this the whole Revolt was founded: And therefore, in the preſent State of Jeroboam's Affairs, a new Temple was, of all Projects, the moſt unpopular, and the likelieſt to create a total Defection; ſince it was running directly into his Rival's Error, and, in Effect, declaring, that (a) his Little-Finger ſhould be found heavier, than Solomon's Loins had ever been.

IN the mean Time his Subjects deſerted apace; and, for Want of a Place of religious Worſhip to reſort to, were returning to Jeruſalem, and to their Allegiance to the Houſe of David at once. Something therefore was neceſſary to be done, in order to remedy this growing Evil; and, becauſe Jeroboam readily foreſaw, that, to ſupport himſelf in his Uſurpation, he might poſſibly want the Aſſiſtance of the Egyptians; the beſt Policy that at preſent occurr'd to his Thoughts, was, to do a Courteſy to them, in ſetting up a Form of Worſhip much like theirs, and, at the ſame Time, to gratify his own Subjects, in the Choice of ſuch Places of Worſhip, as had been famous in the Days of old, and whoſe reputed Sacredneſs, * as well as Proximity, might commute for the Want of a Temple.

The Hiſtory of Gezer, and why Pharaoh took it.

GEZER, we own, lay at a conſiderable Diſtance from Egypt, which, ſince the Time of Seſoſtris, had ſeldom extended its Conqueſts into foreign Lands; and therefore,

* The Speech, which Joſephus makes for Jeroboam, upon this Occaſion, is to this Purpoſe: "I need not tell you, "my Countrymen, that God is every where, and not confin'd to any certain Place, but wherever we are, he hears "our Prayers and accepts our Worſhip, in one Place as well as another; and therefore I am not at all for your going "up to Jeruſalem at this Time, to a People that hate you. 'Tis a long tedious Journey, and all this only for the "Sake of Religion. He, who built that Temple, was but a Man, as every one here is, and the golden Calves, that I "have provided for you, the one in Bethel, and the other in Dan, are conſecrated, as well as the Temple, and "brought ſo much nearer to you, on Purpoſe for the Convenience of your Worſhip, where you may pay your Duty "to God, in ſuch a Manner, as beſt pleaſes you, &c." Jewiſh Antiq. lib. viii. c. 3.

therefore, to account for its Conduct here, we muſt obſerve, that Gezer was ſo antient a Town in Canaan, that, when Joſhua (b) conquer'd it, it had a King of no ſmall Note; that, in the Diviſion of the Land, (c) it fell to the Tribe of Ephraim, was bordering upon the Northern Part of the Country of the Philiſtines, and not far from the Mediterranean Sea; that it was one of the eight and forty Cities, which (together with their Suburbs) were given to the Levites; an Inland Town, but at no great Diſtance from the Sea-Port of Joppa; that, when the Ephraimites took Poſſeſſion of it, (d) they ſuffer'd the Canaanites to cohabit with them, who gave them no ſmall Diſturbance, and, towards the latter End of David's Reign, expelled them thence; that, when Solomon came to the Throne, he apply'd himſelf chiefly to the Building of the Temple, nor thought it worth while to diſturb the Peace of his Reign for the Recovery of a few revolted Cities; that, when a Match was propos'd between Solomon and Pharaoh's Daughter, Pharaoh thought he could not do a more acceptable Service, or ſhew the Benefit of his Alliance better, than in taking Gezer, and ſome adjacent Places; that, for this Purpoſe, he ſet out with a large Fleet of Ships, landed at Joppa, beſieg'd Gezer, and, becauſe it made an obſtinate Defence, (e) burnt it to the Ground, and ſlew all the Canaanites, that were in it; but that, not long after, he began to rebuild it; and, when his Daughter was eſpous'd to Solomon, gave him this, and ſome other Places he had taken along with it, as Part of her Portion; for it is a miſtaken Notion, that Princes Daughters had no Portion in thoſe Days.

AMONG the Jews indeed, the Cuſtom was, for the Men to give the Dower, or to make ſome Preſent to the Parents, for the Favour of having their Daughter in Marriage. But this Cuſtom prevailed only among the inferior Sort: Ladies of the firſt Diſtinction were, in all Nations, wont to bring their Huſbands Fortunes proportionate to their Quality: For Saul, we read, declar'd, that the Man, who ſhould ſlay Goliah, ſhould not only have his Daughter in Marriage, but, together with her, Plenty of Riches, and other valuable Emoluments. Antiochus the Great promis'd to ſettle upon his the Kingdoms of Judea and Samaria, as a Dower to Ptolemy, King of Egypt; and (to name no more) Agamemnon, in Times of an elder Date, tho' not ſo great Affluence, offer'd no leſs, than * ſeven good Towns with his, without any reſerv'd Rent, or other Deduction from her Huſband. So that Pharaoh did no more, than conform to the Practice of other great Princes, in endowing his Daughter with the Places, he had taken from the Philiſtines, in all Probability, for that very Purpoſe.

Why Pharaoh entertain'd Jeroboam.

HOW he came to ſwerve ſo ſoon from this Alliance, as to give Protection and Countenance to his Son-in-Law's avow'd Enemies, need be no Wonder at all to him, who conſiders, by what various Springs Kingdoms are govern'd; how the Intereſt of Nations ſhifts about, according to the different Situation of their Affairs; and of how little Weight and Validity all Leagues and Treaties are, when once national Intereſt comes to be thrown into the Counterbalance.

BUT this is not all. The Pharaoh, who receiv'd Jeroboam in his Exile, in all all Probability, was not the King, whoſe Daughter Solomon had marry'd, but a Prince of another Line, and of different Views. The Woman, whom Solomon marry'd, was one of the Dynaſty of the Dioſpolites, whoſe Anceſtors had liv'd at Thebes; but, in the Year that Solomon finiſh'd the Temple, (f) there happen'd a Revolution in Egypt, wherein this Dynaſty, or Race of Kings, loſt the Throne, and was ſucceeded by that of the Taanites, of whom Semendis, the Father of Shiſhak, was the firſt King. Theſe kept their Court at Zoan, an ancient Town not far from the Borders of Canaan, and therefore, very convenient for the Reception of any Refugees, that ſhould come from thence. For, as it was the Intereſt of the former Kings of Egypt to keep up a good Underſtanding with the Houſe of David; ſo now it became equally the Intereſt of the preſent Race to make uſe of all Inſtruments to embarraſs them, leſt, by joining with the depos'd Family, they might, at any Time occaſion another Revolution in Egypt. And this, by the bye, ſuggeſts the Reaſon (whereof the Scripture is ſilent) why Shiſhak invaded the Kingdom of Judah with a vaſt Army, but never pretended to annoy Iſrael; namely, becauſe he thought it adviſeable to diſable Rehoboam from aſſiſting the depos'd Family in Egypt, but to encourage Jeroboam, who, being an Uſurper himſelf, was queſtionleſs a Friend and Ally to thoſe Princes, that were in the like Circumſtances.

WHO the Queen of Sheba was, and in what Climate the Country, from whence ſhe came to viſit Solomon, lay, are Points, wherein the Learned are not ſo well agreed: But whether her Name was Nicaule, Candace, Marqueda, or Balkis, (for different Authors give her theſe ſeveral Names) it matters not much, if we can but find out, what this Sheba was, whereof ſhe is ſaid to have been Queen.

The Kingdom of Sheba, where ſituated.

JOSEPHUS, and, from his Authority, many more are of Opinion, that Sheba was the ancient Name of Meroë, an Iſland, or rather Peninſula in Egypt, before Cambyſes, in Compliment to his Siſter, (other Hiſtorians call her his Mother) gave it her Name. He tells us likewiſe, that ſhe was Queen both of Egypt and Ethiopia; and * the Ethiopians indeed have a Tradition, that, upon her Return, ſhe had a Son by Solomon, whoſe Poſterity reign'd there many Years, and, to this very Day, they have preſerv'd a continual Liſt of their Names and Succeſſors.

THERE are theſe Exceptions however to be made to the Opinion of the Jewiſh Hiſtorian; viz. that whereas he cites Herodotus, as ſpeaking of his Queen Nicaule, Herodotus makes mention of none, but only Niconis, Queen of Egypt; nor does he ſay one Syllable of her pretended Journey to Jeruſalem. Whereas he ſays of this Nicaule, that ſhe was Queen of Egypt and Ethiopia both, the ſacred Hiſtory is plain, that, in the Time of Solomon, there reign'd in Egypt that Pharaoh, whoſe Daughter he marry'd, and, in his Son Rehoboam's Time, Shiſhak. Whereas he tells us, that the antient Name of Meroë, before the Time of Cambyſes, was Sheba; for this he ſeems to want Authority, ſince (g) Diodorus, and other

* The Ethiopians, who held, that this Queen of Sheba was of their Country, tell us, that ſhe return'd big with Child of a Boy, which ſhe had by Solomon; that, when this Child was of Age to learn, ſhe ſent him to Solomon, who brought him up as his own Son; that, in his Education, he took care to provide the ableſt Maſters for him, and then ſent him back to his Mother, whom he ſucceeded in the Kingdom; that the Kings of Ethiopia were deſcended from Solomon by this young Prince, whom they call Meilic, or Menilebec; and that of his Family there were four and twenty Emperors, down to Baſilides, who reign'd about the Middle of the ſeventeenth Age. Vid. Ludolph's Hiſt. of Ethiopia. The Arabians, who, on the other Hand, pretend to the Honour of having this Woman for their Queen, tell us, that her Name was Balkis, the Daughter of Hadhad, Son of Scharhabil, the twentieth King of Jemen, or Arabia Fœlix, and that ſhe reign'd in the City of Mareb, the Capital of the Province of Sheba. Their Hiſtories are full of fabulous Stories concerning her Journey to Solomon's Court, and her Marriage with him, but more particularly concerning the Bird Hudhud (in Engliſh a Lapwing) which Solomon made uſe of to ſend into Arabia upon Occaſion, and to bring him Diſpatches from thence. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Nicaule.

other Hiſtorians, repreſent this City, as built new from the Ground, and not repaired by Cambyſes.

THE more probable Opinion therefore is, that this Queen of Sheba came from a Country ſo nam'd, which lay not in Ethiopia, nor Africa, but in the Southern Part of Arabia Fœlix; becauſe it is generally allow'd, that the Sabeans liv'd in Arabia, and that their Country was uſually called by the Orientaliſts the Kingdom of the South, in Alluſion to which, our Saviour ſtiles this Princeſs (h) the Queen of the South; becauſe their Country borders upon the Southern Ocean, beyond which, the Ancients knew no farther Land, and therefore, our Saviour (according to the common Mode of Speaking) ſays of this Princeſs, that ſhe came from the utmoſt Parts of the Earth; becauſe, in this Country * Women were known to govern, as well as Men; becauſe the common Produce of it was Gold, Silver, Spices, and precious Stones, the very Preſents, which this Princeſs made Solomon; and (if any popular Traditions may be credited) (i) becauſe the Arabians talk of their Queen Balkis, who went to viſit Solomon, and ſhew Travellers the Place of her Nativity to this very Day.

Who the Queen was, and why ſhe viſited Solomon.

NOW if this Princeſs came from Arabia, there is Reaſon to believe, that ſhe was originally deſcended from Abraham, by his Wife Keturah, one of whoſe Sons (k) begat Sheba, who was the firſt Planter of this Country; and, conſequently, that ſhe might have ſome Knowledge of Revealed Religion, by Tradition at leaſt from her pious Anceſtors. To this Purpoſe the Scripture ſeems to intimate, that the Deſign of her Viſit to Solomon was, not ſo much to gratify her Curioſity, as to inform her Underſtanding in Matters relating to Piety and Divine Worſhip. It was Solomon's Fame, (l) concerning the Name of the Lord, i. e. concerning his Knowledge of the Supreme Being, and the proper Manner of worſhipping him, that excited her to take ſo long a Journey: And therefore, our Saviour ſays, that, as ſhe came ſo far to hear his Wiſdom, (his Wiſdom concerning what? Concerning the Nature and Worſhip of Almighty God) ſhe would, at the Day of Judgment, riſe up againſt that Generation, which refus'd to liſten to him.

NOW, if this was the End of this Queen's Viſit to Solomon, who can ſay, but that ſhe left her Country to good Purpoſe, ſince it was to find (m) Wiſdom, and to get Underſtanding, the Merchandize of which is better than the Merchandize of Silver, and the Gains thereof than fine Gold; (n) the Price of which is above Rubies, (o) and all that can be deſired, and is not to be compared to it? But, even upon the Suppoſition, that her Errand was to acquire Knowledge of an inferior Kind, or even to make Trial of Solomon's Sagacity, by propoſing ſome Enigmatical Queſtions to him; yet, who knows not, that it was the Practice, in thoſe Days, for Perſons of the firſt Rank and Figure in Life to exerciſe their Wits in this Manner?

(p) JOSEPHUS, from ſome Writers of the Phœnician Hiſtory, tells us, that Solomon us'd frequently to ſend to his Friend Hiram Problems, and Riddles, upon the Forfeiture of a great Sum of Money, if he could not expound them; and that one Abdemonus, a Tyrian, not only unriddled Solomon's Difficulties, but ſent back ſome new Propoſitions of his own, which, if Solomon could not reſolve, he was to incur the like Forfeiture. Solomon's great Number of Wives kept for State.

WITHOUT knowing the Cuſtom of the Princes of the Eaſt, their Pomp, and Sumptuouſneſs of Living, one might be tempted to wonder, what poſſible Uſe Solomon might make of this Milliad of Wives and Concubines, that he had: But, as he was between forty and fifty Years old, before he ran into this Exceſs, we cannot but think, that he kept this Multitude of Women more for State, than any other Service. (t) Darius Candomannus was wont to carry along with him, in his Camp, no leſs than three hundred and fifty Concubines, in Time of War; nor was his Queen at all offended at it, becauſe theſe Women us'd to reverence and adore her, as if ſhe had been a Goddeſs. F. Le Compte, in his Hiſtory of China, tells us, that the Emperor there has a vaſt Number of Wives, choſen out of the prime Beauties of the Country, many of which he never ſo much as ſaw in his whole Life: And therefore, it is not improbable, that Solomon (as he found his Riches increaſe) might enlarge his Expences, and endeavour to ſurpaſs all the Princes of his Time in this, as well as all other Kinds of Pomp and Magnificence.

How far he was perverted by them.

A MAN of Solomon's great Wiſdom, one would think, ſhould have converted thoſe Women, that were about him, to the true Religion, rather than have ſuffer'd himſelf to be perverted by them to a falſe one. The Scripture tells us indeed, that (u) he went after Aſhtoreth, the Goddeſs of the Zidonians, and † Milcom, the Abomination of the Ammonites, and † Chemoſh, the Abomination of Moab; but ſurely he could never be ſo far infatuated, as to prefer theſe Idols before the God of Iſrael. Theſe Women, no doubt, as they had got an Aſcendant over him, (x) might abate his Zeal againſt Idolatry, and prevail with him for a publick Toleration of their Religion: They might obtain Money of him for the making of their Idols, the Support of their Prieſts, and Expence of their Sacrifices; nay, and perhaps might ſometimes perſuade him, in Complaiſance, to go with them to their Worſhip,

† This God is the ſame with Moloch, which, both in Hebrew and Æthiopick, ſignifies a King; but then there are various Sentiments concerning the Relation, which this God had to the other Pagan Deities. Some believe, that Moloch was Saturn, others Mercury, others Venus, and others again Mars, or Mithra. But F. Calmet, in his Diſſertation before his Commentary upon Leviticus, has made it more than probable, that this God was the Sun, who is call'd the King of Heaven, as the Moon may be ſaid to be the Queen thereof, for its Make and Manner of Worſhip. Vide page 462. in the Notes.

† Chemoſh, or Chamos, comes from a Root, which, in Arabick, ſignifies to make haſte; and from hence ſome have imagined, that he is the ſame with the Sun, whoſe Motion is ſuppos'd to be ſo haſty and rapid; tho' ſome from the Hebrew Root, which ſignifies Contrectatus, or handled, will have him the ſame with the Roman Priapus, who is call'd Pater Contrectationum nocturnarum: While others, from the near Reſemblance of the Hebrew Chamos with the Word Comos, have rather thought it to be Bacchus, the God of Drunkenneſs: But in either Acceptation it may be ſuppos'd to repreſent either Noah or Lot. Worſhip, or to partake of their lewd and riotous Feaſts; but that they ſhould ever be able to alter his Notions concerning the true God, or prevail with him to believe, that the Images, they worſhipp'd, were inform'd with any Kind of Divinity, is a Thing incredible.

And whether he was finally ſav'd, or no.

IN the Courſe of this Prevarication however he continu'd ſo long, that it is now become a famous Queſtion, whether he be in a State of Salvation, or no. Thoſe, that maintain the Negative, are apt to ſuggeſt, that, tho' the Scripture gives us a particular Account of his Fall, yet it takes no Notice of his Recovery; that without the Grace of God he could not repent, and yet his Actions were ſuch, as juſtly deſerv'd a Forfeiture of that Grace; that, had he repented, he would have pulled down the idolatrous Temples, which he had erected, whereas we find them ſtanding many Years after him; and therefore they conclude, that as he did not (y) ſorrow after a godly Sort for his Impieties, becauſe in his whole Behaviour (to the very laſt) they can diſcern no Carefulneſs wrought in him, no Clearing of himſelf, no Indignation, no Fear, no vehement Deſire, no Zeal, no Revenge, which the Apoſtle has made the proper Characteriſticks of a true Repentance. The Promiſe however, which God makes to David concerning his Son Solomon, may incline us to think favourably of his Salvation: (z) I will be his Father, and he ſhall be my Son. If he commit Iniquity, I will chaſten him with the Rod of Men, and with the Stripes of the Children of Men, but my Mercy ſhall not depart away from him. And therefore we may preſume, that towards the Concluſion of his Life he grew ſenſible of his Tranſgreſſions, (a) tho' the ſacred Writer takes no Notice of it, on Purpoſe to leave a Blot upon his Memory, and a frightful Example of human Weakneſs to all Poſterity; that the Temples, which he had built to heathen Idols, he pulled down, and demoliſh'd, tho' they (b) were afterwards rais'd again upon the ſame Places, by other impious Princes; and that, after his Fall, he wrote his Book of Eccleſiaſtes, as a Monument of his Repentance, and Acknowledgment of his own Apoſtacy, and a Warning and Admonition to all others, that, however they may think of (c) doing whatever their Eyes deſired, of keeping nothing from them, and of withholding their Hearts from no Joy; yet in the Event, they would find (what his Experience had taught him ſo late) that all was Vanity and Vexation of Spirit; that there was no Profit in any Kind of Wickedneſs under the Sun, but (d) that to fear God, and keep his Commandments, was the whole Duty of Man.

Why Ahijah rent his Garment.

IT is making a wrong Judgment of Things, to think, that the Cuſtoms of antient Times, and of different Countries, ſhould agree with thoſe of our own Age and Climate. We indeed, when we have any Thing to declare or relate, do it, for the moſt Part, in expreſs Words; but the People of the Eaſt, eſpecially thoſe, who took upon them the Character of Prophets, were fond of diſcovering their Minds in † Signs, and emblematical Actions; becauſe they look'd upon ſuch Repreſentations as more lively and affecting, than any, that proceeded from the Mouth only, could be.

† This is the firſt Symbolical Action that we meet with in any Prophet; but, in after Ages, Inſtances of this Kind became more frequent. Thus Jeremiah made himſelf Bonds and Yokes, and put them upon his Neck, to ſignify the near approaching Captivity of Jeruſalem, Jer. xxvii. 2. Iſaiah, to denote the Captivity of Egypt and Ethiopia, walked naked, i. e. without his upper Garments on, and bare-foot, for three Years, in the Streets, Iſa xx. 2, 3. Ezekiel (to make the People ſenſible that they were to be carry'd away into a ſtrange Land) was order'd to make a Breach in the Wall of his Houſe, and through that, to remove his Houſhold goods, in the Day-time, and in their Sight, Ezek. xii. 2, 3. The falſe Prophet Zedekiah made himſelf a Pair of Iron Horns, and ſaid to Ahab, With theſe ſhalt thou puſh the Syrians, 1 Kings xxii. 11. And the like Practice continu'd under the New Teſtament likewiſe; for Agabus, having bound his Hands and Feet with St Paul's Girdle, told the Company, that ſo ſhould the Jews at Jeruſalem bind the Man unto whom it belonged, Acts xxi. 11.

WHEN the Prophet was ſent to anoint Jehu to be King of Iſrael, the Queſtion, which the reſt of the Captains put to him, (e) Wherefore came this mad Fellow to thee? ſufficiently indicates their Scorn and Contempt of him: And, in like Manner, Abijah might have addreſs'd himſelf to a Man of Jeroboam's haughty Spirit to ſmall Purpoſe, had he not, by ſome previous Action, drawn his Obſervation, and made him attentive to the Meſſage, he was going to deliver. Now, if any ſuch ſymbolical Act was neceſſary at this Time, the tearing his Garment was more proper than any, becauſe, in the Caſe of Saul, Samuel had apply'd it, to denote the Alienation of his Kingdom; (f) The Lord hath rent the Kingdom of Iſrael from thee this Day, and hath given it to a Neighbour of thine, that is better than thou: And, if renting the Garment was no inſignificant Symbol upon this Occaſion, the newer the Garment was, the more it would declare, that what the Prophet did, was by a Divine Command, and upon mature Deliberation.

The Prophet from Judah, his Offence ſtated.

THIS may, in ſome Meaſure, ſuffice to reſcue Abijah from the Imputation of Madneſs, in tearing his Garment to Pieces. And (to come now, in the laſt Place, to the Caſe of the other Prophet, who came from Judah to denounce Judgments againſt the Altar of Bethel, and was ſlain in his Return, for diſobeying the Divine Injunction) this we may think was a ſmall Offence, that hardly deſerv'd ſo ſevere a Fate; but then we ſhould do well to conſider, that, (g) whenever God, in an extraordinary Manner, diſcovers his Will to a Prophet, he always makes ſuch a ſenſible Impreſſion upon his Mind, that he cannot but perceive himſelf actuated by a Divine Spirit; and, conſequently, cannot but be aſſur'd of the Evidence of his own Revelation. This Evidence, the Prophet that was ſent to Bethel, had; for, as he was able, by the Power that was given him, to work Miracles, he could not but be ſenſible of his Divine Miſſion, and that the particular Injunction, of his not eating or drinking in the Town of Bethel, was as much the Will of God, as any other Part of his Commiſſion.

NOW the Deſign of God, in this Prohibition, was, to expreſs his Abhorrence of that idolatrous Place; and therefore the other pretended Revelation of the † old Prophet, who liv'd therein, was juſtly to be ſuſpected, not only becauſe it was repugnant to God's main Deſign, but becauſe it came from a Perſon, who had given no great Teſtimony of his Sincerity in chuſing to live in a Place notoriouſly infected with Idolatry, and yet making no publick Remonſtrances againſt it. The Conſideration of this one Circumſtance ſhould have made the young Prophet diffident of what the other told him, at leaſt till he had ſhewn him ſome Divine Teſtimony to convince him; for it argu'd a great deal of Levity, if not Infidelity of his own Revelation, to liſten to that of another Man, in Contradiction to what he had abundant Reaſon to believe was true.

(g) Stillingfleet's Orig. Sacræ.

† The Learned are divided in their Sentiments concerning this Prophet at Bethel. Some will needs have him to have been a falſe Prophet, highly in Eſteem with King Jeroboam, becauſe he propheſy'd to him ſoft Things, and ſuch as would humour him in his Wickedneſs. To this Purpoſe they tell us, that going to viſit the King one Day, and finding him in a deep Concern upon Account of the Menaces and Reproaches, which the Man of God from Judah had denounced againſt him, he undertook to perſuade him, that that Prophet was an Impoſtor, and to elude the Force of the Miracle he had wrought, by telling him, that there was nothing extraordinary in his Altar's falling down, conſidering that it was new-built, not thoroughly ſettled, loaded with Sacrifices, and heated with Fire. And as for the Matter of his Arm, that was occaſion'd only by his having over-wrought himſelf in pulling the Sacrifices along, and lifting them up upon the Altar, which might make his Hand numb for a while, but, upon a little Reſt, it came to itſelf again; and ſo, with plauſible Diſtinctions, and looſe Inſinuations, he ſhuffled off the Miracle, and made the King more obdurate in Wickedneſs than ever. Others think more favourably of the old Prophet, viz. that he was a true Prophet of God, tho' (ſome ſay) a wicked one, not unlike the famous Balaam, who ſacrific'd every Thing to his Profit: Whilſt others ſay, he was a weak one, who thought he might innocently employ an officious Lye to bring the Prophet of Judah back, who was under a Prohibition indeed, but ſuch an one, as (in his Opinion) related only to the Houſe of Jeroboam, and ſuch others as were of an idolatrous Religion. Joſephus's Jewiſh Antiquities, lib. viii. c. 3.

The Short of the Matter is: The Prophet from Judah had ſufficient Evidence of the Truth of his own Revelation; had ſufficient Cauſe to ſuſpect ſome corrupt Ends in the Prophet, that came to re-call him; and had ſufficient Reaſon to expect an Interpoſition of the ſame Power, that gave him the Injunction, to repeal it: And therefore his Crime was an eaſy Credulity, or Complying with an Offer, (merely to gratify a petulant Appetite) that he knew was repugnant to a Divine Command; and the Leſſon we are to learn, from God's Severity in this Inſtance, is, —— Not to ſuffer our Faith to be perverted by any Suggeſtions, that are made againſt a Revelation, that is of unconteſted Divine Authority, but, (h) if an Angel from Heaven (as the Apoſtle puts the Caſe) ſhould preach any other Goſpel, than what we have received; to deteſt and denounce him accurſed.

And why the lying Prophet went unpuniſh'd.

Here however, we may take Occaſion to admire the unſearchable Secrets of the Divine Juſtice. Jeroboam revolts from his lawful Sovereign; forſakes the Worſhip of the true God; engages the People in groſs Idolatry, and is himſelf harden'd with the Menaces and Miracles of the Prophet, that was ſent to him. A falſe Prophet deceives an innocent Man with a Lye, and draws him into an Act of Diſobedience, contrary to his Inclination; and yet this wicked Jeroboam and this ſeducing Prophet go unpuniſh'd, while the other, who might mean no ill perhaps in turning back, is ſlain by a Lion, and his Body deprived of the Sepulture of his Fathers. We muſt acknowledge indeed, that the Depths of the Judgments of God are an Abyſs, that our Underſtandings cannot fathom: But nothing certainly can be a more ſenſible Proof of the Truth of another Life, and of the eternal Recompences, or Puniſhments that attend it, than to ſee the Righteous ſo rigorouſly treated here for very ſlight Offences; Moſes excluded the Land of Promiſe (i) for a diffident Thought; (k) Lot's Wife chang'd into a Statue of Salt for her looking back; and (l) David, for a vain Curioſity, puniſh'd with the Death of no leſs than ſeventy Thouſand of his Subjects: And if God be thus ſevere to his own Servants; (m) if Judgment thus begins at the Houſe of God, where ſhall the Ungodly and the Sinner appear? As Sentence againſt every evil Man therefore is not ſpeedily executed, this is our Proof, this our Aſſurance, that (n) God will bring every Work into Judgment, with every ſecret Thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.

DISSERTATION I.

Of SOLOMON's Riches, and his Trade to Ophir.

The Riches, which David left Solomon.

He, who only looks into the Map, and there obſerves, in how ſmall a Compaſs the Land of Canaan is compris'd, may be apt to think, that the Kings of that Country were petty Princes, ruling over an indigent, obſcure People, unable to bear any great Expence, and uncapable of making any conſiderable Figure, except now and then, at the Head of their Armies: But he will ſoon perceive his Miſtake, when he comes to reflect on the immenſe Riches, which David left his Son Solomon; on the vaſt Expence of Solomon's magnificent Living; and on the ſeveral Branches of his Revenue, which enabled him to ſuſtain that Expence.

The Scripture informs us, that, out of the Revenues of the Crown, David left Solomon, merely for the Purpoſe of Building the Temple, (o) an hundred Thouſand Talents Talents of Gold, and a Thouſand Thouſand Talents of Silver; out of his privy Purſe, (p) three Thouſand Talents of Gold, and ſeven Thouſand Talents of Silver; and out of the Benevolence of the Princes, (q) five Thouſand Talents, and ten Thouſand Drams of Gold, and ten Thouſand Talents of Silver. Now, ſince it is generally agreed, that a Talent of Silver was equivalent to three hundred forty two Pounds, three Shillings, and nine Pence; and a Talent of Gold amounted to no leſs, than five Thouſand four hundred and twenty-five Pounds Sterling, what an immenſe Sum muſt all theſe Talents of Gold and Silver amount to? Some of the beſt Authors of Weights and Meaſures have computed, that, if all the Walls, Pavement, Lining, and Covering of the Temple had been made of maſſy Gold, (even with the Wages of the Work-Men and Veſſels belonging to it) they would not have come up to the Value here ſpecify'd; and therefore, upon this Suppoſition, they have advanc'd a Notion, that the Hebrews had two Kinds of Talents, a larger, which was called the Talent of the Sanctuary, and a ſmaller, which was the common Talent, and one half leſs than the other, by which all ſuch exorbitant Sums (as they ſay) ought to be reckon'd. But what Grounds they have for this Diſtinction we cannot perceive, (r) ſince it no where appears, either in the Scriptures, or in any other Hiſtory, that the Jews (eſpecially before the Captivity of Babylon) had any more Talents than one; and that their Talent, whether of Silver or Gold, aroſe to a Sum tantamount to what we have ſtated it at, there are ſeveral Inſtances in the Old Teſtament, that may convince us.

To this Purpoſe we may obſerve, that when Amaziah, King of Judah, hir'd an hundred Thouſand Men out of Iſrael, to fight againſt the Edomites, he gave no more than (s) an hundred Talents of Silver for them, which would have been but a very trifling Price indeed, had the Talent here been of leſs Value than three Thouſand Shekels: That when Omri, King of Iſrael, bought the Mountain whereon was built the City of Samaria, he paid for it no more than (t) two Talents of Silver; and yet theſe two Talents were ten Thouſand nine hundred and fifty Pounds, a proper Sum for ſuch a Purchaſe: That when Sennacherib, King of Aſſyria, had oblig'd Hezekiah to pay him (u) three hundred Talents of Silver, and thirty Talents of Gold, that good King exhauſted, not only his own Treaſure, and the Treaſure of the Houſe of the Lord, but was forc'd likewiſe to cut the Gold off from the Doors and Pillars of the Temple: And (to name no more) that, when Pharaoh Nechoh (x) put the Land to a Tribute of an hundred Talents of Silver, and a Talent of Gold, Jehoiakim was neceſſitated to levy a Tax extraordinary upon all his Subjects, that every one might contribute according to his Power: But neither of theſe Remarks (viz. that theſe two Kings were thus ſtraiten'd about the Payment) would the ſacred Hiſtorian have made, had the Talent, in his Days, been of conſiderably leſs Value (y) than Moſes is known to rate it at. So that, upon the whole, we may conclude, that the Hebrew Talent continu'd always the ſame, and amounted to a much greater Sum, than thoſe, who are for debaſing its Value, are willing to allow.

An Objection.

"But, if the Talent muſt be reckon'd "at ſo high a Rate, how can we imagine, "that David, who had no Eſtate from his "Family, and whoſe Dominions were "far from being extenſive, could ever be "able to amaſs ſuch an immenſe Quan"tity of Wealth?" Now, in Anſwer to this, we ſhould do well to conſider, that, even before the Death of Saul, David was at the Head of ſome brave Troops, with whom he us'd to make Inroads into the Enemies Country, and frequently bring from thence large Booty; that, after Saul's Death,

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

Death, he reign'd forty Years in all, and, in that Space, made it his Buſineſs to heap up Riches, eſpecially when he came to underſtand, that God had appointed his Son and Succeſſor to build him a Temple; that, in the Time of his Reign, he had Wars with the Syrians, the Philiſtines, the Ammonites, the Moabites, and ſeveral other Nations, from whom he return'd always victorious, and always laden with their Treaſures, and † rich Spoils; that, by this Means, he enlarg'd his Dominions, as far as (z) the Promiſe made to Abraham extends, even from the River Euphrates, to the Mediterranean Sea, on the one Side, and to the Nile on the other; that the Countries which he ſubdu'd, and made tributary to him, ſuch as Arabia, Phœnicia, Meſopotamia, Idumea, &c. were exceedingly rich, and productive of ſeveral Mines of Gold and other Metals; and that the Tributes which were wont to be exacted upon ſuch Occaſions, were either annual Impoſts, or vaſt Sums of Money at once: If we conſider, I ſay, the Spoils, which he took from conquer'd Nations, and the Tribute, which he rais'd from ſuch as were ſubmitted to his Empire, we ſhall have no Cauſe to wonder at his leaving ſuch immenſe Treaſures to his Son.

But, beſides theſe Revenues from abroad, he had a large Income from the Taxes, which his own Subjects annually paid him, and the Improvements he made of his own Eſtate; which, in thoſe Days, were accounted, not only lawful and allowable, but even honourable and commendable in Princes, as well as others. The ſacred Hiſtory has preſerv'd (a) the Names of the Officers whom he employ'd in this Capacity; and, from the different Provinces wherein they acted, we may, in ſome Meaſure, from a Judgment of the Largeneſs of this Branch of his Income. He had Officers ſet over the Labourers, who were to till his Ground; Officers, to take care of the Dreſſing of his Vines, Olive, and Fig-Trees; Officers, to inſpect the Gathering of his Fruits, and the Managery of his Wine and Oil-Cellars; Officers, to look to the Feeding of his Camels and Aſſes, his Herds of Cattle, and Flocks of Sheep; and Officers, who were to attend to the Selling and Exportation of all theſe. For David, we muſt know, had the Command of the Mediterranean Sea, and had eſtabliſh'd a Commerce with the Phœnicians, Egyptians, Syrians, Philiſtines, and other Nations, who took off his Camels, Aſſes, Oxen, Sheep, Wine, Corn, Oil, Fruits, and other Commodities, in large Quantities, and at very advantageous Prices: All which being put together, will make the Amount of what David left his Son no leſs, than what the ſacred Writer has recorded.

(b) And indeed, conſidering the vaſt Expences Solomon was at, in his Chariots, in his Horſes, in his Camels, in his Armies, in his Shipping, in his Buildings, in his Furniture, in his Servants, for his Table, and for his Women, (which came at length to no leſs than a Thouſand, and all to be maintain'd in the Port of Queens) we can hardly think, that a ſmall Revenue would ever have been ſufficient to anſwer all theſe Demands.

The Scripture indeed informs us, that Solomon's annual Income was (c) ſix hundred threeſcore and ſix Talents of Gold, beſides what he had of the Merchant-Men, and of the Traffick of Spice-Merchants, and of all the Kings of Arabia, and of all the Governors of the Country: But theſe ſix hundred threeſcore and ſix Talents of Gold (d) are thought, by moſt Interpreters, to † Beſide the perſonal Ornaments worn by thoſe who went to Battle, in the Eaſtern Nations, it was cuſtomary to adorn their Weapons and Utenſils of War with the richeſt Metals. We learn from the Hiſtory of David, that the Syrians, whom he ſubdu'd and ſlew in vaſt Multitudes, wore Shields of Gold, and therefore we need not doubt, but that their Quivers, the Handles of their Swords, &c. were of the ſame Metal. He was victorious in about twenty Battles, over the richeſt Enemies in the World; and therefore their perſonal Spoils, rich Arms, military Cheſts, and Gods of Gold and Silver, (always carry'd to Battle with them) could not but amount to an immenſe Sum; and, in all Probability, the Spoils of their Cities and Countries to a much greater. be no more than what aroſe from the Tribute which he impos'd upon conquer'd Nations; over and above which he had a yearly Tax, paid by his own Subjects; Duties upon the Import or Export of all Merchandize; Mines of Gold and Silver, and other Metals; the voluntary Preſents of other Princes; and a Trade to Ophir and Tarſhiſh, which brought him in Riches ineſtimable.

THESE were two Branches of Profit, which his Father had not, at leaſt not in the ſame Extent. Of the former it is ſaid, that (e) every Man, that came to hear Solomon's Wiſdom, brought his Preſent, Veſſels of Silver, and Veſſels of Gold, and Garments, and Armour, and Spices, and Horſes, and Mules, and continued to do the ſame every Year; and of the latter, that he ſent (f) Veſſels to Ophir, which, in one Voyage, brought him four hundred and fifty Talents of Gold, together with Almug-Trees, and precious Stones; and to Tarſhiſh, likewiſe, which brought Gold, and Silver, and Ivory, and Apes, and Peacocks; and, as by this Means, he came to ſurpaſs all the Kings of the Earth for Riches, it may be worth our while to enquire a little, where the Places, which produc'd ſuch Plenty of Wealth, were in antient Times ſituated, and both how, and by whom, a Trade ſo very advantageous might probably be carry'd on.

The Land of Ophir, difficult to find out.

AMIDST the vaſt Variety of Opinions concerning the Situation of theſe two famous Places, Ophir and Tarſhiſh, (g) the learned Grotius has ſuggeſted a good Expedient, one would think, how to find them out; namely, by conſidering what Commodities were brought from thence, and then enquiring of Merchants, who have been in the remoter Parts of the World, where not only Gold and precious Stones, but Ivory likewiſe, and Almug-Trees, and whatever elſe we read of, was brought from thence, is now to be found. But this Expedient will not do; not only becauſe the Seats of Traffick are frequently changing, and any Country may, in Time, be exhauſted of the Commodities, it once abounded with; but becauſe it is no eaſy Matter to tell (by the imperfect Deſcription we have of them) of what diſtinct Species ſome of theſe Commodities were. (h) The Almug-Tree, for Inſtance, has been a Puzzle to moſt Interpreters; nor are they as yet agreed, whether it was the Coral, Ebony, Brazil, Pine, or Citron-Wood; nay, ſome will have it to have been no particular Tree at all, but only a general Name for any Wood whatever, that was excellent in its Kind: And how then can thoſe Commodities, that are of ſo indefinite a Signification, be any Characteriſtick to the Situation of any Country?

NOR is there much more Certainty to be gather'd from the Names of the Places we are in queſt of; for, tho' it be allow'd, that Ophir was the Country, which at firſt was peopled by Ophir, one of Jocktan's Sons, who are ſaid (i) to have inhabited the Country from Meſha to Sephar, a Mountain in the Eaſt; yet, where Meſha and Sephar are to be plac'd, we know no more, than we do where Ophir lies. And, in like Manner, tho' Tarſhiſh may be ſuppos'd by ſome, to be a Town, or Country, not far diſtant from Ophir, yet others will have it to be no proper Name at all, but, by Ships of Tarſhiſh, or from Tarſhiſh, underſtand no more, than Veſſels able to bear a long Voyage, i. e. large Merchant-Ships, in Oppoſition to ſmall Craft, intended for Home-Trade in navigable Rivers. So incompetent are the Marks whereby we may deſcry the true Situation of theſe unknown Places! And therefore we can expect no other, but that the Conjectures of learned Men about them ſhould be widely diſtant.

Different Opinions concerning it.

IN Relation to the Land of Ophir, which is more particularly under our Enquiry, Joſephus (and from him many others) places it in the Indies, in a Country, which he calls the Golden-Coaſt, not unlikely ly the Cherſoneſus Aurea, known now by the Name of Malacca, and is a Peninſula oppoſite to Sumatra. The learned Bochart contends hard for the Iſle Taphrobane, ſo famous among the Antients, which is now called Ceylon, and lies in the Kingdom of Malabar, becauſe this Place (as he tells us) abounds with Gold, Ivory, and precious Stones. Arias Montanus will needs remove it into Armenia; and, when Chriſtopher Columbus at firſt diſcover'd the Iſland Hiſpaniola in 1492, he us'd to make his Boaſts, that he had found the Ophir of Solomon, becauſe he perceiv'd deep Caverns in the Earth, from whence he ſuppos'd that Prince might have dug his Gold. F. Calmet is no leſs ſingular in his Opinion: He places Ophir ſomewhere in Armenia, not far from the Sources of the Tygris and Euphrates; (k) and, to obviate the Objection of the Country's not bordering on the Sea, and not being at Diſtance enough for a three Years Voyage, he ſuppoſes, that Solomon's Fleet made a trading Voyage of it; that in no one Place it met with all the Commodities, it brought home; but, on the Coaſt of Ethiopia, took in Apes, Ebony, and Parrots; in Arabia, Ivory and Spices; and at Ophir, (or the Place of Traffick, where the People of Ophir reſorted) Gold: And tho' this Ophir might be no maritime Country, yet this hinders not, ſays he, why the Gold, which it produc'd, might not be brought by Land-Carriage to ſome Part of the Tygris, or Euphrates, which, at that Time, were a great Way navigable. Grotius, as well as Calmet, is of Opinion, that Solomon did not ſend his Fleet to any Part, either of the Eaſt or Weſt-Indies, but only to a Part of Arabia, (by Arrian called Aphar, by Pliny, Saphar, and by Ptolemy, Sapphera) ſituate on the Main Ocean; and that the Indians brought down their Merchandizes thither, to be bought by Solomon's Factors, and ſhipp'd on board his Fleet. And (to name no more) (l) Huetius, in his Diſſertation upon the Subject, endeavours to perſuade us, that Ophir lay upon the Eaſt Coaſt of Africk, and, more particularly, was that ſmall Country, which is called Sophala; that Solomon's Fleet went out of the Red-Sea, and, from the Harbour of Ezion-Geber, enter'd into the Mediterranean, by a Canal of Communication, which join'd the two Seas; and that having doubled the Cape of Guadarfay, and coaſted along the African Shore, it came at length to Sophala, and there met with Plenty of all the Merchandize, and Curioſities, that the ſacred Hiſtory ſpecifies.

WHICH of theſe Conjectures (for Conjectures they are all) make the neareſt Approaches to Truth, 'tis hard to determine; only we may adventure to ſay, (m) that, if any Part of Arabia did furniſh the World, in thoſe Days, with the beſt Gold, and in the greateſt Quantity, (as ſome good Authors ſeem to ſay) they who would have the Ophir of the Holy Scriptures to be there ſituated, ſeem, of all others, to have the beſt Foundation for their Conjecture; eſpecially conſidering, that, the Uſe of the Compaſs not being then known, the Way of Navigation was, in thoſe Days, by coaſting, which would carry a Ship into Africk much better than either into the Eaſt or Weſt-Indies.

BEFORE the Reign of King David (to enquire a little into this Hiſtory of the Ophir-Trade among the Hebrews) the Hebrews did not much apply themſelves to maritime Affairs. From the Time of Joſhua, they had been almoſt perpetually engag'd in Wars, and had therefore had no Leiſure or Opportunity to think of Navigation. The Tyrians and Phœnicians were then in Poſſeſſion of all the Commerce of the Mediterranean; and on the Main Ocean the Hebrews had not the leaſt Footing, until David made a Conqueſt of Idumea, and thereby became Maſter of two Sea-Port Towns on the Red-Sea, Elah and Ezion geber; and, ſeeing the Advantage that might be made of the Situation of theſe two Places, wiſely took the the Benefit of it, and there began this Traffick.

AFTER the Death of his Father, Solomon continu'd the Trade to Ophir from theſe two Ports, whither himſelf went in Perſon; and, having order'd more Ships to be built, and the Harbours to be repair'd and fortified, he ſettled every Thing elſe, that might tend to the effectual carrying on of this Traffick, not only to Ophir, but to all other Parts, to which the Sea, whereon thoſe Ports lay, open'd him a Paſſage. But his chief Care was to plant in theſe two Towns ſuch Inhabitants, as were beſt qualified to carry on his Deſign; for which Reaſon, he brought thither, from the Sea-coaſts of Paleſtine, as many Sailors as he could get, but eſpecially of the Tyrians, with whom his good Friend and Ally, King Hiram, ſupplied him in great Numbers: So that, in a ſhort Time, he drew to theſe two Ports, and from thence to Jeruſalem, all the Trade of Africa, Arabia, Perſia, and India, which was the chief Fountain of the immenſe Riches, for which his Reign was ſo renown'd.

AFTER the Diviſion of the Kingdom, the Kings of Judah, who kept Poſſeſſion of theſe Ports in Idumea, ſtill carried on the Trade, eſpecially from Ezion-geber, which they chiefly made uſe of, until the Time of Jehoſhaphat; who, having prepar'd a Fleet to go to Ophir, in Conjunction with Ahaziah, King of Iſrael, had the Misfortune to have them deſtroy'd, and daſh'd to Pieces againſt a Ridge of Rocks, which lay at the Mouth of the Harbour, before they could get to Sea; which gave him ſuch a Diſtaſte againſt the Place, that, from thenceforward, the Station of his Ships was at Elah, for from thence we read of his ſetting out a Fleet next Year for Ophir.

(n) WHEN Jehoram ſucceeded his Father Jehoſhaphat, God, for the Puniſhment of his exceeding great Wickedneſs, ſuffer'd the Idumeans to revolt from him; who, having expelled his Viceroy, choſe them a King of their own, and, under his Conduct, regaining their antient Liberty, they ſoon recover'd the two Ports of Elah and Ezion-geber: But even while they had them, there was an Interruption in the Ophir-Trade, until Uzziah, King of Judah, having retaken Elah, in the Beginning of his Reign, fortified it a-new, peopled it with his own Subjects, and reſtor'd the old Traffick to Ophir, which continu'd all along, until the wicked Reign of Ahaz.

IN the Reign of Ahaz, Rezin, King of Damaſcus, being aſſiſted by Pekah, King of Iſrael, took Elah by Surprize; and, having driven out the Jews, that were ſettled there, put Syrians in their Place, and was thinking of carrying on this Trade, which the Kings of Judah had been ſo enrich'd by, to his own Advantage; when, the very next Year, Tiglath-Pileſer, King of Aſſyria, having by the Procurement of Ahaz invaded Damaſcus, and conquer'd Rezin, took Poſſeſſion of Elah, and reſerv'd the Property of Trade to himſelf: So that the Jews, from thenceforward, had never any Portion in it, which prov'd a great Diminution to their Wealth.

HOW the Aſſyrians manag'd this Traffick, while it continu'd in their Hands, or where they fix'd their principal Mart for it, we are no where told. In Proceſs of Time, we find it wholly engroſs'd by the Tyrians, who, from the ſame Port of Elah, by Way of a (o) Town, on the Confines of Egypt and Paleſtine, made it all center in Tyre, and from thence furniſh'd all the weſtern Part of the World with the Wares of Perſia, India, Africa, and Arabia, to the great Enriching of themſelves, as long as the Perſian Empire ſubſiſted, under the Favour and Protection of whoſe Kings they enjoy'd the full Poſſeſſion of this Trade. (p) But, when the Ptolemies prevail'd in Egypt, by building ſeveral Ports on the Egyptian, or weſtern Side of the the Red-Sea, (for Elah and Ezion-geber lay on the Eaſtern) and, by ſending from thence Fleets to all thoſe Countries, where the Tyrians traded from Elah, they ſoon drew all this Trade into their Kingdom, and there fix'd the chief Mart of it at Alexandria, where it continu'd for a great many Ages, until a Way was found out, (q) about two Centuries and an half ago, of ſailing to thoſe Parts by the Way of the Cape of Good Hope; after which, the Portugueſe, for ſome Time, manag'd this Trade, but now the greateſt Share of it is fallen into the Hands of the Engliſh and Dutch.

CHAP. II.

From the Reign of JEHOSHAPHAT, to the Siege of SAMARIA.

The HISTORY.

Jehoſhaphat's good and happy Reign.

AFTER the Death of Aſa, Jehoſhaphat his Son, when five and thirty Years of Age, ſucceeded him in the Kingdom of Judah, and, in all Acts of Piety, as well as the Reformation of Religion, imitated, if not excelled, † the former Part of his Father's Reign. At his firſt Acceſſion to the Throne, he expreſs'd his Zeal for God's Service, in the Extirpation of thoſe Sodomites, and the Deſtruction of thoſe idolatrous ‖ High-places, and Groves, which remain'd in his Father's Reign; and perceiving that the People were groſsly ignorant of the Law (after he had fortified his Frontier Towns, and put his Kingdom in a good Poſture of Defence) he ſent itinerant Prieſts and Levites thro' all his Dominions, with Letters to the Princes, and Heads of each Family, to receive them kindly, and to encourage them in expounding the Law, and inſtructing his Subjects in the Knowledge of their Duty.

† In 2 Chron. xvii. 3. mention is made of the firſt Ways of his Father David; but it may very well be queſtion'd, whether the Word David be not ſlipp'd in here by the Fault of ſome Tranſcriber, in the Place of Aſa, becauſe, in 1 Kings xxii. 43. as likewiſe in 2 Chron. xx. 32, Aſa is named, and not David. Now it is very well known, that in the Beginning of his Reign, Aſa was very religious, but fell from his Piety towards the Concluſion of it; and therefore, the ſacred Hiſtorian, by obſerving that Jehoſhaphat follow'd his Father in what he was in his firſt Days, and not in his old Age, might intend a juſt Reflection upon Aſa for his growing more negligent and remiſs in the Service of God, towards the Decline of his Life. Patrick's Commentary, and Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes.

‖ It is ſaid of his Father Aſa likewiſe, that he remov'd the High-Places, together with the Idols, and the Groves, which his Father and Mother had made, 1 Kings xv. 12, &c. but then we are to obſerve (as we have noted before) that there were High-Places and Groves of two Sorts; ſome for the Worſhip of the true God, which continu'd in Judah, even under religious Princes; and others for the Worſhip of Idols, which good Kings took away, even though they left the other ſtanding. The High-Places and Groves of this latter Kind were thoſe which Aſa deſtroy'd; but becauſe, towards the Concluſion of his Reign, when he grew more infirm in Body, and more remiſs in God's Cauſe, ſome of his Subjects (out of their vile Attachment to Idols) had made new ones, Jehoſhaphat, upon his Acceſſion to the Throne, had Occaſion enough to begin a Reformation in this Particular, as well as many others. Patrick's Commentary on 1 Kings xviii. 30. and Pool's Annotations on 2 Chron. xvii. 6.

A. M. 3001, &c. Ant. Chriſ. 1003, &c.

By theſe Means, he ſoon gain'd the Hearts of his People, who, to ſupport the Dignity of his Government, † brought him Preſents from every Quarter, † and ſtruck ſuch a Terror into his Enemies, that, inſtead of invading his Dominions, the Philiſtines came voluntarily, and paid him a Tribute, which had been ſuſpended for ſome Years, and the Arabians, (whoſe Riches conſiſted in Cattle) ſent him always ſeven Thouſand ſeven hundred Rams, and an equal Number of He-goats, as an annual Acknowledgment of their Homage. For Jehoſhaphat took Care to make himſelf ſtrong in Arms, as well as Wealth, having an Army of above eleven hundred Thouſand Men, beſides thoſe that were in Garriſons, and ſuch fortified Places, as he had well furniſh'd with Plenty of all military Stores.

In ſhort, Jehoſhaphat was rich and happy, great and honourable, belov'd by his Subjects, and rever'd by his Enemies; only there was this great Blemiſh in his Reign, that he † marry'd his Son Jehoram to Athaliah, Daughter to Ahab, King of Iſrael, which both diſpleas'd God, and involv'd him and his Family in ſundry Troubles: But of theſe hereafter.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

Ahab's wicked Reign.

This Ahab (as we ſaid) was one of the wickedeſt Princes, and the moſt abominable Idolater, that ever ſat on the Throne of Iſrael: For he not only continu'd the Worſhip of the Calves, which Jeroboam had ſet up, but, having married Jezebel, the Daughter of * Eth-baal, King of Tyre, to pleaſure this Woman he introduc'd the Idolatry, paid to the * God Baal, built him a Temple in Samaria, erected an Altar, and * made a Grove, where all Kinds of Impurities were committed, the more effectually to proſelyte the Vicious and Debauch'd to a Religion, ſo agreeable to their Luſts; and (as an Inſtance of the daring Impiety of this Age) one Hiel, who liv'd at Bethel, the famous Seat of all Idolatry,

---

† It was cuſtomary for Subjects to make their Oblations to their Princes, eſpecially at the Commencement of their Reigns. It is ſaid of ſome diſaffected People, that they brought Saul no Preſents, even though he had been recogniz'd as King, 1 Sam. x. 27. But by the Preſents here ſpoke of, we may not improperly underſtand the Tribute and Cuſtoms, which his Subjects were oblig'd to pay him; only it was thought proper to call them Preſents, or voluntary Gifts, as a Name of a leſs odious Sound and Import, than that of Tributes. Calmet's Commentary on 2 Chron. xviii. 5.

† His Enemies could not but be ſenſible, that it was in vain to aſſault him, while he continu'd firm in his Religion; for they muſt have obſerv'd, that the Proſperity of all the Kings of Judah depended on that, and that they never fell into the Hands of their Enemies, but when they had firſt fallen from God. Patrick's Commentary.

† The only Shadow of Excuſe, that can be alledg'd in Behalf of Jehoſhaphat's marrying his Son in this Manner, might be a fond Conceit, that, in caſe Ahab ſhould die without Iſſue-Male, he might have a Chance to re unite the two Kingdoms of Iſrael and Judah; but in this Piece of worldly Policy he found himſelf ſadly diſappointed. Patrick's Commentary.

* Eth-baal, or Ithobalus (as he is call'd by profane Writers) does equally ſignify the Strength of Baal. In the Catalogue of the Kings of Tyre, he is ſaid to be the eighth; and, as both Tyre and Sidon were from the Beginning ſubject to the ſame King, it is not improbable, that their Kings reſided ſometimes at one, and ſometimes at the other City, and were therefore call'd the Kings of Tyre or Sidon promiſcuouſly. As the Character of King and Prieſt were frequently united in the ſame Perſon, ſo is he ſuppos'd to have been the High-prieſt of Aſtarte or Aſhtaroth, the Goddeſs of the Sidonians, and for this Reaſon perhaps his Daughter was ſo violently attach'd to that Kind of Idolatry, that, when ſhe came into Power, ſhe was for utterly extirpating all the Prieſts and Prophets of the Lord. The Truth is, this Queen was a Monſter in her Kind, and therefore the Name of Jezebel has paſs'd into a Proverb, to denote any cruel, impious, and imperious Woman. Calmet's Commentary on 1 Kings xvi. 31.

* Baal, in the Hebrew Tongue, ſignifies Lord, and, as Selden obſerves, was antiently the Name of the true God, until the World grew wicked, and came to apply it to the Sun; in After-Ages, to other Stars; and, in Proceſs of Time, to any of their Kings, whoſe Memory was dear to them. The ſame Author obſerves, that the Phœnician Belus, or Baal, was the ſame with the European Jupiter, and, as Sidon was ſituated on the Sea, their Baal was call'd by the Greeks, the Jupiter of the Sea. But more of this you may ſee in the Writings of that great Man. Selden, de Diis Syris.

* The Jewiſh Law was ſo far from permitting Men to plant any ſuch Groves, that it enjoins all its Profeſſors to deſtroy them: Ye ſhall deſtroy their Altars, and break down their Images, and cut down their Groves, and burn their graven Images with Fire, Deut. vii. 5. and therefore, though Joſephus imputes the Erection of theſe to the Impiety of his Wife Jezebel, who (as he tells us, Jewiſh Antiq. lib. viii. c. 7.) "was a Woman of a bold, enterpriſing Humour, "and of ſo impetuous and ungovernable a Spirit, that ſhe had the Confidence to build a Temple to Baal, the God of "the Tyrians, to plant Groves for Superſtition, of all Sorts of Trees, and to appoint her Prieſts, and falſe Prophets, "expreſsly for that idolatrous Service;" yet her Huſband was nevertheleſs culpable for giving her that Indulgence.

A. M. 3001, &c. Ant. Chriſ. 1003, &c.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

Idolatry, † adventur'd to rebuild Jericho, in Defiance of the Curſe, which Joſhua had pronounc'd (above four hundred and fifty Years before) againſt any Man, that ſhould attempt it. But the preſumptuous Wretch found to his Coſt, that Joſhua's Prediction was verified in him, when he ſaw his eldeſt Son die, as ſoon as he had begun the Work, the reſt of his Children drop off, as he continu'd it, and his youngeſt Son taken away at laſt, when he had compleated it.

The Prophet Elijah foretells a Famine, which accordingly comes to paſs.

IN the Midſt of this bold Impiety, Iſrael however had the Happineſs to be bleſs'd with an eminent Prophet, Elijah, the † Tiſhbite, an Inhabitant of Gilead, on the other Side of Jordan; who, being griev'd to ſee ſuch a general Apoſtacy from the true Religion, ‖ pray'd earneſtly to God, that he would lay bare his Arm, and ſhew ſome viſible Token of his Diſpleaſure againſt ſo wicked a People: And, accordingly, in a ſhort Time, he was ſent to Ahab to let him know, that God intended to bring a ſore Famine (occaſion'd by Want of Rain) upon the Land, which ſhould laſt for above three whole Years.

WHEN the Drought had continu'd ſome Time, and the divine Threat began to operate, Elijah retir'd to the † Brook Cherith, where he conceal'd himſelf for the Space of a whole Year, and was miraculouſly fed by the Ravens, which brought him Bread and Fleſh twice every Day, and for his Drink he had the Water of the Brook; but when the Water of the Brook began to fail, God directed him to go to † Zarephtha, a Town belonging to the Territories of Sidon, where he had appointed a Widow-Woman to entertain him.

† Jericho was one of the firſt Places, that Joſhua took in the Land of Canaan; and, when he took it, he laid it under a Cherem, that it ſhould never be rebuilt: But it is preſumable, that, as the ſacred Hiſtory was then very little read, Hiel might either be ignorant of this Interdict, or, being a profeſs'd Idolater himſelf, might probably, at the Inſtigation of Jezebel, or, to gain the Favour of the Court, do it in Defiance of God, and to let the World ſee, that whatever was denounc'd in his Name was of no Significance at all, and for this Reaſon met with his condign Puniſhment. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

† Theſbe was a Town on the other Side of Jordan, in the Tribe of Gad, and in the Land of Gilead, where this Prophet was born, or at leaſt inhabited for ſome Time. Since the Scripture makes no Mention, either of the Quality of his Parents, the Manner of his Education, or his Call to the prophetick Office, ſome Jewiſh Doctors have been of Opinion, that he was an Angel ſent from Heaven, in the midſt of the general Corruption of the World, to preſerve the true Worſhip of God. Others pretend, that he was a Prieſt, deſcended from the Tribe of Aaron; that his Father's Name was Sabaca, and his Birth altogether miraculous: Whilſt others again will needs have it, that he was Phineas, the Son of Aaron, who, after having liv'd a long while concealed, appear'd again in the World under the Name of Elijah. But where the Scripture is ſilent, all Particulars of this Kind are of ſmall Authority. This, however, may be ſaid with Safety of him, that he was one of the chief, if not the Prince of the Prophets of his Age; a Man of a great and elevated Soul, of a generous and undaunted Spirit, a zealous Defender of the Laws of God, and a juſt Avenger of the Violations of his Honour. Calmet's Commentary.

‖ St James's Words are theſe: ——— Elias was a Man ſubject to the like Paſſions, as we are; and he prayed earneſtly, that it might not rain, and it rained not on the Earth for the Space of three Years and ſix Months. Our bleſſed Saviour makes mention of the like Compaſs of Time, Luke iv. 25. and yet neither of theſe are contradictory to what the ſacred Hiſtory tells us, viz. That the Word of the Lord came to Elijah in the third Year, 1 Kings xviii. 1. For we muſt remember, that, as Egypt had uſually no Rain, but was water'd by the River Nile; ſo the Land of Canaan had generally none except twice a Year, which they called the early and latter Rain. The former of theſe was in the Month Niſan, which anſwers to our March; and the other in the Month Marheſhvan, which anſwers to our October. Now, at the Beginning of the Drought, Ahab might very probably impute the Want of Rain to natural Cauſes; but when, after ſix Months, neither the former nor the latter Rain fell in their Seaſon, he then began to be enrag'd at Elijah, as the Cauſe of the national Judgment, and forc'd him, at God's Command, to ſave his Life by Flight: And from that Time the three Years in the Hiſtorian are to be computed, tho' from the firſt Notice, which Elijah gave Ahab of this approaching Calamity, to the Expiration of it, were certainly three Years and an half. This Calamity is ſaid to have been procur'd by Elijah's Prayers: But we muſt not therefore imagine, that his Prayers were ſpiteful and malicious, but neceſſary rather, and charitable to the Offenders; that, by the ſharp and long Affliction, which they produc'd, God's Honour, and the Truth of his Word and Threatenings (which was now univerſally contemn'd) might be vindicated; and that the Iſraelites (whoſe preſent Impunity harden'd them in their Idolatry) might hereby be awaken'd to ſee their Wickedneſs, their Dependance upon God, and the Neceſſity of their Returning to his Religion and Worſhip. Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi. c. 2. and Pool's Annotations.

† The Brook Cherith, and the Valley, through which it runs, are both very near the River Jordan; but, whether on the Eaſt or Weſt Side of the River, it is not ſo well agreed. Euſebius, or at leaſt St Jerom, places it beyond Jordan, and ſo on the Eaſt Side of it; but others generally agree in placing it on the Weſt Side, becauſe God, in ſending away Elijah, ſays to him, Get thee hence, and turn thee Eaſtward, and hide thyſelf by the Brook Cherith, that is before Jordan, 1 Kings xvii. 3. where the Expreſſion, turn thee Eaſtward, ſeems to imply, that Elijah was on the Weſt Side of Jordan; for, had he been on the Eaſt Side, then to have gone to the Brook, which ran on that Side into Jordan, would have been to have turn'd Weſtward. Wells's Geography of the Old Teſtament, Vol. III.

The Manner of his living in Exile, and his Interview with Ahab.

THE Famine had ſpread itſelf over the Country of Sidon, as well as the Land of Iſrael, and therefore, when the Prophet drew near the Town, he met the Widow, to whom he was directed; and when he requeſted of her to give him a little Water, and withal a Morſel of Bread, ſhe ſolemnly proteſted to him, that ſhe had but an Handful of Meal in a Barrel, and a little Oil in a Cruiſe, and was come out to pick up ſome Sticks wherewith to bake a Cake, * for her and her Son, which was to be the laſt Meal they were ever like to eat. But the Prophet, encouraging her to do as he bid her, gave her Aſſurance, that her Meal and her Oil ſhould not fail as long as the Famine laſted; which accordingly prov'd true: For, of that little Store, ſhe, and her Son, and the Prophet, liv'd for the Space of two Years; and when, in this Space, her Son fell ſick, and died, Elijah, by his Prayers, reſtor'd him to Life again, which † gave the Mother full Conviction, that he was a Perſonextraordinary ſent from God.

AFTER he had liv'd in this Obſcurity for above two Years, God commanded him to return to the Land of Iſrael, and to preſent himſelf before Ahab, becauſe, in a ſhort Time, he intended to ſend Rain upon the Earth. At this Time the Famine was ſo extreme about Samaria, that the King commanded * Obadiah, one of the Officers of his Houſhold, and ſome others with him, to go all over the Country in queſt of ſome Forage for the Subſiſtance of his Cattle; and, to ſee that his Orders were fully executed, himſelf went along with ſome of them. Obadiah, of all the King's Domeſticks, was the moſt religious. He, in the Time of Jezebel's † perſecuting the Prophets of the Lord, conceal'd an hundred of them, by fifty in a Cave, and there ſuſtain'd them with † Zarephtha, or, as it is called in the New Teſtament, Sarepta, was a Town which lay between Tyre and Sidon, but ſomewhat nearer to the latter. Mr Maundrell (in his Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſalem) obſerves, that it is the ſame with what is now called Sarphan, diſtant about three Hours Travel from Sidon, in the Way to Tyre. Whatever it was formerly, the ſame Author tells us, that at preſent it conſiſts of no more than a few Houſes, on the Tops of the Mountains, about half a Mile from the Sea; though there is Reaſon to believe, that the principal Part of the City ſtood below, in a Space between the Hills and the Sea, becauſe there are ſtill Ruins there to be ſeen of a very conſiderable Extent. Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament, Part i. Chap. 5. Sect. 2.

* Some of the Hebrew Doctors (and herein they are follow'd by ſome Chriſtians) are of Opinion, that this Widow's Son was the Prophet Jonas; that, after his Reſtoration, his Mother gave him to Elijah; that ever after he attended on the Prophet, as long as he liv'd; and, on a certain Occaſion, was diſpatch'd by him to Nineveh, as every one knows. But, beſides that theſe Traditions are deſtitnte of any real Proof, Jonah was an Hebrew, as he himſelf declares, Chap. i. 9. and a Native of Gath-hepher, as we read 2 Kings xiv. 25. whereas this Widow's Son was a Native of Zarephtha, a Town belonging to the Kingdom of Sidon, and by Birth a Stranger to the Race of Iſrael. Calmet's Commentary.

† The Woman had ſufficient Reaſon to believe, that Elijah was a Prophet, or Perſon ſent from God, when ſhe ſaw the miraculous Increaſe of the Meal and Oil; but upon his not curing her Son when he lay ſick, but rather ſuffering him to die, her Faith began to droop; whereas, upon ſeeing him revive, her Faith reviv'd with him; and, through the Joy of having him reſtor'd to her again, ſhe accounted this latter Miracle much greater than the former Le Clerc's Commentary.

* There are ſome Jewiſh Doctors, who think, that this Obadiah was the ſame with him, whoſe Writings we have among the twelve minor Prophets. They pretend, that he was marry'd to that Woman of Shunem, where Eliſha us'd to lodge; that he was a Diſciple of the Prophet Elijah, and the laſt of the three Captains, whom King Ahaziah ſent to apprehend him; and that, for this Reaſon, he had Compaſſion on him, though he deſtroy'd the others that came before him, with Fire from Heaven, 2 Kings i. 9, &c, but all theſe Things are pure Apocrypha. Obadiah himſelf, in his Diſcourſe with Elijah, ſufficiently tells us who he was, viz. a Perſon truly religious, who worſhipp'd God alone, and had a ſingular Affection for his Servants; enough, one wou'd think, to have made Ahab diſcard, if not perſecute him, had he not found him ſo highly uſeful in the Management of his domeſtick Affairs, as to connive at his not worſhipping Baal, or the Calves; eſpecially ſince we read nothing of his going up to Jeruſalem, which was a Defect, that God perhaps might think proper to diſpenſe with. Calmet's and Patrick's Commentaries.

† Elijah, in his Appeal to the People, tells them, I, even I only remain a Prophet of the Lord, 1 Kings xviii. 22.

Neceſſaries. When Elijah met him, Obadiah ſaluted him with great Reſpect; but, when the Prophet requir'd him to go, and acquaint the King that he was there, and deſir'd to ſpeak with him, Obadiah at firſt excus'd himſelf, upon Apprehenſion that Elijah might vaniſh, and leave him the Object of the King's Indignation, who had taken ſuch vaſt Pains to find him out; but when the other aſſur'd him that he would not ſtir, he went, and brought the King to him. The King, at the firſt Interview, began to upbraid him with being the Cauſe of the Calamity, that the Nation ſuffer'd; but Elijah boldly return'd the Charge, and having taxed him with the Worſhip of falſe Gods, (which was the Source of all their Woe) he undertook to prove that they were no more than falſe Gods, if ſo be the King would be pleas'd to ſummon all the People to meet upon Mount Carmel, and to bring thither the four hundred and fifty Prieſts of Baal, together with the four hundred Prieſts of Aſtarte, who were ſupported at Jezebel's Table.

His Conteſt with the Prieſts of Baal.

ELIJAH had told Ahab, that (a) there ſhould be neither Dew nor Rain upon the Earth, but according to his Word; and therefore the King, being perſuaded perhaps, that the national Remedy was in his Hands, neglected not to iſſue out Writs for the Convention of the People, and order'd the Prieſts to attend. When they were all met together, Elijah, having firſt upbraided them with their vile Prevarication, in mixing the Worſhip of God and the Worſhip of Baal together, made them a fair Propoſal to this Effect: "Since "there can be no more than one, infinite, "ſupreme, almighty, and independent "Being, let us, at this Time, make the "Experiment, who this Being is. You, "who are the Worſhippers of Baal, have "all the Advantages on your Side, the "Favour and Protection of the Court, "four hundred and fifty Prieſts of one "Kind, and four hundred of another; "whereas I, who am the Manager of "God's Cauſe, am but one poor, baniſh'd "Man; and yet let two Oxen be brought "before us. Let the Prieſts of Baal "chuſe their Ox, dreſs it, cut it in Pieces, "lay it on the Altar, but let there be no "Fire thereon; and I, in like Manner, "will do ſo to my Ox. Let them pray "unto their Gods, and I, likewiſe, will "call on the Name of Jehovah; and then "let the God, who, by conſuming the "Sacrifice † with a ſudden Flaſh of Fire, "ſhall make it appear, that he hath heard "the Prayers, be own'd by this whole "Aſſembly to be this one, this true, "ſupreme, independent Being."

THIS was a Propoſal, that none could gainſay; and therefore the Prieſts of Baal prepared their Altar, ſacrific'd their Bullock, plac'd it on the Altar, and began to call upon their God: But, Baal continuing deaf to their Invocations, they betook themſelves to odd Geſticulations. They ſometimes jumped over the Altar, ſometimes and therefore we can hardly imagine, that all theſe hundred, whom Obadiah preſerv'd, were Men actually inſpir'd, and inveſted with a prophetick Character, but ſuch only, as were the Diſciples of the Prophets, and Candidates for that Office. For, 'tis not unlikely, that, even to Jezebel's Time, there were remaining in Iſrael Schools of the Prophets, which ſhe endeavour'd to deſtroy, as well as thoſe, that were bred up in them, that there might none be left to inſtruct the People in the true Religion. Theſe ſhe certainly look'd upon as Enemies to her Idolatry, and might poſſibly perſuade her Huſband, that they were diſaffected to his Government, and Favourers of the Kings of Judah, becauſe they worſhipp'd the ſame God, and thought that the proper Place of his Worſhip was Jeruſalem: And therefore, the greater was the Piety and Courage of Obadiah, in reſcuing ſo many Victims from the Hands of this furious and enrag'd Woman. Patrick's and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

(a) 1 Kings xvii. 1.

† This is not the firſt Time, wherein God had declar'd his Approbation of his Worſhippers by ſending down Fire to conſume their Sacrifices, Lev. ix. 24. and Judg. vi. 21. and tho' perhaps it may be poſſible for Evil Spirits, who may have great Knowledge how to manage Meteors and Exhalations to their Purpoſes, to make Fire deſcend from the Clouds; yet, ſince they can do nothing without a Divine Permiſſion, 'tis abſurd to think, that, in a Matter of Competition between him and falſe Gods, he ſhould give evil Spirits any Licence to rival him in his Miracles. Le Clerc's Commentary.

times danc'd round it, and (according as their Cuſtom was) began * to cut themſelves with Knives and Lancets; but all to no Purpoſe: Whereupon the true Prophet * fell a bantering and ridiculing them, (as juſtly he might;) but their ſenſeleſs Idol knew nothing of the Matter.

This Farce of Devotion they continu'd till the Day was above half ſpent; when Elijah, deſiring the People to draw near, and taking twelve Stones, according to the Number of the Tribes, * repaired the Altar of the Lord, which had been broken down, and then laying his Bullock on the Wood, † pour'd a great Quantity of Water three Times on the Sacrifice, on the Wood, and on the Altar; ſo that the Water filled the Trench, which was dug round the Altar to receive it. It was now much about the Time of offering the Evening-Sacrifice, when, having prepar'd all Things, he approach'd the Altar, and pray'd in this Manner: "Lord God of "Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, ſhew this "Day, that thou art the God of Iſrael, "that I am thy Servant, and that it is "by thy Commandment, that I have done "this Thing. † Hear me, O Lord, hear "me,

* A ſtrange Method, one would think, to obtain the Favour of their Gods! And yet, if we look into Antiquity, we ſhall find, that nothing was more common in the religious Rites of ſeveral Nations, than this barbarous Cuſtom. To this Purpoſe we may obſerve, that (as Plutarch, de Superſtitione, tells us) the Prieſts of Bellona, when they ſacrific'd to that Goddeſs, were wont to beſmear the Victim with their own Blood; that the Perſian Magi (according to Herodotus, lib. vii. c. 191.) us'd to appeaſe Tempeſts, and allay the Winds, by making Inciſions in their Fleſh; that they, who carry'd about the Syrian Goddeſs, (as Apuleius, lib. viii, relates) among other mad Pranks, were, every now and then, cutting and ſlaſhing themſelves with Knives, till the Blood guſh'd out; and that, even to this Day, ſome modern Travellers tell us, that in Turkey, Perſia, and ſeveral Parts of the Indies, there are a Kind of Fanaticks, who think they do a very meritorious Thing, and what is highly acceptable to the Deity, in cutting and mangling their own Fleſh. Dii autem nullo debent coli genere (ſays Seneca, as he is quoted by St Auſtin de Civ. Dei, lib. vi. c. 10.) ſi & hoc volunt. Tantus eſt perturbatæ mentis, & ſedibus ſuis pulſæ furor, ut ſic Dii placentur, quemadmodum ne homines quidem ſæviunt teterrimi, & in fabulas traditæ crudelitatis, &c. Calmet's and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

* The Words of the Prophet are very cutting and ſarcaſtical. Cry aloud; for he is a God no doubt, tho' he may be ſomewhat deaf, or a great Way off, ſo that he cannot hear unleſs ye cry aloud; or either he is talking about Buſineſs, or purſuing his Pleaſures; or perhaps he is in a Journey, and not at home; or peradventure he ſleepeth, and muſt be awaken'd. The two laſt Notions, of being aſleep, and not at home, how abſurd ſoever they may be, when apply'd to the Deity, were certainly ſuch, as ſeveral Idolaters conceiv'd of their Gods, as appears from theſe Paſſages in Homer. In the former of theſe, Thetis, ſays he, cannot meet with Jupiter, becauſe he was gone abroad, and would not return in leſs than twelve Days:

> Ζεὺς γὰρ ἐπ' ὠκεανὸν, μετ' ἀμύμονας Αἰθιοπῆας,
> Χθιζὸς ἔβη μετὰ δαῖτα, θεοὶ δ' ἅμα πάντες ἕποντο, > Δωδεκάτῃ δέ τοι αὖθις ἐλεύσεται Οὔλυμπόνδε. Iliad i. lin. 423.

And, in the Concluſion of that Book, he ſhews us in what Manner the Gods went to ſleep:

> Ζεὺς δὲ πρὸς ὃν λέχος ἤϊ' Ὀλύμπιος ἀστεροπητὴς,
> Ἔνθα πάρος κοιμᾶθ', ὅτε μιν γλυκὺς ὕπνος ἱκάνοι
> Ἔνθα καθεῦδ' ἀναβὰς, παρὰ δὲ χρυσόθρονος Ἥρη.

* The Altar, which the ſacred Author here calls the Altar of the Lord, was certainly one of thoſe, which were built in the Time of the Judges, and firſt Kings of Iſrael; when, for Want of a fixt Place of Worſhip, ſuch Structures were permitted. Both Tacitus, lib. ii. c. 74, and Suetonius ſpeak of the God of Carmel, whom Veſpaſian went to conſult, when he was at Judea. His Prieſt Baſilides promis'd him all Manner of Proſperity and Succeſs in his Undertakings; but (as the two Hiſtorians tell us) there was neither Temple, nor Statue upon the Mountain, but one Altar only, plain, but very venerable for its Antiquity. Some are of Opinion, that this Baſilides was a Jew, and Prieſt of the Moſt High God; but it ſeems more reaſonable, that he was a Pagan Prieſt, and probably the ſame, who met Veſpaſian in the Temple of Serapis in Egypt. However this be, the Altar of Carmel ſeems to have had its Original from this Altar of the true God, which the antient Hebrews firſt erected, and Elijah afterwards repair'd; which even the Heathens held in ſuch Veneration, that when they came to be Maſters of the Country, they would not place ſo much as an Image by it. Calmet's Commentary.

† This the Prophet did to make the Miracle more conſpicuous and convincing; to ſhew, that there was no Fallacy in it, no Fire concealed in or about the Altar, but that the Lightning, which was to conſume the Sacrifice, came from Heaven, and came at his Invocation; for ſo Joſephus tells us, that Elijah invited the People to draw near, even that they might ſearch, and ſpy every where, if they could find any Fire, that was ſecretly convey'd under the Altar. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. viii. c. 7. Calmet's and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

† He was the more earneſt and fervent in his Prayer, (as Abarbinel thinks) becauſe he had undertaken to make the Experiment of God's Power, on his own Accord, and without any particular Command from him, nothing doubting, but that he would appear to vindicate his own Honour, even though he offer'd Sacrifices on an High Place, which was not agreeable to the Law. Patrick's Commentary.

“ me, that theſe People may underſtand, “ that thou art the Lord God, and that “ their Hearts may be converted from their Idol unto thee.” And no ſooner had he ended this ſhort Prayer, but a Fire fell from Heaven, and conſum'd, not only the Burnt-Offering, but the Wood and Stones, nay, the very Duſt of the Place, and the Water that was in the Trench; inſomuch, that, when the People ſaw the Miracle, they fell on their Faces, and, in Admiration and Acknowledgment of it, own'd that the God of Elijah was the true God: Whereupon he order'd them to ſeize on the Prieſts of Baal, as a Pack of Cheats and Impoſtors, to carry them down from the Mountain, and to ſlay them all at the Brook Kiſhon.

AFTER this juſt Execution was finiſh'd, the Prophet returned to the Top of the Mountain, from whence he might view the Mediterranean Sea, where, having pray'd for Rain, he ſent his Servant ſeven Times to ſee if he could perceive any Appearance of it: And he at laſt brought him back Word, that he ſaw a ſmall Cloud riſing out of the Sea, no bigger (to look at) than a Man's Hand; whereupon he commanded him immediately to go to Ahab, and to adviſe him to haſten to his Chariot, and make the beſt of his Way Home, leſt the Rain ſhould ſtop him. The King took his Advice, and the Prophet, having † girded up his Veſt about him, ran all the Way before him to Jezreel.

His flying from Jezebel's Revenge, and appointing Eliſha to the Prophetick Office.

AS ſoon as Queen Jezebel underſtood what Elijah had done, and more eſpecially, how he had cauſed all the Prophets of Baal to be ſlain, ſhe vow'd Revenge, and † ſent him Word, that his Life, the next Day, ſhould certainly pay for theirs: Whereupon, not thinking himſelf ſafe in Ahab's Dominions, he withdrew to a Town, in the Southern Part of the Tribe of Judah, called Beerſheba, where he diſmiſs'd his Servant, and, purſuing his Journey farther into Arabia Petræa, walked all Day: But in the Evening, being extremely fatigu'd, he laid himſelf down under a Juniper-Tree, ſick with the World, and deſirous to leave it. He had not however ſlept long, before an Angel, who had brought him Meat and Drink, awoke him, and bad him eat heartily, becauſe he had a long Journey to take. The Prophet did as he was order'd, and, in the Strength of that Repaſt, walk'd ‖ forty Days and forty Nights, until he came to Mount Horeb, the Place where God

† In this Country looſe and long Garments were in Uſe: and therefore, when the People were minded to run, or to make any great Expedition, their Cuſtom was to gird them round their Waiſt: But why the Prophet condeſcended to become, as it were, the King's running Footman upon this Occaſion, was to ſhew the World, that his extraordinary Power, in working Miracles, and the Conqueſt he had thereby gain'd over his Enemies, had not made him proud; and to ſatisfy the King of his Readineſs to do him all the Honour imaginable; that he was far from being his Enemy, and only deſir'd he would become the true Worſhipper of God, who was (as he could not but ſee) the Lord God of Iſrael. Patrick's Commentary.

† This certainly was the Effect of her blind Rage, and not of any Prudence in her: For Prudence would have adviſ'd her to conceal her Reſentment, until ſhe had been ready to put her Deſigns in Execution; whereas this ſending him Word was giving him Notice of his Danger, and admoniſhing him to avoid it. But, ſince he had had the Confidence to come where ſhe was, ſhe might think perhaps, that he was as courageous, as ſhe was furious; that upon this Notice he would ſcorn to fly; and ſhe too, in her Pride, might ſcorn to kill him ſecretly or ſurreptitiouſly, reſolving to make him a publick Sacrifice. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

‖ From Beerſheba to Mount Horeb is, at the moſt, not above one hundred and fifty Miles, and the Prophet it ſeems had advanc'd one Day's Journey into the Wilderneſs; ſo that he had not now more to finiſh, than any active Man might have done in four or five Days at moſt: How came the Prophet then to make forty of it? To this ſome reply, that he (as the Iſraelites of old) was kept wandering up and down this pathleſs Wilderneſs forty Days, as they were forty Years, till, at length, he hit upon this ſacred Mountain. Others ſuppoſe, that he went about by private Ways, and perhaps ſometimes reſted, and lay hid, in order to prevent Diſcovery. But, when he was got into the Wilderneſs, one would think, he might have been ſafe, and proceeded ſtrait-way (if he knew the ſtrait Way) to the Place intended. I was thinking therefore, that there would be no Solæciſm, if we ſhould ſay, that the Time of going to, ſtaying at, and coming from the Mount of Horeb, is to be included in theſe forty Days, though, in a ſhort Narration, Words may be ſo expreſs'd, as if the Journey only had taken up all that Time. Patrick's, Calmet's, and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

A. M. 3001, &c. Ant. Chriſ. 1003, &c.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

God at firſt deliver'd the Law to Moſes. Here he betook himſelf to a Cave, intending very probably to ſpend the Remainder of his Days in Retirement; but he had not been long in the Place, before he had a Viſion, wherein God having firſt, by ſeveral † Emblems, made him ſenſible of his Almighty Power and Preſence, gave him to underſtand, that the Number of his true Worſhippers was greater, than he imagin'd, and that he would not fail to take Vengeance on the Houſe of Ahab for their abominable Idolatry. To this Purpoſe he order'd him to return into his own Country by the Way of Damaſcus, where he was to anoint Hazael, King of Syria; Jehu, King of Iſrael; and to appoint Eliſha his Succeſſor in the Prophetick Office; intimating hereby, that theſe Men † would be proper Inſtruments, in his Almighty Hand, whereby to puniſh the Idolatry of Iſrael, and to aſſert the Righteouſneſs of his own Cauſe.

This was a Matter of ſome comfortable Expectation to Elijah; and therefore, leaving Horeb, in his Return by the Way of Damaſcus, * he found Eliſha at Plough, and, as he paſs'd by, † caſt his Mantle upon him; which the other underſtanding to be a Call to the prophetick Miniſtry, as ſoon as he had ſettled his private Concerns, went with Elijah, and was his Servant as long as he liv'd; ſo that Elijah did not think it neceſſary to go to Damaſcus, upon the Account of Hazael, nor to ſpeak with Jehu in Iſrael; but left theſe Affairs to be tranſacted by Eliſha, whenever a fit Opportunity ſhould offer.

† Elijah being now come to the ſame Place, where God had deliver'd the Law to his Servant Moſes, God was minded to communicate the like Favour to his Servant the Prophet, viz. to unveil his Majeſty to him, and give him ſome Signal of his immediate Preſence: But there is ſomething very remarkable in the Words of the Text:—— And behold the Lord paſſed by, and a ſtrong Wind rent the Mountains, and brake in Pieces the Rocks, but the Lord was not in the Wind; and, after the Wind, an Earthquake, but the Lord was not in the Earthquake: and, after the Earthquake, a Fire, but the Lord was not in the Fire; and, after the Fire, a ſmall ſtill Voice, 1 Kings xix. 11, &c. And various are the Speculations, which this Appearance of the Divine Majeſty hath ſuggeſted to Interpreters. The Generality of them have look'd upon this, as a Figure of the Goſpel Diſpenſation, which came, not in ſuch a terrible Manner, as the Law did, with Storms, Thunders, Lightnings, and Earthquakes, (Exod. xix. 16.) but with great Lenity and Sweetneſs, wherein God ſpeaks to us by his Son, who makes uſe of no other, but gentle Arguments, and ſoft Perſuaſions. But, if we take this to be a ſymbolical Admonition to Elijah, according to the Circumſtances he was then in, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that herein God intended to ſhew him, that, though he had all the Elements ready arm'd at his Command to deſtroy Idolaters, if he pleas'd to make uſe of them, yet he had rather attain his End by Patience, and Tenderneſs, and Long-ſuffering, (ſignify'd by that ſmall ſtill Voice, wherein the Deity exhibited himſelf) and conſequently, that the Prophet ſhould hereby be incited to imitate him, bridling that paſſionate Zeal, to which his natural Complexion did but too much incline him. Le Clerc's, Calmet's, and Patrick's Commentaries.

† The Words in the Text are——And it ſhall come to paſs, that him, that eſcapeth the Sword of Hazael, ſhall Jehu ſlay; and him, that eſcapeth from the Sword of Jehu, ſhall Eliſha ſlay, 1 Kings xix. 17. Where it is eaſy to obſerve, that theſe Things are not mention'd according to the Order of Time, wherein they fell out, (for Eliſha was a Prophet before Hazael was King, and Hazael was King before Jehu) but they are ſpoken of according to the Decree of God, who (as Abarbinel obſerves) appointed every one to execute that, which was proper for him to do: "Thus he intended (continues that learned Commentator) that Hazael ſhould deſtroy the Idolaters "of Iſrael in Battle, and therefore, he mentions that firſt, becauſe it is a general Calamity; but, as Jezebel, the "Children of Ahab, and the Prieſts of Baal went not to fight, and conſequently, could not fall in Battle, he "ordain'd Jehu to cut off them, and all the Worſhippers of Baal, in the Manner that we find he did: But as "he did not know the Diſpoſition of little Children, he left them to be puniſh'd by Eliſha, who, by the Spirit "of Prophecy, foreſaw that they would become Idolaters." But in this there ſeems to be more Subtility than needs, ſince the plain Senſe of the Words is no more than this:—— "That God, in his Providence, had "appointed three Perſons to puniſh the Iſraelites according to their Deſerts; and that one or other of theſe "ſhould infallibly execute his Judgments upon them." The only Difficulty is, how the Prophet Eliſha can be ſaid to ſlay, when, by Profeſſion, he was a pacifick Man, and never engag'd in War? But when we conſider the two and forty Children which he deſtroy'd, beſides others, whom, upon the like Occaſion, he might deſtroy; the ſore Famine, which, by God's Appointment, he ſent upon the Iſraelites, 2 Kings vi. 25. and the many cutting Prophecies and Comminations (called in Scripture the Sword of the Mouth, Iſa. xlix. 2. and Rev. i. 16.) which he denounc'd againſt them, and were fulfilled, we ſhall find Reaſon enough to juſtify the Expreſſion. Pool's Annotations.

* So far was this from being any Argument of his Poverty, that it was in Reality a Token of his Wealth and great Riches: For he, who could keep twelve Yoke of Oxen at Plough, was in this Reſpect no inconſiderable Man, and yet, (according to the Manner of theſe early Times) he look'd after his own Buſineſs himſelf; for nothing was of greater Eſteem, not only among the Hebrews, but among the antient Greeks and Romans likewiſe, than Agriculture; and ſuch Perſons as were of the beſt Quality, were called αὐτȣργοὶ, Men, who did their Work themſelves, and left not the Care of it to others. Eliſha therefore was taken from the Plough to be a Prophet, in like Manner, as among the Romans afterwards, ſome were taken from thence to be Conſuls and Dictators. Patrick's Commentary.

† The Mantle was the proper Habit of Prophets, 2 Kings i. 8. and therefore Elijah's caſting it upon him was the Ceremony

Ahab defeats Benhadad twice, and at laſt makes a diſhonourable Peace with him.

NOT long after this, (but upon what Provocation it is not ſaid) Benhadad rais'd a vaſt Army againſt Ahab King of Iſrael, and march'd directly into his Country, with a Deſign to inveſt Samaria, his capital City: But, before he did that, he ſent him an haughty Meſſage, demanding all that belong'd to him, in Satisfaction for ſome preſum'd Affront. Ahab was in no Condition to oppoſe him, and therefore he tamely ſubmitted himſelf to his Mercy: But this Tameneſs only inflam'd Benhadad's Inſolence, ſo that, in his next Meſſage, he demanded all Things to be immediately put into his Hand; which when the King of Iſrael underſtood, he called a general Council of the Kingdom to adviſe what to do. They unanimouſly agreed to ſtand by their King to the laſt Extremity; which when Benhadad's Embaſſadors told him, he fell into a great Rage, and immediately order'd his Army to inveſt Samaria; but, while he lay before the Town, God, who was juſtly provok'd at this proud Syrian, ſent † a Prophet to Ahab, not only to aſſure him of Victory, but to inſtruct him likewiſe † in what Method he was to obtain it; which ſucceeded ſo well, that Benhadad himſelf had much to do to eſcape with his Life.

THE ſame Prophet however gave the King of Iſrael great Caution to recruit his Army, and be upon his Guard, againſt the Beginning of the next Year, becauſe then the Syrians deſign'd him another Viſit; which accordingly came to paſs. For ſome of his Generals having perſuaded the King of Syria, that the Gods of the Iſraelites * were Gods of the Hills, and therefore, to fight them with Advantage, was to fight them in a Champain Country, he rais'd another Army of equal Force with what he had loſt the Year before, and Ceremony here us'd for his Inauguration: Though, as it was cuſtomary for Servants to carry their Maſters Garments after them, others underſtand it only as a Token, that Eliſha was to be his Servant, to attend upon him, and ſucceed in his Office. However this be, 'tis probable, that when he caſt his Mantle upon him, he ſaid ſomething to Eliſha, whereby he acquainted him with his Deſign, though the particular Words, in ſo ſhort an Hiſtory, are not expreſs'd. Pool's Annotations, and Le Clerc's Commentary.

† Who the Prophet was, who upon this, and another Meſſage afterwards, was ſent to Ahab, the Scripture no where informs us. 'Tis ſomewhat odd, that, during this whole War with Benhadad, neither Elijah, nor Eliſha, the two principal Prophets of Iſrael, ſhould appear, though other Prophets (whereof there ſeems to be a conſiderable Number) make no Scruple of executing their Office; whether it was, that this War commenc'd before Jezebel's Perſecution of the Prophets, or that this impious Queen abated her Perſecution, and let them have ſome Reſpite, when ſhe had exterminated Elijah as ſhe thought. Calmet's Commentary.

† The Inſtruments in attaining this Victory were to be the young Men of the Princes of the Provinces, with Ahab at the Head of them, 1 Kings xx. 14. The Hebrew Word has ſome Ambiguity in it, and may ſignify either the Sons or the Servants of the Princes of the Provinces, either young Noblemen themſelves, or their Fathers Pages, who were equally brought up delicately, and quite unaccuſtomed to War. It was by theſe young Men, and not by old experienc'd Officers, that this Battle was to be won; that thereby it might appear, that the Victory was wholly owing to God's gracious and powerful Providence, and not to the Valour, or Fitneſs of the Inſtruments. Pool's Annotations.

* That there were many Gods, who had each their particular Charge and Juriſdiction; that ſome preſided over whole Countries, whilſt others had but particular Places under their Tuition and Government; and were ſome of them Gods of the Woods, others of the Rivers, and others of the Mountains, was plainly the Doctrine of all Heathen Nations. Pan was reckon'd the God of the Mountains, for which Reaſon he was ſtiled Ὀρειβάτης; and, in like Manner, the Syrians might have a Conceit, that the God of Iſrael was a God of the Mountains, becauſe Canaan (they ſaw) was a mountainous Land; the Iſraelites (they perceiv'd) delighted to ſacrifice on High Places; their Law (they might have heard) was given on the Top of a Mountain; their Temple ſtood upon a famous Eminence, as did Samaria, where they had ſo lately receiv'd a ſignal Defeat. For their farther Notion was, that the Gods of the Mountains had a Power to inject a panick Fear into an Army, whenever they pleas'd. Nay, that they did not only aſſiſt with their Influence, but actually engage themſelves in Battle, in Behalf of their Favourites, is a Sentiment as old as Homer, and what Virgil has not forgot to imitate.

and came, and ſat down before Apheck, a City in the Tribe of Aſher. Ahab however was prepar'd to receive him, and, tho' with a Force far inferior to the Syrians, march'd out to meet them; gave them Battle, put them to the Rout, and ſlew upon the Spot an hundred Thouſand of them.

The Vanquiſh'd † betook themſelves to Apheck, but were far from finding any Security there; for the Providence of God purſu'd them, and, by the Fall of the Walls of that City, deſtroy'd ſeven and twenty Thouſand more of them: So that, terrify'd with this Judgment, Benhadad went to hide himſelf in ſome Place, where he thought he could not eaſily be found, but was, at length, prevail'd on by his chief Officers, to ſend Embaſſadors to Ahab in the humbleſt Manner, cloath'd in † Sack-Cloth, and with Ropes about their Necks, to make their Submiſſion upon what Conditions he pleas'd. The Conditions, that Ahab inſiſted on, were only, that the Syrians ſhould reſtore all the Country, which they had taken from Baaſha King of Iſrael, and grant † him ſome Privileges in Damaſcus their Capital, as a Token of their Homage and Subjection; which the other very readily conſented to, and ſo a League was concluded between them: But a League ſo offenſive to God, that he ſent a Prophet immediately to reprove Ahab for it, and to let him know, "That, had he deſtroy'd Benhadad, (as God had put it in his Power) "his Dominions ſhould have been annex'd "to the Kingdom of Iſrael; but that, ‖ "ſince he had acted otherwiſe, his Life "ſhould pay for the Life of Benhadad: "For he ſhould be ſlain in Battle with the "Syrians, who, inſtead of being held in "Subjection to the Iſraelites, ſhould, in a "few Years, (as they were in the Reign † Apheck, or Aphaca, (as it is called by profane Authors) was ſituated in Libanus upon the River Adonis, between Heliopolis and Biblos; and, in all Probability, is the ſame that Paul Lucas, in his Voyage du Levant, Vol. I. Chap. xx, ſpeaks of, as ſwallow'd up in a Lake of Mount Libanus, about nine Miles in Circumference, wherein there are ſeveral Houſes all entire to be ſeen under Water. The Soil about this Place (as the Antients tells us) was very bituminous, which ſeems to confirm their Opinion, who think that ſubterraneous Fires conſum'd the ſolid Subſtance of the Earth, whereon the City ſtood, ſo that it ſubſided and ſunk at once, and a Lake was ſoon form'd in its Place. Calmet's Commentary, and Dictionary, under the Word Apheck.

† This was the Poſture in thoſe Times, wherein Supplicants preſented themſelves, when they petition'd for Mercy. The Sack-cloth upon their Loins was a Token of great Sorrow for what they had done; and the Halters about their Necks, a Token of their Subjection to whatever Puniſhment Ahab ſhould think fit to inflict upon them: For which Reaſon Beſſus (according to Curtius, lib. vii.) was brought to Alexander with a Chain about his Neck. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

† The Privilege which Benhadad gave to Ahab is thus expreſs'd: ——— Thou ſhalt make Streets for thee in Damaſcus, as my Father made in Samaria; but then the Learned are not agreed what we are to underſtand by Streets. Some ſuppoſe, that they were Courts of Judicature, where Ahab was to maintain a Juriſdiction over Benhadad's Subjects. Others think, that they were publick Market-Places, where Commodities were ſold, and the Toll of them paid to Ahab; but the moſt general Opinion is, that they were Citadels or Fortifications, to be a Bridle and Reſtraint upon this chief City of the Syrians, that they might make no new Irruptions into the Land of Iſrael. A great Privilege this! But what Benhadad, when he found himſelf ſet at Liberty, refus'd to comply with. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

‖ If it ſhould be aſk'd, wherein lay Ahab's great Offence, for which God threatens to puniſh him ſo ſeverely? The Anſwer is, ——— That it conſiſted in ſuffering ſo horrid a Blaſphemer, as Benhadad was, to go unpuniſh'd, which was contrary to an expreſs Law, Lev. xxiv. 16. If it ſhould be urg'd, that this was nothing to Benhadad, ſince the Law concern'd the Iſraelites only, the Reply is, ——— That this Law extended not to thoſe only that were born in the Land, but (as it is there expreſs'd) to Strangers likewiſe, that were among them, and in their Power, as Benhadad certainly was. God had deliver'd him into Ahab's Hands for his Blaſphemy, as he had promis'd, 1 Kings xx. 28. and therefore this Act of Providence, compar'd with the Law, did plainly intimate that he was appointed by God for Deſtruction: But ſo far was Ahab from puniſhing him as he deſerv'd, that he treats him like a Friend and a Brother, diſmiſſes him upon eaſy Terms, and takes his bare Word for the Performance, without the leaſt Care for the Reparation of God's Honour. Pool's Annotations.

“ of Hazael) become their Maſters, take “ their Towns from them, and make “ Ravages in their Country.” But, inſtead of humbling himſelf at the Denunciation of this heavy Sentence, or expreſſing any Sorrow for his Fault, Ahab became but more ſullen and obſtinate, and, in a ſhort Time, † added this farther Offence to his other great Crimes.

Jezebel procures the Murther of Naboth, for which God threatens Ahab, and his Poſterity.

NOT far from the Royal Palace of Jezreel, in a Place convenient for a Kitchen-Garden, there was one Naboth, a Citizen thereof, who had a Vineyard, which Ahab was very deſirous of obtaining, and therefore † offer'd the Owner of it an Equivalent, either in Land, or Money; but the Owner, † upon the Account of its being his paternal Inheritance, refuſing to part with it, gave Ahab ſuch Uneaſineſs, that he took his Bed for mere Diſcontent, and was ſo ſullen and uneaſy, that he would not eat his Meat. But when his Wiſe Jezebel came to underſtand the Cauſe, ſhe firſt upbraided him with his Puſillanimity, or not knowing how to exert the Authority of a King, and then (to chear him up) bid him drive away all Melancholy, for that ſhe had found out an Expedient, how to put him in the Poſſeſſion of Naboth's Vineyard. To this Purpoſe ſhe wrote Letters from Samaria in Ahab's Name, and ſeal'd with his Signet, to the principal Men in Jezreel, ordering them † to proclaim a Faſt, to bring † Naboth before the Judges and to ſuborn two falſe Witneſſes, who ſhould depoſe againſt him, that he had † blaſphemed God, and the King, that ſo he might be carry'd out of the City, and ſton'd. † All this was done according to this wicked Woman's Deſire; and, as ſoon as Ahab underſtood that Naboth was dead, he went to Jezreel, and took Poſſeſſion of his Vineyard: But, upon his Return to Samaria, the Prophet Elijah, by God's Directions, met him, and having upbraided him with this his laſt Flagitiouſneſs, in ſlaying the Innocent, and ſeizing on his Inheritance, he denounc'd this heavy Sentence againſt him, "That, in the ſame Manner that "Dogs had lick'd Naboth's Blood, they "ſhould lick his; that all his Poſterity "ſhould die by the Sword, and be expos'd "without the Honour of a decent Funeral; and that, as to his Wife Jezebel, "ſhe ſhould be devour'd by Dogs near "the Wall of Jezreel," i. e. ‖ where Naboth was judg'd, and unjuſtly condemn'd.

† The Account of Ahab's coveting Naboth's Vineyard (as Abarbinel obſerves) is immediately ſet after his Treatment of Benhadad, to ſhew his extream great Wickedneſs in ſparing him, (as Saul did Agag King of the Amalekites) and killing Naboth, that he might get Poſſeſſion of his Vineyard: For this was an high Aggravation of his Crime, that he baſely murther'd a juſt Iſraelite, and let an impious Enemy eſcape. Patrick's Commentary.

† By this it appears, that tho' the Kings of Iſrael did rule their Subjects in a very arbitrary and deſpotick Manner, yet they did not as yet take the Liberty to ſeize on their Lands and Hereditaments; and therefore what Samuel propheſies of the Kings of Iſrael, that they would take their Fields, their Vineyards, and their Olive-yards, 1 Sam. viii. 14, does not extend to any true, and lawful, but a preſum'd, and uſurp'd Right only in their Kings. Calmet's Commentary.

† As it is natural to all Men to love and value the antient Poſſeſſions, that have been in their Family; ſo the Law of Moſes prohibited the Alienation of Lands from one Tribe or Family to another, unleſs a Man was reduc'd to Poverty, in which Caſe he might ſell it to the Jubilee, but then it was to revert to him again, Lev. xxv. 15, 25, 28. Now, as Naboth was in no Need to ſell his Vineyard, ſo he conſider'd with himſelf, that, if merely to do the King a Pleaſure, he ſhould part with it out of his Hands, eſpecially to be made a Garden, and ſo annex'd to the Palace, neither he, nor his Poſterity, ſhould be ever able to recover it again; ſo that, in this Act, he ſhould both offend God, and injure his Poſterity, which he, being a pious and religious Man, durſt not adventure to do. Pool's Annotations.

† It was always a cuſtomary Thing, upon the Approach of any great Calamity, or the Apprehenſion of any national Judgment, to proclaim a Faſt; and Jezebel order'd ſuch a Faſt to be obſerv'd in Jezreel, the better to conceal her Deſign againſt Naboth. For, by this Means, ſhe intimated to the Jezreelites, that they had ſome accurs'd Thing among them, which was ready to draw down the Vengeance of God upon their City; and that therefore it was their Buſineſs to enquire into all thoſe Sins, which provok'd God to Anger againſt them, and to purge them out effectually. As therefore theſe Days of faſting were employ'd in puniſhing Offenders, doing Juſtice, and imploring God's Pardon, they gave the Elders of the City an Occaſion to convene an Aſſembly, and the falſe Witneſſes a fair Opportunity to accuſe Naboth before them. Le Clerc's and Patrick's Commentaries.

† Joſephus is of Opinion, that, as Naboth was of an illuſtrious Houſe, he was order'd to be ſet in an honourable Place among the Elders and chief Rulers of the City; that ſo it might be thought, that they did not condemn him, out of Hatred or Ill-will, but merely as they were conſtrain'd to it by the Evidence, that was given againſt him. But others will have it, that the Reaſon why he was ſet in an eminent Place was only, becauſe Perſons accus'd and arraign'd were wont to ſtand conſpicuous before their Judges, that all the People might ſee them, and hear both the Accuſations againſt them, and their Defence. Patrick's Commentary.

† By the Law of Moſes it was Death to blaſpheme God, Lev. xxiv. 16, and by Cuſtom is was Death to revile the King, Exod. xxii. 28. Now, in order to make ſafe Work, the Evidence (as they were inſtructed) accus'd Naboth of both theſe Crimes, that the People might be the better ſatisfy'd to ſee him ſton'd. There is this Difference however to be obſerv'd between theſe two Crimes, that, if a Man had only blaſphem'd God, he was to be try'd by the great Court at Jeruſalem, (as the Hebrew Doctors tell us) and his Goods came to his Heirs; whereas, when a Man was executed for Treaſon againſt the King, his Eſtate went to the Exchequer, and was forfeited to him, againſt whom the Offence was committed: And for this Reaſon it was, that they accus'd Naboth of this Crime likewiſe, that his Eſtate might be confiſcated, and Ahab, by that Means, get Poſſeſſion of his Vineyard. Patrick's Commentary.

Uneasy at the Sight of the Prophet, and much more terrify'd at his Denunciations, Ahab rent his Cloths, put on Sack-Cloth, and gave other Indications of his Sorrow and Humiliation: But, as his Repentance was neither ſincere, or perſevering, God (who might otherwiſe have revok'd the whole Sentence) inflicted Part of it upon his Perſon; but the utter Extirpation of his Family did not happen, till the Reign of his Son Ahaziah, as we ſhall ſee in its proper Place.

Jehoſhaphat goes with Ahab to the Siege of Ramoth Gilead, where Ahab is ſlain.

JEHOSHAPHAT, King of Judah, (as we ſaid before) had imprudently marry'd his Son and Heir to this wicked Ahab's Daughter; and as this Alliance occaſion'd an Interview between the two Kings, Jehoſhaphat went one Day to Samaria to viſit Ahab, who entertain'd him and his Attendants very ſplendidly; but, taking the Advantage of this Opportunity, invited him to go along with him to the Siege of Ramoth-Gilead, a Town in the Tribe of Gad, which the King of Syria unjuſtly detain'd from him. Jehoſhaphat agreed to attend him; but, being loth to do any Thing of this Kind without a Divine Approbation, he deſir'd of Ahab to enquire of the Prophets concerning the Event of this Expedition. To this Purpoſe Ahab ſummon'd together four hundred Prieſts of the Goddeſs Aſtarte, who unanimouſly agreed, that the Expedition would prove ſucceſsful; but, as Jehoſhaphat's Purpoſe was, not to enquire of theſe, but of ſome true Prophet of the Lord, with much Difficulty he obtain'd of Ahab to have Micaiah produc'd, who, charging † Ahab's Prophets with Falſhood, foretold, that the Enterprize would prove fatal to all Iſrael, and to Ahab in particular, and therefore he adviſ'd both the Kings to deſiſt.

† Princes never want Inſtruments to execute their Pleaſure: And yet it is ſtrange, that, among all theſe Judges and great Men, there ſhould be none, that abhorr'd ſuch a Villainy. It muſt be conſider'd however, that, for a long while, they had caſt off all Fear and Senſe of God, and proſtituted their Conſciences to pleaſe their King: Nor durſt they diſobey Jezebel's Commands, who had the full Power and Government of the King, (as they well knew) and could eaſily have taken away their Lives, had they refus'd to condemn Naboth. Pool's Annotations.

‖ There is a great Diſpute among the Learned, as to the Accompliſhment of this Prophecy. At firſt, it was no doubt, intended to be literally fulfilled, but, upon Ahab's Repentance, (as we find below) the Puniſhment was transferr'd from him to his Son Jehoram, in whom it was actually accompliſh'd; for his dead Body was caſt into the Portion of the Field of Naboth the Jezreelite, for the Dogs to devour, 2 Kings ix. 25. Since Ahab's Blood therefore was lick'd by Dogs, not at Jezreel, but at Samaria, it ſeems neceſſary, that we ſhould underſtand the Hebrew Word, which our Tranſlation renders in the Place where, not as denoting the Place, but the Manner, in which the Thing was done; and ſo the Senſe of the Paſſage will be,——That as Dogs lick'd, or in like Manner as Dogs lick'd Naboth's Blood, even ſo ſhall they lick thine, obſerve what I ſay, even thine. Pool's Annotations.

† Micaiah's Anſwer to Ahab enquiring of him the Succeſs of his intended Expedition, is, Go, and proſper; for the Lord ſhall deliver the City into the Hand of the King, 1 Kings xxii. 15, which does not at all contradict the other Prophets, had it been ſpoken in Earneſt; but we have good Reaſon to believe, that the Words were ſpoken ironically, and in Mockery to the Promiſes, which the other Prophets made Ahab. Accordingly, we may obſerve by Ahab's Reply, that he ſuſpected Micaiah's Sincerity, and, either by his Geſture, or Manner of ſpeaking, gather'd, that his Meaning was to traduce theſe falſe Prophets for their Anſwers. So that Micaiah's Anſwer is in Effect, as if he had ſaid,——"Since thou doſt not ſeek to know the Truth, but only to pleaſe thyſelf, go to the Battle, as all thy "Prophets adviſe thee, expect the Succeſs which they promiſe thee, and try the Truth of their Predictions by thy dear-"bought Experience." Pool's Annotations.

AHAB however, inſtead of liſtening to Micaiah, order'd him into Cuſtody, until he ſhould return in Peace; and, taking Jehoſhaphat with him, march'd with all his Forces to the Siege: But, when he came within Sight of the Enemy's Army, his Courage began to cool, and, thinking to evade the Force of Micaiah's Prophecy by a Stratagem of his own, he put himſelf in the Garb of a common Officer, and adviſ'd Jehoſhaphat to fight in his royal Robes. The King of Syria had given particular Command to his Generals † to ſingle out Ahab, and, if poſſible, to kill him, as the chief Author of the War. At firſt they miſtook Jehoſhaphat for the King of Iſrael, and therefore fell upon him with great Impetuoſity; but, perceiving at length, that he was not the Perſon they wanted, they deſiſted from their Purſuit of him, and, in Queſt of Ahab, bended their Courſe another Way.

AHAB, however, did not gain much by his politick Project, as he thought it; for he was mortally wounded by a random Arrow: And tho' he was held up in his Chariot for ſome Time, with his Face towards the Enemy, to encourage his Soldiers, yet about Sun-Set he died, and a Retreat was ſounded. His dead Body was carry'd to Samaria, and there bury'd, and his Son Ahaziah ſucceeded him in the Kingdom: But as the Chariot, wherein he was carry'd, was all ſtain'd with the Flux of Blood from his Wound, while it was waſh'd in a Pool near the City, the Dogs came and lick'd it, that the Prophecy of Elijah might not altogether go unfulfilled.

Jehoſhaphat's wiſe Government, Proſperity, and Death.

As for Jehoſhaphat, tho' he eſcap'd from the Battle, and return'd in Peace to Jeruſalem, yet God ſent the Prophet Jehu, to reprove him for his having aſſiſted Ahab, who was * God's avow'd Enemy; But this Fault he endeavour'd to repair by the good Orders, which he eſtabliſh'd in his Dominions, both as to civil and religious Affairs; by appointing honeſt and able Judges, * and giving them proper Charges; by regulating the Diſcipline and Order of the Prieſts and Levites, and by enjoining them to perform punctually their

* Even common Reaſon taught the Heathens not to make any Friendſhip with ſuch as were Enemies to the Gods, and therefore Callimachus, in his Hymn to Ceres, tells her,

Δάμητερ, μὴ τῆνος ἐμὶν φιλὸς, ὅς τοι ἀπεχθὴς

* The Charge, or ſolemn Admonition, which Jehoſhaphat gave the Judges, whom he appointed in each City, runs in theſe Words, ——— Take heed what ye do, for ye judge not for Man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the Judgment; wherefore now, let the fear of the Lord be upon you: Take heed and do it; for there is no Iniquity with the Lord our God, no Reſpect of Perſons, nor Taking of Gifts, 2 Chron. xix. 6, 7. It is a remarkable Saying of Cicero, that Judges, being ſworn to do Juſtice, ſhould remember, when they come to paſs Sentence, Deum habere teſtem; id eſt, ut ego arbitror, mentem ſuam, quâ nihil homini dedit ipſe Deus divinius. De Offic. lib. iii. c. 13. Where he has left us this excellent Instruction likewiſe, that a Man muſt lay aſide the Perſon of a Friend, when he puts on the Perſon of a Judge. In like Manner, there are ſeveral Paſſages in Heſiod, admoniſhing thoſe, who have the Adminiſtration of Juſtice, to retain in their Minds the Conſideration of their Gods Inſpection; but one of theſe will anſwer to our Purpoſe,

For when the Moabites and Ammonites, with their Auxiliaries, made a formidable Invaſion upon his Kingdom, and he thereupon had appointed a publick Faſt, and apply'd himſelf to God for Help * by Humiliation and Prayer, he had a moſt gracious Anſwer vouchſaf'd him, viz. That, on the next Day, he ſhould obtain a compleat Victory without once ſtriking a Stroke, which accordingly came to paſs. * This Prayer of Jehoſhaphat's is deſervedly accounted one of the moſt excellent, that we meet with in ſacred Hiſtory. He begins it with an Acknowledgment of God's ſupreme and irreſiſtible Power, which extends itſelf every where, over all Creatures in Heaven and Earth, which are every one ſubject to his Authority——O Lord God of our Fathers, art thou not God in Heaven? And ruleſt not thou over all the Kingdoms of the Heathen? And in thine Hand is there not Power and Might, ſo that none is able to withſtand thee? Then he remembers the peculiar Relation, which the People of Iſrael have to him; the Promiſe he made to Abraham, as a Reward of his Fidelity; and the Deed of Gift which he convey'd to him, and his Poſterity of this Country for ever: Art thou not our God, who didſt drive out the Inhabitants of the Land before thy People Iſrael, and gaveſt it to the Seed of Abraham, thy Friend, for ever? Then he reminds him of the long Poſſeſſion they had had of the Country, and of the Temple, which Solomon had built for his Worſhip, to whom, at the Conſecration, (and therefore he refers, to Solomon's Words at the Conſecration, 1 Kings viii.) he promis'd a gracious Regard to all the Prayers, that ſhould be offer'd there. And they dwelt therein, and have built thee a Sanctuary therein for thy Name, ſaying, If, when Evil cometh upon us, as the Sword, Judgment, or Peſtilence, or Famine, we ſtand before this Houſe, and in thy Preſence, (for thy Name is in this Houſe) and cry unto thee in our Affliction, then thou wilt hear and help. In the next Place he repreſents the foul Ingratitude of their Enemies in invading a Country, to which they had no Manner of Title, even tho' the Iſraelites did them not the leaſt Harm when they came to take Poſſeſſion of it, but took the Pains to march a long Way about, to get to it, rather than give any Moleſtation; and, in Aggravation of their Wickedneſs in this Reſpect, he ſuggeſts, that by this Invaſion they made an Attempt, not only upon the Rights of the Iſraelites, but of God himſelf, who was the great Lord and Proprietor, from whom they held the Land: And now behold the Children of Ammon, and Moab, and Mount Seir, whom thou wouldſt not let Iſrael invade, when they came out of the Land of Egypt, but they turned from them and deſtroyed them not; behold, I ſay, how they reward us, to come to caſt us out of thy Poſſeſſion, which thou gaveſt us to inherit. Then he appeals to the Juſtice of God, the righteous Judge, who helps thoſe that ſuffer Wrong, eſpecially when they have no other Helper: For this is the laſt Argument he makes Uſe of, to conciliate the Divine Aſſiſtance, even the weak Condition wherein he and his People were, which made them the Objects of the Divine Pity, eſpecially ſince they plac'd their Hope and Confidence in him alone. O Lord our God, wilt thou not judge them? For we have no Might againſt this great Company, that cometh againſt us, neither know we what to do, but our Eyes are upon thee. 2 Chron. xx. 12, &c. with Patrick's Commentary on the Words.

† The Words in the Text are, The Lord ſet Ambuſhments againſt the Children of Ammon, Moab, and Mount Seir, which were come againſt Judah, and they were ſmitten, 2 Chron. xx. 22. And there are two Ways, wherein this Slaughter may be ſuppos'd to have happen'd: Either, 1ſt. by the Miniſtry of God's Angels, who might appear in the Shape of Men, and putting on the Appearance of Moabites or Ammonites might ſmite ſome other Part of the Army privately, and they, ſuppoſing this to be done by their Neighbours, might turn about, and fall upon them like Enemies, and ſo break forth into mutual Slaughters: Or, 2d. By ſome Jealouſies and Animoſities among themſelves, which, by Degrees, brake forth, firſt into ſecret Ambuſhments, which one Party laid for another, and then into open Hoſtilities and Outrages to their total Deſtruction. So eaſy a Thing it is for God to defeat his Enemies, who can, when he pleaſes, infatuate their Deſigns, or arm their own Paſſions and Miſtakes againſt them! Pool's Annotations on 2 Chron. xx. 22.

Valley, (which, from this Event, was called afterwards the Valley of Bleſſing) they gave ſolemn Thanks to God for this Deliverance; and, not long after, Jehoſhaphat, with his victorious Troops, entering Jeruſalem in Triumph, was receiv'd with the joyful Acclamations of his People, and ſtruck ſuch Terror into all neighbouring Nations, that, for the Remainder of his Reign, he met with no Moleſtation.

ONE Loſs however he had, towards the Concluſion of his Reign, † in joining with Abaziah, King of Iſrael, to equip out a Fleet in the Port of Ezion-Geber, in order to go to Tarſhiſh; for the whole Fleet was daſh'd in Pieces upon a Ridge of Rocks, that lay in the Mouth of the Harbour, before they ever got to Sea. But, as Jehoſhaphat was afterwards convinc'd, that this was a Judgment of God upon him for entering into Partnerſhip with an impious Prince, (as Abaziah certainly was) the next Fleet he ſet out, was from his other Port of Elah, wherein he ſuffer'd Abaziah to have no Concern, and therefore came off with better Succeſs. The Truth is, Jehoſhaphat was a religious and good Prince, a zealous and great Reformer, and yet the People ſtill retain'd a Kindneſs for the High-Places. He liv'd ſixty, and reign'd twenty-five Years; was bury'd in the City of David, and ſucceeded by his Son Jehoram.

He is ſucceeded by his Son Jehoram, who prov'd a bloody Prince, liv'd wickedly, and died unlamented.

HIS Father Jehoſhaphat had ſix other Sons; but, to give no Umbrage for Suſpicion, he had, in his Life-Time, remov'd them from all publick Buſineſs, made them Governors of fenc'd Cities, and given them ſeparate Fortunes of their own. But, notwithſtanding all this Precaution, as ſoon as Jehoram was ſettled on the Throne, he murther'd all his Brothers, and ſeveral chief Men in Iſrael, who (as he ſuſpected) either adher'd to their Party, or were likely to revenge their Deaths.

DURING theſe cruel Proceedings in the very Beginning of his Reign, he had a † Letter ſent him from Elijah, wherein he upbraided him with the Murther of his Brothers, and his Departure from the Religion of his Anceſtors; and wherein † he threaten'd him with a ſore Diſeaſe in

† This certainly was a great Weakneſs in him, to make Friendſhip with the Son, when he had been ſo ſharply reprov'd for joining with his Father Ahab, eſpecially ſince the Son was as great an Idolater, as the Father; but into this he was betray'd by the Affinity, that was between them; and though he did not join with him in War, but only in Trade, yet God was nevertheleſs diſpleas'd with him, which ſhews how dangerous a Thing it is to have too near a Familiarity or Commerce with Idolaters, or any other very wicked Men. Patrick's Commentary.

† Now ſince it is plain, from 2 Kings ii. 11, &c. that Elijah was taken up into Heaven, in the Time of Jehoſhaphat, the Queſtion is, How could Elijah ſend his Son a Letter? For Reſolution to this, Joſephus and others imagine, that this Writing was indited in Heaven, where Elijah now is, and ſent to Jehoram by the Miniſtry of Angels. But there is no Reaſon to ſuppoſe, that ſo ſingular a Miracle was wrought in Favour of an idolatrous Prince, who had Moſes and the Prophets, which (in our Saviour's Opinion) were ſufficient to inſtruct him in all Points neceſſary to Salvation, and needed not any additional Writing to be ſent him from the other World. Others therefore are of Opinion, that this Letter was written before Elijah's Aſcenſion into Heaven; that, foreſeeing by the Spirit of Prophecy the great Wickedneſs Jehoram would fall into, he dictated the Contents hereof to one of the Prophets, charging him to put them down in Writing, to ſend them in a Letter to Jehoram, when he grew as impious as is here related, and to let him know withal, that Elijah commanded this Writing to be deliver'd to him, upon Preſumption that it would affect him the more, as it came from a Perſon that was tranſlated into Heaven. But this Notion has no better Foundation than the other: For Prophets were ſent to thoſe, who liv'd in their own Age, to declare unto them the Will of God, not to write Letters, fit to be deliver'd only when they had departed out of this Life. God never left himſelf without a Witneſs; and, at this Time more eſpecially, there were Prophets in Abundance: And therefore, others have ſuppos'd, that there has been a Miſtake in the Tranſcriber, and the Name of Elijah put for that of Eliſha; or that the Elijah, by whom whom this Letter was ſent, was not the Prophet, who was taken up into Heaven, but another of that Name, who liv'd in the ſubſequent Age, and was contemporary with Jehoram. Which of theſe Conjectures (for Conjectures they are all) ſeems moſt feaſible, we are at Liberty to chuſe, ſince any of them is ſufficient to ſolve the above-mention'd Difficulty. Le Clerc's and Patrick's Commentaries.

† There was no Calamity that could be thought of (as ſeveral have obſerv'd) which did not befall this wicked Prince. His Kingdom was deſtroy'd, and depopulated by the fierceſt Nations; his Treaſures ranſack'd; his Wives his Bowels, and his Wives, his Children, and People, with Judgments of ſeveral Kinds, which God would ſend upon them: Nor was it long before theſe Threats began to operate. The Edomites, who had all along been ſubject to the Houſe of David, rebelled; and, having expelled his Deputy, made themſelves a King of their own, and were never again ſubject to the Jewiſh Yoke. Libnah, a City in his own Dominions, ſhook off its Allegiance, and refus'd to acknowledge him any longer for its Sovereign. The Philiſtines and Arabians made Inroads upon his Territories, ravag'd the Country, plunder'd his Palace, and carry'd away his very Wives and Children, ſo that they left none, except Jehoahaz the youngeſt; and (to compleat his Miſery) after God had afflicted him with a cruel Dyſentery, which for two Years grievouſly tormented him, and brought him at laſt to his Grave, he died, without being ſo much as lamented by his Subjects; and, after a Life of forty, and a Reign of eight Years, being bury'd indeed in the City of David, (but not in any of the royal Sepulchres) was ſucceeded by his Son Jehoahaz. But to return to the Hiſtory of King Ahaziah.

Ahaziah's wicked and inglorious Reign.

AHAZIAH, as we ſaid, ſucceeded his Father Ahab in the Kingdom of Iſrael, in the ſeventeenth Year of Jehoſhaphat's Reign, and was not a whit behind him in all Manner of Wickedneſs. But, as his Reign was but ſhort, (in the whole, not above the Space of two Years) ſo was it inglorious, and full of Trouble. For, in the firſt Year of his Reign, the Moabites, who had always been obedient to the Kings of Iſrael from the firſt Separation of the two Kingdoms, took now an Opportunity to revolt, nor had he Power to reduce them to their Subjection: For, in the ſecond Year of his Reign, he receiv'd ſuch a Hurt by a Fall from † the Terras of his Houſe, as reduc'd him to a very bad State of Health. In this Condition he ſent to * Baalzebub, the God of Ekron †, carry'd into Captivity; his Children ſlain; himſelf afflicted with a ſore Diſeaſe for two Years; and, when he was dead, deny'd the Honour of a Royal Sepulture, ſuch as his Father had. All which Calamities were threaten'd in this Writing ſent him in the Name of Elijah, that he might not think that they came by Chance, but by the ſpecial Direction of Almighty God, as a Puniſhment for his Impiety. Patrick's Commentary on 2 Chron. xxi. 14.

† In the Eaſtern Countries the Roofs of the Houſes were flat, and ſurrounded with a Battlement to prevent falling from them, becauſe it was a cuſtomary Thing for People to walk upon them, in order to take the Air. Now, in this Battlement we may ſuppoſe that there were ſome wooden Lattices for People to look through, of equal Height with the Parapet Wall, and that Ahaziah negligently leaning on it (as it was rotten and infirm) it broke down, and let him fall into the Court, or Garden belonging to his Houſe. Or there is another Way, whereby he might fall. In theſe flat Roofs, there was generally an Opening, which ſerv'd inſtead of a Sky-light to the Houſe below, and this Opening might be done over with Lattice-work, which the King, as he was careleſly walking, might chance to ſtep upon, and ſlip through. Nor is there any Abſurdity in ſuppoſing ſuch Lattice-work in a King's Palace, when the World was not arriv'd to that Height of Art and Curioſity, that we find it in now. Pool's Annotations, and Calmet's Diſſert. ſur les Edifices des anciens Hebrews.

* The Word ſignifies, the God of Flies; but how this Idol came to obtain that Name, it is not ſo eaſy a Matter to diſcover. Several are of Opinion, that this God was called Baal ſemin, the Lord of Heaven, but that the Jews, by Way of Contempt, gave it the Name of Baal-zebub, or the Lord of a Fly, a God that was nothing worth, or (as others ſay) whoſe Temple was filled with Flies; whereas the Temple of Jeruſalem (notwithſtanding all the Sacrifices that were there daily offer'd) never once had a Fly in it, as their Doctors relate. The ſacred Writings indeed, when they ſpeak of the Gods of the Heathens, very frequently call them in general, Idols, Vanity, Abominations, &c. but they never change their proper Names into ſuch, as are of an opprobrious Import; neither can we think it likely, that the King of Iſrael would have called the God of Ekron, for whom he had ſo high a Veneration, as to conſult him in his Sickneſs, by any Appellation of Contempt. Whoever conſiders what troubleſome and deſtructive Creatures (eſpecially in ſome hot Countries) Flies are known to be; in what vaſt Swarms they ſometimes ſettle, and not only devour all the Fruits of the Earth, but in many Places occaſion a noiſom Peſtilence; may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that the Heathens had a proper Deity, to whom they made their Addreſſes, either for the Prevention, or Removal of this ſore Plague. And accordingly we are told by Pliny, (lib. xxix. c. 6.) that, when there was a Plague in Africa, occaſion'd by vaſt Quantities of Flies, after that the People had ſacrific'd to the God Achore (he ſhould have ſaid, the God of Ekron, for there is a plain Affinity between their Names) the Flies all died, and the Diſtemper was extinguiſh'd. Now it was a known Maxim of the Heathen Theology, that, as all Plagues were inflicted by ſome evil Dæmon or other, ſo all evil Dæmons were under the Reſtraint of ſome ſuperior one, who is their Prince and Ruler, As therefore Pluto was known to to be the God of Hell, and to have all the miſchievous Band of Spirits under his Controul; to him the Heathens us'd to pray, and offer Sacrifices, that he might not ſuffer any of his inferior Agents to inflict this heavy Judgment upon them. They worſhipp'd him, I ſay, not to engage him to do them any Good, but to prevail with him to do them no Harm; and accordingly we may obſerve, that every Thing in their Service was dark and gloomy. Such good Reaſon have we to think, that the Baalzebub, in Scripture called the Prince of the Devils, was the very ſame with the Pluto, whom the Heathens made the God of Hell, and worſhipp'd in this Manner. Patrick's and Le Clerc's Commentaries, and Jurieu Hiſt. des Dogmes & Cultes. † Ekron was a City and Government of the Philiſtines, which fell by Lot to the Tribe of Judah, in the firſt Diviſion made by Joſhua, Joſh. xv. 45. but was afterwards given up to the Tribe of Dan, Joſh. xix. 43. tho' it does not appear from Hiſtory, that the Jews ever had a peaceable Poſſeſſion of it. It was ſituated near the Mediterranean Sea, between Aſhdod and Jamnia, in a moiſt and hot Soil, and was therefore very much infeſted with Flies. Calmet's Dictionary, and Patrick's Commentary.

† It may ſeem ſomewhat ſtrange, that Ahaziah's Meſſengers ſhould ſtop their Journey to Ekron, at Elijah's Command; but he was a Man of ſuch venerable Preſence, and ſpake to them with ſuch Authority in the Name of the Lord, that they were over-aw'd thereby to obey him, rather than the King. Patrick's Commentary.

* The Deſcription which the Meſſengers give of Elijah, is, ——— That he was an hairy Man, and girt with a Girdle of Leather about his Loins, 2 Kings i. 8. where his being an hairy Man, may either denote his wearing long Hair on his Head, and his Beard, as the ancient Greek Philoſophers were wont to do, and as Lucan deſcribes Cato:

> Intenſos rigidam in frontem deſcendere canos
> Paſſus erat, mœſtamque genis increſcere barbam:

Or it may denote his Habit, which was made of Skins, rough, and with their Hair on; as the ancient Heroes were cloath'd in the Skins of Lions, Tigers, and Bears; as the Evangeliſt repreſents the Baptiſt in a Raiment of Camel's Hair, Matth. iii. 4. as the Apoſtle deſcribes the Prophets, wandering about in Sheep-Skins, and Goat-Skins, Heb. xi. 37. and as Statius dreſſes up old Tireſias,

† This is a great Inſtance of the Prophet's Faith and Obedience to God, in whom he truſted, that he would deliver him from the Wrath of the King, and the Malice of Jezebel. He had order'd, not long before, all the Prophets of Baal to be ſlain; had ſent a very unwelcome Meſſage to the King; and now made a very terrible Execution upon two of his Captains, and their Companies; ſo that he had all the Reaſon in the World to apprehend the utmoſt Expreſſions of the King's Diſpleaſure: And yet, when God commands him, he makes no Manner of Heſitation, but goes boldly to him, and confirms with his own Mouth the ungrateful Truth, which he had declar'd to his Meſſengers. Patrick's Commentary.

Elijah's Tranſlation, and Eliſha's Succeſſion in the Prophetick Office.

About the Beginning of the † Reign of Jehoram King of Judah, Elijah the Prophet was tranſlated into Heaven. God, very likely, had given him ſome Intimation of the Time, when this miraculous Event ſhould happen; and therefore, before his Departure, he viſited the Sons of the Prophets, that were at Bethel, and Jericho, and took his Leave of them with ſuch Solemnity, that they began to ſuſpect that this was the laſt Viſit, he intended to make them; and accordingly † appris'd Eliſha of it, who thereupon determin'd not to leave his Maſter, as long as he continu'd upon Earth.

With this Reſolution he ſet forward with Elijah, who was now ſhaping his Courſe towards his native Country of Gilead, from whence he was to be tranſlated; and, as they were to paſs over the Jordan, Elijah † with his Mantle ſtruck the Waters, which inſtantly divided into two Parts, ſo that they went over on dry Ground.

When they had paſs'd the River in the Sight of fifty of the † Sons of the Proplets, and as they drew near to the Place of Elijah's Aſcenſion, Eliſha requeſted of him, that the ſame Gift of Prophecy, which God had been pleas'd to beſtow on him, of Judah, 2 Kings iii. 1. and in another Place, that Jehoram, the Son of Jehoſhaphat, began to reign over Judah, in the fifth Year of Jehoram, King of Iſrael? 2 Kings viii. 16. Now, it is but ſuppoſing, that Jehoſhaphat declar'd his Son Jehoram King, while himſelf was alive, and reign'd in Conjunction with him for the Space of ſeven Years, and all the Difficulty is remov'd: For then Jehoram, the Son of Ahab, might begin his Reign in the ſecond Year of Jehoram Son of Jehoſhaphat, viz. in the ſecond Year that he reign'd with his Father, who was then alive; and Jehoram, Son of Jehoſhaphat, may be ſaid to have begun his Reign in the fifth of Jehoram the Son of Ahab, meaning the Time, when, after his Father's Death, he began to reign alone. That the Kings of Judah and Iſrael (as well as other oriental Princes) were accuſtom'd to appoint their Succeſſors, and, even during their Life-Time, to give them ſome Share in the Adminiſtration, is plain from ſeveral Inſtances: And that Jehoſhaphat found it expedient to ſettle his Son in the Kingdom with himſelf, ſeems to be intimated in 2 Chron. xxi. 3. where it is ſaid, that he gave the Kingdom to Jehoram, becauſe he was his Firſt-born, and gave Gifts to the reſt of his Sons, who, being many, might perhaps be forming Parties, and entering into Cabals about the Succeſſion to the Kingdom; and therefore, to put an end to all ſuch Conteſts, Jehoſhaphat declar'd Jehoram King, while himſelf was on the Throne, becauſe he was his Firſt-born. Calmet's and Patrick's Commentaries.

† To prevent Confuſion, the Reader is deſir'd to take Notice, that, in the Courſe of this Hiſtory, there is Mention made of two Jehorams, who reign'd much about the ſame Time; one, the ſecond Son of Ahab, who ſucceeded his Brother Ahaziah, and was King of Iſrael; and the other, who was Son and Heir to Jehoſhaphat, and reign'd in Judah; both very wicked Princes, and therefore, the greater Care ſhould be taken, that their Actions be not blended together.

† The Expreſſion in the Text is, ——— Knoweſt thou, that the Lord will take away thy Maſter from thy Head to-day? 2 Kings ii. 3. Where the Sons of the Prophets allude to their Manner of ſitting in their School. For the Scholars us'd to ſit below their Maſters Feet, and the Maſters above over their Heads, when they taught them: And therefore, the Senſe of the Words is, that God would deprive Eliſha of his Maſter Elijah's Inſtructions, viz. by a ſudden Death. For it does not appear that they had any Notion of his Tranſlation; ſo far from this, that they deſir'd Leave to ſend out ſome to ſeek for him, if peradventure the Spirit of the Lord had taken him up, and caſt him upon ſome Mountain, or into ſome Valley, 2 Kings ii. 16. Patrick's Commentary.

† In theſe two Books of Kings, there is mention made five Times of this Mantle; and, in every Place, it is called Adareth, which denotes a royal, as well as a prophetical Robe. The Septuagint always tranſlate it by the Word μηλωτῆ which properly ſignifies the prophetical Mantle, made of Lamb-Skins, being a Kind of upper Garment thrown over the Soulders, and (as ſome think) reaching down to the Heels; though others take it for no more, than a leathern Jacket to keep out Rain:

Ad ſubitas nuſquam Scortea deſit Aquas. Mart. Lib. 14.

† By the Sons of the Prophets, we are to underſtand the Scholars of the Prophets, ſuch as they educated and train'd up in Religion and Virtue, upon whom God by Degrees beſtow'd the Spirit of Prophecy, and whom the ſuperior Prophets employ'd in the ſame Capacity, as the Apoſtles did the Evangeliſts, viz. to publiſh their Prophecies and Inſtructions to the People, in the Places where they themſelves could not go. Nor is it any ſmall Teſtimony of God's Love to an Apoſtate People, that, in theſe corrupt Times, and in that very Place, where the golden Calves were worſhipp'd, he ſtill continu'd the Schools of the Prophets, in order to recover them from Idolatry. Nay, (what is very remarkable) there were Prophets of greater Excellency for their Miracles in Iſrael, than were in Judah, becauſe they needed them more, both to turn their hard Hearts from the Worſhip of Idols, and to preſerve the pious Perſons, that remain'd among them, from deſerting their Religion. Patrick's Commentary.

him, might be † communicated to him, in a larger Meaſure, than to the other Prophets; which the other did not poſitively promiſe, but told him however, that, if he happen'd to ſee him when he came to be tranſlated, this would be a good Sign, that God would not refuſe him his Requeſt: And while they were thus going on, and talking, there appear'd, as it were, a bright Chariot, and Horſes, running towards them on the Ground, and, coming between them, parted them. * For Elijah mounted the Chariot, and, in a great Guſt of Wind, directed by Angels, was tranſported into Heaven; while Eliſha, who was left behind, † cry'd to him, as he ſaw him mount, and expreſs'd his Sorrow when he was gone: But, taking up the Mantle, which had dropt from him in his Aſcent, with it he divided the Waters, as Elijah had done, and re-paſs'd the Jordan.

Hereby the Prophets of Jericho and the Places adjacent were convinc'd, that the Spirit of Elijah reſted upon Eliſha. And accordingly, when they met him, they recogniz'd him for his Succeſſor, and paid him the ſame Reſpect. Believing however, that the Spirit of God might poſſibly have * tranſported Elijah into ſome diſtant or deſert Place, they deſir'd Leave to ſend out fifty Men in Search of him. Eliſha aſſur'd them, that it would be needleſs: However, to give them all the Conviction they deſir'd, he ſuffer'd them to do what they pleas'd; ſo that the Men went, and return'd again after three Days Search to no Purpoſe.

† The Words in the Text are, ——— Let, I pray thee, a double Portion of thy Spirit be upon me; where ſome learned Men are of Opinion, that this Requeſt in Eliſha would be arrogant, if the Words were to be taken in their moſt obvious Senſe; and therefore, they refer them to Eliſha's School-fellows, whom he deſires to ſurpaſs in all prophetick Gifts, as much as the Firſt-born did excel the other Children in his Portion of the Inheritance. But, being Elijah had no other Succeſſor, upon whom he was to beſtow any prophetick Gifts, but Eliſha; we cannot ſee why Eliſha may not be ſaid to have a double Portion of the prophetick Spirit, ſince it is evident he did many more Miracles than Elijah did, and, even after his Death, exerted a Divine Power in raiſing the dead Man, 2 Kings xiii. 21. Had he deſired this double Portion indeed out of a Principle of Vain-Glory, there might then be ſomething ſaid againſt his Requeſt; but, ſince he did it with a pure Intent to become thereby more ſerviceable in his Generation, we cannot perceive why he was to blame in requeſting what our bleſſed Saviour granted to his Apoſtles, viz. the Power of working greater Miracles than he himſelf did. Le Clerc's and Calmet's Commentaries.

* What this Chariot was, and to what Place it convey'd Elijah, we ſhall have Occaſion to obſerve in the following Diſſertation; at preſent we ſhall only take notice of ſome Things relating to this Prophet's Character. The Author of Eccleſiaſticus (Chap. xlviii. 1, &c.) has dedicated this Encomium to his Memory: ———Then ſtood up Elias the Prophet, as Fire, and his Word burnt like a Lamp. He brought a ſore Famine among them, and by his Zeal he diminiſhed their Number. By the Word of the Lord he ſhut up the Heaven, and alſo three Times brought down Fire. O Elias, how waſt thou honoured by thy wonderous Deeds? And who may glory like unto thee? Who didſt raiſe a dead Man from Death, and his Soul from the Place of the Dead, by the Word of the Moſt High; who broughteſt Kings to Deſtruction, and honourable Men to their Bed: ———Who waſt taken up in a Whirlwind of Fire, and in a Chariot of fiery Horſes; who waſt ordained for Reproofs in their Times, to pacify the Wrath of the Lord's Judgment, before it break forth into Fury; to turn the Heart of the Father to the Son, and to reſtore the Tribes of Jacob. In which laſt Sentence our Author alludes to that Paſſage in Malachi, Chap. iv. 6. Behold I will ſend you Elijah the Prophet, before the Coming of the great and dreadful Day of the Lord: and he ſhall turn the Hearts of the Fathers to the Children, and the Heart of the Children to their Fathers, leſt I come and ſmite the Earth with a Curſe.

† The Words of Eliſha upon this Occaſion are, My Father, my Father, (ſo they called their Maſters and Inſtructors) the Chariot of Iſrael, and the Horſemen thereof. The Expreſſion alludes to the Form of the Chariot and Horſes, that he had juſt then beheld, and ſeems to imply, "That Elijah, by his Example, and Counſel, and Prayers, "and Power with God, did more for the Defence and Preſervation of Iſrael, than all their Chariots and Horſes, "and other warlike Proviſions." Unleſs we may ſuppoſe, that this was an abrupt Speech, which Eliſha, in the Conſternation he was in, left unfiniſh'd, and ſo the ſacred Hiſtory has recorded it. Pool's Annotations, and Le Clerc's Commentary.

* The Spirit of the Lord (whereby we may underſtand either the Power of God, or ſome one of his Angels) frequently us'd to carry the Prophets through the Air, and, with vaſt Celerity, remove them to diſtant Places: And therefore Obadiah ſpeaks of it as a common Thing: And it ſhall come to paſs, as ſoon as I am gone from thee, that the Spirit of the Lord will carry thee where I know not, ſo that when the King cannot find thee, he will ſlay me, 1 Kings xviii. 12. And accordingly, in the New Teſtament, we are told of Philip, that, when they were come up out of the Water, the Spirit of the Lord caught him away, that the Eunuch ſaw him no more, and Philip was found at Azotus, Acts viii. 39, 40. Le Clerc's Commentary.

From this Place, Eliſha proceeded to Jericho, where, at the Requeſt of the Inhabitants, he cur'd the † Brackiſhneſs of their Water, and the Barrenneſs of their Soil. Thence he continu'd his Courſe to Bethel, where, upon the Children's mocking and ridiculing him, † two She-Bears, ruſhing out of the neighbouring Foreſt, fell upon them, and devour'd two and forty of them. From Bethel he went to Mount Carmel, where probably there was another School of the Prophets; and from thence he proceeded to Samaria, where he had ſoon Opportunities enough of exerting his prophetick Office.

Jehoram's Victory over Meſha King of Moab.

It was in the eighteenth Year of Jehoſhaphat King of Judah, that this Jehoram, King of Iſrael, began to reign; and tho' he did not make any great Reformation in his Kingdom, yet he was not altogether as wicked as his Father and Brother: For † he remov'd the Idols of Baal, (very likely to procure Jehoſhaphat's Friendſhip) tho' the Golden-Calves (which were the State-Engine to keep up the Diviſion between Iſrael and Judah) he could not prevail with himſelf to depoſe. In this State however he † had Jehoſhaphat for an Ally, when he engag'd in a War (which was in the Beginning of his Reign) with Meſha King of Moab, for refuſing to pay the Tribute † of an hundred Thouſand Lambs, and an hundred Thouſand Rams with the Wool, which (until the Reign of his

† The Manner in which the Prophet Eliſha ſweeten'd the Fountain, and made the Soil fruitful, was by caſting Salt into the Water, to make the Miracle more conſpicuous; for Salt is a Thing, that of all others makes Water leſs potable, and the Ground more barren. Joſephus, however, willing to improve upon this Hiſtory, adds (as his uſual Manner is) ſeveral Circumſtances of his own. For he tells us, ——— "That this Fountain did not only corrupt "the Fruits of the Earth, (whether Grain or Plants) but likewiſe caus'd Abortions in Women, and tainted, with a "blaſted Infection, whatever is touch'd, that was capable of ſuch Impreſſion; that Eliſha, having been treated with "great Hoſpitality and Reſpect by the People of Jericho, bethought himſelf of ſuch an Acknowledgment, as they "themſelves, their Country, and their Poſterity to the End of the World might be the better for; that hereupon he "went out to the Fountain, and, cauſing a Pitcher of Salt to be let down to the Bottom of it, he advanced his Right-"Hand towards Heaven, and, preſenting his Oblations at the Side of it, beſought God, in his Goodneſs, to correct "the Water, and to ſweeten the Veins through which it paſs'd; to ſoften the Air, and make it more temperate and "fructifying; to beſtow Children, as well as Fruits, upon the Inhabitants in Abundance; and never to withdraw "theſe Bleſſings, ſo long as they continu'd in their Duty; and that, upon offering up this Prayer, with all due Cere-"mony, and according to Form, the ill Quality of the Fountain was chang'd, and (inſtead of Sterility) became "an efficacious Means of Plenty and Increaſe." The Author, we may obſerve, (to gratify Pagans) repreſents Eliſha, in the Form of a Magician, who, by Invocations, Oblations, and other ſecret and myſterious Operations, chang'd the bad Quality of the Waters, and thereby made the Valley of Jericho fruitful; whereas this was done in a Manner altogether ſupernatural and miraculous. Nay, to this very Day, there is a Fountain towards the Weſt of Jericho, which riſes about three Quarters of a League above the Town, in the Way to Jeruſalem, which, yielding a great deal of Water (and that very good in its Kind) runs along, and fructifies the Plain. The Wars of the Jews, lib. v. c. 4.

† They had probably been robb'd of their Whelps, which made them more fierce and outrageous. Patrick's Commentary.

† 'Tis a little ſtrange, that his Mother Jezebel, who brought this Worſhip with her from the Sidonians, ſhould ſuffer him to remove the Images of her favourite God; but ſhe perhaps might be a little daunted with the many Diſaſters that had befallen her Family, and was content with the Privilege of having her idolatrous Worſhip in private: Nor is it unlikely, that Jehoſhaphat might refuſe to aſſiſt him in his Wars againſt the King of Moab, unleſs he would conſent to renounce his Idolatry. Patrick's Commentary.

† The Anſwer, which he gives Jehoram, is the very ſame, that he return'd to his Father Ahab, in his War againſt the Syrians: I am, as thou art; my People, as thy People; and my Horſes, as thy Horſes, 1 Kings xxii. 4. and 2 Kings iii. 7. And, conſidering the ill Succeſs he had, one would wonder, why he ſhould be ſo forward to join with his Son; but, as Jehoram had reform'd ſome Things, he might have a better Opinion of him, and, by ſhewing him Kindneſs, hope perhaps to prevail with him to proceed farther; and, as the Moabites had of late invaded his Country, 2 Chron. xx. 1. he might embrace this Opportunity to chaſtiſe them for it. But, without theſe Conſiderations, the War was right and juſtifiable, and fit it was, that Rebels and Revolters ſhould be chaſtis'd, leſt the Example ſhould paſs into his own Dominions, and encourage the Edomites to revolt from him, as we find they afterwards did from his Son. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† This was a prodigious Number indeed; but then we are to conſider, that theſe Countries abound with Sheep, inſomuch that Solomon offer'd an hundred and twenty Thouſand, at the Dedication of the Temple, 2 Chron. vii. 5. and the Reubenites drove from the Hagarites two hundred and fifty Thouſand, 1 Chron. v. 7. For, as Bochart obſerves, their Sheep frequently brought forth two at a Time, and ſometimes twice a Year. The ſame learned Man remarks, that, in his Brother Ahaziah) had been all along, from the Time of David, paid to the Crown of Iſrael; and as the King of Edom was then no more than Deputy to Jehoſhaphat, he engag'd him likewiſe in the Quarrel. Theſe three Kings, in order to ſurpriſe the Enemy, and invade him on the weakeſt Side, took a Compaſs of ſeven Days March, in the Wilderneſs of Edom, and had like to have been all loſt for Want of Water, had not the Prophet Eliſha, who was then in the Camp, (b) put them in a Method how to procure ſome; and not only ſo, but, at the ſame Time, promis'd them a compleat Victory over the Moabites. The next Morning the confederate Army had Water enough; and the Moabites, who were now marching to oppoſe them, perceiving Water where they knew there us'd to be none, and, by the Reflection of the Sun, that it look'd like Blood, ſuppos'd that the three Kings had quarrelled, and their Armies engag'd, and ſlain one another; ſo that they concluded they had nothing to do, but to fall upon the Spoil. But, when they came to the Camp, the Iſraelites gave them a Reception that they little expected: For they not only killed great Numbers of them upon the Spot, but purſu'd them into their Country, deſtroy'd their fortify'd Places, chok'd up their Springs, cut down their Timber, and made Ravage and Devaſtation, wherever they came; inſomuch, that the King was forc'd to betake himſelf to his Capital City Kirhareſeth, where the confederate Army beſieg'd him, and ſoon reduc'd him to ſuch Extremity, that, after he had made a ſucceſsful Sally with ſeven hundred Men in hopes of forcing the King of Edom's Quarters, and found himſelf repuls'd; he took his eldeſt Son, † and, in mere Deſperation, ſacrific'd him upon the Wall of the City, in the Sight of the Iſraelitiſh Army, who, being ſtruck with Horror at ſo barbarous an Action, rais'd the Siege, and retir'd to their own Country.

in antient Times, when People's Riches conſiſted in Cattle, this was the only Way of paying Tribute; for as (he quotes the Paſſage out of Pliny) Pecunia ipſa à Pecore appellabatur: Etiam nunc in Tabulis Cenſcriis Paſcua dicuntur omnia, ex quibus populus reditus habet, quia diu hoc ſolum vectigal fuerat. Nat. Hiſt. lib. xviii. c. 3. It is obſerv'd by others likewiſe, that this great Number of Cattle was not a Tribute, which the Moabites were oblig'd to pay to the Iſraelites every Year, but on ſome ſpecial Occaſion only; upon the Acceſſion of any new King, for Inſtance, when they were oblig'd to expreſs their Homage in this Manner, or to make Satisfaction for ſome Damages, that the Iſraelites ſhould at any Time ſuffer from their Invaſions or Revolts. Patrick's and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

(b) 2 Kings iii. 16.

† Not only the holy Scriptures, but ſeveral Heathen Writers likewiſe do aſſure us of this, that, in Caſes of great Extremity, it was cuſtomary among People to ſacrifice to their Gods whatever was moſt dear to them. Cæſar, in his War with the Gauls, tells us, that when they were afflicted with grievous Diſeaſes, or in Time of War, or great Danger, they either offer'd Men for Sacrifices, or vow'd that they would offer them; becauſe they imagin'd, that their Gods could never be appeas'd, unleſs one Man's Life was given for another's. No leſs a Man than Grotius is of Opinion, that this Moabitiſh King, in Imitation of Abraham, ſacrific'd his Son to the God of Iſrael, hoping thereby to appeaſe his Wrath, and to move the Compaſſion of the Kings, that were beſieging him: But the moſt general Opinion is, that he offer'd this coſtly Sacrifice to ſome falſe Deity, and very likely to Chemoſh, which was his national God, and generally thought to be the Sun. Calmet's and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

† The Jewiſh Law look'd upon Children as the proper Goods of their Parents, who had Power to ſell them for ſeven Years, as their Creditors had to compel them to do it in order to pay their Debts; and from the Jews this Cuſtom was propagated to the Athenians, and from them to the Romans. The Romans, indeed, had the moſt abſolute Controul over their Children. By the Decree of Romulus they could impriſon, beat, kill, or ſell them for Slaves. But Numa Pompilius firſt moderated this, and the Emperor Diocleſian made a Law, that no free Perſons ſhould be ſold upon Account of Debt. The antient Athenians had the like Juriſdiction over their Children, but Solon reform'd this cruel Cuſtom; As indeed it ſeem'd a little hard, that the Children of a poor Man, who have no Manner of Inheritance left them, ſhould be compelled into Slavery, in order to pay their deceaſed Father's Debts: and yet this was the Cuſtom, as appears from this Paſſage, wherein the Prophet does not pretend to reprove the Creditor, but only puts the Woman in a Method to pay him. Calmet's and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

That of curing Naaman's Leproſy more eſpecially.

NAAMAN was General of the King of Syria's Troops, a Man famous for Exploits in War, and in great Eſteem with his Maſter, but he was a Leper. At this Time there ſeems to have been no good Underſtanding between the two Crowns; and yet the King of Syria, to recover ſo valuable a Servant from his Illneſs, wrote to the King of Iſrael, but in ſuch Terms as gave him ſome uneaſy Apprehenſions. When Eliſha underſtood this, he order'd that Naaman might be ſent to him; and when he came with all his Attendants and ſtately Equipage, inſtead of receiving him in Form, † he ſent his Servant out to him, and bad him go † dip himſelf ſeven Times in the River Jordan, and he would be cur'd. The proud Syrian, not underſtanding this Treatment, and expecting, very likely, that the Prophet, by ſome perſonal Act, would have perform'd the Cure, thought himſelf ſlighted, and was for returning home: But, being adviſ'd by thoſe that were about him, that, ſince the Preſcription was ſo eaſy, to make the Experiment at leaſt would not be much, he went to the River, and, after having bath'd ſeven Times therein, found himſelf perfectly cur'd.

REJOIC'D at his unexpected Recovery Naaman return'd to Eliſha, acknowledging, that there was no other God, but the God of Iſrael; proteſting, that from thence forward he would ſacrifice to none but him; deſiring, for that Purpoſe, two Mules Loads † of the Earth of the Country, wherewith to build him an Altar: deprecating any Offence, that might ariſe from his waiting on the King, his Maſter, when † Eliſha's not appearing to receive the Syrian General is aſcrib'd by ſome to the retir'd Courſe of Life, which the Prophets led; but then, why did he ſee him, and enter into Converſation with him, when he return'd from his Cure? I ſhould rather think, that it was not miſbecoming the Prophet, upon this Occaſion, to take ſome State upon him and to ſupport the Character and Dignity of a Prophet of the Moſt High God; eſpecially, ſince this might be a Means to raiſe the Honour of his Religion and Miniſtry, and to give Naaman a righter Idea of his miraculous Cure, when he found that it was neither by the Prayer nor Preſence of the Prophet, but by the Divine Power and Goodneſs, that it was effected. Pool's Annotations, and Calmet's Commentary.

† In Conformity to the Law, which requires that Lepers, in order to their cleanſing, ſhould be ſprinkled ſeven Times, Lev. xiv. 7, &c. the Prophet order'd Naaman to dip himſelf as often; but Jordan (as the Syrian argu'd) had no more Virtue in it than other Rivers; nor could cold Water (of any Kind) be a proper Means for curing this Diſtemper, whoſe Root is a white wateriſh Humor, that would increaſe, rather than be diminiſh'd by any ſuch Application. Patrick's Commentary.

† He deſir'd the Earth of the Land, becauſe he thought it more holy and acceptable to God, and proper for his Service; or becauſe he would, by this Token, declare his Conjunction with the People of Iſrael in the true Worſhip, and conſtantly put himſelf in Mind of his great Obligation to that God, from whoſe Land this Earth was taken. He might have had indeed enough of this Earth without aſking any one for it, but he deſir'd the Prophet to give it him, as believing perhaps, that he, who put ſuch Virtue into the Waters of Iſrael, could put as much in the Earth thereof, and make it as uſeful and beneficial to him in another Way. Theſe Thoughts indeed were groundleſs and extravagant, but yet were excuſable in an Heathen and Novice, that was not as yet ſufficiently inſtructed in the true Religion. Pool's Annotations.

when he went to worſhip in the Temple of † Rimmon; and, in the Concluſion, importuning the Prophet to accept of a Preſent, for the great Cure that he had wrought upon him, which the other moſt † poſitively refuſ'd.

BUT there was not the like Diſintereſtedneſs in his Servant Gehazi. He, thinking it unreaſonable, that ſo potent and wealthy a Perſon ſhould go off without paying for ſo ſignal a Benefit, reſolv'd to get ſomething for himſelf; and therefore, unknown to any Body as he thought, he follow'd after Naaman, and, having ſoon overtook him, forg'd a Lye, that his Maſter deſir'd of the General to ſend him a Talent of Silver, and two Changes of Garments, for two Sons of the Prophets, who, ſince his Departure, were come to viſit him. The General was glad of this Opportunity to oblige his Maſter, and therefore preſs'd him to take two Talents of Silver with the Garments, and ſent two of his Servants to carry them for him; from whom he received them before he came to his Maſter's Houſe, and repoſited them, as he thought, in a ſafe Place: But no ſooner did he return into his Maſter's Preſence, than he began to tax him with what he had been doing, which, when Gehazi deny'd, he † denounc'd his Sentence, viz. that the Leproſy, whereof he had cur'd Naaman, ſhould adhere to him and his Family for ever; which accordingly, that very Moment, came to paſs.

The OBJECTION.

"BUT how wicked ſoever Gehazi might be, in purloining a little of Naaman's Money, and making the Man pay for his Cure; yet his Maſter, methinks, carries the Compliment a little too far, if not in refuſing his Preſent, at leaſt in giving him Toleration to continue in Idolatry. He had now the faireſt Opportunity imaginable to make him a thorough Convert, and, by working ſo great a Miracle upon him, had acquir'd a proper Authority to preſcribe to him what he pleas'd: But when, inſtead of confirming him in the Service of the true God, he permits him to go on in his old Practice of bowing himſelf in the Houſe of Rimmon, and to comply with the Terms of a falſe Religion, rather than loſe an advantageous Employ, he certainly diſcovers too great an Indulgence to Naaman's Impiety, and

† It is thought by the Generality of Interpreters, that, as the Syrians were great Worſhippers of the Sun, this God is the ſame; and that the Name Rimmon, or high, is given him, by Reaſon of his Elevation. Grotius takes it for Saturn, becauſe that Planet is the higheſt of all; and Selden will have it to be the ſame with Elion, or the moſt high God of the Phœnicians. 'Tis certain, that the Word Rimmon is the Name, that the Syrians give to Pomegranates, and therefore, as their Country was full of Pomegranate-Trees, whoſe Fruit is not only of a delicious Taſte, but of great Uſe likewiſe on Account of the excellent Liquor, which it produces, they gave perhaps the Name of Pomegranate to their God, in the ſame Manner that the Greeks and Latins gave that of Ceres to the Goddeſs of Corn. Lamy's Introduction, lib. iii. c. 1. and Jurieu, Hiſt. des Dogmes & Cultes, Part iv. c. 10.

† Eliſha did not think it a Thing ſimply unlawful to receive Gifts, or Preſents; for we find him receiving them upon another Occaſion, 2 Kings iv. 42. but he did not hold it expedient, in his preſent Circumſtances, to do it, becauſe he thought it would make for the Honour of the true God and Religion, to let the Syrians ſee the generous Piety, Charity, and Kindneſs of his Miniſters and Servants, and how much they deſpis'd all that worldly Wealth and Glory, which the Prieſts, or Prophets, of the Gentiles ſo greedily ſought after; that thereby Naaman might be confirm'd in the Religion he had embrac'd, and others, in like Manner, incited to a Love and Liking of it. Pool's Annotations.

† And juſtly did he deſerve it, ſince his Crime had in it all theſe Aggravations, ——— a greedy Covetouſneſs, which is Idolatry; a Profanation of God's Name; a downright Theft, in keeping that to himſelf, which was given for others; deliberate and impudent Lying; deſperate Contempt of God's Omniſcience, Juſtice, and Holineſs; an horrible Reproach caſt upon the Prophet, and his Religion; and a pernicious Scandal given to Naaman, and every other Syrian, that ſhould chance to hear of it. Pool's Annotations.

“too ſmall a Concern for the Honour of God's true Religion and Worſhip.

“NAAMAN, no doubt, had a great and honourable Poſt about the King of Syria; but what is this to the Purpoſe? Had he been a true Convert to the Jewiſh Religion, or had the Prophet took care to inſtruct him ſufficiently in the Rudiments thereof, all his Riches and Honours, all his Offices and Employments, nay, even Life itſelf, he ſhould have freely given up, rather than appear in the Poſture of a Supplicant before an Idol, which he profeſs'd to deſpiſe, or gratify the greateſt Monarch upon Earth, by ſo baſe a Proſtitution of his Conſcience; unleſs we can ſuppoſe, (what their Speeches indeed ſeem to import) that, whether he ſerv'd God or Rimmon, both he and the Prophet eſteem'd it a Thing indifferent.

“This Prophet, indeed, in his own Cauſe is known to have been more zealous, than he was in God's; otherwiſe, (h) he would not have curs'd ſo many little Children in the Name of the Lord, and (what is wonderful) upon his curſing caus'd two She-Bears to come immediately out of the Foreſt, and deſtroy no leſs than two and forty of them; tho' how two Bears could devour (for that is the Expreſſion) ſo very great a Multitude is ſomewhat incredible.

“But we need leſs wonder at this, when we find his Predeceſſor in the prophetick Office animated with the ſame Spirit, and (i) cauſing Fire to come down from Heaven to deſtroy two Captains, with their Companies, for no other Fault but bluntly delivering a Meſſage from the King, and perhaps in the very ſame Words, wherein they were commanded to deliver it. A vindictive Temper we may perceive our Saviour reproves in his two Diſciples (k) James and John, and therefore we are at a loſs to know, why God ſhould liſten to the Prayers of any Man, (l) deſiring that it ſhould not rain upon the Earth, for the Space of three Years and ſix Months, when a Drought of that Continuance muſt inevitably have deſtroy'd every Thing; and when it was ſent, not for the Puniſhment of the Inhabitants of the Land for any particular Sin we read of, but purely to aggrandize the Prophet, and to put it in his Power to ſay, that there (m) ſhould be neither Dew nor Rain in theſe Years, but according to his Word.

“If the Prophet had ſuch Intereſt, and was in ſuch high Eſteem with Almighty God, we cannot ſee what Reaſon he had to flee his Country, upon the Threats of an impotent Woman, who, notwithſtanding her Aſcendant over the King, had no Power to controul the Providence of God, under whoſe Protection he was ſo ſecurely plac'd, that he need not have fear'd what Jezebel could do unto him. To retreat from Danger, when he knew himſelf under ſuch a Safeguard, was acting an inconſiſtent Part, and betraying the Cauſe of God, when, (according to his own Confeſſion) (n) he, and he only, was left to defend it.

“MOSES indeed, as we read, faſted forty Nights; but then he was in the Mount with God. Our bleſſed Saviour abſtain'd from all Manner of Food for the like Space of Time; but then his humane Nature was ſupported by his divine; but 'tis hard to imagine, how Elijah could travel for forty Days and Nights together, with no ſtronger Suſtenance than a little Bread and Water, unleſs we can ſuppoſe, that the kind Ravens, that attended him at the Brook Cherith ſo long, were appointed to wait on him at this Juncture likewiſe, (o) and to bring him Bread and Fleſh in the Morning, and Bread and Fleſh in the Evening, all the while that he was upon his Journey.

“THE Misfortune is however that the Word Crebim, which we render Ravens, ſhould rather ſignify Merchants, who traded in the Market of Tyre, or Arabians, that liv'd in Places adjacent to the Brook Cherith, and might therefore provide the Prophet with Neceſſaries during his Concealment; becauſe we cannot conceive, why Ravens greedy and voracious Creatures, † unnatural to their own young ones, and declar'd unclean by the (o) Law, ſhould (of all others) be proper Inſtruments to convey this wonderful Food (for wonderful it is from whence they had it) to the Prophet in his Hiding-Place; which Ahab, with all his Induſtry, was not able to find out it ſeems, even tho' (p) there was not a Nation, or Kingdom, where he had not ſent to ſeek him, and yet all the while he was but in the next adjoining Province, conceal'd in the Widow of Zarephtha's Houſe.

“BUT badly did Elijah requite God's ſingular Care and Preſervation of him, ſince he was ſo far from executing the divine Command in (q) anointing Hazael to be King of Syria, and Jehu, King of Iſrael, that he never once went near them, but left it to be done by his Succeſſor Eliſha, who himſelf, in like Manner, declin'd the Work, and made a young Prophet his Proxy. Nay, even in the moſt plauſible Act that Elijah did, viz. his deſtroying the Prophets of Baal, there is this Exception to be made, viz. that, tho' the Law of Moſes condemn'd every one that introduc'd the Worſhip of falſe Gods, to immediate Death, yet we cannot ſee, how either the Prieſts of Baal were bound by that Law, or how Elijah, who was but a private Man, had any Authority to execute it.

“THE Truth is, (r) they could not but know, that their God Baal was utterly unable to ſend down Fire from Heaven to conſume their Sacrifice; and therefore, if they ſuffer'd, they ſuffer'd like a Pack of Fools, for accepting a Challenge, which they were conſcious they could not anſwer, and putting the Merits of their Cauſe upon an unneceſſary Trial, wherein, without all Peradventure, they were ſure to miſcarry.

“BUT how ridiculous ſoever the ſacred Hiſtory may make the Prophets of Baal, it ſhould not uſe the ſame Freedom, in exhibiting the Actions of God in an unfair Light; and yet this it does, when it makes the Searcher of all Hearts relent, and (s) ſuſpend the Execution of Ahab's Sentence, upon the Account of his Repentance, which (how formal ſoever it might appear) was, at the Bottom, but falſe and fictitious. This it does, when it makes the Diſpoſer of all Events (t) ſend a Lion to ſlay a Man, merely for refuſing to wound one of the Sons of the Prophets, tho' he does not declare, for what Reaſon he requeſted that inhuman Favour of him. This it does, when it makes the great Diſpenſer of all Juſtice puniſh the Children of Hiel, For their Father's Profaneneſs in rebuilding Jericho, tho' it be contrary to his own Declarations, that Children ſhall not ſuffer for the Wickedneſs of their Parents, (u) but every one die for his own Iniquity. This it does, laſtly, when it makes the Fountain of all Purity and Truth (x)

“BUT, beſides theſe groſſer Abſurdities, there are ſome other Paſſages, in this Period of Hiſtory, which ſeem deſtitute of the common Appearances of Probability; as that Jehoſhaphat ſhould ſend out itinerant Preachers, to inſtruct the People in their Duty, when, in every City of the Levites (which were diſpers'd over the whole Nation) there were People appointed for that Purpoſe: That the ſame Jehoſhaphat, who had but a ſmall Part of the Kingdom, which David enjoy'd, ſhould ſo far ſurpaſs him in the Number of his Forces, as to have under his Command an Army of eleven hundred and ſixty Thouſand Men, without reckoning the Garriſons, that were in their Strong-Holds: And, laſtly, that the Wall of the City of Aphek (how ſpacious ſoever it may be ſuppos'd) ſhould, by its Fall, be able to bury, in its Ruins, no leſs (y) than ſeven and twenty Thouſand Men; which is enough to ſtagger all human Faith.”

Anſwer'd, by ſhewing the Senſe of Eliſha's Anſwer.

THE moſt material Part of the Diſcourſe, which paſs'd between Naaman and Eliſha, is deliver'd in theſe Words: ——(z) Thy Servant (ſays Naaman*) will henceforth offer neither Burnt-offering nor Sacrifice unto other Gods, but unto the Lord: In this Thing the Lord pardon thy Servant, that, when my Maſter goeth into the Houſe of* Rimmon, and he leaneth on my Hand, and I bow myſelf in the Houſe of Rimmon, the Lord pardon thy Servant in this Thing: And Eliſha ſaid unto him, Go in Peace. Go in Peace was a common Form of Valediction among the Jews, wherewith Eliſha might diſmiſs Naaman, without any further Anſwer to his Requeſt, or Reſolution to his Doubt. For the Prophet, we muſt ſuppoſe, in this whole Tranſaction, was under the immediate Influence and Direction of the Spirit of God; and therefore if the Spirit of God thought proper to with-hold any further Inſtruction from the Syrian General, it was not in the Prophet's Power, tho' he had given him his Houſe full of Silver and Gold, (a) (as Baalam put the Caſe) to go beyond the Word of the Lord, to do more, or leſs. Conſidering then, (b) that Naaman was now in the Infancy of his Converſion, and as yet not able to receive the higher Precepts of Perfection; that himſelf was conſcious of his own Offence, and wanted not therefore ſo much to be inſtructed, as encourag'd, and ſtrengthen'd in the Lord; and that the Matters, wherein he ſeem'd to doubt, were not of ſuch mighty Importance, as to concern the Eſſence and Foundation of Religion; conſidering theſe Things, I ſay, we may ſoon perceive the Reaſon, why Eliſha accepted of his Renunciation of a falſe, and Profeſſion of a true Religion, his declar'd Averſion to the Worſhip of Idols, and fix'd Reſolution to ſerve the Lord only, as a ſufficient Advance in his preſent Circumſtances.

ISRAELITES indeed, and ſuch as were deſcended from the Stock of Jacob, were oblig'd to the Obſervation of the whole Moſaick Law; but Strangers and Aliens, when they came to be admitted Proſelytes of the Gate, were confin'd only to the Worſhip of the true God, and the Practice of ſuch Duties, as were moral and ſocial: And therefore, when Naaman profeſs'd himſelf a Worſhipper of the Moſt High God only, and declar'd withal, that his attending his Maſter into the Temple of Rimmon was not with any religious Purpoſe, but purely in Performance of the Duty of his Office, the Prophet had Reaſon good to bid him go in Peace, or (as the Words may import) to give himſelf no Uneaſineſs about the Matter.

(b) Pool's Annotations on 2 Kings v. 19.

And that Naaman might innocently attend his Maſter.

FOR, tho' we pretend not to ſay with ſome Rabbinical Doctors, that, as Naaman was no Jew, but a Foreigner and Proſelyte only, (c) he was not oblig'd to abſtain from all external Worſhip of Idols, (as the Jews confeſſedly were) ſo long as he continu'd in another Country; yet it is generally agreed, that we are bound to ſhew the ſame Reſpect to our Superiors, and thoſe that are ſet in Authority over us (ſo long as we do not injure our Conſciences thereby) in one Place, as in another; and (d) that therefore Naaman might very innocently retain his Dignity, and high Office at Court, even as Joſeph did in Egypt, and Daniel in Babylon; might accompany his Maſter into Rimmon's Temple, nay, and bow together with him, in Compliance to his Infirmity or Convenience, (who could not ſo well bow, if the other ſtood upright) ſo long as this was a Service done to the Man, (as Tertullian (e) reaſons upon the like Occaſion) and not to the Idol; ſo long as this was an Act purely external, without any of thoſe inward Sentiments of Reſpect, which conſtitute the Eſſence of Adoration.

An Objection againſt this Solution.

“THIS, I own, is the common Solution; but it does not entirely pleaſe me. It juſtifies an Action, which Naaman himſelf was not well ſatisfy'd in. It leaves upon the Prophet an Imputation of too much Lenity and Indulgence, and upon the General, that of too much Hypocriſy and Diſſimulation. Had Naaman's Example, in this Senſe, been made a Precedent, Daniel, in the Court of Nebuchadnezzar, and old Eleazar, amidſt Antiochus's Officers, might have eſcaped Perſecution. (f) Daniel, at the Sound of the Inſtruments, might have fallen down before the Image, not out of any Principle of Adoration, but in pure Obedience to the King's Orders; and (g) Eleazar might have evaded the Eating of Swines-Fleſh, if he would but have let it be reported that he did eat it; but we find no ſuch Prevarication in either of theſe, and therefore, we can hardly think that this is the right Solution.”

And another offer'd.

(h) Now, ſince Repentance has Regard to what is paſt, and to aſk Pardon for an Offence already committed is much more natural, than to aſk Pardon for what we purpoſe for the future to commit, (which, in Matters of Morality, is a Kind of Contradiction) it ſeems not improbable, that the Words ſhould be render'd (as the Original will fairly bear it) in the Preter Tenſe: Lord, pardon thy Servant, that when my Maſter went into the Houſe of Rimmon, to worſhip, and he leaned on my Hand, and I bowed myſelf there, the Lord pardon thy Servant in this Thing. For, how great would the Incongruity be, if Naaman, who had juſt before declar'd his Renunciation of Idolatry, ſhould now confeſs his Readineſs to relapſe into the ſame Crime, and deſire God's Pardon for it before-hand? Whereas to aſk Pardon for what he had done amiſs, and to deſire the Prophet's Interceſſion with God in that Behalf, argu'd a Mind truly ſenſible of his former Tranſgreſſion, and very much reſolv'd to avoid it for the future: And accordingly, (i) it is ſuppos'd, that, upon his Return home, he refus'd to worſhip Rimmon any more, and was thereupon diſmiſs'd from being General of the King's Forces.

(k) BETHEL, we all know, was one of the Cities, where Jeroboam had ſet up a golden Calf, a Place ſtrangely addicted to Idolatry, and whoſe Inhabitants had no ſmall Averſion to Eliſha, as being the Servant and Succeſſor of one, who had been a profeſs'd Enemy to their wicked Worſhip, and himſelf no leſs an Oppoſer of it. 'Tis reaſonable to ſuppoſe therefore, that the Children, (if they were Children, for the Word Naarim may ſignify grown Youths as well) who mock'd Eliſha, were excited and encourag'd thereunto by their Parents; and therefore, the Judgment was juſt, in God's puniſhing the Wickedneſs of theſe Parents by the Death of their Children, who, tho' they ſuffer'd in this Life, had the Happineſs to be reſcu'd from the Danger of an idolatrous Education, which might have been of fatal Tendency both to their preſent and future State.

In the mean Time, it muſt be acknowledg'd, that the Inſolence of theſe Mockers (whether we ſuppoſe them Children or Youths) was very provoking, (l) foraſmuch as they ridiculed not only a Man, whoſe very Age commanded Reverence, but a Prophet likewiſe, whoſe Character, in all Ages, was accounted ſacred, nay, and even God himſelf, whoſe Honour was ſtruck at, in the Reproaches caſt upon his Servant; and that too in one of his moſt glorious and wonderful Works, his Aſſumption of Elijah into Heaven. For, Go up, thou Bald-Head, go up, thou Bald-Head, (beſides the Bitterneſs of the Contempt, expreſs'd in the Repetition of the Words) ſhews, that they made a mere Jeſt of any ſuch Tranſlation; and therefore, in mere Banter, bid Eliſha go up, whither, as he pretended, his Friend and Maſter was gone before.

These Provocations, one would think, were enough to draw an Imprecation from the Prophet; but this Imprecation did not proceed from any Paſſion, or private Reſentment of his own, but merely from the Command and Commiſſion of his God; who, for the Terror and Caution of other profane Perſons and Idolaters, as well as for the Maintenance of the Honour and Authority of his Prophets, confirmed the Word which had gone out of his Servant's Mouth.

And Elijah*'s ſlaying the Captains and their Companies.*

The like is to be ſaid of the Deſtruction which Elijah called down from Heaven, upon the two Captains, and their Companies, who came to apprehend him; That he did this, not out of any haſty Paſſion or Revenge, but purely in Obedience to the holy Spirit, wherewith he was animated, and in Zeal for the Honour and Glory of God, which in the Perſon of his Prophet, were groſsly abus'd.

The Officers, that were ſent to him, call him indeed a Man of God; but, by the Anſwer which the Prophet return'd, we may learn, that they called him ſo only by Way of Contempt and Deriſion. (m) As they could not be ignorant however, that Ahaziah was highly offended at Elijah, and had ſent them for no other Purpoſe, but to bring him to Puniſhment (n) for having denounc'd his Death; if they thought proper to obey the King in ſuch unrighteous Proceedings, rather than the Laws of Nature and Religion, which forbid us to be Inſtruments in Cruelty and Wrong, they deſerv'd the Fate, they met with: And our bleſſed Saviour does not blame Elijah's Conduct in this Reſpect, but his Diſciples only, for their perverſe Imitation of it, from a Spirit of Reſentment and Revenge, and under a trivial Provocation, in Compariſon of what was offer'd to the Prophet. The Truth is, God, in this Inſtance of Severity, hath taught us, that he will have his Prophets reverenc'd, (o) becauſe they are allied to him, and every Affront put upon them he reſents, as an Indignity to himſelf; and therefore the ſad End of the two Captains, and their Companies, who came to apprehend the Prophet of the Lord, was deſign'd monumentally to deter future Ages from the like Provocations; and to remind us of the Precept, which God himſelf hath given us, (p) Touch not mine Anointed, and do my Prophets no Harm.

In what Senſe Elijah hinder'd it from raining.

waſt vouchſafed the Sight of God's glorious and majeſtick Preſence; (s) who hadſt Angels ſent to comfort and refreſh thee, when thou waſt weary; (t) who hadſt Fire ſent thee from Heaven, to avenge thee of thine Enemies, when they came to inſult thee; (u) who hadſt thy Body, in a bright Chariot, tranſlated into Heaven, without undergoing the Fate of Mortals; and (what was not the leaſt of thy Prerogatives) who hadſt, (x) whilſt thou liv'd, the Power of locking or unlocking the Store-Houſes of Heaven, at thy Pleaſure, and by thy Prayers." It was, doubtleſs, to magnify his Office, (which now began to be depreciated not a little) that God authoriz'd his Prophet to accoſt Ahab with ſuch marvellous Aſſurance, as if the Diſpenſation of the Rain and Dew of Heaven, for ſuch a determinate Time, had been entirely at his Diſpoſal: But we miſtake the Matter widely, if we ſuppoſe, that the Prophet had any Part (farther than he was God's Miniſter, and Meſſenger to declare the Thing) in bringing this Famine upon the Land. All Judgments of this Kind are the immediate Work of God: And, as (y) he does not afflict willingly, nor grieve the Children of Men; ſo, if we will but turn to (z) the preceding Chapter, we ſhall find an Account of ſuch open and avow'd Idolatry, and ſuch bold Contempt of the Divine Authority, both in the Prince and People, as will ſufficiently juſtify the Severity of God in bringing this national Judgment upon them. For well may the People be ſuppos'd to be generally deprav'd, when we find it recorded of their Prince, that (a) he did more to provoke the Lord God of Iſrael to Anger, than all the Kings of Iſrael that were before him.

Why he fled from Jezebel.

WE own indeed, that Elijah did not, in every Thing, act a conſiſtent Part: He, who but lately was ſo bold and intrepid, as to preſent himſelf before Ahab, who had been long in queſt of him, in order to make him ſuffer (b) as the Diſturber of the publick Peace, is now frighten'd at the Menaces of a ſilly Woman; and thereupon quits his Country, and flies for his Life, notwithſtanding the late ſignal Interpoſition of Providence in his Favour. But what ſhall we ſay to this? (c) Elias was a Man ſubject to the like Paſſions as we are; and 'twas probably, in Reſpect to this his Infirmity, that the Apoſtle made this Reflection upon him. (d) He knew Jezebel, and that ſhe had all the Faults incident to her Sex in a ſuperlative Degree; that ſhe was fierce, cruel, vindictive, and implacable; that, in ſlaying the Prieſts of Baal, he had incurr'd her Diſpleaſure, and that, to revenge herſelf, ſhe had all the Power of the Kingdom under her Command. Theſe Notions ran in his Head, and made ſuch an Impreſſion upon his Spirits, as depriv'd him of that Reſolution and manly Courage, for which he was heretofore ſo remarkable; nor was there wanting a wiſe Deſign of Providence, in ſuffering this Timidity to fall upon his Servant.

St PAUL tells us of himſelf, that, (e) leſt he ſhould be exalted above Meaſure, through the Abundance of Revelations, there was given unto him a Thorn in the Fleſh, the Meſſenger of Satan, to buffet him, (as he repeats it again) leſt he ſhould be exalted above Meaſure. And, in like Manner, we have Reaſon to believe, that (f) God, upon this Occaſion, might withdraw that Spirit of Intrepidity, wherewith, at other Times, he fortify'd Elijah's Mind, on Purpoſe to ſhew him his natural Imbecillity, and the Neceſſity he had, at all Times, of the Divine Aſſiſtance; and on Purpoſe to ſuppreſs all the little Sentiments of Pride and Arrogance, that might poſſibly ariſe in his Breaſt, upon the Contemplation of the Gifts and Graces, which he had beſtow'd on him, and the many great Miracles that were wrought by his his Hands; and that, thereupon, if he did glory, he might glory in the Lord, and not dare to take any Part of his Honour to himſelf.

That he might ſubſiſt, upon what he eat and drank, for forty Days and Nights.

(g) The Jews have made a Compariſon between Elijah and Moſes in ſeveral Particulars, and given Moſes the Preference, eſpecially in the Matter of his forty Days Faſt: For Elijah, they ſuppoſe, did every Day eat and drink, when he happen'd to find any Suſtenance in the Wilderneſs; whereas Moſes had nothing to ſupport him, but only the miraculous Power of God. The Text however is far from intimating that Elijah ate any Thing, but what the Angel at firſt brought him; for (h) he went, in the Strength of that Meat, forty Days, and forty Nights, unto Horeb, the Mount of God; whereas, had he taken any Nouriſhment by the Way, it had not been by the Strength of that Food that he perform'd his Journey.

What that Food was, the Scripture has taken Care to inform us, viz. that it was ſimple Bread and Water, (to make the Miracle more remarkable) but ſuch, as was of far greater and more durable Virtue than ordinary; and ſuch, as gave a Life and Vigour, far ſurpaſſing the Effects of any other Nouriſhment. Whether Angels, in the celeſtial State, are purely ſpiritual, or cloath'd with ſome material Form, but much more ſubtile and refin'd, than any we know of here below, is a Queſtion much agitated among the Schools: But if, for the preſent, we ſhould allow the Affirmative, the Food of Angels, and what may be called the Suſtenance of their glorious, but finite Beings, need not be accounted altogether an Allegory. 'Tis certain, that, upon (i) their Appearance in human Shape, they did frequently eat the common Food of Men; that our bleſſed Saviour, after the Aſſumption of his glorious Body, (k) ate Part of a broiled Fiſh, and of an Honey-Comb; nor may we forget, upon this Occaſion, his Words at the Paſchal Supper, (l) I will not henceforth drink of this Fruit of the Vine, until that Day, that I drink it new with you, in my Father's Kingdom: All which will be enough to countenance the Opinion, that the Food, which was brought to Elijah at this Time, was of celeſtial Growth and Virtue, whereby Creatures of a ſuperior Excellency may poſſibly, at certain Periods, have their Natures renew'd, (as the Tree of Life, in the State of Paradiſe, is ſuppos'd to have been intended for that Purpoſe) and to live on to eternal Ages. No wonder then, that Food of ſuch a rare Quality, as to deſerve the Delegation of an Angel from Heaven to bring it, ſhould have all the Virtue, and all the Efficacy, that we read of.

But, waving this Speculation, we may ſuppoſe the Repaſt to have been nothing more, than common Bread and Water; yet who can doubt, but that God, either by retarding the Faculties of Concoction and Perſpiration, or by preſerving the Spirits and Juices from Diſſipation, might make its Strength and Nouriſhment ſubſiſt for the Time ſpecify'd? 'Tis but God's ſpeaking the Word in this Caſe, and the Thing is done. The leaſt Beck of his Will can make the ſame Meal, that uſually ſerves us for four and twenty Hours, ſupport us for forty Days, and much longer, if he pleaſes. That Meat of any Kind ſhould ſuſtain us for four and twenty Hours, (if rightly conſider'd) is a Miracle; and that the like Proportion ſhould do it for the Space of forty Days is ſtill but a Miracle, and with the ſame Facility that God does the one, he can do the other: So true is that Obſervation, which our bleſſed Saviour borrows from Moſes, (m) Man doth not live by Bread alone, but by every Word that proceedeth out of the Mouth of God.

Elijah fed, not by Merchants, or Arabians.

And indeed, no Perſon ever had ſo large Experience of the Truth of this Obſervation, as had the Prophet now before us, who was ſo long ſuſtain'd, not only by the wonderful Increaſe of the Widow's Oil

(g) Patrick's Commentary, on 1 Kings xix. 8. (h) Ibid. ver. 8. (i) Gen. xviii. 8. (k) Luke xxiv. 42. (l) Matth. xxvi. 29. (m) Deut. viii. 3. and Matth. iv. 4.

Oil and Meal, but by the daily Miniſtry likewiſe, and Attendance of Ravens. For, whatever ſome may dream of Merchants, or Arabians, who might take Pity of Elijah in his Retirement, and ſend him Proviſions every Day; beſides that the original Word (as (n) Bochart has ſufficiently evinc'd) never ſignifies Merchants, and that there were no Arabians inhabiting the Coaſts, where Elijah lay conceal'd, it can hardly be imagin'd, but that the Place of his Retreat would have ſoon been diſcover'd to Ahab, had either Merchants, or other Inhabitants of the Country, been at any Time acquainted with it.

How Ahab might ſearch for Elijah every where, and he be concealed.

WHAT Induſtry that wicked King uſ'd to find out the Prophet, wherever he abſconded, we may learn from the Information of good Obadiah, viz. that he had ranſack'd every Nation, where he could reaſonably think that he was conceal'd, and, when he found him not, took an Oath of the People, that he was not among them. For, (o) tho' Ahab could not compel other Nations to take an Oath to that Purpoſe, yet, conſidering the great Intereſt he had among the neighbouring Princes, he might eaſily prevail with the great Men of each Kingdom, to give him that Satisfaction. If we look into his Alliances, we ſhall find, that the King of Tyre was his Father-in-Law, and the King of Moab tributary to him; that Jehoſhaphat was his Friend and Relation, and that the King of Edom was dependent on Jehoſhaphat; that (p) as the Kings of Arabia and Syria correſponded with Solomon, ſo very likely, they were confederate with Ahab; that one of their Articles might be to deliver up to each other all their fugitive, or baniſh'd Subjects upon Demand; and that this was the Foundation of his Deſire and Expectance of this Oath: And yet, notwithſtanding all this ſtrict and diligent Enquiry, Elijah might live conceal'd in the Widow of Zarephtha's Houſe, becauſe he had laid ſufficient Obligations upon her, both in preſerving her from the Danger of the Famine, and in reſtoring her dead Son to Life again, to uſe all poſſible Care to conceal him. But, to return to Elijah's Ravens.

Ravens very proper Creatures to feed Elijah.

THO' we ſhould allow that they are Creatures voracious, and unnatural to their young Ones; yet, the more unfit Inſtruments they ſeem'd to be, the more they magnify'd the Almighty Power of him, who controul'd their natural Appetites while he employ'd them: (q) And (if there was a moral Inſtruction in it, as St Chryſoſtom fancies) the more they might mollify the Prophet's Heart towards the deluded Iſraelites, by ſeeing thoſe very Creatures, that were cruel to their Young, kind to him. Tho' we ſhould allow, that they were Creatures legally unclean, yet (as it was for the Meat, and not for the Touch, that they were accounted ſo) this we muſt grant was a Caſe extraordinary, wherein the Ceremonial Law was over-rul'd by Neceſſity, and by the Law-Giver's Diſpenſation. There is this to be ſaid however, in Defence of God's Choice of Ravens for this Purpoſe, viz. that, as they are ſolitary Birds, and delight to live about Brooks of Water, ſo are they accuſtom'd to ſeek out for Proviſions, and to carry them to the Places of their Abode; upon which Account they were no improper Creatures for God to employ upon this Service: Eſpecially, if what St Jerom tells us may be credited, viz. that one of theſe Birds brought Paul, the firſt Hermit, half a Loaf every Day, and, when St Anthony came to viſit him, it brought him a whole one, to anſwer the Wants of theſe two Soldiers of Jeſus Chriſt, (as (r) he words it) but, whence it had this, as well as whence Elijah's Ravens had their Supply, we pretend not to tell; and had rather acknowledge our Ignorance in ſuch like Speculations, than take up with uncertain and ſometimes abſurd Conjectures.

Why Elijah did not anoint Jehu and Hazael.

THERE are two Exceptions more, which are generally made to Elijah's Conduct, viz. his Omiſſion, in not anointing Hazaël to be King of Syria, and Jehu King of Iſrael; and his Cruelty, in deſtroying the Prieſts of Baal without a proper Authority. Now, in Anſwer to the former of theſe, it ſhould be obſerv'd, that the Words, Go, and anoint, may not be a poſitive Command, but only a diſcretionary Permiſſion ſo to do. The Prophet had been ſorely complaining to God of the Wickedneſs and Idolatry of the Iſraelites, and of the bloody Perſecutions, of their Rulers. (s) I have been very zealous for the Lord God of Hoſts, ſays he; for the Children of Iſrael have forſaken thy Covenant, and thrown down thine Altars, and ſlain thy Prophets with the Sword, and I, even I only, am left, and they ſeek my Life to take it away: Whereupon, God (after having ſhewn him, (t) by ſome ſymbolical Repreſentation, how able he was to avenge him of his Adverſaries) bids him go, and anoint ſuch and ſuch Perſons to be Kings; as if he had ſaid, (u) "Thou "deſireſt of me, that I ſhould deſtroy "the Idolaters of Iſrael, and ſuch as "have a Deſign upon thy Life; but, in "order to that, thou haſt nothing to do, "but to go, and appoint two other Per"ſons, to be Kings over Iſrael and Syria, "and they will avenge both thy Quarrel "and mine."

(x) BUT, allowing the Words to be a poſitive Command, we may ſuppoſe, that when Elijah, by his prophetick Spirit, perceiv'd what a grievous Deſtruction the Exaltation of theſe two Perſons to the Thrones of Iſrael and Syria would bring upon his native Country, he petition'd God to delay the Execution of this his Order, at leaſt for ſome Time, and obtain'd his Requeſt. This indeed is a Circumſtance, that we do not meet with in Scripture; but in ſo ſhort an Hiſtory, as this of the Hebrews is, we may well be allow'd to ſupply ſome Things, that ſeem to be omitted; when this may be done without offering any Violence to the Words of the Text, and eſpecially, when there is an Analogy, in other Parts of the Hiſtory, to bear us out.

NOW, in Relation to one of theſe, viz. Hazael, who was afterwards King of Syria, it is ſaid, that, when he came to enquire of Eliſha concerning his Maſter Benhadad's Sickneſs, the Prophet (y) ſettled his Countenance upon him ſtedfaſtly, and wept; whereupon Hazael ſaid, Why weepeth my Lord? And he anſwer'd, Becauſe I know the Evil, that thou wilt do unto the Children of Iſrael. Their ſtrong Holds wilt thou ſet on Fire, and their young Men wilt thou ſlay with the Sword, and wilt daſh their Children, and rip up their Women with Child: And from this Paſſage we have ſome Grounds to think, that Elijah, upon the like Proſpect of his Nation's Calamity, might deſire of God, if not a Revocation of his Command, at leaſt a Delay in the Execution of it, and that this was the Reaſon, why neither of theſe Kings were anointed by him.

Why Baal's Prieſts accepted Elijah's Challenge.

WHAT Notions the Worſhippers of Baal might have of the Power of their God, we cannot tell; but, as ſending down Fire from Heaven (z) was not above the Reach of evil Spirits, and ſome lying Traditions might perhaps have deſcended to them concerning the Exploits of their Baal in particular, (a) who, as he was thought to be the Sun, and to exceed all heavenly Bodies in Heat, might, upon this grand Occaſion, as they thought, exert his Power, and burn up their Sacrifice; they held it the wiſeſt Way to accept of the Prophet's Challenge. The Prophet's Challenge indeed was upon ſuch fair Terms, that (whatever Notions they might have of their Gods) they muſt have forfeited all their Credit with the People, had they pretended to decline it: And therefore, rather than do this, they choſe choſe to venture all upon the Hazard of an After-Game, hoping, that either they might have an Opportunity of conveying Fire among the Wood clandeſtinely, or that Elijah would fail in his Attempt, as well as they, and ſo both ſtand upon equal Ground; or that, if he ſucceeded, the Thing might not be done ſo cleverly, but that there might be Room for ſome Cavils and Exceptions to be rais'd againſt it.

And why he might order them to be ſlain.

UPON theſe Preſumptions, they might enter the Liſts: And, when they were ſo ſhamefully defeated, the Prophet, (b) as an extraordinary Miniſter of God's Vengeance upon Sinners, (eſpecially when the Magiſtrate ſo groſly neglected his Duty) had ſufficient Authority to execute (c) the Sentence of Death, paſs'd upon them by the Lord of Life and Death, as Perverters of the Law, and Teachers of Idolatry; as Authors of Cruelty, and Inciters of Jezebel (d) to murther the Prophets of the Lord; and as Cheats and Impoſtors, to whoſe Execution the People concurr'd, their Princes gave their Conſent, and their King (as aſtoniſh'd at the late ſtupendous Miracle) could make no Oppoſition.

Why God regarded Ahab's Repentance.

WHETHER Ahab's Repentance, upon the Commination of God's Judgments, was ſincere, or ſuperficial only, has been a Matter of ſome Debate among Divines. 'Tis certain, that, in Conſideration of it, God revok'd, at leaſt in Part, the Sentence which he had denounc'd againſt him, and transferr'd it upon his Poſterity: And (e) yet we do not find him producing any Fruits meet for Repentance; either renouncing his Superſtitions, or deſtroying his Idols, or reſtoring Naboth's Vineyard, or re-eſtabliſhing the true Worſhip of God. Struck with the Prophet's Menaces, and dreading the Effects of his Predictions, he put on the Garb of a Penitent; he wept, he ſigh'd, he faſted, and bemoan'd himſelf: But how came God, who inſpects the Hearts, and cannot be taken with external Shew, to have any Reſpect to this? Such Eſteem has he (according to ſome) for true Repentance and Reformation, that he was willing to reward the very Appearance of it; but this is an Anſwer that comports not ſo well with the Purity and Holineſs of God: And therefore we ſhould rather chuſe to ſay, that Ahab's Repentance at this Time was true, tho' imperfect; and his Sorrow ſincere, tho' of no long Continuance; and that, had he perſiſted in the good Reſolutions he had then taken up, God would have remitted him, not only the temporal, but the eternal Puniſhment likewiſe that was due to his Sin. In the mean Time, this Inſtance of the Divine Lenity is left upon Record to encourage the firſt Eſſays of our Repentance, and to give us Aſſurance of this, ——That our good and gracious God, (f) who keepeth Mercy for Thouſands, and forgiveth Iniquity, Tranſgreſſion, and Sin, (g) will not break the bruiſed Reed, nor quench the ſmoaking Flax, but bring forth Judgment unto Truth.

Why he cut off Hiel's Children, for their Father's Sin.

BUT the ſame God, who profeſſes himſelf the Forgiver of Tranſgreſſion and Sin, declares withal, that (h) he will not clear the Guilty, but viſit the Iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children. In the Caſe of Hiel, that impious Re-builder of Jericho, God was oblig'd, in order to fulfil the Prophecy, to transfer the Puniſhment due to the Father, upon his Sons, becauſe the Form of Joſhua's Malediction is, (i) Curſed be the Man before the Lord, that raiſeth up, and buildeth this City, Jericho: He ſhall lay the Foundation thereof in his Firſt-Born, and in his youngeſt Son ſhall be ſet up the Gates of it: And, as this Malediction was kept upon Record, and a Thing well known, the People would have had but a ſlender Conception of God's Juſtice, or rather the Judgment would have paſs'd without Obſervation, had Hiel alone (whoſe Death might have been imputed to his old Age) been cut off in the Courſe of his building of this City. But now, by taking his Children, one after another, as the Building advanc'd, the Hand of God was viſible, the Denunciation of his Servant verify'd, and a proper Caution given to the whole Nation, not to deſpiſe his Patience and Long-Suffering, becauſe they could not but ſee, that, upon their perſiſting in their Impenitence, all his Threats and Comminations would, ſooner or later, moſt certainly come to paſs.

HIEL himſelf indeed is not concern'd in the Prophecy, and therefore no Mention is made in Scripture of what Fate befel him; but, from the Impartiality of God's Juſtice, we have Reaſon to ſuppoſe (k) that, after he had liv'd to be an Eye-Witneſs of his Children's untimely Death, himſelf was cut off by ſome ſore Judgment; or, that if he eſcap'd, his preſent Impunity was his greateſt Miſery, foraſmuch as it continu'd his Torment in the ſad and laſting Remembrance of his Sons, that were loſt through his Folly; or elſe was a Means to harden his Heart, for the Infliction of ſuch greater Puniſhments, as God had reſerv'd for him.

Micaiah's Speech, not to be taken in a literal, but parabolical Senſe.

IT is certainly an Argument, either of groſs Ignorance, or of a very corrupt and deprav'd Mind, to make the Condeſcenſions of Scripture as Matter of Exception againſt it, and to find Fault with the ſacred Penman, becauſe he endeavours, by apt Alluſions and Repreſentations, to bring down Spiritual and Divine Things to the Meaſure of our mean and ſhallow Capacities.

(l) THE Jews conceiv'd of God in Heaven, as of a King ſeated on his Throne; and that good and bad Angels, the one ſtanding on his Right-Hand, and the other on his left, were the appointed Executioners of his Orders, either to reward, or puniſh his Subjects. And as Princes upon Earth do generally nothing of Moment, without adviſing with their Council, and chief Officers; ſo the Prophet repreſents Almighty God, as deliberating with his heavenly Courtiers what Courſe he had beſt to take, in order to bring Ahab to Deſtruction. Amidſt this Conſultation, ſome ſuggeſt one Expedient, and ſome another; but none takes with God, until a lying Spirit ſteps out, and offers his Service, which God, after ſome Examination into his Abilities, accepts.

BUT now, no Man, I think, can have ſuch a crude Conception of the Divine Providence, as to think, that this is the Method of God's governing the World; that he, who is the Fountain of all Power and Wiſdom, needs to adviſe with any of his Creatures, nor can be at a loſs for any Expedient to accompliſh his Ends; or that he, who is both Truth and Holineſs itſelf, ſhould ever ſend a lying Spirit among his Prophets, which would be to confound all Inſpiration, and to make the Imputation of Error redound upon himſelf.

(m) UPON the whole then, we cannot but infer, that the Speech of Micaiah's was no more, than a parabolical Repreſentation of a certain Event which not long after came to paſs; that ſeveral of the Circumſtances, which are thrown into it, are in a great Meaſure Ornamental, and deſign'd only to illuſtrate the Narration; and that therefore they are not to be taken in a literal Senſe, but in ſuch a Manner, as other Parables are, where the End and Deſign of the Speaker is chiefly to be conſider'd; which, in Micaiah's Caſe, was, to ſhew the Reaſon, why ſo many of the Prophets declar'd what was falſe upon this Occaſion; even becauſe they were mov'd, not by the Spirit of Truth, but that of Adulation.

Why the Prophet was ſlain, for not ſmiting his Brother Prophet.

THE Prophets, indeed, both in their parabolical Speeches, and ſymbolical Actions, are to be conſider'd as Perſons of a ſingular Character. For, as we find (n) one of them tearing his own Garment to Pieces, to ſignify to Jeroboam the Alienation of the major major Part of the Kingdom from the Houſe of Solomon; ſo here we have another deſiring his Companion (for ſo what we render Neighbour ſignifies) to give him a Wound (o) that thereby he might have the better Opportunity of reproving Ahab for his ill-tim'd Clemency to Benhadad.

The Princes of the Eaſt were very difficult of Acceſs; and in the Court of Ahab, in particular, the Character of a Prophet was held in ſo great Deteſtation, that ſome Expedient was to be found out, to gain him Admittance to the King's Preſence; and an Opportunity to ſpeak to him in the Manner he deſign'd. After ſo great a Victory, as Ahab had lately won by the Valour of his Men, it may be preſum'd, that the Name of a Soldier was become in high Eſteem, and therefore to perſonate a Soldier, and a wounded Soldier likewiſe, who might more engage the King's Pity and Attention, the Prophet intreats his Fellow-Collegiate (having firſt told him his Intent) to give him a ſlight Cut with a Sword, or ſome other Inſtrument, that thereby he might be enabled to act his Part better.

To deſire to have his own Fleſh ſlaſh'd and cut, was, in Appearance, a Requeſt ſo frantick, that juſtly might his Brother Prophet have deny'd him that Courteſy, had he not been ſatisfy'd that the Requeſt came from God: But herein lay the great Fault of the Recuſant; tho' he knew the Authority of God's Commands, and that this was the very Thing which he injoin'd, yet, out of an indiſcreet Pity and Compaſſion to his Brother, he refus'd to comply. (p) Had he been a Stranger indeed to the ſeveral Methods of Divine Prophecy, he might have excus'd himſelf with a better Grace; but, as he was equally a Prophet, bred up in the ſame School with the other, had been inform'd by the other of his whole Deſign, and well underſtood the Weight of theſe Words, (q) I command thee in the Name of the Lord, he was utterly inexcuſable; becauſe Diſobedience to a Divine Command, and eſpecially, when deliver'd by a Prophet, was, (r) by the Conſtruction of the Law, held capital.

Now there were two Ways (according to the Jewiſh Doctors) wherein the Prophets of old were puniſh'd for their Offences in their Office. Thoſe, (s) who propheſied in the Name of Idols, or propheſied Falſhoods in God's Name, were put to Death by the Judges; but thoſe, who either conceal'd, or rejected a true Prophecy, were to die by the Hand of God. And in the Caſe now before us, the Divine Juſtice might be more diſpos'd to mark what was done amiſs, for this Reaſon, (among others to us unknown) that, by the Severity of this Puniſhment of a Prophet's Diſobedience, proceeding from Pity to his Brother Prophet, he might teach Ahab the Greatneſs of his Sin, in ſparing him, (through a fooliſh Generoſity or Compaſſion) whom, by the Laws of Religion, and Juſtice, and Prudence, and Self-preſervation, he ſhould have cut off; and conſequently, what Puniſhment he might reaſonably expect for his Diſobedience.

Why Jehoſhaphat appointed itinerant Preachers, and who they were.

In the Accounts which the Scripture gives us of Jehoſhaphat's Reformation, it is ſaid, that he not only (t) took away the High-Places, and Groves, but ſent to his Princes to teach the Cities of Judah, and with them ſent Levites, who had the Book of the Law with them, and went through all the Cities of Judah, teaching the People: But what the proper Buſineſs of theſe Princes, in their Circuit round the Kingdom, was, is a Matter of ſome Diſpute among the Learned. Grotius (u) is of Opinion, that their Commiſſion extended to the Inſtruction of the People, which, in Caſes extraordinary, is every one's Buſineſs, and could never be done with more Probability of Succeſs, than by Perſons, who were of the King's Council, and inveſted with his Authority. There is Reaſon to think however, that they did not act in the very ſame Capacity with the Prieſts and Levites that attended them; but that, (x) as Judges, and Juſtices of Peace, among us, teach and inſtruct the People in the Laws of the Land, when they deliver their Charges from the Bench; ſo theſe great Men, in the King's Name, did only admoniſh, and require the People to obſerve the Laws of God, which were the municipal Laws of the Land, and left the particular Explication and Enforcement of them to thoſe of the ſacred Order, who went along with them; ſupporting them, in the mean Time, in the Execution of their Office, and obliging the People to receive them with Reſpect, to hear them with Attention, and to practiſe what they taught them.

However this be, 'tis obvious from the Senſe of the Words, that, in thoſe Days, there was a great (y) Famine in the Land, (as the Prophet expreſſes it) not a Famine of Bread, or a Thirſt of Water, but of hearing the Words of the Lord. There were then no ſuch publick Synagogues and publick Teachers, as were afterwards inſtituted in the Kingdom, for the Inſtruction of the People in the Senſe of the Law; for, then, there would have been no Occaſion for theſe Commiſſioners and Levites, to have gone about throughout all the Cities of Judah; and into ſuch a wretched State of Ignorance was the Generality of the People fallen, that there was ſcarce one Copy of the Law to be found in the whole Country; for which Reaſon it was thought adviſable, and neceſſary indeed to carry one with them.

The Truth is, the Synagogues, whereof we read ſo much in the Acts of our Saviour, and his Apoſtles, as Places appointed for the publick Inſtruction of the People, were not of ſo early an Inſtitution, as the Times we are now ſpeaking of. (z) They did not obtain univerſally, till after the Time of the Maccabees; and 'tis to no later Date, than this, that the Words of St James allude, (a) Moſes of old Time hath in every City them that preach him, being read in the Synagogues every Sabbath-Day. Upon the Whole therefore we may infer,——That if proper Places for religious Inſtruction were not as yet inſtituted; if the Levites and others, whoſe ſtated Buſineſs it was to inſtruct the People, were became groſly negligent in their Duty; and the People withal were grown ſo obſtinate in their Ignorance, as to want a proper Authority to compel them to liſten to their Inſtructors; then was this Commiſſion, which Jehoſhaphat gave to Perſons, duly qualify'd to execute it, far from being needleſs, or ſupererogant, but ſuch only, as became a pious Prince, whoſe chief Ambition was, that (b) the Earth ſhould be filled with the Knowledge of the Lord, as the Waters cover the Sea.

Why Jehoſhaphat's Subjects were ſo many, and Army ſo large.

For this Reaſon no Doubt it is, that the ſacred Hiſtorian has remark'd (as a Reward of this Prince's Piety) that (c) he had not only Riches and Honours in Abundance, but a more numerous People, and a larger military Force, (in Proportion to his Territories) than any of his moſt powerful Predeceſſors. The whole Amount of the Particulars indeed is ſo very great, (d) that ſome have ſuſpected a Miſtake in the Tranſcribers; but, when it is conſidered, that the Dominions of the Kingdom of Judah under Jehoſhaphat were not confin'd to the narrow Limits of Judah and Benjamin only, but (e) reach'd into the Tribes of Dan, Ephraim, and Simeon; into Arabia, and the Country of the Philiſtines; in a Word, from Beerſheba to the Mountains of Ephraim, one Way, and from Jordan to the Mediterranean Sea, the other; when it is conſider'd, that this Kingdom receiv'd a vaſt Acceſſion, when Jeroboam thruſt out the Prieſts and Levites, from officiating in the Service of the Lord, and Multitudes of other piouſly diſpos'd Perſons follow'd them from all Parts of Iſrael, when they found that they might be encourag'd in worſhipping God at Jeruſalem; when it is conſider'd, that this Country was exceedingly well cultivated, flouriſhing in Commerce, abounding with Foreigners, and what a vaſt Increaſe of Inhabitants in any Nation may be produc'd in the Space of an hundred Years, which was the very Period from David; and when it is conſider'd farther, that Soldiers in theſe Days were not kept, like our ſtanding Armies, in conſtant Pay and Duty; but only had their Names ſet down in the King's Muſter-Rolls, in order to be ſummon'd to Arms whenever there was Occaſion, and ſo return'd to their Families, and follow'd their uſual Occupations: When all this is conſider'd, and put together, I ſay, we ſhall not find the Number of twelve hundred Thouſand fighting Men (even tho' they may include ſix Millions of Perſons of all Ages and Conditions) to be ſo very extravagant; eſpecially, when it is remember'd, that the City of Thebes alone (as it is reported by (f) Tacitus) furniſh'd no leſs than ſeven hundred Thouſand Soldiers; that, in antient Rome, there were once between three and four Millions of Souls; and that, in Grand-Cairo, (as ſome Travellers report) there is now almoſt twice that Number.

How the Walls of Aphek falling might kill and maim ſo many.

WE have but one ſeeming Paradox more to account for, and that is the Fall (g) of the Walls of Aphek upon no leſs than ſeven and twenty Thouſand Men. But, in Anſwer to this, (h) we are not to ſuppoſe, that this Wall, or Caſtle, or Fort, (as it may be render'd) fell upon every individual one, much leſs, that it killed every Man it fell on: 'Tis ſufficient to juſtify the Expreſſion, that it fell upon the main Body of theſe ſeven and twenty Thouſand, and that it killed ſome, and maim'd others, (for the Scripture does not ſay, that it killed all) as is uſual in ſuch Caſes. Let us ſuppoſe then, that theſe Syrians, after their Defeat from the Plains of Aphek, betook themſelves to this fenc'd City, and, deſpairing of any Quarter, mounted the Walls, or retir'd into ſome Caſtle, with a Reſolution to defend themſelves to the laſt; and that the Iſraelitiſh Army, coming upon them, plied the Walls, or the Caſtle on every Side, ſo warmly with their Batteries, that down they came at once, and killing ſome, wounding others, and making the reſt diſperſe for Fear, did all the Execution that the Text intends.

THUS we may account for this Event in a natural Way; but it is more reaſonable to think, that God, upon this Occaſion, wrought a Miracle; and, either by ſome ſudden Earthquake, or violent Storm of Wind, overturn'd theſe Walls, or this Fortreſs, upon the Syrians. And indeed, if any Time was proper for his Almighty Arm to interpoſe, (i) it was at ſuch a Time as this, when theſe blaſphemous People had deny'd his ſovereign Power and Authority in the Government of the World, and thereby, in ſome Meaſure, oblig'd him, in Vindication of his own Honour, to give them a full Demonſtration of it, and to ſhew, that he was the (k) God of the Plains, as well as of the Mountains; that he could as effectually deſtroy them in Strong-Holds, as in the open Field, and make the very Walls, wherein they truſted for Defence, the Inſtruments of their Ruin.

DISSERTATION II.

Of the Tranſlation of ENOCH and ELIJAH.

The Reality of Enoch's Tranſlation.

OF all the Events recorded in Scripture, we meet with none, that requires our Attention more, than the Tranſlation of the Patriarch Enoch, in the Times before the Flood, and the Aſſumption of the Prophet Elijah, under the Diſpenſation of the Law: For, whether Moſes, the great Miniſter of that Diſpenſation, was in like Manner exempted from the common Fate of Mortals, is a Matter wherein Commentators are not ſo well agreed. The Account of Elijah's Tranſlation is ſo expreſs, and circumſtantiated, that no Queſtion can be made of its Reality: But the Ambiguity of the Words, wherein the ſacred Hiſtorian has related the Aſſumption of Enoch, has induc'd ſeveral to think, that, tho' this antediluvian Patriarch was highly in Favour with God, and for that Reaſon remov'd from the contagious Wickedneſs, which was then overſpreading the Earth; yet that this Removal was effected, not by any miraculous Operation of God, but merely by his undergoing a natural Death.

Arguments againſt it.

THE Words, wherein Moſes has recorded this Tranſaction, are very few, and theſe of uncertain Signification. (l) Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him. Now it is plain from ſeveral Paſſages in Scripture, not only that the Word, which we render God took him, is ſet to ſignify our common Death, as in the Caſe of Elijah himſelf, when under the Juniper-Tree, he prays, that God would (m) take away his Life, becauſe he was not better than his Fathers; and in that of holy Job, when he tells us, that he did not know how ſoon (n) his Maker might take him away; but that the other Expreſſion, he was not, is frequently us'd in the ſame Senſe, as is evident from the Lamentation which both Jacob and his Son Reuben made, for the ſuppos'd Loſs of Joſeph: (o) Joſeph is not, and Simeon is not, ſays the old Man: And (p) the Child is not; and I, whither ſhall I go? ſays his Son. So that no Argument can be drawn from the Terms in the Text to countenance a miraculous Aſſumption, more than a natural Death, in the Prophet Enoch. But this is not all.

THE Author of the Book, intitled The Wiſdom of Solomon, is ſuppos'd to carry the Matter farther, and to declare poſitively for the Death of this Patriarch, when he tells us, (q) that he pleaſed God, and was beloved of him, ſo that, living among Sinners, he was tranſlated; yea, ſpeedily was he taken away, leſt Wickedneſs ſhould alter his Underſtanding, and Deceit beguile his Soul. Being made perfect in a ſhort Time, he fulfilled a long Time; for his Soul pleaſed the Lord, therefore haſted he to take him away from among the Wicked. Where every Line in the Deſcription (as ſome imagine) ſuits exactly with Enoch, and yet the Author all along ſuppoſes, that the Perſon, he is here ſpeaking of, dy'd in the ſame Manner, as other Men do.

Arguments for it.

(r) WE acknowledge indeed, that the Author of the Book of Wiſdom, ſpeaking of the haſty and premature Death of the Righteous, might properly enough allude to what Moſes relates concerning the Tranſlation of Enoch, who, in Compariſon of his contemporary Patriarchs, liv'd but a ſhort Time; but we have no Reaſon at all to ſuppoſe, that he is here directly treating of the Death of Enoch: on the contrary, that he is here diſcourſing of the Righteous in general, and vindicating the Wiſdom and and Goodneſs of Providence, in taking them ſometimes ſooner than ordinary out of this wicked World, is evident from the Inference, wherewith he concludes his Diſcourſe: (s) Thus the Righteous, that is dead, ſhall condemn the Ungodly, that is living, and Youth, that is ſoon perfected, the old Age of the Unrighteous: For they ſhall ſee the Age of the Wiſe, and ſhall not underſtand, what God, in his Council, hath decreed of him, and to what End the Lord hath ſet him in Safety.

WE acknowledge again, that, according to the Light which the Goſpel has introduc'd, for a good Man to die at any Time (t) is Gain, and to be remov'd from the Miſeries of this Life is much better than the longeſt Continuance in it: (u) But ſtill it muſt be confeſs'd, that, in the firſt Ages of the World, and under a leſs perfect Diſpenſation, Length of Days was generally accounted the Recompence of Virtue: and therefore, if there were nothing extraordinary in the Manner of Enoch's Departure, the other Patriarchs who ſo far exceeded him in Years, ſeem to have been more immediately under the Divine Favour, than him, who, tho' more remarkable than any for his Piety and Goodneſs, fell under the Lot and Condemnation of the Wicked, as being not permitted (x) to live out half his Days.

WE acknowledge, once more, that the Words of Moſes do not neceſſarily imply any miraculous Aſſumption of a living Man into Heaven, or any other Place unknown, and unacceſſible to Mortals: But ſtill, if we will but compare what he ſays of Enoch with what he relates of the other Patriarchs, we ſhall ſoon perceive, that his Purpoſe was to diſtinguiſh between their Manner of leaving the World, and his. For whereas it is ſaid of all the preceding Patriarchs, that they liv'd to ſuch and ſuch a Number of Years, and (y) begat Sons and Daughters, and ſo died; of Enoch it is ſaid, that (z) he lived ſixty and five Years, and begat Methuſelah; that, after he begat Methuſelah he lived three hundred Years, and begat Sons and Daughters; but then, inſtead of he died, the Authors Words are, he walked with God, and was not, for God took him: Where he firſt takes Notice of his good and pious Life, which made him ſo acceptable to God, and then of his Tranſlation, God took him; but, leſt there ſhould be any Ambiguity in that Expreſſion, he adds, and he was not, or appear'd no more in the World; whereby he intimates that he ſtill lives, and ſubſiſts in ſome other Place.

THE Truth is, theſe Expreſſions in the Text (when rightly underſtood) do confirm, rather than invalidate the Doctrine of Enoch's Tranſlation: But, to put the Matter beyond all Diſpute, we have the Authority of an Apoſtle, enumerating the Actions of the Worthies of old, and telling us of this Patriarch in particular that, (a) by Faith he was tranſlated, that he ſhould not ſee Death, and was not found, becauſe God had tranſlated him: For, before this Tranſlation, he had this Teſtimony, that he pleaſed God: Where the Author to the Hebrews takes care, by repeating the Word three Times, to prevent our miſtaking his Meaning; and, by telling us, that the Patriarch was not found, he plainly alludes to what the Sons of the Prophets did, when Elijah was taken away, i. e. ſent (b) fifty Men in Queſt of him, but found him not; and conſequently not obſcurely intimates, that this Tranſport of the Patriarch was of the ſame Nature with what happen'd to the Prophet ſo many Years after; that they were both the Effect of the Divine Favour to them; both the Reward of their Services upon Earth, and both a Remove to ſome certain Place, that is beyond the Reach of the Knowledge of Man.

Of the Place, whither Enoch and Elijah were tranſlated, ſeveral Opinions.

IN what Part of the World this Place is, we ſhould not be too inquiſitive, much leſs too poſitive, becauſe we have no Foundation, but Conjectures, to go upon. (c) St Auſtin, who ſeems to be more reſerv'd in other abſtruſe Queſtions, is very peremptory in this, —— That Enoch and Elijah were tranſlated into that † terreſtrial Paradiſe, where Adam and Eve liv'd, in their State of Innocence; that there they are nouriſh'd by the Fruit of the Tree of Life, which gives them a Power of ſubſiſting for ever, without ſubmitting to the Neceſſity of Death; that there they enjoy all the Bleſſings and Privileges, that our firſt Parents had before their Tranſgreſſion; and, among other Things, an Exemption from ſinning, by the ſupernatural Grace of God. But then the Queſtion is, where we are to place this terreſtrial Paradiſe, ſince there is ſcarce one Region in the World, that one Author or other has not made choice of for its Situation; and ſince, by the violent Concuſſions, which happen'd at Noah's Flood, the Face of Nature had been ſo changed, that thoſe very Places, which according to their Deſcription in Scripture, ſeem'd once to bid faireſt for it, are now debas'd to ſuch a Degree, as little to deſerve the Appellation of the Gardens of Pleaſure, much leſs the Abodes of the Bleſſed.

(d) THE Word Schamajim, which we render Heaven, is ſuppos'd by ſeveral, both Jewiſh and Chriſtian Doctors, to be the upper Part of the Air, where the Spirits of juſt Men departed, together with theſe two tranſlated Perſons, live in a State of ſincere, but imperfect Bliſs, until the general Reſurrection. But this, in our Opinion, is placing the Seats of the Bleſſed too near the Confines (e) of the Prince of the Power of that Element, and in Danger of being diſturb'd by ſome Incurſions from his Quarters: And therefore (if we might be indulg'd a farther Conjecture) (f) we ſhould rather chuſe to place them beyond the Circumference of the Solar Syſtem, where there are immenſe Spaces, neither obſtructed by the Motion of any Planets, nor obnoxious to the Changes of their Atmoſpheres, becauſe nothing is there but pure Æther. But how our corporeal Part ſhall be enabled to live here, and to live to all Eternity, we ſhall then come to underſtand, when by Experience we ſhall know what that Change is, which the Body undergoes, when it puts on Immortality. In the mean Time, as God is Omnipotent, nothing can hinder him from making what Changes he pleaſes in our Bodies, and from preſerving them eternally in that State.

THIS we may call the celeſtial Paradiſe, into which our bleſſed Saviour promis'd the penitent Thief upon the Croſs a joyful Admittance; and having taken him with him, and repoſited his Soul in this Manſion of Reſt and Happineſs, proceeded in his Aſcent beyond the Orbits of the moſt diſtant Stars, and made his Entrance into the higheſt Heavens, which are the Reſidence of God himſelf; and into which (as others imagine) this Patriarch and Prophet were, upon their Tranſlation, carry'd.

† Whether the Mahometans embrace the ſame Opinion, it is a little uncertain; but they have a Tradition among them, of one Kheder or Khizin, who had the good Fortune to find the Fountain of Life, whereof he drank plentifully, and ſo became immortal. This Kheder, whoſe Name ſignifies Verdant or Everflouriſhing, according to them, is the ſame with Elijah, who lives in a Place of Retirement, in a delicious Garden where the Fountain of Life runs, and the Tree of Life, which preſerves his Immortality, grows. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Elijah.

tinu'd in this mortal State, why may we not ſuppoſe, that Enoch and Elijah were at once tranſlated into the ſame Place? The probable Deſign of Gods vouchſafing the Apoſtle this Viſion of Heaven, was to ſhew him what his final Reward would be, and conſequently, for the Crown of Joy that was ſet before him, to make him (h) glory in the Croſs of Chriſt, (i) in Tribulation, in Diſtreſs, in Perſecution; and how reaſonable it is to believe, that theſe two Worthies, who, in their ſeveral Generations, had (k) fought the Good Fight, and finiſhed their Courſe, and kept the Faith, ſhould, upon the peculiar Favour of their Aſſumption into Heaven, be admitted to a nearer Participation of the beatifick Viſion, as an ample Reward for the Fatigues of their Warfare?

At our Saviour's Transfiguration upon the Mount, we find one of theſe ſent to him (as we may preſume) upon ſome important Meſſage, appearing in a bright and glorious Form, and (as if he were admitted to the Counſels of Heaven) (l) talking with him of his Deceaſe, which he was to accompliſh at Jeruſalem: And therefore we can hardly think, that his Abode could be at any wide Diſtance from the Throne of God's Preſence, who, in Conjunction with his faithful Servant, and Law-Giver Moſes, was deputed to go on an Embaſſy to his (m) beloved Son. But, in this Point, we ought to repreſs our Curioſity, and, in the Senſe of (n) Theodoret, content ourſelves with what God has been pleas'd to reveal in Scripture, without enquiring too curiouſly into what he hath thought fit to conceal.

The Manner, in which they were tranſlated.

In what Manner Enoch was tranſlated into Heaven, we have not the leaſt Intimation, nor is the Account of Elijah's Aſcenſion to be taken in a literal Senſe ſince a fiery Chariot and Horſes would not have been a Vehicle ſo proper for a Nature, as yet not impregnated with Immortality. The Notion of thoſe, who, upon this Occaſion, make Angels aſſume the Form of the Chariot and Horſes, is not ſo incongruous, becauſe we need not doubt, but that, by the Divine Permiſſion, they can transform themſelves into any Shape. They are ſuppos'd to have frequently appear'd in the Figure of flying Oxen, for which Reaſon they have obtain'd the Name of Cherub or Cherubim: And, with the ſame Facility, they might at this Time have put on the Appearance of Horſes; but, in Points not ſo clearly expreſs'd, we are to reſolve God's Method of acting by thoſe that are analogous, and yet more plain.

Now the only Aſcenſion that we read of, beſides theſe, is that of our bleſſed Saviour; and the Manner, in which he is ſaid to have been carry'd up, was, by the Subvention of a Cloud, which rais'd him from the Ground, and, mounting with him gradually, (o) carried him out of his Apoſtles Sight: And, in like Manner, we may ſuppoſe, that the Tranſlation of theſe two was perform'd, viz. that a bright and radiant Cloud (which, as it aſcended, might appear like a Chariot and Horſes) rais'd them from the Earth, and, leaving this little Globe behind, wafted them into the Seats of the Bleſſed. Only we muſt obſerve, that Chriſt's Body was at this Time inveſted with the Powers of Spirituality, and therefore capable of aſcending without any Vehicle; whereas theirs were retarded with a Load of Matter: And therefore it is reaſonable to think, that, by the Miniſtry of Angels, or rather by the Power of God, the Cloud, which carry'd them up, was condens'd to a more than common Conſiſtency, and that the Whirl-Wind, which might be rais'd for this Purpoſe, help'd to accelerate its Motion, and expedite their Aſcent.

And their Change.

“But ſince (p) Fleſh and Blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God, neither doth Corruption inherit Incorruption; the Queſtion is, how theſe Perſons were, all on a ſudden, (q) made meet

(n) Quæſt. 45. in Geneſ. (o) Acts i. 9. (p) 1 Cor. xv. 50. (q) Coloſ. i. 12.

“ to be Partakers of the Inheritance of the “ Saints in Light?” Behold, I ſhew you a Myſtery, ſays St Paul, ſpeaking of thoſe who ſhall be alive at our Saviour's ſecond Advent; we ſhall not all ſleep, but we ſhall all be changed, in a Moment, in the Twinkling of an Eye, at the laſt Trump; and therefore the ſame Almighty Power, which, at the Sounding of the laſt Trump, will make our corruptible Natures put on Incorruption, and our Mortal put on Immortality, did, no doubt, in their Paſſage, change their terreſtrial into celeſtial Bodies, and thereby convey into them ſuch Faculties as were requiſite for the Enjoyment of the Place, whereunto it was conducting them.

For what Ends they were tranſlated.

WHAT particular Services Enoch had done God for which he vouchſaf'd him this Favour extraordinary, and an Exemption from Mortality, the Scripture has no where ſpecify'd. It tells us only, that he walked with God; but then, conſidering, that (if not then, at leaſt in a ſhort Time) (r) all Fleſh had corrupted their Ways, and that, when God ſaw the Wickedneſs of the Earth, it repented him that he had made Man; we may ſuppoſe, that this good and pious Patriarch took care not only of his Conduct, but ſet himſelf in Oppoſition likewiſe to the Violence, and other Kinds of Iniquity, which began then to prevail in moſt Places, and that, in ſhort, he was (as the Tradition goes) a Preacher of Righteouſneſs, in which Office Noah is ſaid to have ſucceeded him. For that he was a Preacher of Righteouſneſs is manifeſt, from that Commination of his, which St Jude, (from ſome antient Record or other) brings him in making to the antediluvian World: (s) Behold, the Lord cometh with ten Thouſand of his Saints, to execute Judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly Deeds which they have committed, and of all the hard Speeches which ungodly Sinners have ſpoken againſt him.

AND, in like Manner, 'tis very evident, that Elijah was a zealous Advocate for God, and a ſtrenuous Oppoſer of Idolatry, an implacable Enemy to Baal's Prieſts, an undaunted Reprover of the Wickedneſs of Princes, and a ſevere Inflicter of the Divine Vengeance upon all the Children of Diſobedience: And therefore we may preſume, that God deſign'd his Exaltation not only as a Recompence for his paſt Services, which were great, but, as an Encouragement likewiſe to other remaining Prophets to be ſtrong in the Lord; to bear witneſs boldly againſt the Corruption of the Age, wherein they liv'd; and, in the Execution of their Office, to fear the Face of no Man.

THE Corruption of the Age indeed, both in the Times of Enoch and Elijah, was become ſo great and general, that the Belief of a future State (we may well ſuppoſe) was in a Manner quite extinct among them; and therefore God might think it expedient, at theſe two Periods of Time, to give the World a ſenſible Proof of it, if not to convince the unbelieving Part, at leaſt, to excite in the Hearts of the Faithful, under all their Afflictions and Perſecutions for Righteouſneſs Sake, refreſhing Hopes and Expectations of a Recompence to be made them in due Time. Nor can we think, but that, in theſe Inſtances, God might have a Proſpect to a greater Event, and, by the Aſſumption of his two faithful Servants, intend to typify the Aſcenſion of his Son, who was to deſtroy Death, and open the Kingdom of Heaven to all Believers; that thereby he might make the Teſtimony of his Apoſtles concerning this Fact a Thing more credible; and give all good Chriſtians a more ſolid Comfort and Conſolation in thoſe Words of St Paul, (t) Who ſhall lay any Thing to the Charge of God's Elect? It is God that juſtifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Chriſt that died; yea, rather, that is riſen again, who is even at the Right-Hand of God, who alſo maketh Interceſſion for us.

(r) Gen. vi. 11. 6.

(s) Jude, ver. 14, 15.

(t) Rom. viii. 33, 34.

And whether they are to return.

The Teſtimony of the Angels concerning our bleſſed Saviour is —— (u) This ſame Jeſus, which is taken up from you into Heaven, ſhall ſo come, in like Manner, as ye have ſeen him go into Heaven: But, before this his ſecond Coming, 'tis an Opinion that has prevail'd much among the antient Fathers, (x) that God in his great Mercy will ſend Enoch and Elijah to oppoſe the Proceedings of Antichriſt, to refute his Doctrines, and to fortify the Righteous againſt his Threats and Cruelties; but that, by the Management of this their Adverſary, they ſhall be put to Death, tho' in a ſhort Time rais'd again to everlaſting Life and Glory. The whole of this Notion is founded upon a very abſtruſe Paſſage, in St John's Revelation, concerning the two Witneſſes, which are variouſly interpreted. For, beſides Enoch and Elijah, (as we ſaid before) ſome apply them to the Law and the Prophets, others to the Old and New Teſtament, and others again (eſpecially thoſe who favour the millenary Scheme) to our Saviour Chriſt, and his Forerunner John the Baptiſt. But as every one is left to his Liberty to chuſe what Part he pleaſes in ſuch Problems as theſe, we ſhall (without pretending to determine any Thing ourſelves) leave the Paſſage (which, in a great Meaſure, we account inexplicable) to the Examination of the more Learned and Sagacious.——(y) I will give Power unto my two Witneſſes, and they ſhall propheſy a thouſand two hundred and threeſcore Days, cloathed in Sack-Cloth. Theſe are the two Olive-Trees, and the Two Candleſticks, ſtanding before the God of the Earth; and if a Man will hurt them, Fire proceedeth out of their Mouth, and devoureth their Enemies.——They have Power to ſhut Heaven, that it rain not, in the Days of their Prophecy, and have Power over Waters, to turn them to Blood, and to ſmite the Earth with all Plagues, as often as they will. And when they ſhall have finiſhed their Teſtimony, the Beaſt, that aſcendeth out of the bottomleſs Pit, ſhall make War againſt them, and overcome them, and kill them, and their dead Bodies ſhall lie in the Street of the great City, which is ſpiritually called Sodom and Egypt, where alſo our Lord was crucified.——Their Bodies ſhall lie three Days and an half without being buried, and the People ſhall rejoice, and make merry, becauſe of their Death; but, after three Days and an half, the Spirit of Life from God ſhall enter into them, and they ſhall ſtand on their Feet, and great Fear ſhall fall upon them that ſee them.

(x) Calmet's Diſſert. ſur le Patriarch Henoch, &c.

(y) Revel. xi. 3, &c. The learned Calmet (from whom in a great Meaſure I have extracted this Diſſertation) concludes his Diſcourſe in ſuch Words as theſe. —— 1. That tho' we cannot infer from the ſtrict Words of Moſes, that Enoch was tranſlated alive into another World, and is ſtill living; yet, nevertheleſs, ought the Authorities of St Paul, and the Tradition of the Church to prevail with us, to eſteem this Opinion as a Matter of Faith. 2. Altho' the Fathers and Interpreters ſeem to differ about the Place into which Enoch was tranſlated, yet, if we examine carefully their different Opinions, the greateſt Part of them may be reduc'd to a Declaration of his being in Paradiſe, which ſome place on the Earth, and others in Heaven. And, 3. That whatever Liberty the Church may allow Interpreters, of putting a Senſe on the Paſſage quoted out of the Revelations which ſpeaks of the Coming of two Witneſſes that are to appear in the latter Ages; it muſt be agreed, that the Opinion, which explains it of the Return of Enoch and Elijah upon the Earth, is much preferable to any other, on Account of its Antiquity, its intrinſick Juſtneſs, and the Number of Authors, who maintain it.

CHAP. III.

From the Siege of SAMARIA by BENHADAD, to the Death of UZZIAH, King of JUDAH.

The HISTORY.

Eliſha*'s Exploits againſt* Benhadad, King of Syria.

NOTWITHSTANDING the great Service which the Prophet Eliſha had done Benhadad King of Syria, in curing Naaman, the General of his Forces, of a confirm'd Leproſy; he ſtill continu'd his Enmity againſt Iſrael. Having rais'd an Army, with a Purpoſe to beſiege Samaria, he open'd the Campaign with Stratagems of War; and, in Hopes of ſurprizing Jehoram's Troops, laid here and there ſome Ambuſcades, which Eliſha, by his Spirit of Prophecy, found out, and all along gave the King of Iſrael a timely Intelligence of them. Benhadad at firſt ſuſpected that his Counſels were betray'd; but when he was inform'd, by [†] one of his Officers, that Eliſha (who was then at Dothan, a ſmall City in the Half-Tribe of Manaſſeh, and not far from Samaria) muſt certainly have been at the Bottom of all this, he ſent a ſtrong Detachment to ſeize him, and inveſted the City that Night.

ON the Morrow, when Eliſha's Servant ſaw the Enemy ſurrounding the Town, and knew of no Forces to oppoſe them, [†] he expreſs'd his Fear and Concern to his Maſter; but, upon his Maſter's Prayer, [*] his Eyes were open'd, and he beheld a Multitude of Horſes, and fiery Chariots ſtanding in Array, and prepar'd to protect them; while, (as his Maſter continu'd his Prayer) the Men, that beleagured the Town, were ſtruck with Blindneſs: So that, by the Prophet's perſuading them that they were out of their Way, and had miſtaken the Place they were bound to, they were led, in this bewilder'd Condition, into the very Midſt of Samaria; where, at the Prophet's Requeſt, God open'd their Eyes again to ſhew them the Danger they were in.

[†] It is not to be doubted, but that Naaman, upon his Return from Samaria, ſpread the Fame of Eliſha ſo much in the Court of Syria, that ſome of the great Men there might have the Curioſity to make a farther Enquiry concerning him; and, being informed by ſeveral of his miraculous Works, they might thence conclude, that he could tell the greateſt Secrets, as well as perform ſuch Wonders, as were related of him; and that therefore, in all Probability, he was the Perſon, who gave the King of Iſrael Intelligence of all the Schemes, that had been contriv'd to entrap him. Patrick's Commentary.

[†] This young Man, it is ſuppoſable, had been but a little while with his Maſter, no longer than ſince Gehazi's Diſmiſſion, and therefore perhaps had not yet ſeen any great Experiments of his Power to work Miracles; or, if he had, the great and imminent Danger he thought his Maſter in (for, in all Probability, he had learnt from the People of the Town, that this vaſt Body of Men were come to apprehend him only) might well be allow'd to raiſe his Fear, and ſhake his Faith. Pool's Annotations.

[*] It muſt be allow'd, that Angels, whether they be purely ſpiritual, or (as others think) cloathed with ſome material Form, cannot be ſeen by mortal Eyes; and therefore, as Eliſha himſelf, without a peculiar Vouchſafement of God, could not diſcern the heavenly Hoſt, which, at this Time, encamp'd about him; ſo he requeſts of God, that, for the Removal of his Fears and the Confirmation of his Faith, his Servant might be indulg'd the ſame Privilege: Nor does it ſeem improbable, that from ſuch hiſtorical Facts as theſe, which have deſcended by Tradition, that Notion among the Greeks of a certain Miſt, which intercepts the Sight of their Gods from the Ken of human Eyes, might at firſt borrow its Original. To this Purpoſe we may obſerve, that Homer makes Minerva beſpeak Diomedes fighting againſt the Trojans, who were aſſiſted by ſome other Gods:

Ἀχλὺν δ' αὖ τοι ἀπ' ὀφθαλμῶν ἕλον, ἣ πρὶν ἐπῆεν,
Ὄφρ' εὖ γινώσκῃς, ἠ μὲν θεὸν, ἠδὲ ϗ ἄνδρα. Iliad. v.

Which Virgil has imitated in making Venus ſpeak thus,

Aſpice: namque omnem, quæ nunc objecta tuenti
Mortales hebetat viſus tibi & humida circum
Caligat, nubem eripiam: &c. Æneid. ii. Le Clerc's Commentary.

JEHORAM, finding ſo great a Number of the Enemy lying at his Mercy, would have gladly put them to the Sword; but Eliſha by all Means diſſuaded him from it; alledging, that, as he would ſcarce be ſo cruel, as to kill in cold Blood, even Priſoners that were taken in War, much leſs ſhould he touch thoſe, who were brought into his Hands by the Providence of God, and therefore he rather adviſ'd him * to treat them with all Manner of Civility, and let them go; which accordingly the King did.

The Siege of Samaria.

BUT, ‖ how ſignal ſoever this Piece of Service and Generoſity to Benhadad was, it did not prevail with him to relinquiſh the old Grudge and Malice, which he had conceiv'd againſt Iſrael: For, not long after, he laid cloſe Siege to Samaria, and reduc'd the City to ſuch Diſtreſs, that an Aſs's Head was ſold * for fourſcore Pieces of Silver, and ‡ three Quarters of a Pint

---

* Though, according to the Rigour of the Laws of Arms, a Conqueror is at Liberty to put whatever Enemies fall into his Hands, if he pleaſes, to the Sword; yet the Laws of Humanity and Compaſſion, of Honour and good Nature, ſhould always reſtrain us from treating, with the utmoſt Severity, ſuch as ſurrender themſelves, and implore our Mercy; for, ſo ſays the Tragedian, Quod non vetat Lex, hoc vetat fieri Pudor. Senec. Troad. So the Philoſopher, Æqui bonique natura parcere etiam captivis jubet. Senec. de Clement. lib. i. c. 18. and ſo the Divine, Hoſtem pugnantem neceſſitas perimat, non voluntas. Sicut bellanti & reſiſtenti violentia redditur, ita victo & capto Miſericordia jam debetur. Aug. ad Bonifac. Ep. i. But, beſides the Humanity and Charity of the Thing, there was this Prudence and Policy in the kind Treatment of the Syrians, that, by this Means, their Hearts might be mollify'd towards the Iſraelites, that, upon their Return, they might become, as it were, ſo many Preachers of the Power and Greatneſs of the God of Iſrael, and not only be afraid themſelves, but diſſuade others likewiſe from oppoſing a People, that had ſo invincible a Protector. Calmet's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

‖ Several Heathens have obſerv'd, that Injuries are more glorioſly overcome by Benefits, than requited by pertinacious and mutual Hatred; but the Senſe of Benefits in bad Natures does not laſt long: For no ſooner do we read of the kind Treatment, which the Syrians receiv'd, 2 Kings vi. 23. but it immediately follows, that the King of Syria gathered all his Hoſt, and went up and beſieged Samaria; which does not ſo well agree with what is ſaid in the preceding Verſe, viz. that the Bands of the Syrians came no more into the Land of Iſrael. But now, as we can hardly think, that any Author whatever would contradict himſelf in the ſame Breath, ſo we muſt ſuppoſe, either that the Syrians quite retreated for this Time, and laid aſide all Thoughts of War, though afterwards they alter'd their Minds, and broke out again into Hoſtilities; or (what ſeems more plain) that their Bands made no more Incurſions and Inroads, but that they were reſolv'd to fall upon the Iſraelites at once, with a regular and formed Army, and to beſiege Samaria. For in this Senſe Joſephus takes it, when he tells us, that, after this Time, Adad (for ſo he calls Benhadad) never enter'd into any underhand Practice againſt the King of Iſrael, but reſolv'd to make open War upon him, in Confidence of his greater Strength and Numbers. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. ix. c. 2.

* If we reckon theſe Pieces of Silver, or Shekels, at fifteen Pence a-piece, they come to five Pounds Sterling; a vaſt Price for that which had on it ſo little Meat, and that unclean, according to the Law, Lev. xi. 26. In Times of Famine however, and extreme Neceſſity, the Jews themſelves were abſolv'd from the Obſervation of the Law; nor do there want Inſtances in Hiſtory, where other People, upon the ſame Occaſion, have been reduc'd to the like Diſtreſs, if what Plutarch (in the Life of Artaxerxes) tells us, be true, viz. that, in that Prince's War with the Caducii an Aſs's Head could ſcarce have been purchaſed at the Price of ſixty Drachms, i. e. two Pounds and five Shillings of our Money. Calmet's Commentary, and Prideaux's Connection, in the Preface.

‡ What we, in this Place, call Pulſe, our Tranſlation has render'd Doves Dung; but Interpreters have been at a great Loſs to deviſe, upon what Account the Inhabitants of Samaria ſhould be oblig'd to buy ſo ſmall a Quantity of it (for a Cab was the leaſt Meaſure the Jews had for dry Things) at ſo dear a Rate. For Food, for Salt, for Firing, for dunging their Lands within the Walls, ſeveral Interpreters have ſeverally apply'd it: But, upon a ſmall Examination, it will appear, that none of theſe Uſes could ſuit with the Circumſtances of a City ſo cloſely beſieg'd, as Samaria was. The Talmudiſts ſuppoſe, that they have found out the true Solution, by tranſlating the Term in the Original, by Crop of Doves; for they affirm, that ſeveral People in Samaria kept many Doves, to bring them Proviſions from the Country, which were wont to diſgorge what they pick'd up, ſo that their Owners might ſell it at a dear Rate: But who can imagine, that ſo great a Number of Doves as were neceſſary for this Purpoſe, ſhould be ſuffer'd to live in a City ſo pinch'd with Famine; that Doves ſhould be ſo docile, and well train'd up, as to bring to their Maſters whatever they had rang'd for; or, that in a Country, in a Manner cover'd with the Enemy, who had altogether forag'd and laid it waſte, a Pint of Pulſe for five. Nay, to that Extremity was the Famine come, that even Mothers were conſtrain'd to eat their own Children; which when the King underſtood, † from the Information of one who had been conſtrain'd to do it, he rent his Cloaths, and, in a Fit of Rage, vow'd to be reveng'd of Eliſha, whom he took to be the Cauſe of all this Calamity; and, to this Purpoſe, ſent an Officer to take off his Head, whilſt himſelf follow'd after to ſee the Execution done.

ELISHA, by the Spirit of Prophecy, had notice of this wicked Deſign againſt his Life; and, having acquainted † the Company with it, deſir'd them to ſecure the Doors, that the Officer might not be admitted, until the King came. When the King was come, and the Prophet was exhorting him to have a little Patience, and God would remove this Affliction in due Time; in a raving Fit of Deſpair, he reply'd, "That he would wait God's "Leiſure no longer, but go and worſhip "his Father's Idols, if they peradventure "could deliver him in this Neceſſity." Whereupon the Prophet aſſur'd him, that, if he would ſtay but four and twenty Hours more, he ſhould ſee ſuch an Alteration in Samaria, that † a Meaſure of Flour ſhould be ſold for a Shekel, and two Meaſures of Barley for the ſame Price. This a certain Lord (a great Favourite of the King's) ſtanding by and hearing, affirm'd to be a Thing impoſſible, unleſs God ſhould rain Corn from the Clouds; to whom the Prophet only made this ſhort Anſwer, That himſelf ſhould ſee the Plenty, but not be permitted to taſte of it; which accordingly came to paſs.

waſte, there ſhould be found any Nouriſhment at all? The learned Bochart therefore has not only ſolidly confuted theſe wild Opinions, but has likewiſe farther obſerv'd, that the Arabians gave the Name of Doves Dung, or Sparrows Dung, to two ſeveral Things; 1ſt, to a Kind of Moſs that grows on Trees, or ſtony Ground; and, 2dly, to a Sort of Peaſe, or Pulſe, which was very common in Judea, as may be ſeen in 2 Sam. xvii. 28. and therefore he concludes, that the Word Cherſonim may very well denote Vetches, or Pulſe: And, for the Confirmation of this, ſome Travellers have told us, that, at Grand Cairo and Damaſcus, there are Magazines, where they conſtantly fry this Kind of Grain, which thoſe, who go in Pilgrimage, buy, and take with them, as Part of the Proviſion for their Journey. Hierox. Part ii. lib. i. c. 7. and an Eſſay towards a New Tranſlation.

† The Story, as it is repreſented in Scripture, is very affecting: And, as the King of Iſrael was paſſing by upon the Wall, there cried a Woman unto him, ſaying, Help, my Lord, O King. And he ſaid, if the Lord do not help thee, whence ſhall I help thee? Out of the Barn-Floor, or out of the Wine-Preſs? And the King ſaid unto her, what aileth thee? And ſhe anſwered, this Woman ſaid unto me, Give thy Son, that we may eat him To-day, and we will eat my Son To-morrow; ſo we boiled my Son, and did eat him; and I ſaid unto her, the next Day, Give thy Son, that we may eat him, and ſhe hath hid her Son, 2 Kings vi. 26, &c. A ſhocking Story this! And a terrible Effect of the Divine Vengeance, which Moſes had long before told the Iſraelites would fall upon them, Deut. xxviii. 53. if they rebelled againſt God; which, at two other Times beſides this, viz. at the Siege of Jeruſalem under Nebuchadnezzar, Ezek. v. 10. and at that under Titus the Roman General, came likewiſe to paſs; for therein Joſephus gives us a very dolorous Account of a Lady of Diſtinction, who, out of Extremity of Hunger, was forc'd to eat the very Child, that ſuck'd at her Breaſt. The Wars of the Jews, lib. vii. c. 8.

† The Words in the Text are, And Eliſha ſat in his Houſe, and the Elders ſat with him, 2 Kings vi. 32. where, by his Houſe, ſome Interpreters underſtand the School, where the Sons of the Prophets met to be inſtructed; and, by the Elders, his chief Scholars, who, under his Inſtruction, apply'd themſelves to the Study of Divine Things. But, as we frequently read in Ezekiel, of the Elders of Iſrael ſitting before the Prophet to hear him, Chap. viii. 1. and xiv. 1. we cannot ſee why the Elders, in this Place likewiſe, may not denote ſome good and godly Men, who bore Office either in the Court, Camp, or City, as it ſeems probable by the Prophet's deſiring their Help and Protection. For, tho' Jehoram himſelf was a wicked Man, and moſt of his Officers might be forward enough to imitate him, yet we are not to doubt, but that there were ſome of them, whom Eliſha's holy Life, and glorious Miracles, together with the ſundry Benefits, which the Publick reap'd from his Miniſtry, had won over to God, and to the true Religion; and theſe were here ſitting with him, either to receive Comfort and Counſel from him in this diſtreſſed Time, or to ſollicit him to uſe his Power with God for their Relief: Which accordingly he did, and, in Compliance to their Requeſt, not out of any Fear of the King's Threats (from which, he was well aſſur'd, that God would not fail to deliver him) he pronounc'd the joyful News, which follows in the Beginning of the next Chapter. Pool's Annotations.

† The Word Seah, which we render a Meaſure, was equal to ſix Cabs, and contain'd (as ſome think) ſix Quarts, (as others) a Peck, and (as others) a Peck and two Quarts, of our Meaſure. The Shekel was much about our three Shillings; and to have a Peck of fine Flour for three Shillings at other Times would not have been ſo cheap, but, conſidering the preſent Situation of Things, it was wonderfully ſo. Le Clerc's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

ceremonial Part of the Law, and, purſuant to this, had † ſhut four Lepers out of the City, who lay under the Walls, until they were ready to ſtarve. In this Condition theſe poor Creatures, conſulting what Meaſures they ſhould beſt take, reſolv'd at laſt to try the Generoſity of the Enemy, becauſe, at the worſt, they could but die; and accordingly, before Break of Day, went to the Camp. When they came thither, to their great Surpriſe, they found no living Creature, but only Horſes and Aſſes. The Tents were ſtanding, and well provided with Riches, and all Manner of Neceſſaries, but the Men were gone: For, having been affrighted with a Noiſe in the Air, as of an Army in full March, and ready to fall upon them, they ſuppos'd, that the King of Iſrael had called to his Aſſiſtance ſome foreign Powers, († the Hittites or Egyptians) and thereupon leaving the Camp, without ever ſtriking their Tents, betook themſelves to their Heels as faſt as they could.

The poor Lepers, having firſt ſatisfy'd their Hunger, and ſecur'd ſome Riches to themſelves, began to reflect, that, while they were thus regaling themſelves, and plundering the Camp, their Country-Men were in Danger of ſtarving in the Town; and therefore, with all poſſible Haſte, returning to the Gate, they gave the Porter Notice of the Enemies Flight, who went immediately, and ſent an Account of it in to the King. The King imagining at firſt, that this had been a Stratagem of the Syrians to draw his People out of the Town, and ſo fall upon them, ſent out ſome Parties to reconnoitre ſuch Places, as might be moſt ſuſpected for Ambuſcades; but, when they return'd, they inform'd him, that they could get no Sight of the Enemy, only they found the Roads ſtrew'd with Arms, and Garments, and ſeveral Bundles of Things, which they had dropp'd (as they ſuppos'd) to eaſe themſelves in their Flight. Upon hearing of this News, the People ruſh out of the City in great Numbers, and bring in Proviſion in ſuch Quantities, that Corn was ſold at the Price, which Eliſha mention'd, and at the Time, which he foretold: And, as the incredulous Nobleman, who had deſpis'd the Prophet's Prediction, was appointed by the King to guard the Gate, which led from the City to the Camp, the better to prevent Diſorders, the Crowd preſs'd ſo vehemently upon him, that they trampled him under Foot, and killed him, before he had an Opportunity to taſte any Part of that great Store, which he ſaw was brought to the Market.

Hazael made King of Syria, upon murthering his Maſter Benhadad.

After this miraculous Raiſing of the Siege of Samaria, Benhadad was deterr'd from making any farther Attempts upon Iſrael: Nor do we hear any more of him in the ſacred Hiſtory, until Eliſha went to Damaſcus, the Capital of Syria, to execute the Order of declaring Hazael King, which was originally given to Elijah

† The Jews are of Opinion, that theſe four Lepers were Gehazi, and three of his Sons. Perſons, that were leprous indeed, were not permitted to converſe with other Men, and, by the Law of Moſes, while the Iſraelites liv'd in Tents, they were to be turn'd out of the Camp, Numb. v. 2, 3. But, after that they came to inhabit Cities, it may be queſtion'd, whether they treated them with that Rigour; ſince, in 2 Kings viii. 4, we find Gehazi holding Diſcourſe with the King, (which makes againſt his being one of the four excluded Lepers) and giving him a Detail of all Eliſha's Miracles; but this he might do by talking to him at a proper Diſtance. Lepers, indeed, were carefully avoided, becauſe their Diſtemper, in theſe hot Countries, was thought contagious; but, in the Caſe before us, theſe four ſeem to be excluded, not ſo much upon the Account of their Diſtemper, as becauſe they were uſeleſs Hands. They could neither fight, nor work in Communion with others: They were only Fruges conſumere nati, and were therefore no proper Perſons in a Siege. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

† The Hittites in particular liv'd in Arabia Petræa, to the South of Paleſtine, and, in Solomon's Time, (who had ſome Wives likewiſe out of their Country) held a great Commerce with him for Horſes, 1 Kings x. 29. and xi. 1. But under the Name of Hittites, (as elſewhere under the Name of Amorites) the ſacred Penman ſeems to comprehend all, or any of the People of Canaan. For, though the greateſt Number of that People were deſtroy'd, yet ſome of them were ſpar'd, and many of them (upon Joſhua's Coming) fled away, ſome to remote Parts, (as that famous and antient Pillar, in the Coaſts of Africk, teſtifies) and others to the Countries bordering upon Canaan; where, by Reaſon of the Scarcity of Inhabitants in thoſe Days, finding Room enough, they ſeated themſelves, and, in Proceſs of Time, growing numerous and powerful, appointed (according to their antient Manner of Government) Kings to rule over them. Pool's Annotations.

Elijah his Predeceſſor. The King hearing of his Arrival, and being no Stranger to his Abilities, ſent this ſame Hazael, (who was then become one of his prime Miniſters) to wait upon him with a very noble Preſent, and to enquire of him, whether he ſhould † recover of the Sickneſs, which he then labour'd under. The Prophet told Hazael, that his Maſter might recover, becauſe his Diſtemper was not of itſelf mortal, but that he was very well aſſur'd that he would not: And then looking ſtedfaſtly upon him, he broke out into Tears, upon the Proſpect (as he told him) of the * many barbarous Calamities, which he would bring upon Iſrael, when once he was advanc'd to Power, as that he would be, becauſe he was aſſur'd by Divine Revelation that he was to be King of Syria. At theſe Words, Hazael's Ambition took Wing; and therefore, returning to his Maſter, he conceal'd the Prophet's Anſwer, and gave him good Hopes of his Recovery, but, the next Day, took care to prevent it, by * ſtifling his Breath with a thick Cloth dipp'd in Water: And, as Benhadad had no Son of his own, and Hazael was a Man of great Eſteem, eſpecially among the Soldiery, he was, without much Difficulty, declar'd his Succeſſor.

Jehu, being anointed King of Iſrael, kills his Maſter Jehoram, and Ahaziah King of Judah.

THE next Thing which Eliſha did was to have Jehu anointed King of Iſrael, purſuant to the Order, that was given to his Maſter Elijah, and to the Divine Decree of puniſhing the Houſe of Ahab for their manifold Impieties. Ramoth-Gilead was a Place of long Diſpute between the two Crowns of Iſrael and Syria. Jehoram, King of Iſrael, had lately had an Engagement with Hazael, King of Syria, not far from it, wherein he had receiv'd ſome very dangerous Wounds, and was gone down to Jezreel, to be cur'd of them. His Army however † continu'd the Siege under the Command of Jehu, who,

† What Benhadad's Diſtemper was, we are no where told in Scripture; but it is very evident, that it was not of ſo deſperate a Nature, but that he might have recover'd of it, had he not had foul Play for his Life. According to the Account of Joſephus, it was no more than a Fit of Melancholy; for, "when he came to underſtand (as he tells us) "that all theſe Alarms of Chariots and Horſemen, that had given ſuch an irreparable Rout to him, and his Army, "were, in Truth, only judicial Impreſſions of Affright and Terror, without any Foundation, he look'd upon it as a "Declaration from Heaven againſt him; and this Anxiety of Thought made him as ſick in the Body too, as he was "in his Mind." Jewiſh Antiq. l. v. c. 2.

* The Particulars are thus enumerated: —— I know the Evil, that thou wilt do to the Children of Iſrael; their Strong-holds wilt thou ſet on Fire; their young Men wilt thou ſlay with the Sword; and wilt daſh their Children, and rip up their Women with Child, 2 Kings viii. 12. That daſhing young Children againſt the Stones was one Piece of barbarous Cruelty, which the People of the Eaſt were apt to run into, in the Proſecution of their Wars, is plainly intimated in that Paſſage of the Pſalmiſt's, alluding to the Calamities, which preceded the Babyloniſh Captivity; O Daughter of Babylon, waſted with Miſery! Yea, happy ſhall he be, that rewardeth thee, as thou haſt ſerved us. Bleſſed ſhall he be, that taketh thy Children, and throweth them againſt the Stones, Pſal. cxxxvii. 8, 9. Nor was this inhuman Practice quite out of Uſe among Nations, that pretended to more Politeneſs: For, according to the Remains of antient Fame, the Grecians, when they became Maſters of Troy, were ſo cruel, as to throw Aſtyanax, Hector's Son, a Child in his Mother's Arms, (as Homer repreſents him) headlong from one of the Towers of the City. The ripping up Women with Child is the higheſt Degree of brutal Cruelty; and a Cruelty, for which there is no Occaſion, becauſe, kill but the Mother, and the Child dies of courſe; and yet it has been often known, that, in the Heat of Execution, this Barbarity has been committed. Nay, there is Reaſon to believe that Hazael, in his War with the Gileadites, 2 Kings x. 32, 33. verify'd this Part of the Prophet's Prediction concerning him; for, what Amos, complaining of his Cruelty to theſe People, calls threſhing Gilead with threſhing Inſtruments of Iron, both the Septuagint and Arabick Verſions read, he ſawed the big-belly'd Woman of Gilead with Iron Saws. Le Clerc's and Calmet's Commentaries.

* This he did, that no Signs of Violence might appear upon him; for had the People, in the leaſt, ſuſpected his being murther'd, Hazael would not ſo eaſily have acceded to the Throne; becauſe (according to the Account of Joſephus) Benhadad was a Man of ſuch Reputation among the People of Syria and Damaſcus, that, as his Memory was celebrated among them with divine Honours, his Death, no doubt, had it been known to have been violent, would have been fully reveng'd upon the Murtherer. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. ix. c. 2. We may obſerve however, that Hiſtory makes mention of ſome other Princes, who have died in the ſame Manner, that Benhadad did; that the Emperor Tiberius (according to Suetonius) was, in his laſt Sickneſs, choak'd in his Bed by a Pillow, cramm'd into his Mouth, or (as Tacitus has it) was ſmother'd to Death under a vaſt Load of Bed-cloaths; and that King Demetrius, the Son of Philip, (as well as the Emperor Frederick the Second) was hurry'd out of the World the ſame Way. Calmet's Commentary.

† It is ſuppos'd by ſome Interpreters, that the City of Ramoth-Gilead was taken by Jehoram, before he departed from who, in the King's Abſence, acted as Captain-General. This Eliſha thought was no improper Opportunity to execute the Orders, which were left upon him to do; and therefore † calling one of his minor Prophets, he bid him go to Ramoth-Gilead, and † there anoint Jehu, the Grandſon of Nimſhi, as King of Iſrael, with the utmoſt Secrecy, and then to come away with the utmoſt Expedition. When the Prophet came thither, he found the Officers in a Council of War, and Jehu at the Head of them. Deſiring therefore to ſpeak with him in private, he did what his Inſtructions were; and reminding the General of the Prophecies of Elijah, concerning the utter Extinction of the Houſe of Ahab, he injoin'd him (now that he was inveſted with Power) to put them in Execution.

THE Officers, that were with Jehu, had but a contemptible Opinion of the Prophet, for Perſons of this Character they look'd upon as a * Kind of Mad-Men; and yet, when they underſtood that he had anointed Jehu to be King, they proclaim'd him with a general Conſent, and, with a good Body of Forces, march'd directly to Jezreel, where Jehoram was not yet recover'd of his Wounds, and whither Ahaziah, King of Judah, was at that Time come to viſit him. Jehu's Intent was, to get to Jezreel, before the King could have any Intelligence of what had paſs'd at Ramoth-Gilead, and there to ſurprize and ſeize him; but a † Centinel from it to be cur'd of his Wounds. This they gather from the Mention made of the Inner Chamber, 2 Kings ix. 2. the Top of the Stairs, Ver. 13. and from that Caution, which Jehu thinks adviſeable, Let none go forth, or eſcape out of the City, Ver. 15. But theſe Arguments will not do. What we render out of the City, does ſignify, every whit as properly, from before the City, i. e. out of the Camp or Army, that is beſieging the City. But, even, if this be not ſo, the Iſraelites might, at this Time, have the Suburbs, or Out-Buildings belonging to the City, in their Poſſeſſion, where the General might have his Head-Quarters, and from whence he might give Orders to the Piquet-Guard, (as we call it) that none ſhould be permitted to move. For, had the Town been already in their Hands, we cannot ſee, why Jehoram ſhould have kept all Iſrael there, Ver. 14. i. e. all the military Force of Iſrael, when a ſtrong Garriſon would have been ſufficient. Pool's Annotations.

† The Jewiſh Doctors are of Opinion, that the Prophet, whom Eliſha ſent upon this Meſſage, was Jonah; but, upon this Suppoſition, he muſt, at this Time, have been a very young Man, becauſe Jeroboam the Second (in whoſe Reign Jonah propheſy'd) did not aſcend the Throne till about fifty Years after this Unction of Jehu King of Iſrael. However this be, it is reaſonable to think, that Eliſha himſelf did not go to perform this Office, either becauſe he was now grown old, and unfit for ſuch a Journey, or becauſe he was a Perſon too well known, and not ſo proper to be employ'd in an Affair that requir'd Secrecy. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

† The Jews are of Opinion, that none of the Kings of Iſrael were anointed, but thoſe that were of the Houſe of David, and theſe only, when there was a Queſtion about their Succeſſion; as Solomon, they ſay, needed not to have been anointed, had it not been for the Faction of Adonijah. But, in the Caſe of Jehu, in whom the Succeſſion of the Kingdom of Iſrael was to be tranſlated out of the right Line of the Family of Ahab, into another Family, which had no Right to the Kingdom, but merely the Appointment of God, there was a Neceſſity for his Unction, in order both to convey to him a Title, and to inveſt him in the actual Poſſeſſion of the Kingdom: For if that (which ſome imagine from 1 Kings xix. 16.) be true, viz. that the Prophet Elijah did, before this Time, anoint Jehu, that Unction did only confer on him a remote Right to the Kingdom, in the ſame Manner, as Samuel's Unction did to David, 1 Sam. xvi. 13. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

* The Officers, who were in Company with Jehu, might eaſily perceive, by the Habit, and Air, and Manner of Speech of the Perſon, who accoſted Jehu ſo boldly, and, when he had done his Buſineſs, vaniſh'd ſo ſuddenly, that he was a Prophet; but then there might be ſeveral Reaſons, which might induce Men of their Profeſſion to have a contemptible Opinion of Men of that Order. The rigid and obſcure Courſe of Life, which the Prophets led, their Neglect of themſelves, and of the Things of this World, might paſs with them for a Kind of Infatuation; and the holy Exerciſes, to which they devoted themſelves, for no more than a religious Frenzy. Beſides this, the falſe Prophets, which they had ſeen in the Court of Ahab, had given juſt Offence; and, by their affected Geſtures, and ſtudy'd Contorſions, (whereby they thought to recommend their crude Enthuſiaſms) made themſelves juſtly ridiculous and contemptible. And therefore, it is no Wonder that theſe Officers, at firſt Sight, ſhould cenſure a true, as they thought they had Reaſon to judge of the falſe Prophet, with whom they had been acquainted; eſpecially, when we find ſome leading Men, in the Tribe of Judah, treating the Prophets of the Lord (as in the Caſe of Ezekiel, Chap. xxiii. 30, 31. and of Jeremiah, Chap. xxix. 26.) as Fools and Madmen; and ſome great Names in the Heathen World, looking upon all Pretenders to Inſpiration, in no better Light; according to that noted Paſſage in Cicero, Quid habet auctoritatis furor iſte, quem divinum vocatis, ut quæ ſapiens non videt, ea videat inſanus, & is, qui humanos ſenſus amiſerit, divinos aſſecutus ſit. De Divinat. lib. ii.

Upon their firſt Meeting, a few Words convinc'd Jehoram that Jehu had conſpir'd againſt him, and was come, in an hoſtile Manner, to avenge † the Idolatry and Wickedneſs of his Mother Jezebel, whereupon he turn'd his Chariot and fled: But Jehu ſoon overtook him with a ſwift Arrow, which pierc'd his Heart; and, when he perceiv'd him ſinking in his Chariot, he bid an Officer that was by, throw him into Naboth's Field, which was near at Hand, † that the Word of the Lord might be fulfilled.

As for Ahaziah, he attempted to make his Eſcape, but was purſu'd by a Party of Jehu's Men, who came up with him at Gur, and, as he was ſitting in his Chariot, gave him a mortal Wound; ſo that, as ſoon as he reach'd Megiddo, he died. He was thence remov'd to Jeruſalem, where he was bury'd in the royal Sepulchre of his Anceſtors, and, after a Reign of leſs than two Years, was ſucceeded by his Mother Athaliah, who uſurp'd the Throne.

Thus David, at Jeruſalem, was inform'd by the Watchmen, that his Sons were eſcap'd from the Slaughter of Abſalom, when he thought them all loſt, 2 Sam. xiii. 34. and therefore Jehoram, who had an Army lying before Ramoth-Gilead, had good Reaſon to keep a watchful Eye upon every Motion that came, eſpecially from that Quarter. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

(a) 1 Kings xxi. 19.

† The Anſwer which Jehu returns to Jehoram, is,——What Peace, ſo long as the Whoredoms of thy Mother Jezebel, and her Witchcrafts are ſo many? 2 Kings ix. 22. i. e. Whilſt her Idolatries, wherewith ſhe bewitches the People, are ſtill continu'd and multiply'd. And he upbraids Jehoram with his Mother's Sins, and not with his own, becauſe her's were more notorious and infamous, and what, by his Connivance, he had made his own; becauſe they were the principal Reaſon, why God did inflict, and he was come to execute theſe Judgments; and becauſe he could find no odious Accuſations againſt him, except about the golden Calves, which he purpoſely declin'd mentioning, becauſe he himſelf intended to keep them up. Pool's Annotations.

† The Words which Jehu ſeems to quote, are theſe——Surely, I have ſeen Yeſterday the Blood of Naboth, and the Blood of his Sons, ſaith the Lord, and I will requite him in this Place, 2 Kings ix. 26. It is to be obſerv'd however, that in all the Hiſtory of Naboth, (which is recorded in 1 Kings xxi.) we find no Mention made of the Death of his Sons; but it is no unuſual Thing for the Scripture to ſupply, in one Place, that which has been omitted in another. 'Tis not improbable therefore, that, as Naboth was accus'd of High-Treaſon, all his Family was involv'd in his Ruin, and all his Eſtate confiſcated to the King's Exchequer: And what ſeems to confirm this Opinion, is, ——That we find Elijah never once putting the King in Mind to reſtore the Vineyard to Naboth's Children, nor the King, in the Time of his Repentance, ever once thinking to do it, becauſe, in all human Appearance, there were no Heirs left. Notwithſtanding this, Grotius, and other learned Men, have obſerv'd, that theſe Words may ſignify no more than the extream Poverty, to which Naboth's Family was reduc'd by the Death of their Father, and the Confiſcation of his Goods: For, among the Hebrews, ſay they, all Puniſhments and Miſeries are called Blood, Lev. xvii. 4. and to take away their Eſtate, upon which they would have liv'd, was, in Effect, to take away their Blood, in which is the Life of every Creature. But this is a little forc'd: And therefore, we ſhould rather think, that Jehu is here aggravating Ahab's Crime, and reckoning the Sons as ſlain with the Father, becauſe, by their being depriv'd of him, and of his Eſtate, they were, in a Manner, in as bad a Condition, as tho' they were dead. Le Clerc's, Patrick's, and Calmet's Commentaries.

* The Words in the Original import, She put her Eyes in Paint, i. e. ſhe us'd Stibium, or Antimony pulveriz'd, to make her Eyes and Eyebrows look black and large, which, in ſeveral Countries, was accounted a great Beauty. The Uſe of Paint has been of antient Date, and the Art of blacking the Hair, and beautifying the Face, may be indulg'd the Vanity of the Female Sex; but it raiſes one's Indignation to read of a Sardanapalus painting his Eyes and Eyebrows; of the antient Greeks running into the ſame Cuſtom; and much more of the martial Romans: But there were Fops in all Nations then, as well as now.

† According to the Cuſtom of the Eaſtern Nations, the Buſineſs of this Sort of People was to attend upon Queens in their Chambers, who, by their great Fidelity and Obſequiouſneſs, gain'd generally the Eſteem, and were admitted to the Confidence of thoſe they ſerv'd, and from thence into Places, very often of great Truſt and Profit. It is remark'd however of Jezebel's Eunuchs, that they were far from being faithful to her, to let us ſee how ſuddenly Countries are wont to change with the Fortune of their Maſters. Patrick's Commentary.

† She was the Daughter of Eth-baal King of Tyre; the Wife of Ahab, and Mother of Jehoram, Kings of Iſrael; the Mother in-Law of Jehoram King of Judah, and the Aunt of Ahaziah, who was likewiſe King of Judah. Calmet's Commentary.

† The Words in the Original, which our Tranſlation has follow'd, are, Jehu wrote Letters, and ſent to Samaria, unto the Rulers of Jezreel, to the Elders, and to them that brought up Ahab's Children, 2 Kings x. 1. But then the Queſtion is, how the Rulers of Jezreel came to be at Samaria? Some have imagin'd indeed a Miſtake in the Tranſcriber, and that, inſtead of Jezreel, the Word ſhould be Iſrael, which is no great Variation: But why may we not ſuppoſe, that, upon hearing how Jehu had ſlain Jehoram, the great Men of his Court might take the Children, and, for Fear that they ſhould fall into his Hands, flee with them to Samaria, as the Capital, and ſtrongeſt Place in the Kingdom, where they might think of defending themſelves againſt his Uſurpation, and (as his Letter ſeems to import) of filling, with one of Ahab's Family, the vacant Throne. It was cuſtomary for Princes of the Blood, in theſe Days, to be brought up in the Families of the prime Nobility of the Nation; and therefore, whatever Perſons of this Quality had theſe Princes under their Care, and ſaw the Revolution that was like to happen, they might think it the moſt adviſeable Way to haſten with them to Samaria, as a Place of the moſt Security: Or, for this very Reaſon, Jehoram, when he went againſt Ramoth-Gilead, might have ſent them thither, that they might be under Cover from any ill Accident, that might poſſibly happen in his War with the King of Syria. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† Beſides the Accompliſhment of the Divine Decree, Jehu had this farther Deſign in requeſting this cruel Service of the Rulers, and Elders, and great Men of the Nation, viz. that thereby he might engage them in the ſame Crime, and Conſpiracy with himſelf. For, by prevailing with them to murder Ahab's Kinſmen in this Manner, he ty'd them to his Intereſt ſo cloſely, that, if any of the inferior People had been minded to oppoſe his Deſigns, they were, by this Means, depriv'd of any Man of Figure and Diſtinction to head them; and not only ſo, but, by this Expedient, Jehu thought likewiſe that he might, in a great Meaſure, juſtify, at leaſt leſſen the Odium of his own cruel and perfidious Conduct; for this is the Senſe of his Appeal to the People, Ye be righteous: Behold I have conſpired againſt my Maſter, and ſlew him; but who ſlew all theſe? 2 Kings x. 9. As if he had ſaid, "I own "indeed, that I was a great Inſtrument in taking off the late King; but am I more culpable than are the Friends, "the Counſellors, the Officers of Ahab? I pretend not to conceal my Fault; but the Approbation, which the princi- "pal Men of the Nation have given it, in taking up Arms againſt the Houſe of Ahab, and the wonderful Succeſs "that has attended this Enterprize of mine, are not theſe a certain Proof that God has rais'd me up to execute his "Decree in this Reſpect? And ought you not to acknowledge, in this Caſe, the Interpoſition of his Hand?" Calmet's Commentary.

† The ſacred Hiſtorian takes care to repeat the Number of theſe Princes of the Blood in two ſeparate Places, (2 Kings x. 1. and 6.) on Purpoſe to ſhew the vile Spirit of theſe great Men, who could deſtroy ſo many royal Perſons, leſs than ſeventy; and in this likewiſe being punctually obey'd, without any farther Delay, he proceeded to extirpate every one that remain'd of Ahab's Family, the great Men of his Court, and all his Friends. For, in his Way to Samaria, meeting with ſome Nephews, and other Relations of Ahaziah, who, † knowing nothing of theſe Tranſactions, were going to pay a Viſit to the Court at Samaria, he order'd theſe likewiſe (which in all amounted to the Number of forty-two) to be ſlain; and ſo (to give a better Face to what he did) taking † Jonadab, the Son of Rechab, a Man of great Strictneſs and Sobriety of Life, into the Chariot with him, he proceeded in his Journey to Samaria.

As ſoon as he was come to Samaria, he firſt deſtroy'd all that were left of the Houſe of Ahab in that City, and then, pretending that he deſign'd to offer an uncommon Sacrifice unto Baal, he iſſu'd out a Proclamation, commanding all his Prieſts, Prophets, and Worſhippers, upon Pain of Death, to be preſent at this great Solemnity. They all came; and when they, and they only (for Care was taken, that none of the Servants of the Lord ſhould be Perſons, to whom they were Governors, and to whom they ow'd a juſt Protection and Defence: And therefore, it was no more than they deſerv'd, if, when Jehu ſlew all that remained of the Houſe of Ahab, and all his great Men, till he left none, he included in that Number (as ſome imagine) theſe baſe, perfidious Time-ſervers. Patrick's Commentary.

† Jehu muſt certainly have made wonderful Expedition and Secrecy in what he did, to have prevented the Report (which generally ſpreads very faſt) of what had paſs'd at Jezreel. Two Kings and a Queen killed, the whole Family of Ahab extinct, and a general Change and Revolution in the State; and yet not a Word of this known at Jeruſalem, (which was not quite fourſcore Miles diſtant from Jezreel) even though Ahaziah, the King of Judah, was one of the Princes that was ſlain. Calmet's Commentary.

† Several learned Men are of Opinion, that this Jonadab was not the Perſon, who gave the Precepts mention'd in Jeremiah, Chap. xxxv. to his Children, but another of that Name, who liv'd in the Days of Jeremiah: For it is not likely, they think, that a Man addicted to ſuch a quiet and retir'd Life, as he inſtituted, would have come to meet Jehu; and therefore they rather imagine, that it was ſome military Perſon of great Note and Eſteem among the Populace, whoſe Intereſt might do Jehu great Service, and whoſe Advice, in many Things, he afterwards follow'd. But why might not Jonadab (how well ſoever he might love Retirement) come, upon this Occaſion, to congratulate Jehu's Zeal againſt Idolatry, and to adviſe, and encourage him to proceed in fulfilling the Will of God revealed to him? And the Reaſon is obvious, why Jehu might be glad of the Countenance and Company of ſuch a Man, whoſe known Piety would gain him more Reverence and Reſpect, than the Attendance of any great Captain could procure him. But, though Jonadab, the Son of Rechab, is allow'd to be a good Man, yet it does not therefore follow, that he reviv'd the antient Rules of the Rechabites, (as ſome are apt to think) upon a religious Account, but purely as a Matter of Policy. The Story is this: The Rechabites were of the Race of Hobab, or Jethro the Kenite, Prieſt of Midian, and Father-in-Law to Moſes, 1 Chron. ii. 55. ſo that the Kenites were Midianites, and the Midianites were Dwellers in Tents from the Beginning: For, in this Manner Abraham liv'd, while he ſojourn'd in the Land of Canaan, and, in Imitation of him, the Midianites, who were of his Poſterity, might do the ſame. Now, when the Children of Hobab, who were all Kenites, were invited by Moſes to go along with the People of God into Canaan, they might retain this Paſtoral Manner of Life, not only as a Badge of the Nation, from whence they were deſcended, but as a Means likewiſe to make their Habitation more quiet and ſecure (in a Land where they were Strangers) both from the Envy of the Jews at Home, and the Danger of Enemies Abroad. For, having neither Houſes nor Lands, but Tents and Cattle only, which they could move, upon Occaſion, from Place to Place, they could not be ſo ſubject to hoſtile Invaſions. But as, in Length of Time, theſe Kenites were tempted, by the more pleaſant Living of the Iſraelites, to think of changing this Cuſtom of their Anceſtors; this Jonadab, the Son of Rechab, a famous Kenite, and of much Eſteem and Authority among them, took Occaſion to renew it again, and to bind his Poſterity to obſerve it: For which End he forbad the Drinking of Wine, leſt the Deſire of ſo delicious a Liquor might tempt them to plant Vineyards, and build Houſes, as the Jews did. What Authority he had to enforce theſe arbitrary Injunctions, we cannot learn. 'Tis plain, that he laid his Poſterity under no Curſe, in Caſe of Diſobedience; on the contrary, we find that the Prophet Jeremiah, Chap. xxxv. 2, &c. was directed by God to bring them to an Apartment in the Temple, to ſet Wine before them, and invite them to drink; which would have been an unworthy Action, if they had been under an indiſpenſable Obligation of abſtaining from it: And, on the other Hand, the Rechabites refus'd it, not becauſe their Father had laid them under any Curſe, if they diſobey'd him, but becauſe he promis'd, that they ſhould live many Days in the Land, wherein they were Strangers, if they obey'd his Voice, Jer. xxxv. 7. which Promiſe, being alſo made to thoſe, who honoured their Parents, Exod. xx. 12. might the more incline them to that ſtrict Obedience, for which they are ſo highly commended by God in the Place above-cited. Upon the whole therefore it appears, that Jonadab only renew'd what his Anceſtors had obſerv'd long before he was born; and that his Authority prevailed among his Brethren to continue this Form of Abſtinence for two hundred Years after he was dead, not as a Matter of Religion, but as a mere civil Cuſtom. Patrick's Commentary, and Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi. c. 2.

After this, they ran to the Temple of Baal; brake down his Image, and the [†] other Images of the like Nature, and burnt them publickly. They demoliſh'd the Temple quite, laid it flat with the Ground; and, that the Place, whereon it ſtood, might in all future Ages be look'd upon as deſpicable, they made it a [*] common Jakes.

His Idolatry, and Death.

Thus entirely did Jehu deſtroy the Family of Ahab, and the Worſhip of Baal in the Kingdom of Iſrael, for which he was ſo far approv'd and rewarded by God, that he entail'd the Crown upon his Family to the fourth Generation: But Policy prevailed againſt Religion, and perſuaded him to continue the Old Idolatry, even when he had deſtroy'd the New. The Calves which Jeroboam ſet up, he would not part with: And therefore God, to make him ſenſible of his Diſpleaſure, ſtirred up Hazael King of Syria, to invade his Country; who, having taken ſeveral of his Frontier-Towns, did thereby open a Way to make great Ravages in ſeveral other Places of his Kingdom, eſpecially in the Country beyond Jordan, where the Tribes of Manaſſeh, Gad, and Reuben ſuffer'd much. In a Word, we may ſay of Jehu, that, as his Conduct was of a mixt Nature, God rewarded his Obedience, but puniſh'd his Idolatry; who, after he had reign'd eight and twenty Years, dy'd, and was bury'd in Samaria, and (without any Oppoſition) was ſucceeded by his Son Jehoahaz.

Jehoahaz his Son ſucceeds; his Idolatry, unhappy Reign, and Death.

JEHOAHAZ, to preſerve the Crown of Iſrael from uniting with that of Judah, purſu'd the ſame Method, that his Predeceſſors had done in Relation to the political Worſhip of the Golden Calves; ſo that, during his whole Reign, God ſorely afflicted both him and his People, by delivering him into the Hands of Hazael, and his Son Benhadad, the third Syrian King of that Name, who reduc'd him to that low Ebb, that he had no more than fifty Horſemen, ten Chariots, and ten Thouſand Foot Soldiers left. At length, through the many Defeats he had receiv'd, and the grievous Oppreſſion, under which he labour'd, grown weary of Life, as well as Government, after a very troubleſome Reign of ſeventeen Years, he dy'd, and was ſucceeded by his Son Joaſh, a Prince more fortunate, and not altogether ſo irreligious as his Father. But to enquire a little now into the Affairs of the Kingdom of Judah.

[*] It was the Cuſtom of almoſt all Idolaters to be very curious about the external Pomp of their Ceremonies, wherein indeed the chief Part of their Worſhip does conſiſt. All the Prieſts of Baal were cloath'd in fine Linnen, and their Chief-Prieſts, no doubt, had ſome particular Ornaments to diſtinguiſh them. Baal and Aſtarte were Phœnician Deities: And therefore, as Silius Italicus, in his Deſcription of the Prieſts of Hercules, has given us an Account, in what Manner the Phœnician Prieſts (when in their Office) were habited, we have Reaſon from thence to ſuppoſe, that the Dreſs of the Prieſts of Baal were much of the ſame Kind:

[†] Theſe Idolaters, beſides the ſupreme God, whom they took Baal to be, worſhipp'd ſeveral other leſſer Gods, whom they call Baalim, and whoſe Images were plac'd in this Temple: For it was an antient Cuſtom, (as Servius notes) after the Prieſt had invok'd the particular God, for whom the Sacrifice was intended, to addreſs himſelf to all the other Gods, leſt any of them ſhould think themſelves neglected. Patrick's Commentary.

[*] The Hiſtories of the Eaſt furniſh us with ſeveral Examples of Princes inflicting this Kind of Puniſhment upon ſuch as were found guilty of High-Treaſon, or of contravening the King's Commands. To this the Decree, which Darius made in Favour of the Jews, plainly alludes: Whoſoever ſhall alter this Word, let Timber be pulled down from his Houſe, and being ſet up, let him be hanged thereon; and let his Houſe be made a Dunghil. Ezra vi. 11. And, to the ſame Purpoſe, is that Threat of Nebuchadnezzar to the Magicians, &c. If ye will not make known unto me the Dreams with the Interpretation thereof, ye ſhall be cut in Pieces, and your Houſes ſhall be made a Dunghil. Dan ii. 5.

Son Abaziah, being a very ambitious, bloody-minded Woman, and reſolving to take the Government upon herſelf, [†] ſhe deſtroy'd all the Children, that Jehoram had by another Wife, and all their Offſpring, that ſo ſhe might aſcend the Throne without any Oppoſition. Jehoſhaba, the Siſter of Abaziah by the Father's Side, but not by the Mother's, was, at this Time, marry'd to Jehoiada, the High-Prieſt; and while Athaliah's Executioners were murthering the reſt, ſhe ſtole away [†] Joaſh, the Son of Abaziah, and kept him, and his Nurſe, concealed [*] in an Apartment of the Temple, [†] for the Space of ſix Years.

In the ſeventh Year, his Uncle Jehoiada, being determin'd to place him upon the Throne of his Anceſtors, and to this Purpoſe having engag'd the Prieſts and Levites, and the leading Men in all the Parts of the Kingdom, in his Intereſt, in a publick Aſſembly produc'd him, and made them take an Oath of Secrecy and Fidelity to him. Then, putting himſelf in a proper Poſture of Defence, [†] he diſtributed the Arms, which David had repoſited in the Temple, among his People, whom he divided into three Bodies, one to guard the Perſon of the King, and the other two to ſecure the Gates of the Temple, that none might be permitted to enter, (except the Prieſts and Levites, who were to officiate) upon Pain of Death. [†] The Conſideration of the Fate, that attended theſe Royal Families, is enough to make any one bleſs Providence, for having been born of a meaner Parentage. The whole Offspring of Jeroboam, Baaſha, and Ahab, Kings of Iſrael, was cut off for their Idolatry, ſo that there was not one left; and the Kings of Judah, having contracted an Affinity with the Houſe of Ahab, and being by them ſeduc'd into the ſame Crime, were ſo deſtroy'd by three ſucceſſive Maſſacres, that there was but one left. For, firſt, Jehoram ſlew all his Brethren; then Jehu ſlew all his Brother's Children; and now Athaliah deſtroys all the reſt, that her Executioners could meet with. Enrag'd ſhe was to ſee Ahab's Family cut off; and therefore, ſhe reſolv'd to do as much by the Houſe of David. As ſhe was one of Ahab's Family, ſhe had Reaſon to apprehend, that Jehu, who had a Commiſſion to extirpate all, would not be long before he called upon her: Her only Way therefore, to ſecure herſelf againſt him, was to uſurp the Throne; but this, ſhe knew, ſhe could not do without deſtroying all the Royal Progeny, who were no Well-wiſhers to the Worſhip of Baal, which ſhe had abetted, and was reſolv'd to maintain. Pool's Annotations, Patrick's Commentary, and Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi. c. 2.

[†] Some Interpreters are of Opinion, that Joaſh was not the real Son of Abaziah, (in whom the Race of Solomon, in a direct Line, was extinct) but properly the Son of Nathan, and only called Abaziah's, becauſe he ſucceeded him in the Throne: For, had he been Abaziah's true Son, and Athaliah's Grandſon, why might not ſhe have declar'd him King, and, during his Minority at leaſt, taken the Adminiſtration into her own Hands? But therefore ſhe exercis'd her Cruelty, as they ſay, in deſtroying the Princes related to Abaziah, becauſe ſhe was unwilling to have the Kingdom go into another Branch of David's Family. But, notwithſtanding theſe Reaſons, and the Authority of thoſe, who produce them, in the ſecond Books both of Kings and Chronicles, we find this Joaſh ſo frequently called the Son of Abaziah, the King's Son, &c. without any Manner of Reſtriction, that we cannot be perſuaded to look out for any other Father for him.

[*] Joſephus relates this young King's Eſcape and Concealment thus:—— "Jehoſhabath, the Siſter of Abaziah, "and Wife to Jehoiada the High-Prieſt, coming into the Palace, found a male Child, of about a Year old, whoſe "Name was Joaſh, among the dead Bodies of the Sons of Abaziah, whom the Nurſe, it ſeems, had there laid, on "purpoſe to ſave his Life: She therefore convey'd it away to her own Lodgings, and thence to the Temple, where "ſhe took care of it, through the whole ſix Years of Athaliah's Reign, without making any one privy to the Secret, "except her own Huſband;" who, upon this extraordinary Occaſion, might diſpenſe with the Law, or rather Cuſtom, which allow'd none but the Prieſts who officiated, to lodge in the Apartments of the Temple. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. ix. c. 7. and Calmet's Commentary.

[†] 'Tis very likely, that Athaliah might imagine that ſhe had ſlain all, and ſo think herſelf ſecure; or, if ſhe ſuſpected, that this one was preſerv'd, ſhe might not think it adviſeable to make any ſtrict Search, leſt thereby ſhe ſhould alarm the People with a Notion, that there was ſtill a Son of David's Family left, which might be a Means to make them uneaſy under her Government, and deſirous of a Change: Beſides that ſhe might have the Vanity to think of being able, in a ſhort Time, to ſecure the Crown to herſelf, in ſuch a Manner, as that ſhe ſhould not need to fear ſuch a weak Competitor. Pool's Annotations.

[†] The Captains and other Officers, who were admitted to the Knowledge of Jehoiada's Deſign, came into the Temple unarm'd, for fear of giving Suſpicion: But, as David had erected a Kind of ſacred Armory in one of the Apartments of the Temple, wherein the Weapons, and other Trophies, which he and ſeveral other Generals had gain'd from their Eminence, and, as Monuments of their Victories, had dedicated them to the Lord, were depoſited: Jehoiada took care, upon this Occaſion, to have this Magazine of military Proviſions open'd, ſo that there was no Want of any Sort of Arms. Joſeph, Antiq. lib. ix. c. 7.

this he brought out the young Prince, ſet the Crown on his Head, [†] put the Book of the Law into his Hand, and, becauſe his Right had been interrupted, anointed him, and, with the Sound of the Trumpet, proclaim'd him, which was ſeconded with the joyful Shouts and Acclamations of the People.

ATHALIAH, hearing the Noiſe, made all the Haſte ſhe could to the Temple; but when, to her great Surprize, ſhe ſaw the young King on a Throne, which was erected [†] in an eminent Place, and the People and great Men about him rejoicing, ſhe rent her Cloaths, and cry'd out, Treaſon! But Jehoiada ſoon ſilenc'd her: For, having commanded the Guards to ſeize, and carry her out of the Temple, and to put all to the Sword, who ſhould pretend to reſcue or aſſiſt her, they immediately executed their Orders; and taking her out of the ſacred Ground, brought her, without any Oppoſition, to the Stable-Gate belonging to the Palace, and there ſlew her.

JOASH, being thus ſeated on the Throne, by the High-Prieſt's Directions, made a Covenant with the People, that they ſhould reſtore the true Worſhip of God, continue in it, and root out all Idolatry; and then he made another between himſelf and the People, viz. that he ſhould govern according to Law, and that they ſhould be mindful to obey him. When this was done, the Multitude roſe, deſtroy'd the Temple, demoliſh'd the Altar, broke down the Images, and killed Matan, the Prieſt of Baal, who was then in waiting. After this Jehoiada aboliſh'd ſome Corruptions, which former Reigns had introduc'd, made ſome Reforms in the Service of the Temple, and then, with all the Rulers and Officers, and People, conducted the King to the Royal Palace, and put him into a quiet Poſſeſſion of the Kingdom of Judah.

[†] Thoſe, who think that the Word Eduth which we tranſlate Teſtimony, comes from the Hebrew Root Adah, which ſignifies, to clothe, put on, or adorn, ſuppoſe that it was ſome royal Ornament, which the High-Prieſt put upon the King, as a Mark of regal Dignity, at the ſame Time that he plac'd the Crown upon his Head; and this Ornament they conceive to have been a Bracelet, becauſe, in the Story of the Amalekite, we read, that he brought to David the Bracelet that was upon Saul's Arm, as well as the Crown that was upon his Head. But ſince, in the xviith Chapter of Deuteronomy, which treats expreſly of the Election and Duty of a King, there is this Injunction given, ——— That he ſhould write him a Copy of the Law in a Book, out of that which is before the Prieſts, the Levites, Ver. 18. Others, (with more Probability) have thought, that, at his Coronation, a Roll, containing a Copy of the Law, (which is frequently called a Teſtimony, as being a Witneſs of God's Will, and Mens Duty) was put in his Hands, which he held, for that Time, in the Way of a Sceptre or a Truncheon; tho' others will have it, that when Jehoiada crown'd Joaſh, he laid the Book of the Law upon his Head, to which Cuſtom holy Job (Chap. xxxi. 35, 36.) as they think, ſeems to allude, when he wiſhes, *O that mine Adverſary had written a Book! The Pillar on the Right-Hand repreſented the Pillar of the Cloud, and that on the Left, the Pillar of Fire; and near one of theſe Pillars, in all Probability, the royal Throne was erected: Unleſs we can ſuppoſe, that, what is here called a Pillar, was that brazen Scaffold, five Cubits long, five broad, and five high, which Solomon made at firſt, upon his dedicating the Temple, but was afterwards continu'd for the King, upon any ſolemn Occaſion, to appear upon, and where doubtleſs there was a Throne of State. Calmet's Commentary, and Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi. c. 2.

With her he liv'd for the Space of two and thirty Years, in which Time, being convicted of Adultery with another Woman, he did publick Penance in the Church of Alberbury, when he was 105. In his 122d Year, he marry'd his ſecond Wife, who abode with him as long as he liv'd: But at length he was brought up to London by the Earl of Arundel and Surrey, in the Year 1635, and ſhewn to the King of Great-Britain, when he was ſome Months more than 152 Years old. Two Years after this he dy'd in Arundel-Houſe, and might probably have liv'd ſome Years longer, had he continu'd in his Native Air. Chronol. Sacra, c. 12.

† The Jews have a Fancy, that the Courtiers, who, after the Death of Jehoiada, got Poſſeſſion of Joaſh, flatter'd him with a Conceit, that he himſelf was worthy of Divine Honours, who had been brought up in the Houſe of God, a Favour that was never granted to a mere Man, and that the King's being pleas'd with this Kind of Flattery, provok'd God to ſend upon him the Calamities we afterwards read of; even as the Angel of God ſmote Herod, for aſſuming the Glory to himſelf, when the People, in Commendation of his Oration, ſaid, That it was the Voice of a God, and not of a Man, Acts xii. 22. But this is mere Fancy. If the Princes of Judah wanted to obtain a Toleration from the King for their Idol-Worſhip, it would have been highly abſurd for them to go about to perſuade him, that himſelf was a God, ſince they that have the Folly to eſtabliſh their own Adoration, are always very jealous of the Worſhip of any other. Their making Obeiſance therefore to the King, denotes the humble Poſture wherein they repreſented their Petition, that they might not be confin'd to unneceſſary and troubleſome Journies, in coming to Jeruſalem to worſhip, but be indulg'd the Liberty (which their Forefathers had) of worſhipping God in High-Places; which when they had once obtain'd, they knew they might then worſhip Idols, without Obſervation or Diſturbance. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries, and Pool's Annotations.

† Jehoiada, the High-Prieſt, is ſuppos'd to die in, or near the three and twentieth Year of King Joaſh's Reign, ſo that Joaſh might be about thirty Years old, when the Princes of Judah ſeduc'd him to Idolatry: And this makes it the more wonderful, what poſſibly could give Occaſion to ſuch a ſhameful Change in ſo advanc'd an Age, unleſs we can ſuppoſe, that the Conduct of the Prieſts in embezzling the Money, collected for the Reparation of the Temple, (whereof he complains to Jehoiada, 2 Kings xii. 7.) might curdle his Temper, and give him ſome Diſguſt. Le Clerc's Commentary, and Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes.

† This Sin, beſides the Contempt of God's Prophet, and of the ſacred Place, where he was murther'd, had an horrid Ingratitude in it, ſince Zachariah was the Son of him, to whom the King ow'd his Life and Kingdom, and who himſelf aſſiſted his Father in his Unction, as ſome think; becauſe it is ſaid, that Jehoiada and his Sons anointed him, 2 Chron. xxiii. 11. But if Jehoiada was High-Prieſt, this Son is not reckon'd among the Succeſſors of Aaron, 1 Chron. vi. and therefore, it is likely, that he was a younger Son of that Family; for, had he been the eldeſt, he would have had ſufficient Authority, without the Spirit of Prophecy, to have reprov'd Joaſh for his Idolatry. Ludovicus Capellus therefore thinks it probable, that his Brother, the High-Prieſt, conniv'd at the King's Apoſtacy, and that this younger Brother was inſpir'd by God to reprove it; which Boldneſs Joaſh, and his Kindneſs of his Father and Mother, to whom he was indebted for his own Life, gave Orders to deſtroy the Son; ſo that a Band of Ruffians, appointed for that Purpoſe, fell upon him, and, in one of the Courts of the Temple, ſton'd him to Death, calling upon God to avenge his Cauſe.

Is ſorely diſtreſs'd by Hazael, falls into a Diſtemper, and dies.

AND it was not long before the great Avenger of all Violence and Wrong effectually did it: For, the very next Year, the Syrian Army under Hazael paſs'd the Jordan, and, marching directly to Jeruſalem, ſlew in their Way all the Princes and great Men, that had ſeduc'd their King to Idolatry.

JOASH was in no Condition to make any Reſiſtance: And therefore, to redeem himſelf from the Miſeries of a Siege, took all the rich Veſſels, which his Anceſtors had devoted to the Service of God, and all the Gold, that was laid up in the Treaſures of the Temple, (beſides what was found in the royal Treaſury) and ſent it as a Preſent to Hazael, to prevail with him to withdraw his Troops. Hazael, for the preſent, might withdraw them: But, † the next Year, they march'd again into the Territories of Judah; and, tho' Hazael was not there in Perſon, defeated the Forces, which Joaſh ſent againſt them, made great Havock in the Country, enter'd Jeruſalem, put ſome of the Princes and Rulers to the Sword, and treated Joaſh himſelf with no ſmall Indignity and Contempt. But this was not all; for no ſooner was the Syrian Army departed, but the Diſtemper, or rather that Complication of Diſtempers, wherewith, ſome Time before, God had afflicted Joaſh, grew worſe and worſe; ſo that being confin'd to his Bed, two of his own Servants, Zabad and Jehozabad, conſpir'd againſt him, and † ſlew him; who, after a Reign of forty Years, was ſucceeded by his Son Amaziah, and bury'd in the City of David, but † not in the royal Sepulchres.

Amaziah revenges his Father's Murther, and overcomes the Edomites.

AMAZIAH was five and twenty Years old, when he began to reign, and, for ſome Time, behav'd tolerably well, tho' he follow'd the Example of his Anceſtors in letting the High-Places ſtand, and in ſuffering the People to offer Sacrifice, and burn Incenſe there. † As ſoon as he found himſelf ſettled in the Throne, he very juſtly took Revenge of the two Traitors, that had murther'd his Father; but † their Children he did not touch; becauſe it was contrary to the Law, that (b) Children his Courtiers thought they might puniſh with ſome Colour, by alledging, that he was not mov'd to it by the Spirit of God, but by a raſh, pragmatical Temper of his own, which they incited the People to chaſtiſe. Patrick's Commentary.

† It is highly probable, that, beſides the Preſent of Gold which Joaſh ſent Hazael, in order to bribe him to withdraw his Army, he had made him a Promiſe of an annual Tribute; and that, upon his Refuſal to pay it, the Syrian Army took the Field the next Year, and, as the Expreſſion in the Text is, executed Judgment upon Joaſh, 2 Chron. xxiv. 24. For (according to the Author of the Jewiſh Traditions upon the ſecond Book of Chronicles) while they killed his Children before his Eyes, they upbraided him with the cruel and unjuſt Death of Zachariah. Calmet's Commentary.

† Theſe two Murderers (mongrel Fellows, whoſe Fathers were Jews, but their Mothers Aliens) perhaps were of his Bed-Chamber; and, having conſtant Acceſs to the King, might more eaſily accompliſh their Deſign: However, he was ſo weak and feeble, that he could make no Reſiſtance, and had fallen into that Contempt and Diſeſteem, that his Guards minded not what became of him. Patrick's Commentary.

† Though the People could not puniſh wicked Kings for their Impieties, while they liv'd, yet they fix'd an Odium upon their Memory, when they were dead; whereby they both preſerv'd the Sacredneſs of the ſupreme Power, (as Grotius, de Jure Belli & Pacis, lib. i. cap. 3. Sect. 16, ſpeaks) and kept Kings, in ſome Meaſure, under Awe, for Fear of what might befal them after their Deceaſe. Patrick's Commentary.

† It ſeems, that theſe two Aſſaſſins continu'd to be Men of Weight and Intereſt at Court, even after they had murder'd their King; for his Son, we may obſerve from 2 Kings xiv. 8, retain'd them in his Service for ſome Time, nor durſt he venture to execute Juſtice upon them, until he was well ſettled in his Authority, and had diveſted thoſe of all Power, who were their Friends and Abettors. Patrick's Commentary.

† In this he acted like a good Man, and contrary to the wicked Cuſtoms of many Kingdoms, where, if any one be guilty of High-Treaſon, not only he, but his Children likewiſe, who are neither conſcious nor Partakers of any of his traiterous Practices, are equally devoted to Deſtruction, leſt they (forſooth) ſhould form any Faction againſt the Prince, or ſeek Revenge for their Father's Death. Le Clerc's Commentary.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

Children ſhould be put to Death for their Fathers. About four and fifty Years before his Acceſſion, the Edomites had revolted, in the Reign of Jehoram, from the Kingdom of Judah; and therefore, having a Deſign to reduce them to their former Subjection, he new-modelled and new-officer'd his Army, and upon a general Muſter, found them to be no leſs than † three hundred Thouſand fighting Men: But, thinking theſe too few for his intended Expedition, he hir'd of the King of Iſrael an hundred Thouſand more, for whom he † paid him an hundred Talents; But, † by the Direction of a Prophet, whom God ſent to him on Purpoſe to diſſuade him from employing theſe Auxiliaries, they were (with much adoe) diſcharg'd, and himſelf went in Perſon againſt the Edomites with none but his own Men, the People of Judah. However, being thus ſhamefully diſmiſs'd, as they thought, they were not a little exaſperated againſt Amaziah, and therefore, in their Return Home, they plunder'd all the Towns in their Way; killed no leſs than three Thouſand Men; and carry'd away a conſiderable Booty, to make an Amends for the Plunder they had promis'd themſelves in the Edomitiſh War.

AMAZIAH, (as we ſaid) with none but his own Forces, march'd againſt the Edomites. In the † Valley of Salt he gave them Battle; ſlew ten Thouſand upon the Spot, and took ten Thouſand Priſoners. From thence he march'd to Selah †, the Metropolis of Arabia Petræa, which he ſoon became Maſter of, and, from the Top of the Rock, whereon the Town ſtood, * threw the ten Thouſand he had taken Priſoners headlong, ſo that they were all daſh'd to Pieces.

Amaziah falls into Idolatry, is vanquiſh'd by Joaſh King of Iſrael, and murther'd by his own Subjects.

BUT his Cruelty to the Captives was not the worſt Thing he was guilty of in this Expedition. In his Return, he * brought with him the Idols of Edom, to which he paid Adoration, and offer'd Incenſe; which Thing provok'd the Lord, ſo that he ſent a Prophet to reprove him for his Apoſtacy, and to threaten him with the Deſtruction, which in a ſhort Time came to paſs. For, being now elated with his Succeſs againſt the Moabites, and reſenting the Affront, which the Iſraelitiſh Army had lately put upon him, he † ſent Joaſh King of Iſrael a Challenge to meet and engage him in a pitch'd Battle.

† Hence ſome have made an Obſervation, how much the Iniquities of the People of Judah had diminiſh'd their Numbers ſince the Days of Jehoſhaphat, which was a Space of but eighty-two Years: For this King could bring no more than three hundred Thouſand Men into the Field; whereas Jehoſhaphat brought almoſt four Times as many. Patrick's Commentary.

† If theſe be reckon'd for Talents of Silver, (as they generally are) each Talent, at an hundred and twenty-five Pounds Weight, and each Pound Weight at four Pounds in Value, the Whole will amount to fifty Thouſand Pounds Sterling, which will be but ten Shillings to each Man, Officers included. Very low Pay! Unleſs we ſuppoſe, that this whole Sum was given to the King of Iſrael for the Loan of ſo many Men, and that the Men were to have their Pay beſides; or rather, that they were to have no other Pay but the Booty, which they took from the Enemy, and that this was the true Reaſon, why they were ſo exaſperated at their Diſmiſſion, as to fall upon the Cities of Judah, from Samaria even unto Beth-horon, 2 Chron. xxv. 13. They went very probably firſt to Samaria, where they complain'd to their own King of the bad Treatment, they had receiv'd from Amaziah, and deſir'd ſome Reparation to be made them for the Affront put upon them, and the Loſs of the Profit, which they might have made in the War; but, finding him not inclinable to make them Satisfaction, they immediately fell foul upon the Territories of Judah, and, from Samaria (for that is the Place of their ſetting out) even to Beth-horon, a Town not far diſtant from Jeruſalem, ravag'd the Country, and did the Miſchief here mention'd; which they might more eaſily do, becauſe the War with Edom had drain'd the Country of all the Forces, that ſhould have oppos'd them. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries on 2 Chron. xxv. 6, 13.

† The Jews will needs have it, that this Prophet was Amos, the Father of Iſaiah; but their Tradition is built upon a Miſtake, viz. that Amos the Prophet was Iſaiah's Father.

† This Valley lay towards the Land of Edom, and was ſo called, either from the Salt-Springs which were therein, or from the Salt that was dug up there. Patrick's Commentary on 2 Sam. viii. 13.

† Selah, in the Hebrew Tongue, ſignifies a Rock, and ſo exactly anſwers to the Greek Word Petra, that moſt Commentators, with very good Reaſon, have agreed, that this Selah is the ſame with Petra, the Metropolis of Arabia Petræa, and from whence (as ſome imagine) the whole Country took its Name; though others rather think, that, as this City had its Name from its Situation on a Rock, ſo the adjacent Tract was called Arabia Petræa from its being overſpread with ſuch Rocks, or rocky Hills. Wells's Geography of the Old Teſtament, Vol. III.

* That this was an antient Puniſhment among the Romans, we may learn from Livy, Plutarch, and ſeveral others; as Mr Selden (de Synedriis, lib. i.) obſerves, that it was in Uſe among other Nations; but we do not find it commonly practis'd among the Jews. It is not in the Catalogue of the Puniſhments, which Moſes enacts; neither was it ever inflicted by any regular Judicature: And therefore one would think, that the Edomites, either by ſome ſuch like Cruelty to the People of Judah, had provok'd them to make a Retaliation in this Manner, or that they were, in their very Diſpoſition, ſo apt to revolt, that there could be no keeping them in Subjection, without ſome ſuch ſad exemplary Puniſhment as this. Calmet's Diſſert. ſur les Supplices, and Le Clerc's Commentary on 2 Chron. xxv. 12.

JOASH (as it deſerv'd) * receiv'd the Meſſage with Contempt: But, when he found that Amaziah was hereby but the more irritated, and perſiſted in his Purpoſe of fighting, he met him, and gave him ſuch a Reception, that he routed his Army, took him Priſoner, and carry'd him * to his own City of Jeruſalem; where he enter'd in Triumph, plunder'd the Temple and Palace of all that was valuable, laid a Tax upon the Land, carry'd off Hoſtages † for the Security of the Payment; and that, in caſe of any Failure in this Reſpect, the City might lie open to his Invaſions, he broke down all the Fortifications of the Wall, from the Gate of Ephraim to the Corner Gate, about four hundred Cubits in Length, and ſo † return'd to Samaria.

* Idolatry, at the beſt, can no Ways be apologiz'd for; but no Reaſon can be invented, why any Perſon ſhould make the Objects of his Adoration ſuch Gods as could not deliver their own People out of the Enemies Hands, as the Prophet very juſtly reproves Amaziah, 2 Chron. xxv. 15. unleſs we ſuppoſe, that the Images of theſe Gods were ſo very beautiful, that he perfectly fell in Love with them, or that he worſhipped them for Fear they ſhould owe him a Spite, and do him ſome Miſchief, in Revenge for what he had done againſt the Edomites. How much more wiſe were the Sentiments of Fabricius Maximus, upon the like Occaſion, who, having conquer'd Tarentum, and being aſk'd, what ſhould be done with their Gods? Bid them leave them with the Tarentines; for what Madneſs is it (as he adds) to hope for any Safety from thoſe, that cannot preſerve themſelves? Patrick's Commentary.

† Joſephus, in his Account of this Tranſaction, tells us, that Amaziah wrote an imperious Letter to the King of Iſrael, "Commanding him and his People to pay the ſame Allegiance to him, that they had formerly paid to his "Anceſtors, David and Solomon; or, in caſe of their Refuſal, to expect a Deciſion of the Matter by the Sword." Others think, that he intended no War by this Meſſage, but only a Trial of military Skill and Proweſs, or a civil Kind of Interview between his Men and thoſe of Iſrael; for, had he purpos'd to act in a hoſtile Manner, he would have aſſaulted them on a ſudden, and not given them this Warning to ſtand upon their Defence. The Words of the Meſſage are, Come, let us look one another in the Face, 2 Kings xiv. 8. Much of the ſame Kind with what Abner ſaid to Joab, Let the young Men now ariſe, and play before us, 2 Sam. ii. 14. But how polite ſoever the Expreſſions may be, in both Caſes they had in them the Formality of a Challenge, as both the King and General (who were not unacquainted with military Language) did certainly underſtand them. So that the Truth of the Matter ſeems to be this: ——Amaziah, being encourag'd by his late Victory, determin'd to be reveng'd for the Slaughter of his Anceſtors by Jehu, 2 Kings ix. and for the late Spoil, which the Iſraelites had made in his Country; and thereupon reſolving to have Satisfaction, (but in a fair and honourable Way) he ſent them this open Declaration of War, but conceiv'd in as mild Terms, as any Thing of that harſh Nature could be. Calmet's and Patrick's Commentaries.

* It was a Cuſtom among the Oriental People to deliver their Sentiments in Parables, in which they made a great Part of their Wiſdom to conſiſt: And, conſidering the Circumſtances of the Perſon he addreſſed to, who was a petty Prince, fluſh'd with a little good Succeſs, and thereupon impatient to enlarge his Kingdom, no Similitude could be better adapted, than that of a Thiſtle, a low contemptible Shrub, but, upon its having drawn Blood of ſome Traveller, growing proud, and affecting an Equality with the Cedar, (a tall, ſtately Tree, that is the Pride and Ornament of the Wood) till, in the Midſt of all its Arrogance and Preſumption, it is unhappily trodden down by the Beaſts of the Foreſts, 2 Kings xiv. 9. which Joaſh intimates would be Amaziah's Fate, if he continu'd to provoke a Prince of his ſuperior Power and Strength. Le Clerc's, Calmet's, and Patrick's Commentaries.

* Joſephus relates the Defeat and Captivity of Amaziah after this Manner:—— "No ſooner were his Men "advanc'd within Sight of the Enemy, but they were inſtantly ſtruck with ſuch a panick Terror and Conſternation, "that they turn'd their Backs, without ſtriking a Blow; and, flying ſeveral Ways, left Amaziah Priſoner in the "Hand of his Enemies, who refus'd to give him Quarter upon any other Terms, than that the Citizens of Jeruſalem "ſhould ſet open their Gates, and receive him and his victorious Army into the Town; which, between the Pinch "of Neceſſity, and the Love of Life, they were prevailed upon to do: So that Joaſh enter'd the Town in his triumphal Chariot, through a Breach of three hundred Cubits of the Wall (that he had caus'd to be made) with his "Priſoner Amaziah marching before him." Jewiſh Antiq. lib. ix. c. 10.

† Theſe Hoſtages were, in all Probability, the great Mens Sons of the City, whom Joaſh took along with him, as a Security that the Kingdom of Judah ſhould give him no farther Moleſtation.

† He never intended to make a thorough Conqueſt of the Kingdom of Judah, nor did he leave a Garriſon in Jeruſalem; but, contenting himſelf with what Spoil he could get, he made all convenient Haſte Home, becauſe he had Work enough, at this Time, upon his Hands, to defend his Territories againſt the daily Invaſions of the Syrians. Patrick's Commentary.

AFTER this ſhameful Defeat, Amaziah liv'd about fifteen Years, but we read of nothing remarkable concerning him, ſave that, perſiſting ſtill in his Idolatry, he continu'd under God's Diſpleaſure, and at length fell under the Contempt of his Subjects; inſomuch, that ſome of [†] the Inhabitants of Jeruſalem form'd a Conſpiracy againſt his Life, which he, having ſome Intelligence of, endeavour'd to eſcape by flying to Lachiſh, (a Town on the Frontiers of the Philiſtines) but all in vain: For the Conſpirators ſent after him, and had him there privately murther'd; which when his Friends underſtood, they brought his Corps (without any State or Formality) to Jeruſalem, where he was bury'd among his Anceſtors, and, after a Reign of nine and twenty Years, was ſucceeded by his Son Azariah, who, in the Book of Chronicles, is called Uzziah. But to turn our Thoughts now to the Kingdom of Iſrael.

Eliſha's Death, his Advice to Jehoaſh King of Iſrael, and reviving the dead Man, who touch'd his Bones.

IN the Beginning of the Reign of Jehoaſh, King of Iſrael, (which was in the [†] thirty-ſeventh Year of Joaſh, King of Judah) the Prophet Eliſha fell ſick of a Diſeaſe, whereof he died. The King of Iſrael upon this Occaſion came to viſit him; and, having much [†] lamented the Loſs, which all Iſrael would have by his Death, he receiv'd his Bleſſing, and dying Counſel to wage War againſt the Syrians with all Courage and Bravery; giving him Aſſurance, and, [*] by the Emblem of a Bow and Arrows, making him ſenſible of the ſeveral Victories, which God had decreed that he ſhould obtain.

THIS was the laſt Prediction of Eliſha, that we read of (for ſoon after this he died;) but it was not the laſt Miracle, that, we find, he did: For, ſome Time after his Interment, a Company of Iſraelites, as they were going to bury a dead Perſon, perceiving a Band of Moabites [†] making [†] What provok'd the People of Jeruſalem, more than any other Part of the Nation, againſt their King, was their ſeeing their City ſpoiled of its beſt Ornaments, expos'd to Reproach, upon Account of the great Breach, that was made in their Wall, and ſeveral of their Children carry'd away as Hoſtages, for their good Behaviour; all which they imputed to their King's Male-Adminiſtration. Whereupon they enter'd into a Conſpiracy againſt him, which makes ſome Commentators ſay, that he liv'd in a State of Exile at Lachiſh, the Space of twelve Years, not daring to continue long in Jeruſalem after the Defeat, which Joaſh had given him. But our learned Uſher has plac'd this Conſpiracy in the laſt Year of Amaziah's Reign, as Jacobus Capellus (in his Hiſtoria Sacra & Exotica) ſuppoſes, that it was ſet on Foot by the great Men of Jeruſalem, upon the ſpecious Pretence of being Guardians to the young Prince, and taking better Care of him, than his Father was likely to do. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

[†] The Synarchies, or joint Reigns of Father and Son, in theſe Times, have render'd the Chronology a little difficult, as it is in this Caſe: For in 2 Kings xiii. 1. It is ſaid, that Jehoahaz, King of Iſrael, began to reign in the twenty-third Year of Joaſh King of Judah, and reign'd ſeventeen Years: From whence it follows, that Jehoaſh began to reign, not in the thirty-ſeventh, but in the thirty-ninth, or fortieth Year of Joaſh King of Judah: But by this it only appears, that he reign'd three of theſe Years in Conjunction with his Father. Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes, and Patrick's Commentary.

[†] His Words are——— My Father! my Father! the Chariots of Iſrael, and the Horſemen thereof, 2 Kings xiii. 14. which are the very ſame, that Eliſha us'd concerning his Maſter Elijah, when he was taken up into Heaven, 2 Kings ii. 12. ſignifying the great Authority he had maintain'd among them, included in the Word Father, and the many glorious Victories, which he had obtain'd for them, by the Efficacy of his Counſels and Prayers. Patrick's Commentary.

[*] This was a ſymbolical Action, whereby the Prophet intended to repreſent the Victory, which he had promis'd the King of Iſrael againſt the Syrians, more fully and plainly to him. His ſhooting the firſt Arrow Eaſtward, or to that Part of the Country, which the Syrians had taken from his Anceſtors, was a Declaration of War againſt them for ſo doing; and his ſtriking the other Arrows againſt the Ground was an Indication how many Victories he was to obtain; but his ſtopping his Hand too ſoon denoted the Imperfection of his Conqueſts, which did not pleaſe the Prophet ſo well, and for what Reaſon, we ſhall ſee in the Courſe of the Objections. Le Clerc's Commentary.

[†] Theſe Moabites were not ſuch a Gang of Robbers, as ſometimes infeſt our Roads, but a regular Body of Men, well appointed, and under proper Officers, to the Number of a ſmall Army, who made Incurſions into the Territories of Judah and Iſrael, generally at the Beginning of the Year, which is the Seaſon proper for Armies to take the Field; and therefore ſome have obſerv'd, that the Month Niſan, which, with the Jews, is the firſt in their Year, had its Name from Niſim, which ſignifies the Engines of War, which were uſually ſet up in that Month; in like Manner, as the Month which we call March (and, in Part, anſwers to the Jewiſh Niſan) had its Name among the Romans from Mars, their God of War; becauſe moſt Nations, at that Time, began their military Expeditions. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

Jehoaſh*'s Victories over* Benhadad King of Syria, and his Death.

making towards them, * put the Corps for Haſte into Eliſha's Tomb, which, as ſoon as it had touch'd his Body, † immediately reviv'd, ſo that the Man ſtood upon his Feet, and went Home (no doubt) with the Company. This Miracle, which was a Divine Confirmation of the Truth of all Eliſha's Prophecies, could not fail of being a powerful Means to encourage Jehoaſh in his engaging in War with the Syrians. Nor was his Succeſs leſs, than the Prediction; for, † in three pitch'd Battles, he vanquiſh'd Benhadad, (his Father Hazael being then dead) recover'd all the Cities that had been taken from his Father Jehoahaz, and re-united them to the Kingdom of Iſrael. After this he liv'd quiet from all Enemies, until Joaſh, King of Judah, gave him the ſmall Diſturbance we have ſpoken of: But, after the Victory which he gain'd over him, we hear no more of his appearing in the Field, and may therefore conclude, that (after a Reign of ſixteen Years) he died in Peace, and was ſucceeded in his Throne by his Son Jeroboam.

Jeroboam the IId greatly enlarges the Kingdom of Iſrael, and, after him, there enſue an Interregnum.

In the fifteenth Year of Amaziah, King of Judah, this Jeroboam, the ſecond of that Name, began to reign over Iſrael, and, by † the Encouragement, which the Prophet Jonah gave him, prov'd ſucceſsful in many military Atchievements. He recover'd a large Territory, which ſeveral Kings had taken from his Predeceſſors, even all the Country from Libanus, on the North, to the Lake Aſphaltites, on the South; but eſpecially on the Eaſt of Jordan, whereby he enlarg'd thoſe Conqueſts, which his Father Joaſh had made: And, whereas Bamath and Damaſcus had, in the

* The common Places of burying among the Hebrews, were in the Fields, in Caverns dug into a Rock, with Niches for the Corps to be plac'd in, and, at the Entrance of the Sepulchre, there was an hewn Stone, which might be remov'd or replac'd without any Damage to the Tomb. The Jews (as Joſephus informs us) gave Eliſha a pompous and honourable Interment, anſwerable to the Dignity and Merit of ſo great a Prophet; but he does not tell us where the Place of his Sepulture was. Hereupon ſome have imagin'd, that he was carry'd to Abel-mebolah, the Place of his Nativity, to be there interr'd among his Anceſtors: Others think, that he was at firſt bury'd on Mount Carmel, a favourite Place of his, and afterwards remov'd to Samaria: Others again ſay, that he was bury'd at Nineveh; and, to this very Day, the Inhabitants ſhew his Monument at Moſul, which was built, as they ſay, upon the very ſame Spot where old Nineveh ſtood. But the moſt prevailing Opinion, founded upon a conſtant Tradition, is, that he was bury'd ſomewhere in the Neighbourhood of Samaria, becauſe there, in all Appearance, he dy'd. The Tomb however, that is uſually ſhewn for his in that City, can be nothing more than the Repoſitory of his Remains, ſince his original Burying-place was certainly at ſome Diſtance from it. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. ix. c. 9.

† Joſephus, in his Account of this Tranſaction, varies a little from the ſacred Hiſtory: For, " it happen'd, after " Eliſha's Burial, ſays he, that a Traveller was killed upon the Way by ſome Thieves, and his Body thrown into " Eliſha's Monument, which, upon the bare Touch of the Prophet's Corps, inſtantly reviv'd." The Jewiſh Doctors, who love to improve upon every Miracle, tell us, that this Perſon, (whom they pretend to call Sellum) after he was reviv'd, did preſently die again, becauſe he was a wicked Man, and did not deſerve to live long; never conſidering, that his haſty Death afterwards was the ready Way to impair the Credit of the Miracle, and make it indeed of no Effect. However this may be, 'tis certain, that by this Miracle, (as we find it related in Scripture) God did the higheſt Honour to his Prophet, and confirm'd the Truth of what he had promis'd to the King of Iſrael, as well as the Certainty of a future Life; in which Senſe ſome Part of the Character, which the Author of Eccleſiaſticus, Chap. xlviii. 12, &c. gives him, may not improperly be underſtood: Eliſha was filled with Elijah's Spirit; whilſt he was not moved with the Preſence of any Prince, neither could any bring him into Subjection: No Word could overcome him; and, after his Death, his Body propheſied: He did Wonders in his Life, and at his Death were his Works marvellous. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. ix. c. 9. and Calmet's Commentary.

† We have no Particulars of the War between Jehoaſh, and the Syrians, nor can we tell where theſe three Battles were fought; but the Succeſs of them was ſo great, that the King of Iſrael not only retook all the Places, that had been loſt in his own Dominions, but repuls'd the Enemy into their own Country, and there obtain'd a ſignal Victory over them. Patrick's Commentary.

† The only Mention we have of this Prophet (whom the Jews will have to be the Son of the Widow of Zarephthah whom Elijah rais'd from the Dead, but without any Foundation of Reaſon) is in this Paſſage, and the Account of his famous Miſſion to Nineveh. What the Prophecies were, whereby he encourag'd Jeroboam to proclaim War againſt the King of Syria, we have no where recorded; but, as we have not every Thing, which the Prophets did write, ſo ſeveral Prophets, we muſt know, did not commit their Predictions to Writing. From this Place, however, we may obſerve, that God was very merciful to the Iſraelites (though they were certainly a very wicked People) in continuing a Race of Prophets among them, even after Eliſha was dead. Patrick's Commentary.

During the Time of this Interregnum, Jonah * the Son of Amittai, who had propheſy'd before, in the Time of Jeroboam, was now ſent upon another Errand. His Commiſſion was expreſsly to Nineveh, whither he was to go, and to exhort the Inhabitants to Repentance, becauſe the Cry of their Sins had reached Heaven. But, inſtead of obeying the Divine Command, the ſacred Hiſtory informs us, that he bent his Courſe another Way, and, intending to retire to Tarſus, a City in Cilicia, embark'd at Joppa *, a Sea-Port on the Mediterranean; that, as ſoon as he had well got to Sea, an unaccountable Storm aroſe, which gave the Mariners

† Some are of Opinion, that, when Jeroboam re-conquer'd theſe two chief Cities of Syria, he reſtor'd them to the Kingdom of Judah, becauſe they belong'd to it of Right, and reſerv'd to himſelf only a ſmall Tribute to be paid him by Way of Acknowledgment. This is what the original Hebrew, as well as the Chaldee and Septuagint Verſions ſeem to favour: But the Syriack and Arabick Tranſlators have omitted the Word Judah, and may therefore be ſuppos'd to think, (as ſeveral others do) that Jeroboam kept to himſelf all thoſe Places, which he had recover'd at his own Hazard and Expence. Calmet's Commentary.

† This was much longer than any of the Kings of Iſrael had reign'd: For even Jehu himſelf, tho' his Reign was longer, than that of any who went before him, reign'd but twenty-eight Years; God having on Purpoſe prolong'd this Prince's Reign, becauſe he was not minded to blot out the Name of Iſrael from under Heaven, but to ſave them by his Hand, 2 Kings xiv. 27.

† The Prophet Amos, who liv'd in the Reign of this Prince, was accus'd by Amaziah, the Prieſt of Bethel, for propheſying, that Jeroboam ſhould die by the Sword; but Amos never made any ſuch Prediction. It was a falſe Accuſation, which this idolatrous Prieſt ſent againſt him, becauſe he was deſirous to have him remov'd out of the Way, Amos vii. 10, &c.

* It is a very common Opinion among the Jews, (as we ſaid) that Jonah was the Widow of Zarephthah's Son; and this Opinion they found upon the Words of the Mother, when ſhe receiv'd her Son alive from the Prophet's Hand: By this I know, that the Word of the Lord in thy Mouth is Truth, 1 Kings xvii. 24. for therefore, ſay they, was the Child called the Son of Amittai, becauſe Amittai ſignifies Truth: A weak Reaſon God wot! and ſuch as is plainly repugnant to the Teſtimony of Scripture. For this we know for certain, that Jonah liv'd in the Reigns of Joaſh and Jeroboam the IId, Kings of Iſrael, and therefore could not be the Widow of Zarephthah's Son, ſince the former of theſe two Princes did not begin to reign till ſixty Years after the Tranſlation of Elijah. Others pretend, that he was Son to the Shunamite Woman, whom the Prophet Eliſha rais'd from the Dead; but Shunan and Gath-hepher (where we are certain Jonah was born) were two quite different Places, the former in the Tribe of Iſſachar, the other in that of Zebulun; and therefore, we may conclude, that Amittai was the proper Name of Jonah's Father, who liv'd in a little Canton of the Tribe of Zebulun, called Hepher, or Hopher, wherein was the Town of Gath, which is generally believed to be the ſame with Jotapata, ſo famous for the Siege, which Joſephus, the Jewiſh Hiſtorian, there maintain'd againſt the Roman Army, a little before the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem. Calmet's Preface ſur Jonas, and his Dictionary, under the Word.

* Joppa is a Sea-Port Town in Paleſtine, upon the Mediterranean, and was formerly the only Port, which the Jews had upon that Coaſt, whither all the Materials, that were ſent from Tyre, towards the Building of Solomon's Temple, were brought, and landed. The Town itſelf is very antient, for profane Authors reckon it was built before the Flood, and derive the Name of it from Joppa, the Daughter of Elolus, and the Wife of Cepheus, who was the Founder of it. Others are rather inclin'd to believe, that it was built by Japhet, and from him had the Name of Japho, which was afterwards moulded into Joppa, but is now generally called Jaffa, which comes nearer to the firſt Appellation. The Town is ſituated in a fine Plain, between Jamnia, to the South; Cæſarea of Paleſtine, to the North; and Rama, or Ramula, to the Eaſt; but, at preſent, is in a poor and mean Condition; nor is its Port, by any Means, good, by Reaſon of the Rocks, which project into the Sea. The chief Thing, for which this Place was famous, in antient Pagan Hiſtory, is, the Expoſition of Andromeda, the Daughter of Cepheus, King of Egypt, who, for her Mother's Pride, was bound to a Rock, in order to be devour'd by a Sea-Monſter, but was deliver'd by the Valour and Bravery of Perſeus, who afterwards marry'd her: For, in the Times of Mela and Pliny, there were ſome Marks remaining (as they themſelves teſtiſy, nempe Mela, lib. i. c. 11. Pliny, lib. v. c. 13. Joſeph. de Bello Jud. lib. iii. c. 15.) of the Chains, wherewith this Royal Virgin was bound to the Rock, which projects into the Sea. But all this is mere Fiction, firſt founded upon the Adventure of Jonah, who ſet ſail from this Port, and then improv'd with the Acceſſion of ſome particular Circumſtances. Calmet's Commentary ſur Jonas, c. 1. v. 3.

[†] The Jewiſh Doctors, who are great Lovers of Prodigies, are not even ſatisfy'd with what they meet with in this Hiſtory of Jonah, but have over and above added, that, as ſoon as the Ship, wherein he was embark'd, was under ſail, it, all on a ſudden, ſtood ſtock ſtill, ſo that it could be made to move neither backward nor forward, notwithſtanding all the Pains, that the Mariners took in rowing: But others, with more Probability, ſay, that while all the reſt of the Ships were quiet and unmoleſted, the Storm fell upon none, but that wherein Jonah was, which made the Seamen think, that there was ſomething miraculous in it, and thereupon called upon the Company, that ſailed with them, to come, and caſt Lots (as the ſuperſtitious Cuſtom among the Heathens was, whenever they were in any great Diſtreſs); that accordingly they caſt Lots three different Times, which ſtill fell upon Jonah; and that they let him down ſeveral Times with a Rope, without plunging him into the Sea, and, as often as they did it, found the Storm abate, and, whenever they pulled him up again, found it increaſe; ſo that, at laſt, they were forced to commit him to the Mercy of the Waves: All which are Circumſtances, which the Scripture-Account neither favours, nor contradicts. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] The People of the Eaſt have a Tradition, that it was not above four Leagues from Joppa, over-againſt Antipatris, that the Seamen threw Jonah over-board.

[*] The Hiſtory tells us, that, by a Decree from the King, and his Nobles, neither Man nor Beaſt, neither Herd nor Flock were allowed to taſte any Thing, but were kept up from feeding and drinking Water, Jonah iii 7. This was carrying their Abſtinence to a greater Severity, than what we find practis'd among the Jews. For, tho' in Times of publick Calamity, and on the Day of ſolemn Expiation, we find that they made their Children faſt, as we may gather from Joel ii. 16. yet we no where read of their extending that Rigour to their Cattle. Virgil indeed, in one of his Eclogues, brings in a Shepherd, telling his Companion, that, for the Death of Julius Cæſar, the Mourning was ſo general, that even the Sheep, and other Creatures, were not driven to Water:

> Non ulli paſtos illis egere Diebus
> Frigida, Daphni, Boves ad Flumina; nulla neque Amnem
> Libavit Quadrupes, nec Fluminis attigit undam. Ecl. v.

But then the Queſtion is, whether this may not be look'd upon as a poetical Exaggeration. From Homer and ſome other antient Authors we learn, that when any Hero, or great Warrior died, the Cuſtom was to make his Horſes faſt for ſome Time, and to cut off Part of their Hair; nor may we forget mentioning, what ſome Hiſtorians tell us, of the People inhabiting the Canaries, and Peru, viz. that, in Times of great Drought, they ſhut up their Sheep and Goats, without giving them any Thing to eat, upon Preſumption, that their loud Cries and Bleating will reach Heaven, and prevail with God to give them Rain. Horn. de Orig. Gent. Americ. lib. ii. c. 13.

[†] The Text tells us of the King of Nineveh, that, upon the Preaching of Jonah, he laid his Robe from him, and covered him with Sackcloth, and ſat in Aſhes, Jonah iii. 6. and (what is pretty ſtrange) ſome have thought, that the King, thus penitent upon this Occaſion, was Sardanapalus, a Man famous among Heathen Authors for his Luxury and Riches, and in whoſe Reign, the famous City of Nineveh was taken by Arbaces and Beleſis. But others, with more Probability, ſuppoſe, that it was Pul, the Father of this Sardanapalus, whom ſome Heathen Authors call Anabaxarus, and others Anacyndaraxus. For, as he died (according to Uſher) about the Year of the World 3237, he might be upon the Throne in the Reign of Jeroboam the IId, King of Iſrael, which was the Time when Jonah was ſent to Nineveh. Calmet's Commentary, and Uſher ad A. † The Word Kikajon, by the Septuagint, Arabick, and Syriack Verſions, is called a Gourd, but moſt of the antient Greek Tranſlators, following St Jerom in this Particular, chuſe rather to render it Ivy. St Jerom, however, acknowledges, that the Word Ivy does not anſwer the Signification of the Hebrew Kikajon, tho' he thinks it much better in this Place than a Gourd, which, growing cloſe to the Earth, could not have ſhaded Jonah from the Heat of the Sun: For the Kikajon, according to him, is a Shrub, which grows in the ſandy Places of Paleſtine, and increaſes ſo ſuddenly, that, in a few Days, it comes to a conſiderable Height. It is ſupported by its Trunk, without being upheld by any Thing elſe; and by the Thickneſs of its Leaves, which reſemble thoſe of a Vine, affords, in hot Weather, a very agreeable Shade. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Kikajon.

† The Book of Jonah ends as abruptly, as it begins: It begins with a Conjunctive Copulative, And the Word of the Lord came upon Jonah, (ſo it ſhould be read) which has made ſome Commentators think, that it was but an Appendix to ſome of his other Writings; and it ends without giving us any Manner of Account, either what became of the Ninevites, or of Jonah himſelf, after this Expedition. 'Tis likely indeed, from the compaſſionate Expreſſions, which God makes uſe of towards the Ninevites, that, for that Time, he revers'd their Doom; and 'tis not improbable, that Jonah, when he had executed his Commiſſion, and been ſatisfy'd by God concerning his merciful Procedure, return'd into Judea; but the Author of the Lives and Deaths of the Prophets (who goes under the Name of Epiphanius) tells us, that, returning from Nineveh, and being aſham'd to ſee that his Prediction was not fulfilled, he retir'd with his Mother to the City of Tyre, where he liv'd in the Plain of Sear, until he died, and was bury'd in the Cave of Cenezeus, Judge of Iſrael: But who the Author means by Cenezeus, unleſs it be Caleb, who is frequently ſirnam'd the Kenezite, (though we do not read of his being ever a Judge of Iſrael) or rather Othniel, who was the Son of Kenaz, and one that judg'd Iſrael, we cannot tell. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Jonah, and Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes.

† The Words are much of the ſame Signification; for the former ſignifies the Strength, and the other, the Help of God.

‖ Commentators have been at a good deal of Trouble to reconcile a ſeeming Contradiction in this Computation. For if Amaziah, the Father of Azariah, liv'd but fifteen Years, after the Beginning of Jeroboam's Reign, (as appears from 2 Kings xiv. 17.) then Azariah muſt begin his Reign, not in the twenty-ſeventh, but (if he ſucceeded his Father immediately) in the ſixteenth, or fifteenth rather of Jeroboam: But our learned Dr Lightfoot ſolves this at once, by ſuppoſing, that there was an Interregnum, wherein the Throne was vacant eleven, or rather twelve Years, between the Death of Amaziah, and the Inauguration of his Son Azariah, who, being left an Infant of four Years old, when his Father died, was committed to the Guardianſhip of the Grandees of the Nation, who, during his Minority, took the Adminiſtration of publick Affairs upon themſelves, and, when he was become ſixteen, devolv'd it upon him; ſo that, when he came into the full Poſſeſſion of the Throne, it was in the ſeven and twentieth Year of Jeroboam. Patrick's Commentary.

But the chief Glory of his Kingdom lay in his Army, which conſiſted of above three hundred and ſeventy Thouſand ſelect Men, under the Command of two Thouſand brave experienc'd Officers, all armed with proper Weapons both offenſive and defenſive, and train'd up in the moſt perfect Manner of Martial Diſcipline.

[*] This is the firſt Time that we read of any Machine, either for beſieging or defending Towns; which is plainly the Reaſon why Sieges were of ſo long a Continuance, before the Invention of theſe. Homer, who is the moſt antient Greek Writer we know of, that treats of Sieges, deſcribes a Kind of Intrenchment, (though a poor one) ſome Lines of Circumvallation, and a Ditch with Palliſades; but we hear not one Word of any Machines, ſuch as the Balliſtæ, and the Catapultæ, which were us'd for the hurling Stones, and throwing Darts; and therefore we need leſs wonder, that the famous Siege of Troy continu'd ſo long. Sardanapalus, King of Aſſyria, maintain'd himſelf in Nineveh for ſeven Years, becauſe the Beſiegers (as Diodorus obſerves, lib. ii.) wanted ſuch Engines, as were fit for demoliſhing and taking of Cities, they being not then invented. Salmanezer lay three Years before Samaria, 2 Kings xvii. 5, 6. and, as ſome ſay, Pſammitticus (Vid. Ariſteas, de LXX. Interp.) twenty, before Azoth. Now of Uzziah it is ſaid, That he made in Jeruſalem Engines, invented by cunning Men, to be on the Towers, and upon the Bulwarks, to ſhoot Arrows and great Stones, 2 Chron. xxvi. 15. ſo that it muſt needs be a Miſtake to attribute the Invention of the Balliſta, the Scorpio, or the Onager, whereof Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. xxiii. c. 2, has given us the Deſcriptions, to the Greeks, or Romans, becauſe we find them made uſe of in the Eaſt, before ever the Grecians had brought the military Art to any great Perfection. Uzziah was certainly the firſt Inventer of them; and therefore it is ſaid, that for theſe, and other warlike Preparations, his Name was ſpread abroad. From this Time, they began to be employ'd both in attacking, and defending Towns; and therefore, we find the Prophet Ezekiel deſcribing the future Sieges of Jeruſalem and Tyre, where he makes mention of Battering-Rams, and Engines of War, or (as it ſhould be render'd) Machines of Cords, which, in all Probability, were what later Ages called their Balliſtæ and Catapultæ. Calmet's Diſſert. ſur la Milice des anciens Hebreux.

[†] Some are of Opinion, that the Perſon here mention'd was a Prophet, and the ſame with that Zechariah, whoſe Book of Prophecies is extant in the Bible; but, as he wrote in the Reign of Darius, 'tis plain, that he liv'd almoſt three hundred Years after this. It is not unlikely however, that he was the Son of that Zechariah, the Son of Jehoiada, who, by the Command of King Joaſh, was ſlain in the Temple; that he was called after his Father's Name; was Præceptor to Uzziah; and (tho' not a Prophet) a Man very ſkilful in expounding the ancient Prophecies, and giving Inſtructions out of them, as Grotius underſtands it. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

[*] How hard a Matter is it (ſays Biſhop Patrick hereupon) to bear great Proſperity with Moderation, and humble Thankfulneſs!

[*] What it was, that tempted the King to this extravagant Folly, 'tis hard to imagine, but the moſt likely Conjecture is, that he had a vain Ambition to imitate Heathen Princes, who, in ſeveral Countries, join'd both the regal and ſacerdotal Offices together. But, however it may be in all other Countries, the Prieſthood in Judea was confin'd to the Houſe of Aaron only, and every one, that pretended to uſurp that Office, was, by the Law of the Land, to be put to Death: For thou, and thy Sons with thee (ſays God to Aaron) ſhall keep your Prieſt's Office, for every Thing of the Altar, and within the Veil, and ye ſhall ſerve. I have given your Prieſt's Office unto you, as a Service of Gift, and the Stranger that cometh nigh, ſhall be put to Death, Numb. xviii. 7.

[*] The Puniſhment for ſuch, as would intrude into divine Miniſtrations, was capital, we ſee; and therefore God

Son Jotham (as his Father's Vice-roy) took the publick Adminiſtration upon him, he was forc'd to live in a ſeparate Place by himſelf; and, after a Reign of two and fifty Years, dy'd, and was bury'd, not in the royal Sepulchres, but * in the ſame Field, at ſome Diſtance from them, becauſe he was a Leper, and was ſucceeded by his Son Jotham.

An Account of ſome other Events, and particularly of the Writings of the Prophets, during this Period.

DURING the Reign of this Uzziah, there happen'd ſome Events, mention'd in other Parts of Scripture, which are not to be found in the Books, that are purely hiſtorical. Such are that terrible Earthquake, whereof Amos (c) propheſy'd two Years before it happen'd; that ſore Plague of the Locuſts, whereof Joel (d) gives us ſo full and lively a Deſcription; and that extreme Drought, mixed with fearful Flaſhes of Fire, which fell from Heaven, and (as the Prophet (e) expreſſes it) devoured all the Paſtures of the Wilderneſs, and burnt up all the Trees of the Field.

BUT that which we are chiefly concern'd to take notice of, is the Succeſſion of Prophets in Iſrael and Judah, whom God rais'd up to give them Inſtructions and Exhortations, and to denounce his Threatenings and Judgments againſt them, upon their perſiſting in their Impieties: And theſe he appointed, not only to warn them by Word of Mouth, (as his former Prophets had done) but to commit their Admonitions to Writing, that Poſterity might ſee the Ingratitude of his People, and all other Nations, from their Backſlidings and Puniſhments, might learn not to do ſo wickedly.

THE firſt of theſe Prophets was Hoſea, the Son of Beeri, who, according to the Introduction to his Book, propheſy'd in the Reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, Kings of Judah, and in the Days of Jeroboam the IId, King of Iſrael; and conſequently, continu'd to be a Prophet, at leaſt ſeventy Years, unleſs we may ſuppoſe, (as (f) ſome have done) that this is a ſpurious Title of ſome ancient Tranſcriber's, and that the true Beginning of his Work is at the ſecond Verſe, The Beginning of the Word of the Lord by Hoſea. However this be, we may obſerve, that he ſpeaks poſitively of the Captivity of the ten Tribes, and inveighs ſtrongly againſt their Diſorders; that he foretels, that the Kingdom of Judah ſhould for ſome Time ſubſiſt after them, but that at length they too ſhould be carry'd away captive, beyond the Euphrates; and, through the whole, lays open the Sins, and declares the Judgments of God againſt ſmote Uzziah with ſuch a Diſeaſe, as was a Kind of Death; becauſe it ſeparated the Perſon, that was afflicted with it, from the Commerce and Society of Men, even as if he were departed this World, and (as the Pſalmiſt expreſſes it) become free among the Dead, Pſal. lxxxviii. 5. But, beſides the Infliction of this Diſeaſe, Joſephus tells us, "That, "the very Moment, that Uzziah was going to burn Incenſe, there happen'd a terrible Earthquake, and, as the "Roof of the Temple open'd with the Shock of it, there paſs'd a Beam of the Sun through the Cleft, which ſtruck "directly upon the Face of this ſacrilegious Prince, whereupon he inſtantly became a Leper; Nay, that this Earth-"quake was ſo very violent, that it tore aſunder a great Mountain, towards the Weſt of Jeruſalem, and rolled one "Half of it over and over a matter of four Furlongs, till at length it was ſtopp'd by another Mountain, which ſtood "over-againſt it, but choak'd up the Highway, and cover'd the King's Gardens all over with Duſt." But all this may be juſtly ſuſpected. That there was a great Earthquake in the Reign of Uzziah, is evident from the Teſtimony of two Prophets, Amos i. 1. and Zechariah xiv. 8. But, that it happen'd exactly when Uzziah attempted this Invaſion of the Prieſthood, is far from being clear: On the contrary, if we will abide by Biſhop Uſher's Computation, the Jewiſh Hiſtorian muſt be ſadly miſtaken. For, ſince the Prophet Amos tells us, that he began to propheſy two Years before this Earthquake happen'd, in the Reigns of Uzziah, King of Judah, and Jeroboam the IId, King of Iſrael; and ſince we may gather from the ſacred Hiſtory, that Jeroboam died two Years before the Birth of Jotham, the Son of Uzziah; that Jeroboam died in the ſix and twentieth Year of the ſaid Uzziah, and Jotham his Son was born in the three and twentieth Year thereof, and yet was of Age ſufficient to be made Regent of the Kingdom, when his Father was thus ſtruck with a Leproſy, (which muſt have been ſeveral Years after Jeroboam's Death) it muſt needs follow, that this Earthquake could not happen at the Time, which Joſephus aſſigns, but muſt have been much later. Joſephus's Jewiſh Wars, lib. ix. c. 11. and Calmet's Commentary on 2 Chron. xv. 5.

* Joſephus will needs have it, that his Body was buried in his Garden, in a Monument by itſelf, forgetting very probably, what he told us before, that theſe Gardens, at this Time, were cover'd all over with Rubbiſh. Ibid.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

againſt a People, harden'd, and irreclaimable.

The next Prophet is Joel, the Son of Pethuel. He mentions the ſame Judgment, that Amos does; and, under the Idea of an Enemy's Army, repreſents thoſe vaſt Swarms of Locuſts, which, in his Time, fell upon Judea, and occaſion'd great Deſolation. He calls and invites the People to Repentance, and promiſes Mercy and Forgiveneſs to thoſe, that will liſten to the Call. He ſpeaks of the Teacher of Righteouſneſs, whom God was to ſend, and of the Holy Spirit, which he was to pour out upon all Fleſh; and, in the Concluſion, relates what glorious Things God would do for his Church in the Times of the Goſpel.

The next Prophet is Amos; for he liv'd in the Days of Uzziah, King of Judah, and of Jeroboam the IId, King of Iſrael. He begins his Prophecies with Threatenings againſt the neighbouring Nations, that were Enemies to Iſrael; then reproves the People of Iſrael and Judah for their Idolatry, Effeminacy, and other Sins; exhorts them to Repentance, without which their hypocritical Services will do them no Good; foretels their Captivity, and other heavy Judgments of God; and, at laſt, ſpeaks of the Reſtoration of the Church among the Jews, and the happy Acceſſion of the Gentiles.

The next Prophet is Obadiah; for he was contemporary with Hoſea, Joel, and Amos. He denounces God's Judgments againſt the Edomites for the Miſchiefs, they had done to Judah and Jeruſalem, whom he promiſes, that they ſhould be victorious over theſe Edomites, and their other Enemies; and, at laſt, foretels their Reformation and Reſtoration, and that the Kingdom of the Meſſiah ſhould be ſet up by the bringing in of a great Salvation.

The Book of Jonah is an Hiſtory rather than a Prophecy; and, if it was written by himſelf, it is a frank Acknowledgment of his own Faults and Failings, and a plain Evidence, that, in this Work, he deſign'd God's Glory, and not his own. For it contains remarkable Inſtances of human Frailties in the Prophet, of God's Compaſſion and Condeſcenſion to him, and a noble Type of our Saviour's Burial and Reſurrection.

The other Prophet, that liv'd in theſe Times, was Iſaiah, the Son of Amos, whoſe Prophecies may be divided into three Parts. The firſt Part includes ſix Chapters relating to the Reign of Jotham, the ſix following Chapters relate to the Reign of Ahaz, and all the reſt to the Reign of Hezekiah. The great Deſign of what he does, is, to foretel the Captivity of Babylon, the Return of the People from that Captivity, and the flouriſhing Kingdom of the Meſſiah: But [] the whole Book is highly ſerviceable to the Church of God in all Ages for Conviction of Sin, Direction in Duty, and Conſolation in Trouble; and its Author may juſtly be accounted a great Prophet, whether we conſider the Extent and Variety of his Predictions; the Sublimity of the Truths, which he reveals; [] the Majeſty and Elegancy of his Stile; the Loftineſs of his Metaphors, or the Liveline ſs of his Deſcriptions.

[*] St Jerom, in his Introduction to Iſaiah's Prophecy, tells us, that his Writings are, as it were, an Alridgment of the Holy Scriptures, and a Collection of all the moſt uncommon Knowledge, that the Mind of Man is capable of. Quid loquar (as his Words are) de Phyſicâ, Ethicâ, & Theologicâ? Quicquid Sanctarum eſt Scripturarum, quicquid poteſt humana Lingua proferre, & mortalium Senſus accipere, iſto volumine continetur. Hieron. Præſat. in Iſaiah.

[*] Grotius compares this Prophet with the great Grecian Orator, Demoſthenes; for, in him, ſays he, we meet with all the Purity of the Hebrew Tongue, as, in the other, there is all the Delicacy of the Attick Taſte. Both are ſublime and magnificent in their Stile, vehement in their Emotions, copious in their Figures, and very impetuous, when they ſet off Things of an enormous Nature, or ſuch as are grievous or odious: But there is one Thing, wherein the Prophet was ſuperior to the Orator, and that is, in the Honour of his illuſtrious Birth, and Relation to the Royal Family of Judah; and therefore what Quintilian ſays of Corvinus Meſſala, may be juſtly apply'd to him, viz. that he ſpeaks in an eaſy flowing Manner, and in a Stile, which ſhews him to be a Man of Quality. Grotius on 2 Kings xix. 2. and Quintil. lib. x. c. 20.

The OBJECTION.

“BUT how highly ſoever we may think fit to commend the Prophet Iſaiah, others there are, that appear upon the Stage in this Period of Time, whoſe Conduct we have Reaſon to cenſure, as not ſo well comporting with their ſacred Character. Lying and Diſſimulation was certainly a Sin under the Law, as well as under the Goſpel; nor had the greateſt Prophet, by Virtue of his Call, an Exemption from ſpeaking Truth, any more than the meaneſt Man in Iſrael; and yet we find no leſs a Man, than Eliſha, telling the Soldiers (g), who were ſent to apprehend him, a Parcel of Lyes, that they were out of their Way, had miſtaken their Road, and were come to the wrong Place; but that, if they would commit themſelves to his Conduct, he would be ſure to carry them to the Man whom they wanted: Which they, poor Creatures, being now ſmitten with Blindneſs, were glad to accept of, and ſo, by the Wiles and Deceptions of this Man of God, were unhappily drawn into a Snare.

“NAY, ſo great a Propenſity had this Prophet to the common Art of Falſhood and Diſſimulation, that, (h) when the King of Syria ſent to him in a friendly Manner, and, with a large Preſent, even tempted him to tell him the Truth, concerning the Event of his Sickneſs, we find him ſtill prevaricating; returning a fallacious Anſwer to the King, and, at the ſame Time, telling Hazael another Story, which might probably, at this Time, put him in the Thoughts of aſcending the Throne of Syria (to (i) which he had been anointed before by the Prophet Elijah) by the immediate Murther of his Maſter.

“WHETHER it is, that Prophets look'd upon themſelves as ſuperior to Kings, or, in Virtue of their Office, claim'd a Diſpenſation from the common Forms of Civility, but ſo it was, that this ſame Eliſha (k), when Joaſh, King of Iſrael, did him the Honour of a Viſit in his Sickneſs, flew into a Paſſion with him, for no other Reaſon, but the ſenſeleſs Trifle of not ſtriking with an Arrow upon the Ground as oft, as he would have had him: Nor can we account, why the High-Prieſt Jehoiada, who (as to ſecular Matters) was no more than a private Man, ſhould take upon him to place Jehoaſh upon the Throne of Judah, without the general Conſent of all the States of the Kingdom, unleſs we may ſuppoſe,——That he affected the Regency, during the Minority of the Prince, and, upon that Account, was as aſſuming in his Way, as if he had been a Prophet.

“THESE Prieſts, and Prophets then (we may ſay with the Apoſtle) were Men of the like Paſſions, as we are; but then it is to be hop'd, that they dy'd in Charity, unleſs we may except the Prophet Zechariah, who, in ſuffering Martyrdom, called upon God (l) to avenge his Death as did not St Stephen, who, when he was expiring, kneeled down, and pray'd for his Murtherers, (m) Lord, lay not this Sin to their Charge.

“JEHU, in his Time, was certainly the Miniſter of God to execute Wrath upon the Houſe of Ahab; but then we know very well, that the Ends of Divine Providence are not to be ſerv'd by any indirect Means, nor can Lying and Diſſimulation, in any Senſe, be proper Expedients to accompliſh his “Deſigns; and yet we find this ſame Jehu tranſcending his Commiſſion, and (n) falling upon Ahaziah, King of Judah, (where he was ſlain, 'tis not agreed) for no other Reaſon, but, becauſe he happen'd to be in the King of Iſrael's Company. We find him (o) under the Pretence of a greater Zeal for Idol-Worſhip, than ever Ahab had, drawing all the Prieſts and Worſhippers of Baal, like ſo many lame Cattle, into a Penfold, and there ſlaughtering them: Tho' how they came to pay any Regard to his Proclamation, who had made already (p) ſuch Havock among them, or how the Temple of this falſe God ſhould be able to contain all its Worſhippers, whom the Connivance of the Law, and Countenance of the Court, had made ſo numerous, we cannot well imagine. Nay, we find him calling upon Jehonadab, the Son of Rechab, to be a Witneſs (q) of his Zeal for the Lord, and yet this vile Reformer of others continues in the Worſhip of the Golden Calves, which were Objects not much better, than the Images of Baal; and tho' he will not depart from the Sin of Jeroboam, who made Iſrael to ſin, receives this Commendation from God himſelf, (r) Becauſe thou haſt done well, in executing that, which was right in mine Eyes, therefore thy Children of the fourth Generation ſhall ſit on the Throne of Iſrael.

“WICKED Princes are by Principle Enemies to good Men; but why Jehoram, King of Iſrael, ſhould be for taking away the Life of the Prophet Eliſha, who had been ſo very ſerviceable to him in his Wars againſt Syria, and that for no other Reaſon, but becauſe Samaria was beſieg'd, and reduc'd to the laſt Extremity of Famine, (as if it had been in the Prophet's Power either to make the Enemies Army withdraw, or (s) to open Windows in Heaven, and make it rain Corn, as it once did Manna) is beyond our Conception.

“BUT of all the Characters, that appear upon the Stage, in this Period of Time, the moſt unaccountable is, that of Jonah, a ſad, teſty, ſplenetick Creature, who, upon every Turn, is growing angry with God, and, if he has not his Will in every Thing, wiſhing to die; who repines at Providence, becauſe (t) it is ſlow to Anger, and of great Kindneſs, and had rather ſee the whole City of Nineveh laid in Aſhes, than that one Tittle of his Prophecy ſhould be unaccompliſh'd. And therefore, if God foreſaw, that, upon the Ninevites Repentance, his Comminations would be null, a Perſon of another Caſt had been a properer Meſſenger, ſince all he had to carry was but a ſhort Admonition; which before he had gone half through ſo large a City, was in Danger of becoming a Thread-bare Story.”

Anſwer'd, by ſhewing the Reaſon why God employ'd Jonah.

St PAUL, ſpeaking of the Propagation of the Goſpel, and the ſeeming Inſufficiency of the Means, which God had employ'd to effect it, has theſe remarkable Words: —— (u) Ye ſee your Calling, Brethren, how not many wiſe Men after the Fleſh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath choſen the fooliſh Things of the World to confound the wiſe, the weak Things of the World to confound the mighty, the baſe Things of the World, and Things that are deſpiſed, yea, and Things that are not, to bring to nought Things that are, that no Fleſh ſhould glory in his Preſence: and then proceeding to ſpeak of himſelf; (x) And I, Brethren, ſays he, when I came to you, came not with Excellency of Speech, or of Wiſdom, declaring unto you the Teſtimony of God; but was with you in Weakneſs and Fear, and in much Trembling; and my Speech, and my Preaching was not with enticing Words of Man's Wiſdom, but in Demonſtration of the Spirit, and of Power; that your Faith ſhould not ſtand in the the Wiſdom of Men, but in the Power of God.

Now, if God, in the Converſion of the World to Chriſtianity, made uſe of Inſtruments, in themſelves ſo incompetent for the Work, leſt the Work might be imputed to human Powers; by Parity of Reaſon we may preſume, that, in the Converſion of the Ninevites, God might not employ a Prophet of the beſt natural Temper and Qualifications, (ſince Iſaiah was then of Age, and ſeems to have been better fitted for ſuch a Miſſion) that the Glory of the Event might not be aſcrib'd to any innate Abilities of the Prophet, but to the ſole Power of God, which accompany'd him, and (y) made the Fooliſhneſs of his Preaching (as the Apoſtle expreſſes it) effectual to ſave them that believed.

The Purport of his Meſſage.

We muſt not imagine however, that, in his Addreſs to the People of Nineveh, the Prophet had nothing to ſay, but this one Sentence, Yet forty Days, and Nineveh ſhall be overthrown. This indeed was the Sum and Subſtance of his Preaching: But we may well preſume, that he took frequent Occaſions to expatiate upon it; by reminding them of the Number, and Nature, and ſeveral Aggravations of their Offences; by acquainting them with the Holineſs, Juſtice, and Omnipotence of God; that Holineſs, which could not behold Iniquity without Deteſtation; that Juſtice, which, ſooner or later, would not ſuffer it to go unpuniſh'd; and that Almighty Power, which could, in a Moment, lay the ſtatelieſt Cities in Aſhes; by exhorting them to Repentance, from a Dread of his impending Judgments; and by inſtructing them in the Method of pacifying his Wrath, and effecting a Reconciliation with him.

Why it was not immediately executed.

Some of the Antients are of Opinion, that Jonah receiv'd no Orders from God to limit the Deſtruction of Nineveh to forty Days, becauſe there is no ſuch Time fix'd in his Inſtructions; all that God appoints him to do, is, (z) to go unto Nineveh, that great City, (as he calls it) and to preach unto it that Preaching, which he ſhould bid him: And therefore they ſuppoſe, that the Space of forty Days was an Addition of the Prophet's own, and, for that Reaſon, not exactly fulfilled: But there is no Occaſion for charging him with any ſuch Falſification, ſince the Comminations of God are always conditional, and anſwer his gracious Purpoſes much better, when they are averted, than when they are executed.

But in what Senſe, and at what Time, it was.

And indeed, tho', in this Caſe, they were averted for a while, yet, when the People relaps'd into their former Iniquities, the Prophet's Predictions did not fail of its Accompliſhment. For, if we take the forty Days to denote forty Years, a Day for a Year, and the Overthrowing of Nineveh, not to ſignify its final Deſtruction, but only the Subverſion (a) of that antient Empire of the Aſſyrians, which had govern'd Aſia for above thirteen hundred Years, and was deſtroy'd under the effeminate King Sardanapalus; then was the Prophecy literally fulfilled, and from its Fulfilling we may trace the Time of Jonah's Miſſion.

But tho' this Prophecy of Jonah was not fulfilled at the End of forty Days, as he expected, and, at the End of forty Years, there was only a Deſtruction of the Monarchy, and not of the City; yet his miraculous Preſervation in the Whale's Belly gave him ſuch Credit, that it was always believ'd, that the Time of its Accompliſhment was uncertain. To this Purpoſe we find Tobit (b) giving his Son Tobias Inſtructions to depart out of Nineveh, becauſe thoſe Things, which the Prophet Jonah ſpake, ſhould certainly come to paſs: And accordingly, before Tobias died, he heard of the Deſtruction of Nineveh, which was taken by Nebuchodonoſor, and Aſhaſhuerus: (c) For theſe two Princes, being related by Marriage, enter'd into a Confederacy againſt the Aſſyrians, and, joining their Forces together, beſieg'd this City, and, after having taken it, and ſlain Saracus, the King thereof, they utterly deſtroy'd it, and from that Time made Babylon the Place of royal Reſidence, and the ſole Metropolis of the Aſſyrian Monarchy. Thus was the Prediction of Jonah concerning the Deſtruction of Nineveh, (tho' not in the Time, which he had prefix'd) fulfilled; nor can the Delay of it be look'd upon as any Breach of the Divine Veracity, whatever Uneaſineſs it gave the Prophet. The Truth of the Matter is, —— Jonah was a Man of an unhappy Temper, peeviſh, and paſſionate, and, in this Caſe, fearful of being accounted a falſe Prophet, of having his Miniſtry expos'd to Contempt, or his Perſon perhaps to Violence from the Ninevites, becauſe the Event did not anſwer the Prediction. And the proper Leſſon, we are to learn from his Behaviour, is, —— that the Gift of Prophecy does not alter Men's natural Tempers, nor ſet them above the Level of human Frailty. For (d) we have this Treaſure (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) in earthen Veſſels, that the Excellency of the Power may be of God, and not of us.

Eliſha*'s Speech to the* Syrian Forces juſtify'd.

That Stratagems in War, and other Artifices to delude and inſnare an Enemy, are not prohibited by the Law of God, the Generality of Caſuiſts are agreed; and therefore, upon the Suppoſition, that Eliſha's Speech to Benhadad's Men was fram'd on Purpoſe to deceive, he did no more, than make uſe of the common Privilege, which every Nation, engag'd in War with one another, is permitted to employ: But, upon a nearer Examination, we cannot charge his Words with a direct Falſhood, tho' we muſt allow, that there is ſome Ambiguity in them.

When the Prophet perceiv'd, that the Syrian Army had encompaſs'd the Place, where he abode, he went out of the City, and told them, (e) This is not the Way, neither is this the City, viz. where they would find the Man, for whom they were ſent; becauſe, at that Time, he was come out of the City, and therefore, if they proceeded in their March, they would be ſure to miſs of him. But follow me, and I will bring you to the Man, whom ye ſeek; and ſo he did, but not in the Manner, it muſt be own'd, that they either expected, or deſir'd. The whole Conduct of the Prophet therefore, in this Reſpect, was no more, than what the Practice of War always allows, viz. a Feint to cover his real Deſigns, and, by counterfeit Motions, and falſe Alarms, to draw the Enemy into ſuch Intricacies, that he might come upon them, and ſurprize them, when they leaſt of all thought of it.

The Formality of a Lye (as ſome will have it) does not conſiſt ſo much in ſaying what is untrue, as in making a falſe Repreſentation of Things with a Purpoſe to do hurt: But the Prophet's generous Treatment of the Enemy, when he had them at his Mercy, ſhews, that he had no Malignity in his Intention, no Deſign to make an Advantage of their Deception, but, on the contrary, took the moſt effectual Means, both to cure their inveterate Hatred againſt the Iſraelites, and to reconcile them to the Worſhip and Service of the true God, who had wrought ſuch a Miracle for their Conviction, as well as the Preſervation of his Prophet.

The Nature of their Blindneſs, and why they accepted of a Guide.

(f) He ſmote them with Blindneſs, according to the Word of Eliſha: But then we are not to imagine, that this Blindneſs was ſo total, that they quite loſt the Uſe of their Eyes, but only, that it was ſuch a Dimneſs, and Confuſion in their Sight, as hinder'd them from diſtinguiſhing one Object from another, the City of Dothan, for Inſtance, from the City of Samaria: Even, in like Manner as we read of the People of Sodom, that when the Angels (g) ſmote them with Blindneſs, (which they might eaſily do by ſome ſmall Alteration either in their Sight, or in the Air) they wearied themſelves to find out Lot's Door. They ſaw the Houſe, it ſeems, but did not diſcern the Door, becauſe this ſudden

Diſorder in their Imagination, might either make the Door appear to them like the ſolid Wall, or the ſolid Wall like ſo many Doors.

This is no more, than what happens to ſeveral Men in their Liquor; that, tho' their Eyes be open, and can perceive the ſeveral Objects that ſurround them, yet they cannot diſcern wherein they differ. And if we may ſuppoſe that the Syrian Army was under the like ἀορασία, (as the Greeks very happily term it) we need no longer wonder, that they readily accepted of a Guide, who offer'd his Service, and beſpoke them fair, (whom they might indeed take for ſome Deputy of the Town, with Authority to deliver up the Prophet to them) than that a Drunkard, who, after a long while having loſt his Way, and found himſelf bewilder'd, ſhould be thankful to any Hand, that would promiſe to conduct him ſafe home.

What Elijah's Anointing of Hazael means.

(h) That Hazael was never, in a ſtrict Senſe, anointed by Elijah, to be Benhadad's Succeſſor, is evident from what appears of him in ſacred Hiſtory. For, when he came to conſult Eliſha concerning his Maſter's Illneſs, (which was a conſiderable while after the Prophet Elijah's Tranſlation) we find, by the whole Interview, that he was entirely ignorant of his own Deſignation for the Throne of Syria, which he could not have been, had he been anointed before this Time. Either therefore we muſt take the Word in a figurative Senſe, to denote no more, than God's Purpoſe, or Determination that Hazael ſhould ſucceed in the Throne of Syria, to execute the Deſigns of his Providence upon the People of Iſrael, even as Cyrus, for the ſame Reaſon, is called (i) the Lord's Anointed, tho' he was never properly anointed by God; or, if we take it in a literal Senſe, we muſt ſuppoſe ſome Reaſon, why Elijah wav'd the Execution of that Command, even becauſe he foreſaw the many ſore Calamities, which Hazael, when advanc'd to the Crown of Syria, would bring upon Iſrael, and thereupon prevail'd with God, that he might be excus'd from that ungrateful Office, and that, in his Time at leaſt, a Succeſſion, which would be attended with ſuch direful Conſequences, might not commence.

His Meſſage to Benhadad explain'd, and vindicated.

It may poſſibly be thought indeed, that Eliſha's foretelling his Advancement to the Throne might be a Spur and Incitement to his Ambition; but the Means, whereby he accompliſh'd his Deſign, were entirely from his own wicked and corrupt Mind, which would not ſtay for the ordinary Methods of Divine Providence to bring it innocently about, but choſe rather to carve for himſelf, and, by murthering his Maſter, to cut him out a more compendious Way of coming into immediate Poſſeſſion. And this ſolves the ſeeming Difficulty of the Prophet's ſending one Anſwer to Benhadad, and telling Hazael quite another Story: For, when Hazael underſtood that his Maſter's Diſeaſe was mortal, but that, if no Violence interven'd, he might eaſily get over that Indiſpoſition, (for that is the Senſe of (k) he may certainly recover) and, at the ſame Time, was told by the Prophet, that he would not however recover, becauſe he foreſaw that Violence would be us'd to take away his Life, (as this is the Senſe of he ſhall ſurely die) Hazael went his Way, and, not willing to truſt Providence with his Maſter's Recovery, took care, the next Morning, to have him diſpatch'd.

There is however another, and (as ſome think) a much plainer Interpretation of the Prophet's Words: For, ſince this is a Paſſage, which admits of a various Lection, the Adverb lo (as it is in the Textual Reading) ſignifies not, but in our Tranſlation (which in this Place follows the Marginal) it is render'd to him: So that, if the Hebrew Text be right, (as ſome learned Men, upon Examination, have given it the Preference) the plain Reading of the Words will be, Go ſay, thou thou ſhalt ſurely not live; for the Lord hath ſhewed me, that thou ſhalt ſurely die. This was the Senſe of the Prophet's Anſwer to Benhadad; but Hazael, who was a wicked Man, went, and told him a quite contrary Thing, on Purpoſe to lull him into a State of Security, that thereby he might have a fairer Opportunity of accompliſhing his Deſign upon him.

THUS, whether the Marginal or Textual Reading be right, and conſequently, whether the Prophet's Meſſage to Benhadad be taken in an affirmative, or negative Senſe, he cannot juſtly be charg'd with Baſeneſs and Ingratitude, ſince, whether he accepted of his Preſent, or no, 'tis manifeſt, that he could not return him any falſe and deluſive Anſwer: And yet the more probable Opinion is, that, in Conformity to his Practice, in the Caſe of Naaman the Leper, he did, upon this Occaſion, reject the good Things of Damaſcus, which Benhadad ſent, becauſe the ſame Reaſons, which induc'd him to refuſe them from the Hand of Naaman, were ſtill in Force, and might equally prevail with him not to accept them from the Hand of Hazael.

His Behaviour to Joaſh not amiſs.

THUS, with Regard to Benhadad, King of Syria, the Prophet ſtands clear of any Imputation of Falſhood, or Ingratitude; and, in like Manner, if we conſider the Matter, as it ſtood between him and Joaſh King of Iſrael, we ſhall find no unbecoming Paſſion, or Peeviſhneſs in his Conduct, but a great deal of Zeal, and Concern for the Honour both of his King and Country. For, whether King Joaſh, before this Interview with Eliſha, was acquainted, or not, with the Nature of Parabolical Actions, whereby Prophets more eſpecially were accuſtom'd to repreſent future Events; by the Comment, which Eliſha made upon the firſt Arrow that he ſhot, (which he calls (l) the Arrow of Deliverance from Syria) he could not but perceive, that this was a ſymbolical Action, and intended to prefigure his Victories over that Nation; and therefore, as the firſt Action of ſhooting was a Kind of Prelude to the War, he could not but underſtand farther, (even tho' the Prophet had ſaid nothing to him) that this ſecond Action of ſtriking the Ground with the Arrow, was to portend the Number of the Victories, he was to obtain. (m) But then, if we may ſuppoſe with the Generality of Interpreters, that the Prophet had appriz'd him before-hand, that ſuch was the ſymbolical Intent of what he now put him upon; that, the oftener he ſmote upon the Ground, the more would their Victories be, which his Arms ſhould obtain; that this was the Decree of Heaven, and that thus, in ſome Meaſure, his Succeſs in War was put in his own Power; the King's Conduct was utterly inexcuſable, if diffident of the Prophet's Promiſe, and, conſidering the vaſt Strength of the Kings of Syria, more than the Power of God that was engag'd on his Side, he ſtopp'd his Hand, after he had ſmote thrice; ſuppoſing indeed, that the Prediction would never have been fulfilled, had he gone on, and ſmote upon the Earth oftener. Upon the whole therefore, the Prophet had juſt Reaſon to be offended at the King, for not believing God, who had done ſo many ſignal Miracles in Favour of the Iſraelites; for not believing him, who (according to his own Acknowledgment) had been a conſtant Defender of the State, (n) the Chariot of Iſrael, and the Horſemen thereof, and now, in his dying Hours, was full of good Wiſhes and Intentions for his Country; and, by this Unbelief of his, for eclipſing the Glory of his own Arms, and curtailing the Number of his Victories: For (o) thou ſhouldeſt have ſmitten five or ſix Times, (ſays the Prophet to the King) then ſhouldſt thou have ſmitten Syria, till thou hadſt conſumed it, whereas now thou ſhalt ſmite Syria but thrice.

Diſorder in their Imagination, might either make the Door appear to them like the ſolid Wall, or the ſolid Wall like ſo many Doors.

THIS is no more, than what happens to ſeveral Men in their Liquor; that, tho' their Eyes be open, and can perceive the ſeveral Objects that ſurround them, yet they cannot diſcern wherein they differ. And if we may ſuppoſe that the Syrian Army was under the like ἀορασία, (as the Greeks very happily term it) we need no longer wonder, that they readily accepted of a Guide, who offer'd his Service, and beſpoke them fair, (whom they might indeed take for ſome Deputy of the Town, with Authority to deliver up the Prophet to them) than that a Drunkard, who, after a long while having loſt his Way, and found himſelf bewilder'd, ſhould be thankful to any Hand, that would promiſe to conduct him ſafe home.

What Elijah's Anointing of Hazael means.

(h) THAT Hazael was never, in a ſtrict Senſe, anointed by Elijah, to be Benhadad's Succeſſor, is evident from what appears of him in ſacred Hiſtory. For, when he came to conſult Eliſha concerning his Maſter's Illneſs, (which was a conſiderable while after the Prophet Elijah's Tranſlation) we find, by the whole Interview, that he was entirely ignorant of his own Deſignation for the Throne of Syria, which he could not have been, had he been anointed before this Time. Either therefore we muſt take the Word in a figurative Senſe, to denote no more, than God's Purpoſe, or Determination that Hazael ſhould ſucceed in the Throne of Syria, to execute the Deſigns of his Providence upon the People of Iſrael, even as Cyrus, for the ſame Reaſon, is called (i) the Lord's Anointed, tho' he was never properly anointed by God; or, if we take it in a literal Senſe, we muſt ſuppoſe ſome Reaſon, why Elijah wav'd the Execution of that Command, even becauſe he foreſaw the many ſore Calamities, which Hazael, when advanc'd to the Crown of Syria, would bring upon Iſrael, and thereupon prevail'd with God, that he might be excus'd from that ungrateful Office, and that, in his Time at leaſt, a Succeſſion, which would be attended with ſuch direful Conſequences, might not commence.

His Meſſage to Benhadad explain'd, and vindicated.

IT may poſſibly be thought indeed, that Eliſha's foretelling his Advancement to the Throne might be a Spur and Incitement to his Ambition; but the Means, whereby he accompliſh'd his Deſign, were entirely from his own wicked and corrupt Mind, which would not ſtay for the ordinary Methods of Divine Providence to bring it innocently about, but choſe rather to carve for himſelf, and, by murthering his Maſter, to cut him out a more compendious Way of coming into immediate Poſſeſſion. THERE is however another, and (as ſome think) a much plainer Interpretation of the Prophet's Words: For, ſince this is a Paſſage, which admits of a various Lection, the Adverb lo (as it is in the Textual Reading) ſignifies not, but in our Tranſlation (which in this Place follows the Marginal) it is render'd to him: So that, if the Hebrew Text be right, (as ſome learned Men, upon Examination, have given it the Preference) the plain Reading of the Words will be, Go ſay,

His Behaviour to Joaſh not amiſs.

THUS, with Regard to Benhadad, King of Syria, the Prophet ſtands clear of any Imputation of Falſhood, or Ingratitude; and, in like Manner, if we conſider the Matter, as it ſtood between him and Joaſh King of Iſrael, we ſhall find no unbecoming Paſſion, or Peeviſhneſs in his Conduct, but a great deal of Zeal, and Concern for the Honour both of his King and Country. their bloody Perſecutions of the Righteous) and ſome of them ye ſhall kill, and crucify, and ſome of them ye ſhall ſcourge in your Synagogues, and perſecute them from City to City; that upon you may come all the righteous Blood, ſhed upon the Earth, from the Blood of righteous Abel, unto the Blood of Zechariah, the Son of Barachiah, whom ye ſlew between the Temple and the Altar: And hereupon ſome Names of great Authority have inferr'd, that the Zechariah, Son of the High-Prieſt, whom Joaſh, King of Judah, commanded to be ſlain, was the ſame with the Perſon, whom our Saviour here mentions; for, tho' he calls his Father by a different Name, Barachiah, and not Jehoiada, yet this he might do, ſay they, to denote the Divine Graces, which were ſo conſpicuous in him; for ſo the Word Barachiah means.

It muſt be obſerv'd however, that as there is a Difference in theſe two Perſons, not only in Regard to their Father's Names, but to the Place likewiſe, where they ſuffer'd, the one (q) between the Temple and the Altar, i. e. in the Court of the Prieſts, and the other (r) in the Court of the Houſe of the Lord, i. e. in the Court of the Iſraelites, where he was mounted on high, and inveighing againſt their Idolatry, there are ſome Grounds to believe, that the Zecharias in the Goſpel is not the ſame with him, whoſe Death we find recorded in the Chronicles of the Kings of Judah.

Our bleſſed Saviour, it muſt be own'd, not only foretold the utter Exciſion of the Jews, but deſcrib'd likewiſe ſeveral preceding Calamities, almoſt in the very Manner, wherein their own Hiſtorian has related them. Now, in the Times of the Jewiſh War, Joſephus (s) makes mention of one Zacharias, and gives us theſe Circumſtances concerning his Murther; —— That he was the Son of one Baruch, a Man of the firſt Rank, and of great Authority, Virtue, and Wealth, a Friend to all good Men, and a conſtant Enemy to the Wicked; that his Son Zacharias was, by the Zealots of that Time, look'd upon as a Man ſo very popular, that they could not think themſelves ſafe, without taking away his Life; that to this Purpoſe they brought him before a ſham Court of their own erecting, where they accus'd him of a Conſpiracy to betray Jeruſalem to the Romans, and of holding a criminal Correſpondence with Veſpaſian; that, upon his Trial, his Innocence appear'd ſo clear, and the Accuſations againſt him ſo falſe and malicious, that their own Court, contrary to their Expectation, acquitted him; but that, after he was acquitted, two Ruffians of their Company fell upon him, and, having murther'd him in the Middle of the Temple, threw his dead Body down the Precipice, whereon it ſtood.

This is the Perſon (as others imagine) that our Saviour intends; for as he begins with Abel, the firſt Inſtance of a Perſon ſuffering by Violence, 'tis but reaſonable, they think, that he ſhould conclude with one of the lateſt among the Jews while their Government ſubſiſted; and therefore they look upon our Lord's Words, not as a Recital of what had been done, but a Prediction of what would be done; and a glorious Evidence it is of his Divine Omniſcience, which could foretel the Names both of Father and Son, above forty Years before the Event happen'd.

His Father's Conduct, in Regard to Joaſh, vindicated.

However this be, we muſt not accuſe the Father of that Zacharias, who dy'd a Martyr in the Reign of Joaſh, King of Judah, of ſhewing a buſy and pragmatical Spirit, in placing this Joaſh, when a Child, upon the Throne of his Anceſtors. Jehoiada, as he was High-Prieſt, had a large Authority even in civil Affairs; (t) the Dignity of his Station ſet him at the Head of a very powerful Body of Men, the Prieſts and Levites; and his Quality, as firſt Judge and Preſident of the great Council of the Nation, gave him a Right a Right to defend oppreſs'd Innocence, and to oppoſe the unjuſt Uſurpation of Athaliah, who had no Pretence of Claim to the Crown, and was deſcended likewiſe from a wicked Family, which God had particularly devoted to Deſtruction.

(u) The Conſtitution of the Nation moreover was ſuch, that the Crown, by Divine Appointment, was appropriated to the Sons of David; and therefore the hereditary Right was inherent in him, whom he had ſet up, whoſe Aunt he had marry'd, whoſe Kinſman he was by Birth, as well as Marriage, and, who upon theſe Accounts, as well as all neceſſary Qualifications for ſo high a Truſt, was the propereſt Guardian of the Succeſſion. For he had a large Share of Wiſdom and Experience, an ardent Love for the publick Good, Courage and Activity in his Complexion, and a ſolid Piety towards God ruling in his Heart; and yet he did not act alone in this important Affair, but had the Conſent and Concurrence of the chief Officers, both Civil and Eccleſiaſtick, the ſpecial Motion and Aſſiſtance of God's bleſſed Spirit, and (as we may ſuppoſe) the Direction and Encouragement of the principal Prophets, that were then alive.

And his own laſt Words, at his Death.

His Son indeed was but badly requited for all the Care, which his Father had taken in ſetting the Crown upon young Joaſh, when, in his Reign, and by his Orders, he was ſton'd to Death, and, as he was expiring, cry'd out, (x) Lord look upon it, and requite it. But we muſt not by theſe Words imagine, that he dy'd with a Spirit of Revenge, (for far be it from ſo good a Man) but that, by the Spirit of Prophecy, he only foretold, that it would not be long, before God would find out ſome Means of puniſhing the King for his barbarous Uſage of him: Which accordingly came to paſs; for, in the following Verſes we read, that, (y) at the End of the Year, the Hoſt of Syria came up againſt him, and, not long after that, (z) his own Servants conſpired againſt him, and ſlew him on his Bed.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

Why St Stephen's Behaviour was preferable.

The Spirit of the Goſpel, it muſt be own'd, is of a much more gentle and forgiving Temper, than that of the Law, under which we meet with ſeveral ſuch Imprecations (eſpecially in the Pſalmiſt) as cannot, without Violence, admit of any other Conſtruction. Our bleſſed Saviour, in his Reaſoning with the Jews, tells them, (a) that Moſes did indulge them in ſome Caſes, becauſe of the Hardneſs of their Hearts; not that God ever did, or ever will humour any Man, becauſe he is obſtinate and obdurate, but the Senſe of the Words is, (b) that God therefore conniv'd at ſome Things, becauſe the Diſpenſation, under which they liv'd, wanted proper Efficacy to work their Hearts to a greater Softneſs. We are not therefore to wonder, that we find ſome Diſparity in the Behaviour of a Chriſtian and Jewiſh Martyr, but that ſuch prophetical Declarations, concerning the future Puniſhment of Enemies and Perſecutors, were not thought wicked and uncharitable; even under a more perfect Diſpenſation, we have the Example of the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles to evince, who, ſpeaking of Alexander, the Copper-Smith, who had greatly oppos'd him, (c) the Lord reward him, ſays he, according to his Works; where it is to be obſerv'd, that the King's Manuſcript reads ἀποδώσει, and not ἀπωδώῃ, i. e. ſhall or will reward, and moſt of the antient Commentators have remark'd, that this is not an Imprecation, but a Prediction only, not unbecoming an Apoſtle.

Jehu's Character.

What God ſays of the King of Aſſyria, whom he calls the Rod of his Anger, and the Staff of his Indignation, is not unapplicable to Jehu, after he was advanc'd to the Throne of Iſrael: I ſent him againſt the People of my Wrath, to tread them down, like Mire of the Streets, howbeit he meaned not ſo, neither did his Heart think ſo, but it was in his Heart to deſtroy, and cut off Nations not a few. Jehu indeed made made great Oſtentation of his Zeal for the Lord, and that, during his Adminiſtration, (d) there ſhould fall to the Earth nothing of what he had ſaid concerning the Houſe of Ahab; and it muſt be acknowledg'd, that for his Performance of the Divine Commands in this Regard, (e) he receiv'd Commendations from God, and a Settlement of his Family in the Throne of Iſrael for four Succeſſions; and yet we may ſay of him, that he meaned not ſo, neither did his Heart think ſo: He was ſtill a bad Man, tho' he did well in executing that, which was right in God's Eyes, as to the Aboliſhment of the Worſhip of Baal; (f) but his obſtinate Perſiſtance in the Sin of Jeroboam, may be juſtly alledg'd againſt him, as an Argument of his Falſe-heartedneſs in all his other Actions.

Why he continu'd the Worſhip of the golden Calves.

WHY he continu'd in this Kind of Idolatry, the Reaſons were much the ſame with him, that they were with the firſt Inſtitutor of it,——leſt, by permitting his Subjects to go to the Place appointed for Divine Worſhip, he might open a Door for their Return to their Obedience to the Houſe of David; and, not only ſo, but diſoblige likewiſe a great Part of the Nobility of the Nation, who, by this Time, had been long accuſtom'd, and were warmly affected to the Worſhip of the golden Calves. Herein however he made a plain Diſcovery of his Sin and Folly, in not daring to truſt God with the keeping of his Kingdom, tho' it was from his Kindneſs and Donation that he had it, and in apprehending any Danger from the Houſe of David, or the Kingdom of Judah, which were both now in ſo weak and declining a Condition, that they were much more likely to be ſwallow'd up by him.

Why God made uſe of him.

(g) THE Truth is, Jehu was a wicked, bold, furious, and implacable Man; but a Man of this Complexion (conſidering the Work, he was to be ſet about) was a proper Inſtrument to be employ'd; and ſo far is it from tending to the Reproach, that it is infinitely to the Glory of God, that he can make uſe of ſuch boiſterous and unruly Paſſions of Mankind for the Accompliſhment of his juſt Deſigns, according to the Obſervation of the royal Pſalmiſt, (h) Surely the Wrath of Man ſhall praiſe thee, and the Remainder of his Wrath ſhalt thou reſtrain. This he plainly did in the Caſe of Jehu: For, after he had ſettled him in the Poſſeſſion of a Kingdom, and ſtill found that he perſiſted in his political Idolatry, he brought down the King of Syria upon him, (i) who ſmote the Coaſts of Iſrael, and quite waſted all that Part of his Kingdom, which lay beyond the River Jordan.

And how he executed his Commands.

THERE is this to be ſaid however, concerning Jehu's cutting off Ahaziah, and (k) the other Branches of his Family, that, tho' his primary Intent in doing it was to ſecure himſelf in the Poſſeſſion of the Kingdom, againſt all Claims, that might come from the Houſe of Ahab; yet did he not act entirely contrary to his Commiſſion, becauſe (l) Ahaziah was the Son of Athaliah, the Daughter of Ahab; and the Order of God was, (m) that the whole Houſe of Ahab ſhould periſh: But then the Queſtion is, where it was that Ahaziah was ſlain, becauſe in the two Accounts, that we have of his Death, there ſeems to be ſome Repugnancy? The Account which we have in the ſecond Book of Kings runs thus;——(n) When Ahaziah ſaw the Death of Jehoram King of Iſrael, he fled by the Way of the Garden-Houſe, and Jehu followed after them, and ſaid, ſmite him alſo in his Chariot: And they did ſo, at the going up to Gur, which is by Ibleam, and he fled to Megiddo, and there died: But in the Book of Chronicles it is ſaid, that, (o) when Jehu was executing Judgment upon the Houſe of Ahab, and found the Princes of Judah, even the Sons of the Brethren of Ahaziah, that miniſtered

The different Account: in Kings and Chronicles concerning Ahaziah's Death reconciled.

Now, in order to reconcile the different Accounts of the ſame Event, we muſt obſerve, (p) that, as one great End of Writing the Book of Chronicles, was, to ſupply ſuch Matters, as had been omitted in the Book of Kings; ſo this Account of the Death of Ahaziah, in the latter, is very ſhort, and included the Story of Jehoram, that the Reader, at one and the ſame View, as it were, might perceive in what Manner it was, that both theſe Princes fell; but in the former it is told more at large, and therefore, to compleat the Hiſtory, we muſt take in both Accounts, and from thence we may gather, —— That, upon ſeeing Jehoram mortally wounded, Ahaziah turn'd his Chariot, and made the beſt of his Way to Samaria, in order to eſcape into his own Kingdom; but, finding the Paſſes too narrowly guarded, he thought proper to conceal himſelf in the Town, in hopes of a better Opportunity; that Jehu, in the mean Time, coming to Samaria, and, having Intelligence that Ahaziah was lurking there, order'd that diligent Search ſhould be made for him, and, when he was found, that he ſhould be carry'd to Gur, (the Place, in all Probability, where his Father Joram had ſlain all his Brethren) and there be killed in his Chariot, that ſo his Servants might immediately carry off his Corps, and bury it. But, as Jehu's Order to the Officers, that were entruſted with the Execution, was only, that they ſhould ſmite him, they thought it enough to give him a mortal Wound, ſo that his Servants carry'd him from thence to Megiddo, the next Town in the Tribe of Iſſachar, where he dy'd.

Why Jehoram was ſo incenſed againſt Eliſha.

This makes the Circumſtances conſiſtent: And tho' we are no ways concern'd (eſpecially when the ſacred Hiſtory is ſilent) to aſſign any Reaſons for ſuch furious Paſſions, as are frequently obſerv'd in great and wicked Men; yet it may be no hard Matter to imagine ſomething more probable, than what (q) Joſephus makes the Caſe of Jehoram's Indignation againſt Eliſha, and his vowing to take off his Head; even becauſe he refus'd to intercede with God for the Removal of the Famine, that had, at this Time, ſo ſorely waſted the City of Samaria. From the many Miracles, which Eliſha did, the King very likely might be convinc'd, that the ſame Spirit, which once reſided in Elijah, was now deſcended upon him; and, therefore, as Elijah had Power, by his Prayers, either to ſhut, or open the Windows of Heaven, either to cauſe, or remove a Famine, as he pleas'd, (r) he might poſſibly imagine, that God had conferr'd the ſame Privilege upon Eliſha, and might therefore be highly incens'd againſt him, becauſe he would not make uſe of it in the Preſervation of a City, reduc'd to the utmoſt Diſtreſs. But we can hardly imagine, that a wicked and idolatrous Prince (as Jehoram certainly was) would ever entertain ſo high a Conception of any of the Lord's Prophets: And therefore we muſt endeavour to find out ſome other Reaſon, for the Violence of his Rage and Indignation againſt him.

When the Prophet Eliſha carry'd the Detachment of the Syrian Army, which was ſent to apprehend him at Dothan, hood-winked (as it were) into the City of Samaria, Jehoram, we find, would have gladly taken this Advantage, and fallen upon them with the Sword; (s) My Father, ſhall I ſmite, ſhall I ſmite them? So eager was he to have them deſtroy'd, as we may learn from the Repetition of his Words! But by no Means would the Prophet permit him; on the contrary he order'd them to be treated with much Civility, and diſmiſs'd in Peace. An Uſage this, which deſerv'd a better Return, than what they made the Iſraelites the Year following, when they came, and beſieg'd Samaria, and ſorely diſtreſs'd it. The King of Iſrael, therefore, reflecting on the Opportunity, which, had he employ'd as he deſir'd, would have diſabled the Army from making any freſh Invaſions, but was unhappily loſt, by liſtening to an old doting Prophet, (as he might call him) was griev'd beyond Meaſure, and hereupon vow'd to make his Life pay for the Lives of thoſe, who, by his Counſel, had eſcap'd, and were now return'd to repeat their Hoſtilities. It may be ſuppos'd likewiſe, that, upon the Return of the Syrian Army, the King of Iſrael, knowing himſelf in no Condition to oppoſe them, might poſſibly be for purchaſing a Peace at any Rate; which Eliſha might endeavour to diſſuade him from, by giving him all along Aſſurance, that the Enemy ſhould at length be defeated. Finding however no Effect in the Prophet's Promiſes, and, on the contrary, ſeeing his Capital cloſely beſieg'd, and the People reduc'd to great Extremity of Want, he began to repent him of following his Advice; and being ſhock'd at hearing the horrid Story (and that from the Mother's own Mouth) of her being forc'd to eat her own Child for Hunger, he fell into a Rage, and vow'd to be reveng'd of Eliſha, as one, who, by his bad Counſel, had occaſion'd all that Miſery. (t) God do ſo to me, and more alſo, if the Head of Eliſha, the Son of Shaphat, ſhall ſtand on him To-day; never conſidering that his own manifold and crying Sins, eſpecially his obſtinate adhering to the Idolatry of the Calves, (u) and the Whoredoms and Witchcrafts of his Mother Jezebel, were the true and proper Cauſes of all his Calamities.

How all the Worſhippers of Baal might be brought to meet together.

JEHU (as we ſaid before) was a wicked and ambitious Man, and, it is much to be queſtion'd, whether he would have executed the Divine Will ſo punctually, had it not fallen in with his own Intereſt and Deſigns. He had now extirpated the Houſe of Ahab; and, as Ahab had been the firſt Introducer of the Idolatry of Baal into the Kingdom of Iſrael, he could not but think, that the Prieſts and Prophets, and ſuch, as adher'd to the Worſhip of that falſe God, were of Jezebel's Faction, and might, at one Time or other, take Occaſion to revenge her Death. Something or other was therefore neceſſary to be done, in order to get rid of this dangerous Set of Men, and, that the Buſineſs might be done effectually, to get rid of them all at once. (x) He was a Perſon of a known Indifference in Matters of Religion, who, in this Regard, always conform'd to the Humours of the Court, and, in the Reign of King Ahab, had been as ſtrenuous a Worſhipper of Baal, as any; and therefore, how could the People tell, when they read his Proclamation for a great Feaſt, and a ſolemn Sacrifice to be offer'd unto Baal, but that, in good earneſt he had return'd to his former Love to the Religion, which he once embrac'd, and only deſerted for a while, in Complacency to others? He had gone on a little oddly indeed at his Entrance upon the Government, had murther'd their chief Patroneſs, and made free with ſome of their Prieſts likewiſe, but theſe Prieſts perhaps were (y) Domeſticks to Jezebel, or too near related to Ahab's Family not to go off in the common Slaughter. Some Inſtances of this Kind could hardly be help'd in the Heat of Execution, when the Man was reſolv'd to ſecure himſelf, and remove all Competitors: But now, that he has nothing to fear, why ſhould we think, but that a Prince, who has no Senſe of Religion at all, ſhould be a Worſhipper of our God Baal, (that glorious Luminary †, which ſhines ſo bright in the Firmament of Heaven) as he is of the Golden Calves?

Why they all went.

Thus, we may ſuppoſe, the Baalites reaſon'd, upon reading the King's Proclamation ſo apparently in Favour of their Idolatry; and God, in his Judgment, ſuffer'd their (z) fooliſh Hearts to be thus darkened, † Baal and Aſtaroth are commonly join'd together; and, as it is believ'd, that Aſtaroth denotes the Moon, we may with good Reaſon ſay, that Baal is put for the Sun. Calmet's Dictionary.

darkened, and, becauſe they received not the Love of the Truth, that they might be ſaved, for this Cauſe he ſent upon them a ſtrong Deluſion, that they might believe a Lye. But, whether they deluded themſelves into this Perſuaſion, or not, this they knew by Experience, that Jehu was a Man of a fierce and bloody Temper, who would not fail to put his Threats in Execution, and therefore reading in the ſame Proclamation, that, (a) whoſoever ſhall be wanting, he ſhall not live, they found themſelves reduc'd to this ſad Dilemma, either to go, or die: And therefore they thought it the wiſeſt Way, to run the Hazard, and throw themſelves, upon his Mercy, having this at laſt to plead for themſelves, that they were not diſobedient to his Commands. The only remaining Queſtion is, if every one obey'd this Summons, how could the Temple of Baal be capable of receiving them all?

And how the Temple could contain them all.

Now the Words of Jehu's Summons are theſe, —— (b) Call unto me all the Prophets of Baal, all his Servants, and all his Prieſts, let none be wanting; for I have a great Sacrifice to offer unto Baal —— And Jehu did it in Subtlety, to the Intent that he might deſtroy the Worſhippers of Baal; in which Words we may obſerve, (c) that two particular Orders of Men are diſtinctly mention'd, the Prophets, and Prieſts, and therefore we may preſume, that the Servants, and Worſhippers, who are join'd with them, were ſome of an inferior Kind, (ſuch as Levites in the Jewiſh, or Deacons in the Chriſtian Church) who attended upon the other in their ſacred Miniſtrations; becauſe, in the 22d Verſe, we find Jehu ordering him, who was over the Veſtry, to bring forth Veſtments for all the Worſhippers of Baal, which cannot be meant of the People in general, becauſe they wore no diſtinct Garments in their Worſhip either of God, or Baal, but of the Prieſts and Miniſters only. Theſe were the great Support of the preſent Idolatry, and therefore Jehu concluded very juſtly, that, if he did but once deſtroy them, all the common Worſhippers would fall away of courſe.

But, even if we take the Words Servants and Worſhippers in their utmoſt Latitude, we need not doubt, but that the Temple of Baal (d), which was built in the Capital City, and near the royal Palace, and, being the chief in its Kind, was deſign'd for the Uſe of the King and Queen, and particularly perhaps for ſuch great and high Solemnities, was large and capacious enough to hold them all. For, beſides this principal Building, (e) there might be ſeveral outward Courts, (as there were in the Temple at Jeruſalem) where the People ſtood, while they worſhipp'd (as they did in the Temple-Service) and theſe, together with the Temple itſelf, would afford Space ſufficient for all the Idolaters of that Kind, both Miniſters and People, that were then in the whole Kingdom. For, ſince the Days of Ahab, by the Miniſtry of Elijah, Eliſha, and the reſt of the Prophets, as well as by the Slaughter, which Hazael, in his Wars againſt Iſrael, had made among many of them, the Number of Baal's Worſhippers had been greatly diminiſh'd. Jehoram himſelf, as we read, (f) put away the Image of Baal, that his Father had made, and, when the King withdrew his Preſence and Encouragement, his Subjects, without Doubt for the Generality, follow'd his Example; for it cannot be ſuppos'd, that the Worſhip of ſuch ſenſeleſs Idols could ever be kept up (eſpecially among a People, that had the Oracles of God in their Cuſtody) without the Influence of ſome great Authority, or the Conſideration of ſome wicked and worldly Ends.

DISSERTATION III.

Of JONAH's Miſſion to NINEVEH, and Abode in the Whale's Belly.

The Nature of his Story.

IN the whole Compaſs of the Old Teſtament, I know of no Paſſage, that has been made ſo popular a Topick of Banter and Ridicule, and which the Lovers of Infidelity, in all Ages, have ſo much delighted to deſcant upon, as the Story of Jonah's continuing three Days and three Nights in the Whale's Belly. The Story indeed, at firſt Hearing, ſounds ſurpriſingly; and therefore we need not wonder, that the Wit and Sagacity of a Porphyry, or a Julian, found ſome plauſible Exceptions againſt it, which our modern Retailers, and malicious Improvers of their Objections, have endeavoured to decry as a wild Romance, or, at beſt, but a parabolical Repreſentation of ſomething elſe.

The Objection againſt it.

“THAT a Man, thrown into the Sea, with all his Cloaths on, ſhould, in the very Nick of Time, meet with a Fiſh, and ſuch a Fiſh as was never heard of before, large enough to ſwallow him up quick, and, without hurting an Hair of his Head, to keep him in his Stomach, for ſo many Days and Nights, alive; that, in this narrow and gloomy Priſon, he ſhould be able to breathe, and live, and be nouriſhed; thence ſend up his Prayers to God, and thence promiſe himſelf a Deliverance in due Time; this is an Account of Things ſo very abſurd, that there is no Poſſibility of believing it. For admitting that Jonah got ſafe and ſound down the Whale's Throat, yet how could he ſubſiſt there without Air, or continue any Time without being parboiled? The Stomach, we know, would do its Office; and therefore we cannot but think, that, in a few Hours, much more in three Days, the Man muſt, of courſe, have been totally diſſolved, and his Body converted into the Body of the Fiſh; or, if its Digeſtion was not ſo quick, he muſt, at leaſt, when caſt upon the Shore, have been ſadly ſodden, and unfit to be ſent upon another Expedition.

“WHAT God can do, we muſt not diſpute; but then, great Care ſhould be taken, not to magnify his Power, to the Diminution of his Wiſdom, or to think, that he is ſo laviſh of his Miracles, as to ſave a rebellious Prophet, that was diſobeying his Orders, and fleeing, if poſſible, from his Preſence; that deſerv'd indeed to be left to the Mercy of the Waves, and made Food for the Fiſhes of the Sea, rather than vouchſafed ſo ſtupendous a Preſervation: And all this, for what? Even to compel him to go, againſt his Will, to a wicked City, with an unwelcome Meſſage; as if there had been no Prophet in Iſrael, but this ſullen and refractory Man, to be ſent upon this Errand.”

Anſwer'd by an Account of Nineveh, and why Jonah was ſent thither, viz. to convert its Inhabitants.

NINEVEH, at the Time when Jonah was ſent thither, was the Metropolis of the Aſſyrian Empire, and one of the largeſt and moſt antient Cities in the World. According to the beſt Chronologers, it was built not long after the Flood, and very ſoon after the Tower of Babel, by Nimrod; but being afterwards greatly enlarg'd by Ninus, from him it receiv'd its Name. It was ſituated upon the Banks of the Tigris, and (as Diodorus (g) has given us the Deſcription of it) was, in Length, an hundred and fifty Stadia; in Breadth, fourſcore and ten; and in Circumference, four hundred and ſeventy; which, being reduc'd to our Meaſure, make it about one and twenty Miles long, nine broad, and four and fifty round. How ſtately its Walls, and how lofty its Towers were, the ſame Hiſtorian has taken care to inform us; and how great the Number of its Inhabitants was, we may learn from (h) the ſix Score Thouſand Children, who could not diſcern between their Right-Hands, and their Left: For, according to a proportionate Computation, there muſt have been in the whole above ſix hundred Thouſand Perſons.

(g) Lib. ii. Bib.

NOW we have wrong Conceptions of God, if we think, that, becauſe he made the Children of Iſrael his peculiar People, he therefore neglected all the World beſides. On the contrary, (i) Tho' he ſhewed his Word unto Jacob, and his Statutes and Ordinances unto Iſrael, in a particular Manner, yet he did not leave himſelf without a Witneſs in other Nations; but, whenever they were drawing Deſtruction upon themſelves, took care to acquaint them with their impending Doom. To this Purpoſe, we may obſerve, that not only Iſaiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel, but almoſt all the other Prophets, do foretel the Deſtruction of Babylon, and publiſh the Divine Threats againſt Egypt, Edom, and the other Kingdoms neighbouring upon Canaan; that (k) Jeremiah, in particular, was order'd by God to make himſelf Bonds and Yokes, and ſend them to the Kings of the Ammonites, of Tyre, and Sidon, and other Princes, by the Hand of their Miniſters, who were then at the Court of Zedekiah King of Judah, with his Admonition to their Maſters, that, unleſs they repented of their evil Ways, he would deliver them into the Power of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, whom he calls his Servant, even as he does (l) Cyrus his anointed, (for being appointed to execute his Will) ſome hundred Years before he was born; and therefore we need leſs wonder, that we find God intereſting himſelf in the Preſervation of the large and populous City of Nineveh, upon which depended the whole Fate of the Aſſyrian Empire, ſince, in all Ages, he has given Proofs of his Protection, and abſolute Dominion over other Nations, as well as the Iſraelites, either in threatening their Diſobedience, in order to procure their Amendment, or, if they deſpiſ'd his Threatenings, in puniſhing their Obſtinacy, as they deſerve.

(m) IS he the God of the Jews only? Is he not alſo of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles alſo, ſays an Apoſtle of great Authority: And therefore we may preſume, that, as Jonah was the only Prophet, in the Old Teſtament, that was ſent expreſſly to preach to the Gentiles, God might deſign hereby to give to his People a Premonition of his Intention, in the Fulneſs of Time, (n) to raiſe up a Root of Jeſſe, (as the Prophet expreſſes it) which ſhould ſtand for an Enſign of the People, and unto which the Gentiles ſhould ſeek: To (o) break down the middle Wall of Partition, even the Law of Commandments, contained in Ordinances; and to unite all Nations in one Communion, under (p) one great Shepherd and Biſhop of their Souls.

And to ſhame his own People.

BUT whether God might deſign this Call to the Ninevites, as a Pledge and Aſſurance of his future Admiſſion of the People of all Nations into the Privileges of the Chriſtian Covenant; this certainly he might have under his immediate View, viz. to ſhew the Diſparity between his People and Aliens, and, upon the Compariſon of their ſeveral Behaviours, ſhame them for living unreclaim'd under the conſtant Preaching of his Prophets for ſo many Years, when a People, whom they deſpiſ'd, as being Strangers to the Covenant of Promiſe, had, by the mighty Power of his Word, been converted in the Space of three Days.

(h) Jonah iv. 11. (i) Pſal. cxlvii. 19. (k) Jer. xxvii. 2, &c. (l) Iſaiah xlv. 1. (m) Rom. iii. 19. (n) Iſaiah xi. 10. (o) Eph. ii. 14. (p) 1 Pet. ii. 25.

Nothing is more common in Scripture, than to find God complaining of his People for not attending to the Meſſages, which he ſent them. (q) Since the Day that their Fathers came forth out of Egypt, (ſays God to one of his Prophets) even unto this Day, I have ſent unto them all my Servants, the Prophets, daily riſing up early, and ſending them; yet they hearkened not unto me, nor inclined their Ear, but hardened their Neck, and did worſe than their Fathers: Therefore ſhalt thou ſpeak all theſe Words unto them, but they will not hearken, and thou ſhalt call unto them, but they will not anſwer thee. And therefore God, very well foreknowing the Succeſs that his Prophet would meet with, might ſend him with Commiſſion to preach to the Ninevites, not only in Purſuance of his kind Purpoſes to them, but with an Intent likewiſe, to render his own People inexcuſable, even as our Saviour repreſents the Caſe of the Jews in his Days, who refus'd to hear him: (r) The Men of Nineveh ſhall riſe in Judgment with this Generation, and ſhall condemn it, becauſe they repented at the Preaching of Jonah, and behold a greater than Jonah is here.

And indeed, ſome have imagin'd, that one great Cauſe of Jonah's declining the Order at firſt, and of his going at laſt with ſo much Reluctancy to Nineveh, might be ſome Suſpicion, that, in Caſe theſe Gentiles ſhould liſten to his Preaching, it might be, not only a laſting Reproach, but a Means of Reprobation likewiſe to his Countrymen, who, under the conſtant Miniſtration of ſo many Prophets, were only become more obdurate in Sin: And therefore, jealous of the Honour of his Nation, and too ſollicitous for their Preſervation, he could not prevail with himſelf to accept of a Commiſſion, that ſeem'd to interfere with this; leſt a ready Compliance with the Divine Commands at Nineveh ſhould prove the Diſparagement at leaſt, if not the utter Rejection of (s) his Brethren, his Kinſmen after the Fleſh.

The Prophet himſelf, however, has ſuggeſted another Reaſon for his Unwillingneſs to go to Nineveh, and that is, the ſuperabundant Mercy of God, which, he foreſaw, would be mov'd to Pity, at the Prayers and Tears of the People, and therefore he remonſtrates thus: (t) I pray thee, O Lord, was not this my Saying, when I was yet in my Country? Therefore I fled before unto Tarſhiſh; for I knew that thou art a gracious God, and merciful, ſlow to Anger, of great Kindneſs, and repenteſt thee of the Evil. But, how plauſible ſoever this Excuſe may be, yet, upon the Face of the whole Affair, it appears, that the Prophet conſider'd himſelf a little too much; and therefore we may conclude, that the true Reaſon, for his declining this Errand, was the Hazard and Difficulty of the Undertaking, and the great Uncertainty of its Succeſs: The very ſame Thought, that deterr'd Moſes from applying to Pharaoh to grant the Iſraelites their Liberty; and Gideon, from taking up Arms to reſcue his Country from the Slavery of the Midianites: For as each of theſe made their ſeveral Excuſes; I am of uncircumciſed Lips, ſays one, and how ſhall Pharaoh hearken unto me? And, I am the leaſt in my Father's Houſe, ſays the other, and how then ſhall I ſave Iſrael? So might Jonah ſay within himſelf, “ I am leſs than the leaſt of the “ Prophets, and how then can I expect “ that the People of ſo great and opulent “ a City will give any Attention to my “ Preaching; that they will not rather “ take the Alarm, and fall upon me, and “ ſlay me, when I come to tell them that “ their Ruin and Deſtruction is ſo near “ approaching? I'll get quit of this dan- “ gerous Affair therefore, as well as I can, “ and, becauſe I conceive, that the Spirit “ of Prophecy, (which upon this Account “ makes me ſo uneaſy) will not purſue me, “ after I am gone out of the Holy Land, “ I'll make the beſt of my Way into “ Cilicia; for, when I have got at ſome “ Diſtance from Judea, God perhaps may “ think “think no more of ſending me, but may find him out ſome other Prophet, that is better qualify'd for this Purpoſe.” But, (u) whither ſhall I go from thy Spirit? (as one better inſtructed than Jonah ſeems to be in this Article of his Omnipreſence, addreſſes himſelf to God) Or whither ſhall I flee from thy Preſence? If I aſcend up into Heaven, thou art there; if I go down into Hell, thou art there alſo; if I take the Wings of the Morning, and dwell in the uttermoſt Parts of the Sea, even there alſo ſhall thy Hand lead me, and thy Right-Hand ſhall hold me; which no Man ever ſo experimentally found to be true, as did this Prophet, while he ſojourn'd in the Deep, and took up his Habitation in the Whale's Belly.

That the Fiſh, which ſwallow'd up Jonah, very probably was a Whale.

(x) Some learned Men indeed are of Opinion, that the Fiſh, which ſwallow'd up Jonah, was not a Whale, becauſe the largeſt of theſe (as they tell us) have but in Proportion very narrow Gullets, ſuch as are not capable of receiving a Man entire into their Stomachs: And therefore they imagine, that it was what they call the Lamia, or Sea-Dog, which, tho' leſs in Bulk than a Whale, has a Gullet ſo vaſtly large, that frequently in its Stomach have been found Men, all whole and entire, (y) and ſometimes clad in Armour.

It muſt be acknowledg'd, that the Hebrew Dag-gadol, which the Text in Jonah makes uſe of, ſignifies no more than any great Fiſh; but then it makes ſomething for the common Opinion, that the Whale is the largeſt Species we know of, that ſwims in the Sea. The Antients indeed ſeem to have enlarg'd too much in their Account of this Animal. (z) Pliny talks of ſome that were ſix hundred Feet long; and above half as much broad. Solinus (a) makes others no leſs than eight hundred Feet; and Dionyſius (b) ſeems to affirm of others that they had a Throat wide enough to ſwallow up a Ship with all its Rigging. But tho' theſe may paſs for extravagant Exaggerations, (c) an Author, who has wrote expreſly upon this Subject, gives us this Account,—— “That, in the Northern Seas, there are Whales of ſuch a prodigious Bigneſs, that, when their Fleſh is taken off, and nothing left but their Skeletons, they look like large Veſſels, or rather like ſpacious Houſes, with ſeveral Chambers and Windows in them, wherein a whole Family might find Room to live.” Their Mouth (every one allows) is capable of containing ſeveral Men at once. We are told (d) of one, caſt upon the Coaſt of Tuſcany, in the Year 1624, whoſe Jaws were ſo wide that a Man on Horſeback might have rode into them with Eaſe: And we have not much Reaſon to doubt, but that their Throat and Belly are anſwerable to (e) ſo ſpacious an Opening.

It cannot be thought indeed, but the Œſophagus, in Creatures that are dead, muſt be contracted to a great Degree, in Compariſon to what it is when they are alive, and eſpecially when they are eating; in which Caſe it is capable of ſo great Dilatation, (as is evident from a Pike's ſometimes ſwallowing another Fiſh almoſt of his own Magnitude) that we need not much fear, but that the Fiſh, which God had provided for that Purpoſe, was able to gulp Jonah down at once, without ever hurting him. For the Whale, as we are told, has neither Teeth nor Tuſhes, (whereas the Sea-Dog has four or five Rows of Teeth in each Jaw) and is therefore the much properer of the two to receive into its Stomach any Thing alive, without the Danger of Contuſion.

How he might live in the Whale's Stomach.

Thus we have convey'd Jonah ſafe and ſound into the Whale's Belly; let us, in the next Place, ſee how he is to live there for the Space of three Days. The Scripture indeed ſpeaks preciſely of (f) three Days, and three Nights; but as Jonah was a Type of our Saviour, and his Abode in the Belly of the Whale a Prefiguration of our Lord's Continuance (g) in the Heart of the Earth, there is ſome Reaſon to think, that the Type and the Antitype, in this Reſpect, were both alike; and that, as our Lord was but one whole Day, and Part of two more, in the Grave, ſo Jonah might continue no longer in the Deep; and yet, according to the Hebrew Way of Computation, both be truly ſaid to have been three Days, and three Nights, in their reſpective Confinements. But not to inſiſt on this Abbreviation of Time, what ſome Naturaliſts tell us of the Food of the Whale, viz. That it does not live on Fleſh, but on Weeds, on the Froth of the Sea, on Inſects, and ſuch ſmall Fiſh as are eaſy of Digeſtion, and that, conſequently, as having a colder Stomach it was a fitter Receptacle for the Prophet, than any other Fiſh, that was carnivorous; this might be of ſome Conſideration perhaps, were we not diſpos'd to call in the miraculous Power of God, which alone could preſerve him in theſe Circumſtances. But then, we cannot but allow, that, as he ſuſpended the Violence of the Fire, from hurting the three young Men that were caſt into the Furnace; that as he made St Peter's Body either ſo light, as to walk upon the Waters, or the Waters ſo ſolid, as to ſupport it; ſo, with the ſame Facility, he might controul the acid Humours in any Creature's Stomach, and make it (for ſuch a determinate Time) loſe its Faculty of Digeſtion: For, in all this, there is nothing that ſurpaſſes the Power of the great AUTHOR OF NATURE, who gives, or ſuſpends the Activity of all Bodies, who ſtops, or controuls, who changes, or modifies (as he thinks fit) all the Motion which he communicates to Matter, of what Kind ſoever it be. And, in like Manner, tho' it be impoſſible, according to the ordinary Laws of Nature, for a Man to breathe in the Stomach of a Fiſh, or, at leaſt, to draw in ſuch a Quantity of Air, as is requiſite to give a due Circulation to his Blood; yet, ſince it is neither contrary to the Nature, nor ſuperior to the Power of God, by one Means or other to effect the Thing, if it be but agreeable to his Will, we cannot ſee any Reaſon why it may not be done.

BATS, and Swallows, and other Birds, which in the cold Seaſon of the Year creep into Cliffs of Rocks, and hollow Trees, (h) Creatures, that live under Ground, and ſeveral others, that abide at the Bottom of deep Waters, ſubſiſt in a Manner without breathing. They live, as it were, in a Deliquium of Life, and the Blood in their Veins ſeems to move very ſlowly, if at all; and yet we find them revive again, upon the Approach of the genial Heat of the Sun, to give their Blood and Juices a briſker Fermentation; and why might not God then, during theſe three Days and Nights, put Jonah into the very ſame State of Repoſe and Tranquillity, that either the Element they live in, or the colder Seaſon of the Year do naturally bring upon theſe Animals, by correcting the Fluidity, and retarding the Circulation of his Blood, ſo as to make frequent Reſpiration not ſo neceſſary?

THE antient Phyſicians were of Opinion, that, while the Child continu'd in its Mother's Womb, it liv'd without breathing, ſo that there was no Employment for the Lungs, until it came into the open Air; but later Anatomiſts will perſuade us, that, without ſome Circulation of Blood in the Body, no Animal can live; and therefore they pretend to have found out in the Fœtus a conſiderable Artery, which conveys the Blood from the Vena Cava (without its paſſing into the right Ventricle of the Heart) into the Lungs; from whence, by another ſmaller Artery (which they call the Botal) it is carry'd into the Aorta, and ſo continues in a perpetual Circulation, without entering the Lobes of the Lungs, which which are not replete with Blood, nor begin to move until the Child is born and ſucks in the freſh Air. For then, ſay they, the Blood, being forc'd by the Motion of the Heart into the Artery, whoſe Orifice lies in its right Ventricle, goes directly into the Lungs, and is thence brought back by the Pulmonary Vein; ſo that the other Veſſels, which help the Circulation of the Blood in the Fœtus, being now become uſeleſs, do by Degrees ſtop, and are dry'd up. But it may not always happen ſo: In ſome particular Perſons Nature ſometimes preſerves them open; and this is the Reaſon which ſome give us, why the Divers (as they are called) who accuſtom themſelves to go under Water, to diſcover and bring up the Riches of the Deep, can abide ſo long in that Element, without breathing.

We pretend not however to advance, that Jonah was one of this Sort of Men; but ſtill we may affirm, that it was in God's Power, during his Continuance in the Fiſh's Belly, to put him in ſuch a State of Acquieſcence, and his Blood into ſuch a Form of Circulation, as would require no more Reſpiration, than the Fœtus has in the Womb. In this there is nothing impoſſible, nothing incompatible with the Laws of Nature; tho' it muſt be acknowledg'd, that, ſtrictly ſpeaking, the Thing is above the ordinary and known Laws of Nature, and therefore miraculous: But then, if we believe not this Miracle, why ſhould we believe any other, or why ſhould it be thought a more incredible Thing that Jonah ſhould live three Days in the Belly of a large Fiſh, than that Lazarus (i) ſhould be re-called to Life again, after he had been four Days bury'd in the Grave; that the Prophet ſhould return from this Sea-Monſter's Stomach, ſafe and ſound, than that the (k) three Jews in Babylon ſhould eſcape from the flaming Furnace, without having ſo much as the Smell of the Fire paſs upon them?

An Objection.

“But other Miracles, it may be ſaid, “were done for ſome wiſe Ends of Providence, and when there appear'd an “urgent Occaſion for God's exerting his “Almighty Power; whereas, in the “Caſe before us, there ſeems to be none “at all.”

Anſwer'd, by ſhewing for what Ends God did this Miracle, viz. to puniſh Jonah.

That Prophets, however inveſted with great Power, and ſometimes intruſted with high Commiſſions from God, were (l) Men ſubject to the like Paſſions and Infirmities as we are, is evident, not only from the Teſtimony of the Apoſtle, but from the Accounts of their own Behaviour, likewiſe. The Prophet that was ſent to Bethel to denounce God's Judgment againſt the idolatrous Altar, was a ſad Example of human Frailty, in giving Credit to the Perſuaſions of another, even when they contradicted a Divine Command. Jonah, when he was directed to go to Nineveh, diſcover'd the like, if no greater Tokens of human Infirmity, when, inſtead of purſuing that Journey, he bent his Courſe another Way, not without ſome vain Hopes of evading by that Means the Divine Preſence: And therefore, as God ſent a Lion to ſlay the Prophet of Judah, for his too much Credulity; ſo ſome have imagin'd, that he not only purſu'd this Prophet of Iſrael with a dreadful Storm, but even had him thrown over-board, and ſwallow'd up by this Sea-Monſter, in Puniſhment for his Perverſeneſs and Prevarication. God indeed, by his over-ruling Power, made the Belly of this Monſter a Place of Security to him; but what Notions the Prophet himſelf had of this ſtrange Habitation, (m) where the Floods compaſſed him about, and the Billows and Waves paſſed over him, we may learn from his Meditations in the Deep, (n) when he cried, by Reaſon of his Affliction, to the Lord, and he heard him: So that, upon the Preſumption, that God intended not to deſtroy him, the primary Reaſon, we may imagine, for his appointing this Fiſh to ſwallow him up, was to ſtop this fugitive Prophet, as he was endeavouring to make his Eſcape: But then, in the Midſt of Judgment thinking upon Mercy, after a Confinement Confinement of three Nights and three Days in the Deep, whereby he both taught him better Obedience for the future, and rectify'd his Notions concerning the Divine Omnipreſence, he order'd his Jailor (if we may ſo ſpeak) to give him his Liberty, and deliver him ſafe on Shore.

To convert the Mariners.

THE Oriental Traditions do vaſtly differ as to the Place, where Jonah was caſt upon the Land. (o) Joſephus muſt needs be under a groſs Miſtake, when, to throw him upon ſome Coaſt of the Euxine Sea, he makes the Whale (which could hardly be any quick Mover) run eight hundred Leagues, at leaſt, in three Days and Nights: Neither are others, who, from the upper Part of the Mediterranean, carry him into the Ocean, and thence into the Red-Sea, or the Perſian Gulph, in the like Space of Time, any happier in their Conjectures. This Ship, we know, was bound for Tarſus (p), a great trading Town in Cilicia, a Province in Aſia Minor, at the Eaſt End of the Mediterranean Sea; and therefore the moſt probable Opinion is, that, ſomewhere on this Coaſt, the Fiſh diſembogu'd itſelf of Jonah; and, if ſo, the Mariners, who, by the Time that he was ſet on Shore, had arriv'd at their Port, when they heard the ſtrange Account of his Deliverance, muſt have become Converts to the Worſhip of that God only, who, in this Inſtance, had ſhewn himſelf able (q) to do whatever he pleaſed in Heaven, and in the Earth, in the Sea, and in all the deep Places.

IN the Storm which St Paul, in his Voyage from Crete to Rome, underwent, an Angel ſtood by him one Night, and ſaid unto him, (r) Lo, God hath given thee all them that ſail with thee: And if, by the Expreſſion, we may underſtand the Salvation of their Souls, as well as their Bodies, a ſufficient Reaſon it was, for God's permitting this Diſtreſs to fall upon them, ſince eventually it prov'd the Occaſion of their Converſion. And, in like Manner, if the ſudden Ceaſing of the Storm upon Jonah's being caſt forth into the Sea (s), made ſo ſtrong an Impreſſion upon the Mariners, that ſailed with him; how can we think, but that his miraculous Eſcape out of that mercileſs Element (eſpecially when he came to recount the Particulars of it) would make them all Proſelytes to his Religion? And if we may ſuppoſe farther, that ſome of the Ships Crew accompany'd him to Nineveh, as knowing the Purpoſe of his Errand thither, to teſtify to the People, that he was the ſame Man, who was in this Manner deliver'd from the Jaws of the Deep, or that the Ninevites came by their Intelligence of this Miracle by ſome other Means; we have here a good Reaſon why they attended to his Meſſage, and repented at his Preaching, and conſequently, why God wrought this wonderful Work upon him, in order to give his Predictions more Weight and Authority.

To magnify his own Glory.

NAY farther, we may ſuppoſe, that, when the People of Nineveh heard Jonah preaching about their Streets, and threatening their City with ſo ſudden a Deſtruction, their Curioſity would naturally lead them to enquire who that Perſon was, and by whoſe Authority it was, that he took ſo much upon him? And being inform'd, that he was of a Nation (t) which had God more nigh unto them in all Things, that they called upon him for, and had Statutes and Judgments more righteous than any other People upon Earth: A Nation, (u) to whom (as the Apoſtle expreſſes it) appertained the Adoption, and the Glory, and the Covenant, and the Giving of the Law, and the Service of God, and the Promiſes: A Nation (x) which the Lord hath taken from the midſt of another Nation, had brought out of Egypt and ſettled in Canaan, by Temptations, by Signs, and by Wonders, and by War, and by a mighty Hand, and by a ſtretched-out Arm, and by great Terrors;

Terrors; and that he, in particular, was a Prophet of this great God, who had made the Heavens and the Earth, the Sea, and all that in them is, and who, for his Diſobedience in refuſing to come upon this Errand, had confin'd him in the Deep for three Days and Nights, but now, upon his Humiliation, had ſet him free from his ghaſtly Priſon, and given him Courage to ſpeak with ſo much Boldneſs: The People, I ſay, who were inform'd of all this, could not well fail of giving God the Glory due unto his Name, for ſending a Prophet of his favourite Nation, and one of ſo diſtinguiſh'd a Character, to give them Notice of their impending Doom.

And to make Jonah a Type of Chriſt.

(y) I WROUGHT for my Name's Sake, (ſays God, remembering the wondrous Things which he had done for the Children of Iſrael) I wrought for my Name's Sake, that it ſhould not be polluted among the Heathen, among whom they were, in whoſe Sight I made myſelf known unto them, in bringing them out of the Land of Egypt: And therefore we may well admit (as another Motive to his working this Miracle) the Deſire he had to raiſe the Fame of a Nation he had taken ſo immediately under his Care, as well as to have the Glory of his own Name magnify'd among the Gentiles. To which we may add that moſt weighty Reaſon of all, which our bleſſed Saviour ſuggeſts: (z) An evil and adulterous Generation ſeeketh after a Sign, and there ſhall no Sign be given to it, but the Sign of the Prophet Jonas: For as Jonas was three Days and three Nights in the Whale's Belly, ſo ſhall the Son of Man be three Days and three Nights in the Heart of the Earth. So that the great Deſign of God's exhibiting, at this Time, this Miracle in the Perſon of Jonah, was to confirm, in future Ages, the great and fundamental Article of our Faith, upon which the whole Superſtructure of the Chriſtian Religion depends, the Reſurrection of our Saviour Chriſt; and that, whenever the Reality of that Fact, as it is related in the New Teſtament, came to be called in Queſtion, we might be furniſh'd with a parallel Inſtance of the mighty Power of God, recorded in the Old.

The Hiſtory of Jonah alluded to in Heathen Fables.

NOR is it only in the ſacred Records that we meet with this Hiſtory of Jonah, but in the Fables, related by ſeveral Heathen Authors both in Verſe and Proſe, we find evident Footſteps and Memorials of it. Hercules was the great Champion of the Grecians, and his Fame they were wont to adorn with all the remarkable Exploits, that they could in any Nation hear of. 'Tis not improbable therefore, (a) that the Adventure of his jumping down the Throat of the Sea-Dog, which Neptune had ſent to devour him, and there concealing himſelf for three Days, without any Manner of Hurt, ſave the Loſs of a few Hairs, which came off by the Heat of the Creature's Stomach, was founded upon ſome blind Tradition, which theſe People might have of what happen'd to Jonah. Nor can the known Story of Arion, thrown over-board by the Seamen, but taken up by a Dolphin, and carry'd ſafe to Corinth, be juſtly referr'd to any other Original; ſince, (b) beſides ſome Reſemblance in their Names, and no great Diſparity in the Times wherein they liv'd, (which are both Circumſtances that make for this Hypotheſis) the ſuppos'd Difference in their reſpective Callings can be no Manner of Objection to it, (c) becauſe the ſame Word in the Hebrew Tongue ſignifies both a Prophet and a Muſician. And therefore it is remarkable, that, as Arion play'd the Tune, wherewith he charm'd and allur'd the Fiſh to ſave him, before he jump'd over-board; ſo Jonah, when he found himſelf ſafely landed, utter'd, what is called (d) a Prayer indeed, but is, in Reality, a lofty Hymn, in Commemoration of his great Deliverance, as appears by this Specimen: (e) The Waters compaſſed

CHAP. IV.

From the Death of UZZIAH, to the Death of JOSIAH King of JUDAH.

The HISTORY.

Zechariah, made King of Iſrael, is murther'd by Shallum, who is ſlain by Menahem.

THE Interregnum †, or Vacancy in the Throne of Iſrael, which laſted for two and twenty Years and upwards, occaſion'd ſo general a Confuſion, that the People, at length, came to a Reſolution to place Zechariah, the Son of Jeroboam, and the fourth † and laſt of Jehu's Line, upon the Throne. This happen'd in the eight and thirtieth Year of Uzziah King of Judah; but, as he prov'd a wicked Prince, and follow'd the Steps of his Anceſtors, he did not live long to enjoy the Government: For, at the End of ſix Months, he was murther'd by Shallum, who uſurp'd the Throne, but enjoy'd it no longer than one Month. For Menahem, General of the King's Forces, which were then beſieging Tirzah, hearing of what Shallum had done, immediately rais'd the Siege, and, marching directly to Samaria, defeated and ſlew Shallum; and, by the Power and Authority of the Army, plac'd himſelf upon the Throne. Not long after this, he return'd with his Army to Tirzah †; but, the Inhabitants refuſing to open the Gates, he took the Place by Storm, and ſo having ſpoiled it, and laid all the Country waſte as far as Tiphzah, he came, and ſat down before it: But, when the People of Tiphzah, in like Manner, refus'd to open their Gates, and ſubmit to him, without Diſtinction of Age or Sex, he put them all to the Sword, and, in ſhort, was ſo barbarouſly cruel, as to * rip up the very Women that were with Child.

† This Interregnum ſome Chronologers make longer, and ſome ſhorter, according as they ſuppoſe that Zechariah reign'd, more or leſs, in Conjunction with his Father: But, that there was manifeſtly a Vacancy in the Throne of Iſrael for the Time aſſign'd, is evident from hence:——— That Jeroboam the IId, who began to reign in the fifteenth Year of Amaziah King of Judah, dy'd in the fifteenth Year of Uzziah, and that his Son Zechariah began not to reign, till the eight and thirtieth Year of the ſaid Uzziah; ſo that there was plainly all this Interregnum, but whence it was occaſion'd, whether by Foreign Wars, or rather by Domeſtick Confuſions, (as appears by the unfortunate End of the Succeſſors) we are no where told. Patrick's Commentary.

† God had promiſed Jehu, that, for executing his Will upon the Houſe of Ahab, he would continue the Crown of Iſrael in his Family for four Generations; and accordingly, Jehoahaz, Joaſh, Jehoram, and Zechariah ſucceeded him: But, becauſe he did it, not ſo much in Obedience to the Divine Command, as to ſatisfy his private and ambitious Views, and in a Method of Cruelty quite abhorrent to the Divine Nature, God cut his Family ſhort, as ſoon as he had fulfilled his Promice to him, and thereby accompliſh'd the Prophecy of Hoſea, I will avenge the Blood of Jezreel upon the Houſe of Jehu, and will cauſe to ceaſe the Kingdom of the Houſe of Iſrael, Chap. i. 4. and perhaps it was in Remembrance of this Prophecy, as well as of the Promiſe, which confin'd the Kingdoms in Jehu's Family to four Generations only, 2 Kings xv. 10. that Shallum was encourag'd to attempt the Life of Zechariah. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† This is a Place we find frequent Mention of in the ſacred Records, becauſe it was a long Time the Regal City of the Kingdom of Iſrael, after that the ten Tribes had revolted from the Houſe of David. Jeroboam, who was the firſt King of Iſrael, (though he dwelt for ſome Time in Shechem) in his latter Days, at leaſt, reſided here, as did all the PUL †, King of Aſſyria, taking the Advantage of theſe Diſtractions, march'd with an Army, and invaded the Kingdom of Iſrael on the other Side of Jordan, which lay neareſt to Babylon: But Menahem, by a Preſent of three thouſand Talents of Silver, which he rais'd out of the wealthieſt of his Subjects, prevailed with him, not only to withdraw his Forces, but to recognize his Title likewiſe to the Crown of Iſrael, before he left the Kingdom; which was one great Reaſon, that he held the quiet Poſſeſſion of it for the Space of ten Years, and, in the fiftieth Year of Uzziah King of Judah, dy'd, and † was ſucceeded in it by his Son Pekahiah.

Menahem is ſucceeded by Pekahiah, who is murthered by Pekah, who is murther'd by Hoſhea, under whom the Iſraelitiſh Kingdom was deſtroy'd by Salmaneſer.

PEKAHIAH however did not reign above two Years, before he was murther'd, in the other Kings of Iſrael; until Omri, having reign'd ſix Years in Tirzah, built Samaria, and remov'd the Royal Seat thither, where it continued until a final Period was put to that Kingdom. Now the Reaſon, which induc'd the firſt Kings of Iſrael to make Tirzah the Place of their Reſidence, may be gather'd from that Expreſſion in Canticles, Thou art beautiful, O my Love, as Tirzah, Chap. vi. 4. which certainly implies, that Tirzah was a beautiful and pleaſant City to dwell in. But how famous and beautiful a Place ſoever this City was, we have no certain Account of its Situation; only it is ſuppos'd by moſt, that, as Jeroboam was of the Tribe of Ephraim, he would be naturally inclin'd to make Choice of a Place, within the Compaſs of his Tribe, for his Royal City: And this Opinion is thought to receive ſome Confirmation from the Word Ephraim's being frequently us'd to denote the whole Kingdom of Iſrael, even becauſe its capital City was ſituated in that Tribe. However this be, 'tis pretty plain, from the Circumſtances of the Story, that the Tiphzah, where Menahem exercis'd ſo much Cruelty, was not the Town of that Name which lay upon the Euphrates, mention'd in 1 Kings iv. 21. as one of the Boundaries of Solomon's Dominion, but ſome Place not far from Tirzah, and conſequently, very probably in the Tribe of Ephraim, Wells's Geography of the Old Teſtament, Vol. III.

* Joſephus does not indeed make mention of this particular Inſtance of his unrelenting Cruelty, but this he tells us, that, " when he had taken the Town, he put all to the Sword, without ſparing a Man, Woman, or " Child; and that he exercis'd ſuch mercileſs Rigour and Inhumanity towards his own Countrymen, as would " have been unpardonable even to the worſt of Barbarians:" But by theſe Methods he thought, no doubt, to terrify the whole Kingdom, ſo that none might dare to withſtand him. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. ix. c. 11. and Patrick's Commentary.

† This is the firſt Time that we find any Mention made of the Kingdom of Aſſyria, ſince the Days of Nimrod, who erected a ſmall Principality there, Gen. x. 11. and Pul, or Phul, is the firſt Monarch of that Nation, who invaded Iſrael, and began their Tranſportation out of their Country. Some are of Opinion, that he was the ſame with Beleſis, the Governor of Babylon, who, together with Arbaces the Mede, ſlew Sardanapalus, the laſt of the Aſſyrian Monarchs, and tranſlated the Empire to the Chaldeans. Our excellent Patrick ſeems to be confident in this: But, according to our learned Prideaux, Beleſis was one Generation later, and therefore it is ſuppos'd, that this Pul was the Father of Sardanapalus, who was called Sardon with the Annexion of his Father's Name Pul, in the ſame Manner as Merodach, King of Babylon, was called Merodach-baladan, becauſe he was the Son of Baladan. This Pul therefore was the ſame King of Aſſyria, who, when Jonah preach'd againſt Nineveh, gave great Tokens of his Humiliation and Repentance. The only Difficulty is, that he ſeems to have march'd his Army from Babylon, and not from Nineveh, and yet his Son and Succeſſor, we find, liv'd at Nineveh: But then it is ſuggeſted, that, as the Kings of Aſſyria reſided ſometimes at Babylon, and ſometimes at Nineveh, 'tis not improbable, that Pul, to avoid the Judgments, which Jonah threaten'd againſt the latter, might remove to Babylon, where he reſided the remaining Part of his Reign; and this made it ſo convenient for him to attack the Iſraelites on the other Side of Jordan. Prideaux's Connection, A. 747. and Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi.

† This ſhews that Menahem was a Man of great Weight and Conſideration; ſince, notwithſtanding all his Violence and Cruelty, he left the Kingdom in his own Family, which his two Predeceſſors could not do. It is manifeſt however, that there was a ſmall Interregnum of about a Year's Continuance, between his Death and his Son's Acceſſion: For his Son did not begin to reign till the fiftieth Year of Uzziah, and yet he muſt have been dead the Year before, becauſe it is ſaid of him, 2 Kings xv. that he began to reign in the thirty-ninth of Uzziah, and reign'd but ten Years. There was therefore apparently an Interregnum; but what the Occaſion of it was, it is not ſo well known; though there is Room to ſuppoſe, that it proceeded from the Intereſt of his Succeſſor, who might raiſe a Party to keep him out of the Throne, as he did afterwards to deprive him both of that, and Life. For (according to Joſephus) " He was cut to Pieces, with ſeveral of his Friends about him, at a publick Feaſt, by the treaſonable Practice of " Pekah, one of his principal Officers, who, ſeizing upon the Government, reign'd about twenty Years, and left it at " laſt a difficult Queſtion to determine, Whether he was more remarkable for his Impiety towards God, or for his Injuſtice " towards Men." Joſeph. Antiq. lib. ix. c. 11. and Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi.

in his Royal Palace, by Pekah, the General of his Army, who, in the laſt Year of Uzziah, uſurp'd the Crown, and wore it for twenty Years, but not without much Diſquiet and Perplexity. For, after that Tiglath-Pileſer †, King of Aſſyria, had ſeveral Times invaded his Kingdom, taken his Cities, ravag'd the Country, and carry'd away great Numbers of his Subjects captive, Hoſhea †, the Son of Elah, murther'd him, (as he had done his Predeceſſor) and, after an Interregnum of nine Years, thruſt himſelf into the Throne; but it was not long, before he found that his Uſurpation was attended with many Incumbrances.

SALMANESER, who, in the fourteenth Year of Ahaz, King of Judah, ſucceeded his Father Tiglath-Pileſer, in the Kingdom of Aſſyria, invaded his Country, and, having ſubdu'd Samaria, made him promiſe to become his Vaſſal, and to pay him an annual Tribute. For ſome Time Hoſhea ſent his Preſents, and his Tribute-Money, very punctually; but, having enter'd into a Confederacy with So †, King of Egypt, by his Aſſiſtance he hop'd to be able to ſhake off the Aſſyrian Yoke, and therefore withdrew his Subjection, and would pay no more Tribute; whereupon Salmaneſer † march'd with an Army againſt him, and, having ſubdu'd all the Country round, and amaſs'd a * great Quantity of rich Prey, he came, and ſat down before Samaria. The Town held out for three Years; but, being at length compelled to ſurrender, Salmaneſer quite demoliſh'd it. He took Hoſhea, and put him in Chains, and ſhut him up in Priſon all his Days; and, having † carry'd the People into Captivity, and plac'd them in the North Parts of Aſſyria, and in the Cities of the Medes, he ſent ſeveral Colonies of his own Subjects from Babylon, and other Provinces, to repleniſh the Land:

† He is ſuppos'd by ſome to have been the Son and Succeſſor of Sardanapalus, who reſtor'd the Kingdom of Aſſyria, and poſſeſs'd it, after it had been diſmember'd by Beleſis and Arbaces; but our learned Prideaux (who begins his excellent Connection of the Hiſtory of the Old and New Teſtament at this Period) makes him to be the ſame with Arbaces, by Ælian called Thilgamus, and by Caſtor, Ninus Junior; who, together with Beleſis, headed the Conſpiracy againſt Sardanapalus, and fix'd his Royal Seat at Nineveh, the antient Reſidence of the Aſſyrian Kings, as Beleſis (who in Scripture is likewiſe called Baladan, Iſaiah xxxix. 1.) did his at Babylon, and there govern'd his new-erected Empire for nineteen Years. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 747.

† After he had murder'd his Predeceſſor Pekah, the Elders of the Land ſeem to have taken the Government into their own Hands; for he had not the Poſſeſſion of the Kingdom, till the latter End of the twelfth Year of Ahaz, i. e. about nine Years after he had committed the Fact. He came to the Crown (it muſt be own'd) in a very wicked Manner, and yet his Character in Scripture is not ſo vile, as many of his Predeceſſors, 2 Kings xvii. 2. For, whereas the Kings of Iſrael had hitherto maintain'd Guards upon the Frontiers, to hinder their Subjects from going to Jeruſalem to worſhip, Hoſhea took away theſe Guards, and gave free Liberty to all to go, and pay their Adorations, where the Law had directed. And therefore, when Hezekiah invited all Iſrael to come to his Paſſover, this Prince permitted all that would to go; and when, upon their Return from that Feſtival, they deſtroy'd all the Monuments of Idolatry, that were found in the Kingdom of Samaria, inſtead of forbidding them, in all Probability, he gave his Conſent to it; becauſe, without ſome tacit Encouragement at leaſt, they durſt not have ventur'd to do it. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 729.

† This So, with whom Hoſhea enter'd into Confederacy, is, in profane Authors, called Sabacon, that famous Ethiopian, mention'd by Herodotus, and Diodorus Siculus, who, in the Beginning of Hezekiah's Reign, invaded Egypt, and, having taken Bocchoris, the King thereof, Priſoner, had him, in great Cruelty, burnt alive, and then ſeiz'd on his Kingdom. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 726.

† Salmaneſer (who, in Tobit i. 2. is called Enemeſſar, and in Hoſea x. 14. Shalman) was the Son and Succeſſor of Arbaces, or Tiglath-pileſer, and, according to Joſephus, (who has quoted a Paſſage from Menander) there is Mention made of him, and of his Conqueſt over the Land of Iſrael, in the Hiſtory of the Tyrians. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. ix. c. 14.

* In this Expedition, among other rich Things, which he took and carry'd away, was the Golden Calf, which Jeroboam had ſet up at Bethel, which, ever ſince his Time, had been worſhipp'd by the ten Tribes, that had revolted with him from the Houſe of David, as the other Golden Calf, which he, at the ſame Time, ſet up at Dan, had been taken thence, about ten Years before, by his Father Tiglath-pileſer, when he invaded Galilee, the Province wherein that City ſtood. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 729.

† The Policy of any Prince, in tranſplanting a conquer'd People into another Country, is to prevent their combining together, (which they cannot ſo well do in a ſtrange Land, and among a mixt Multitude of different Languages) in order to ſhake off their uneaſy Yoke, and recover their Liberty. Le Clerc's Commentary.

But being too few for this Purpoſe, and withal very wicked and idolatrous People, the Divine Providence permitted Lions †, and other wild Beaſts, to multiply upon them to ſuch a Degree, that they were forc'd to make a Repreſentation thereof at the Aſſyrian Court, viz. " That, being ignorant of the Manner wherein they were to worſhip the God of the Country, they ſuppos'd that this Affliction was ſent upon them; and therefore they humbly pray'd, that ſome Prieſts of the Jewiſh Nation might be ſent to inſtruct them in that Particular." This accordingly was done: But, as theſe Colonies conſiſted of a Mixture of different Nations and Provinces, they join'd the Worſhip of the true God, with that of the ſeveral Idols of the Countries, from whence they came; ſo that one might have ſeen the People, who came from Babylon, worſhipping Succoth-Benoth †; the Men of Cuthath †, praying to Nergal †; thoſe of Hamath †, ſetting up Aſhima †; the † Joſephus, in this Part of the Hiſtory, takes the Liberty to alter the Senſe of the ſacred Text: For, inſtead of the Increaſe of Lions, which deſtroy'd the People, he tells us, " That they were viſited with a dreadful Plague, ſo " that the Place was, in a Manner, quite depopulated by it." But, allowing it to be Lions, why ſhould theſe new Inhabitants be afflicted with theſe Creatures, for not fearing the Lord, 2 Kings xvii. 25. when the Iſraelites, who fear'd the Lord as little as they, were never infeſted with any ſuch Thing? The Iſraelites indeed were addicted to Idolatry, but then they did not deny the Divine Power and Providence, only they imagin'd, that their Idols were the intermediate Cauſes, whereby the Bleſſings of the Supreme God might be convey'd to them; whereas theſe new Comers believ'd the Idols that they worſhipp'd to be true Gods, and had no Conceptions higher. They had no Notion of one eternal, almighty, and independent Being. The God of Iſrael they took to be ſuch an one as their own, a topical God, whoſe Power and Care extended no farther, than to one particular Nation, or People; and therefore, to rectify their Sentiments in this Particular, he took this Method to let them know, that all the Beaſts of the Foreſt were his, and that, whenever he is incens'd with a People, he wants no Inſtruments to execute his Wrath; the Air, the Earth, the Elements, and Creatures of any Kind, can avenge him, and puniſh them. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. ix. c. 14. and Calmet's Commentary.

† Among the great Variety of Conjectures, it is difficult to tell, what we are properly to underſtand by theſe abſtruſe Words. The Jewiſh Doctors will have them to ſignify an Hen and Chickens, but for what Reaſon 'tis hardly conceivable. Others rather think them that celeſtial Conſtellation called Pleiades, which the Babylonians, who were greatly addicted to Aſtronomy, might poſſibly worſhip. Some think them the Name of a City, which the Babylonians built in Samaria; and others, a particular Deity whom they ador'd: But ſince the Words plainly import the Tabernacle of Daughters, or young Maidens, they may be moſt properly referr'd to thoſe infamous Places, where all the young Women were oblig'd, once in their Lives, to proſtitute themſelves to any that aſk'd the Favour, in Honour of the Goddeſs Milytta, who, in other Nations, is called Venus. Herodotus, in Clio, lib. i, gives us an Account of this abominable Cuſtom at large, and 'tis not improbable, that theſe Babylonians might bring it along with them into the Country of Samaria. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word; Selden, de Diis Syris Syntag. ii. c. 7. Voſſius, de Idololat. lib. ii. c. 22. and Jurieu Hiſtoire des Dogmes, &c. Part. iv. c. 8.

† A Province of Aſſyria, which (as ſome ſay) lies upon the Araxes; but others rather think it to be the ſame with Cuſh, which is ſaid by Moſes to be encompaſs'd by the River Gihon, and muſt therefore be the ſame with the Country which the Greeks call Suſiana, and which, to this very Day, is called by the Inhabitants Chuſeſtan. Wells's Geography of the Old Teſtament, Vol. III.

† The Rabbins, who are follow'd therein by ſome other Interpreters, think, that this Deity is worſhipp'd under the Shape of a Woodcock; but; as the Word Ner ſignifies a Lamp, others (with better Reaſon) have imagin'd, that the Cuthites, who were afterwards called Perſians, ador'd Fire, and, in Honour of the Sun, (in the ſame Manner as the Perſians did) kept a perpetual Fire burning upon their Altars. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word, and Patrick's Commentary.

† There are ſeveral Cities and Countries which go under this Name; but what we take here to be meant, is that Province of Syria, that lies upon the Orontes, wherein there was a City of the ſame Name, which when Salmaneſer had taken, he remov'd the Inhabitants from thence into Samaria (at Diſtance enough, as he thought) to prevent their raiſing any freſh Commotion. Calmet's Commentary.

† Some of the Jewiſh Doctors ſay, that this Syrian God was worſhipp'd under the Shape of an Ape; others, of a Lamb; others, of a Goat; others, of a Satyr; and others, in the Figure, wherein the Poets repreſent the God Pan. They, who made an Ape of this Idol-God, ſeem to have ſome Regard to the Sound of the Word Sima, which has an Analogy to the Greek Simia; but the Hebrews, 'tis very well known, have another Word to denote an Ape, which, together with the Goat, was properly an Egyptian Deity. The Syrians, however, ador'd the Sun, under the Appellation of Elah-Gabalah, from whence the Emperor Heliogabalus (who inſtituted that Worſhip with ſo much Magnificence in Rome) took his Name; and therefore, as Aſuman, or Suman, in the Perſian Language, ſignifies Heaven, the Syrians might from hence derive the Name of their God, who was repreſented by a large Stone-Pillar, terminating in a Conick, or Pyramidal Figure, whereby they denoted Fire. Calmet's Commentary, and Dictionary, under the Word, and Tenniſon, of Idolatry.

Avites †, adoring Nibhaz †, and Tartak; and thoſe of Sepharvaim †, proſtrate before Adramalech † and Anamalech; and all this, going on with the Service of the God of Iſrael, made a ſtrange and unaccountable Medley of Religion.

This was the End of the Iſraelitiſh Kingdom, after it had ſubſiſted above two hundred and fifty-ſix Years, and the Beginning of that mungrel People, which went afterwards under the Name of Samaritan. Among the captive Iſraelites, that were carry'd away by Salmaneſer, † we have an Account of Tobit, of the Tribe of Naphtali,

The Story of Tobit and Tobias abridged.

† In Deut. ii. 23. we read of the Avims, but then, in the ſame Text, we are told, that the Caphtorim (which is generally underſtood of the Philiſtines) deſtroy'd them, and lived in their Stead, long before theſe Times; nor does it appear, that the King of Aſſyria ever had under his Subjection the Places, where theſe People are ſaid to have liv'd. The moſt probable Opinion ſeems therefore to be that which the learned Grotius has ſuggeſted, by obſerving, that there are a People in Bactriana, mention'd by Ptolemy, under the Name of Avadiæ, who might poſſibly be thoſe, whom Salmaneſer, at this Time, tranſported into Paleſtine. Wells's Geography of the Old Teſtament, Vol. III.

† What theſe Idols were, 'tis almoſt impoſſible to tell. Our learned Selden, though he thinks they were the ſame Idol, under different Appellations, acknowledges himſelf unable to give any Account of them; for he quite overlooks the Fancy of the Rabbinical Writers, who dreſs up the former in the Shape of a Dog, and the latter, in that of an Aſs. Patrick's Commentary. Jurieu, in his Hiſtoire des Dogmes, &c. Part. iv. c. 10. has obſerv'd, That as the Word Nibhas, or Nibchas, both in the Hebrew and Chaldee, with a ſmall Variation, denotes quick, ſwift, rapid, &c. And Tartak, in the ſame Languages, ſignifies a Chariot: Theſe two Idols may both together denominate the Sun mounted on his Car, as the Fictions of the Poets, and the Notions of the Heathen Theologiſts, were wont to repreſent that bright Luminary.

† Ptolemy makes mention of a City called Zipphara, on the Banks of the River Euphrates, which the Generality of Interpreters take to be this: But, as the ſacred Hiſtory tells us, that the Iſraelites were tranſlated into the Cities of the Medes, and theſe Medes, in all Likelihood, were brought to ſupply their Places; between Colchis and Media, there are a People, whom Herodotus calls the Saſpires, which may be the ſame with theſe that the Text calls the Sepharvaïtes. Calmet's Commentary.

† The former of theſe, according to the Jewiſh Doctors, was repreſented in the Form of a Mule; ſome ſay a Peacock; and the latter, in the Form of an Horſe; ſome ſay a Pheaſant: But the Definition of the Words, as well as the Sacrifices that were made to them, quite deſtroys theſe Idol-Fancies. Molock, Milcom, and Melech, in the Languages of different Nations, do all ſignify a King, and are put for the Sun, which is called the King, as the Moon is the Queen of Heaven: And therefore the Addition of Addir to the one, which denotes powerful, and of Anna to the other, which ſignifies to anſwer, means no more than the mighty, or the oracular Moloch; as the Children, which were offer'd to him in Sacrifice, ſhew, that he was the ſame with the Moloch of the Ammonites, or the Saturn of the Phœnicians. Calmet's and Patrick's Commentaries.

† This Account we have here inſerted in the ſacred Hiſtory, not that we look upon the Book of Tobit as canonical, (for that the Jews and antient Chriſtians never held it to be, though the Church of Rome, by a Decree of the Council of Trent, thought fit to receive it as ſuch) but purely, becauſe it has been allow'd by the Generality of Chriſtian Fathers, to be a true Hiſtory of this particular Family, a good Exemplar of Charity and Beneficence, and an excellent Pattern of paternal Care, and filial Obedience. The Book itſelf is ſuppos'd to have been wrote, the former Part of it, by Tobit, and the latter, by his Son; at leaſt it is thought, that they left behind them Memoirs of their Family, and ſuch Materials, as a later Author, who liv'd very likely either in, or after the Captivity (becauſe the Words Raphael, Gabriel, and Michael are allow'd to be Babyloniſh) might compile, and digeſt into proper Order. It is not doubted, but that the Original of this Book was either in Hebrew, or Chaldee. St Jerom, having met with a Chaldee Copy of it, did not queſtion but that he had got the Original, and, accordingly, employ'd a Man, that was perfectly well ſkilled in that Language, to render it into Hebrew, whilſt himſelf tranſlated it into Latin; and this is the Verſion that the Church of Rome chiefly eſteems. Before this Verſion, there was another (which is reckon'd the moſt ancient) done into Greek; but who the Author of it was, or from what Language he tranſlated it, we have but ſmall Foundation for Conjecture; though ſome have been apt to think, that it came from the ſame Fountain from whence St Jerom had his, but that the Tranſlator had taken ſuch Freedoms with the Text, as oblig'd him to re-tranſlate it. The Latin Tranſlation, which was in Uſe before St Jerom's appear'd, ſeems to have been taken from the Greek, tho' in many Places it varies from it, by abridging ſometimes, and ſometimes amplifying the Narration. The Hebrew Copies, publiſh'd by Fagius and Munſter, are nothing but Tranſlations (and thoſe very modern ones) from the Greek or Latin Verſions, tho' in many Places of the Book, they take the Freedom to vary from them. That of Munſter is ſuppos'd to have been done by himſelf, and that of Fagius by the Jews of Conſtantinople, in the Year 1517, and has ſo near a Conformity to the Greek, that no Manner of Doubt is to be made of its being deſcended from thence. Theſe are the ſeveral Verſions that we have of this Book of Tobit, which, as it was not receiv'd into the Canon of the Jews, was not therefore admitted into that of the antient Chriſtian Authors, who confin'd themſelves to thoſe Books, which the Jews acknowledg'd to be canonical. 'Tis certain, that neither Joſephus, nor Philo, nor any of the ancient Jewiſh Writers make any Mention of that Copy, which St Jerom took ſo much Pains about, nor do they regiſter it among their ſacred Books. Fagius pretends, that this Book of Tobit does not contain a true Hiſtory, but a pious Fiction only, wherein, under borrow'd Names, the Characters of a Father and a Son, truly pious, are ſet forth; and our learned Prideaux ſeems to go farther, when he tells us, " That there are ſome Matters in it, which are not ſo re-

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

Napthali, (a) who marry'd one Anna, a Woman of the ſame Tribe, and by her had but one Son, whoſe Name was Tobias: That, during his Captivity, he was advanc'd to be Purveyor to King Salmaneſer, and, in that Capacity, had Liberty to go where he pleas'd, which gave him an Opportunity of viſiting his Brethren, and doing them all good Offices, of ſupplying their Wants, and lending them Money upon any Occaſion, as he did to one Gabriel, a Kinſman of his, who liv'd at Rages in Media, to the Sum of ten Talents, for which he took his Note: That, by a Revolution of Fortune himſelf being reduc'd to a low Condition, depriv'd of his Eye-Sight, and now advanc'd in Years, he order'd his Son to go to Rages, to fetch the Money he had left in his Kinſman's Hands; and, becauſe it was proper to have a Companion in ſo long a Journey, he hir'd a young Man (as he thought) to be his Guide, but who, afterwards, prov'd to be the Angel Raphael: That, coming to their Inn one Night upon the Banks of the Tigris, Tobias went into the River to waſh his Feet, when a large Fiſh made at him, as tho' it would devour him; but the Angel encourag'd him to lay hold on it, and draw it to the Shore, and then bad him open it, and take out the Heart, the Gall, and the Liver; for that the Heart and Liver, when burnt, would drive away evil Spirits, and the Gall was an excellent Remedy for all Impediments in the Sight: That, when they came to Ecbatana, they went to one Raguel, a near Relation of Tobit's, who had an only Daughter, nam'd Sara, but her Misfortune was to be haunted by a Dæmon, who had ſlain her ſeven Huſbands ſucceſſively, the very firſt Night they went to Bed to her: That, notwithſtanding this, by the Perſuaſion of the Angel, Tobias was induc'd to marry her, and, by following his Advice how he and his Wife were to conduct themſelves after Marriage, and in what Manner they were to fumigate the Room by burning the Liver of the Fiſh, came off ſafe, to the great Joy of the whole Family: That, having receiv'd the Money at Rages, he return'd with his Wife, to his Parents at Nineveh; and, upon his Return, cur'd his Father of his Blindneſs, by rubbing his Eyes with the Fiſh's Gall, which brought away a Kind of white Film, that obſtructed his Sight: That, after this Recovery of his Sight, Tobit liv'd about forty Years; but having all along charg'd his Son (as ſoon as he and his Wife were dead) to leave Nineveh, becauſe the Wickedneſs of the People, he was ſure, would bring upon it the Judgment, which Jonah had denounc'd, Tobias (as ſoon as he had done his laſt Duty to his Parents) left the Place, and, with his Wife and Family, return'd to Ecbatana, where he found his Father and Mother-in-Law healthy, tho' now grown old. Upon their Death he ſucceeded to their Eſtate; and after he had liv'd to the Age of fourſcore and nineteen, dy'd in Peace, and was bury'd by his Children. But it is Time now to look back upon the Affairs of the Kingdom of Judah.

Jotham's good and proſperous Reign, over Judah.

St. Jerom acknowledges, that though they did not receive it into their Canon, yet they admitted it among their Hagiographa. Grotius owns, that they read this Book, and look'd upon it as a true Hiſtory; and our own Prideaux confeſſes, that it is of great Uſe to repreſent to us the Duties of Charity and Patience, in the Example of Tobit's ready helping his Brethren in their Diſtreſs, to the utmoſt of his Power; and his bearing, with a pious Submiſſion, the Calamities of his Captivity, Poverty, and Blindneſs, as long as they were inflicted on him. Calmet's Preface, ſur le Livre de Tobie, and Prideaux's Connection, Anno 612.

He (b) was a Prince † famous for all excellent Qualities and Virtues; a Man exemplary for his Reverence to God, his Juſtice to Man, and his Care for the Commonwealth. He made it his Buſineſs, to ſet and keep Things in Order; to rectify whatever he found amiſs; and, in Matters of Religion, would have made a thorough Reformation, but that his People were extremely wicked, and obſtructed his Deſigns. He took care notwithſtanding, to repair the Temple; to rebuild the High-Gate, which led from his Palace; and (to ſecure himſelf againſt hoſtile Incurſions) rais'd ſeveral Structures, both in the Mountains and Foreſts, for the Service and Strength of the Kingdom.

The Moabites however, tho' they had been formerly conquer'd by David, and made tributary to the Crown of Judah, were now become ſo powerful, that they invaded Jotham; but he, with a good Body of Men, ſoon drove them out of his Country, and impos'd on them a Tribute of an hundred Talents of Silver, ten Thouſand Meaſures of Wheat, and as many of Barley, to be paid him yearly. For three Years they continu'd to pay it; but when Rezin King of Syria, and Pekah King of Iſrael, enter'd into a Confederacy againſt Judah, they took this Opportunity of revolting; and Jotham indeed had his Hands too full ever to attempt to reduce them. He however dy'd in Peace, before the Preparations for War, that were making againſt him, took Effect: And, being bury'd in the royal Sepulchre of his Anceſtors, left his Son Ahaz, (who was then about twenty Years of Age, but much degenerated from his Father's Piety) under a fearful Apprehenſion of the approaching War.

Ahaz's wicked and troubleſome Reign. The two Signs vouchſafed him.

The Deſign of the two confederate Kings, upon taking of Jeruſalem, was to have extirpated the whole Houſe of David, and ſet up a new King over Judah, the Son of Tabeal †; but, as God's Deſign was only to puniſh Ahaz, and not to cut off the whole Family of David his Servant, he ſent the Prophet Iſaiah to encourage him in the Defence of the City, and (to aſſure him, that they ſhould not ſucceed in their Attempt) he gave them two Signs, the one to be accompliſh'd ſpeedily, and the other at ſome Diſtance of Time. The former was, (c) that the Son which the Prophet then had by his Wife, ſhould not be of Age to diſcern between Good and Evil, before both theſe Kings ſhould be cut off from the Land. The other was, that a Virgin (d) ſhould conceive, and bear a Son, who ſhould be called Emanuel, ſo that he might reſt himſelf ſatisfy'd; becauſe the Deſtruction of the Houſe of David could in no Caſe happen, until the Meſſiah ſhould be born, in this miraculous Manner, of a Virgin deſcended from that Family: And, accordingly, the two Kings, finding themſelves not able to carry the Town ſo ſoon as they expected, rais'd the Siege and return'd home.

His Idolatry, and the ſeveral Invaſions of his Kingdom.

This Deliverance however made no other Impreſſion upon Ahaz, than that, inſtead of being reform'd, he grew more wicked, and obdurate in his Sins. For he not only ſet up the Worſhip of the Golden-Calves, (for which he had not the ſame politick Reaſon, that the Kings of Iſrael had)

(b) Joſephus's Jewiſh Antiquities, lib. ix. c. 11.

† Solomon Jarchi here obſerves, that all the Kings of Judah had ſome Crime or other laid to their Charge, except this Jotham. That David himſelf ſinn'd grievouſly in the Matter of Uriah; that Solomon by his Wives was drawn into Idolatry; that Rehoboam forſook the Law of the Lord, and Abijah walk'd in his Steps; that Aſa ſent the Treaſures of the Temple to the King of Syria, and put the Prophet in the Stocks; that Jehoſhaphat enter'd into Society with the Idolatrous; and ſo he goes on with all the reſt: But in Jotham, ſays he, there is no Fault found, (which, in an Age of general Corruption, is pretty wonderful) unleſs we may ſuppoſe, that the People's ſacrificing and burning Incenſe ſtill on High-Places, 2 Kings xv. 35. (which he, by his Anthority, might have remov'd) be imputable to him as a Fault. Patrick's Commentary.

† Who this Perſon was, it is no where ſaid in Scripture; but he ſeems to have been ſome potent and factious Jew, who, having revolted from his Maſter the King of Judah, excited and ſtirr'd up this War againſt him, out of an ambitious Aim of plucking him down from the Throne, and reigning in his Stead. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 747.

had) but made molten Images likewiſe for all the inferior Gods of the Heathens. To theſe he ſacrific'd, and burnt Incenſe in the High-Places, and on the Hills, and under every green Tree. Nay, (and to add to all his other Impieties) made his Sons paſs through the Fire to Moloch *, in the Valley of the Sons of Hinnom †; for which Provocations the Lord brought upon him the ſame confederate Army, the Year following. This, dividing itſelf into three Bodies, the firſt under Rezin King of Syria, the ſecond under Pekah King of Iſrael, and the third under Zichri a mighty Man of Ephraim, invaded his Kingdom in three different Parts, at the ſame Time.

REZIN took Elah †, out of which he drove the Jews, and ſettled the Edomites in it; and, having loaded his Army with Spoils, and taken a vaſt Number of Captives, return'd to Damaſcus. Pekah, with his Army, march'd directly againſt Ahaz, and gave him a terrible Overthrow, wherein he deſtroy'd no leſs than an hundred and twenty Thouſand of his Men: And Zichri, taking Advantage of this Victory, march'd to Jeruſalem; and, having taken the royal City, ſlew Maaſeiah the King's Son, and all the great Men of the Kingdom, whom he found there. After this, both theſe Armies of Iſrael, in their Return, carry'd with them vaſt Spoils, and above two hundred Thouſand Captives, whom they intended to have ſold for Slaves: But as they approach'd Samaria, the Prophet Oded, with the principal Inhabitants of the City, came out to meet them, and, after proper Remonſtrances of their Cruelty to their Brethren, prevail'd with them, not only to releaſe the Priſoners, but to let them likewiſe be cloath'd, and reliev'd out of the Spoils they had taken, and ſo ſent back to their own Houſes.

THE Kingdom of Judah was no ſooner deliver'd from theſe Enemies, but it was invaded by others, who treated it with the ſame Cruelty: For the Edomites to the South, and the Philiſtines to the Weſt, ſeiz'd on thoſe Parts, which lay contiguous to them, and, by Ravages and Inroads, did all the Miſchief they could to the reſt.

* Interpreters are agreed, that this paſſing through the Fire was perform'd, either by cauſing the Child to paſs between two Fires made near one another, by Way of its Conſecration to the Service of Moloch, or by putting it in the Body of the Idol made of Braſs, and heated extremely hot, ſo that it was immediately burnt to Death. But then, to abate the Horror of the Crime, ſome are of Opinion, that Ahaz made his Sons paſs through the Fire, in the former Senſe only, and that becauſe we find Hezekiah ſurvive, and ſucceed him in the Throne, and another of his Sons, viz. Maaſeiah, ſlain by Zichri, at his Taking of Jeruſalem; but this does not hinder Ahaz from having other Sons, not mention'd in the Hiſtory, whom he might make Sacrifices to Moloch. The Scripture ſays expreſsly, that he made his Sons to paſs through the Fire, according to the Abominations of the Heathen, whom the Lord caſt out before the Children of Iſrael, 2 Kings xvi. 3. Now, it is inconteſtably true, that the ancient Inhabitants of the Land of Iſrael did frequently imitate the Heathens in theſe Barbarities: They offer'd their Sons and their Daughters unto Devils, and defiled the Land with innocent Blood, which they offer'd unto the Idols of Canaan, Pſal. cvi. 36. Vid. Ezek. xvi. 20, 21. and xxiii. 37, 39. And therefore it is reaſonable to think, that he did the ſame, and that this is recorded againſt him, as an Aggravation of his other Crimes. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

† Hinnom, in all Probability, was ſome eminent Perſon in ancient Times, to whom this Valley belong'd, and to whoſe Poſterity it deſcended, and is therefore ſometimes called the Valley of the Children of Hinnom. It was a famous Plot of Ground on the Eaſt-ſide of Jeruſalem, and ſo delightfully ſhaded, that it invited the People to make it a Place of idolatrous Worſhip, whereby it became infamous, and was, at laſt, turn'd into a publick Dunghil, or Receptacle, where all the Filth and Excrements of the City were brought and burnt; for which Purpoſe, there was a perpetual Fire kept, which made it a Kind of Image, or Repreſentation of Hell. Patrick's Commentary on Joſh. xv. 8.

† Elah, or Elam, (as we took Notice before) was a famous Port on the Red-Sea, which David, in his Conqueſt of the Kingdom of Edom, took, and there eſtabliſh'd a great Trade to divers Parts of the World. In the Reign of Jehoram the Son of Jehoſhaphat, the Edomites recover'd their Liberty, and became ſole Maſters of this City, until the Time, that Uzziah recover'd it to the Dominion of Judah, 2 Kings xiv. 22. but, in the Reign of Ahaz, the Syrians retook it, and reſtor'd it to the Edomites: And why they choſe to do this, rather than keep ſo advantageous a Place in their own Poſſeſſion, we may learn from what we read of the Edomites, 2 Chron. xxviii. 17. viz. that they invaded Judah, as Auxiliaries to the King of Syria, much about the Time, that he was engag'd in War with that Kingdom, and therefore it is no Wonder, that he ſhould give up a Place, which lay at too great a Diſtance for him to keep, to the Edomites, whoſe originally it was, and who made perhaps the Reſtitution of it one Article of their Confederacy with him, Patrick's and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

Affairs, Ahaz ſent an Embaſſy to Tiglath-Pileſer King of Aſſyria, with a large Preſent of all the Gold and Silver, that he could find in the Treaſury of the Temple, and as large Promiſes, to become his Vaſſal and Tributary for ever, if he would but ſend Forces to his Aſſiſtance againſt his Enemies.

The King of Aſſyria readily laid hold on this Invitation; and, marching with a great Army againſt Rezin King of Syria, he ſlew him in Battle; beſieg'd, and took his Capital of Damaſcus; and, having reduc'd the whole Country under his Dominion, tranſplanted the People to Kir, a Place in the Upper-Media, and ſo put an End to the Kingdom of Syria in Damaſcus *, after it had continu'd for nine or ten Generations.

After this, he march'd againſt Pekah; ſeiz'd all that belong'd to Iſrael beyond Jordan; and, having plunder'd the Land of Galilee, proceeded towards Jeruſalem, with an Intent to ſqueeze more Money out of Ahaz, which when he had done, (by making him cut the Veſſels of the Temple to Pieces, and melt them down, to ſatisfy his Avarice) he march'd back to Damaſcus and there winter'd, ‖ without doing him any farther Service. Theſe Indignities, which another Man might have reſented, Ahaz, in his Circumſtances, thought proper to overlook; and not only ſo, but, when he heard that Tiglath-Pileſer was return'd to Damaſcus, he went thither to pay him Homage and Obeiſance, as his Vaſſal and Tributary. While he continu'd at Damaſcus, he happen'd to ſee an idolatrous Altar, of ſo curious a Make and Figure in his Opinion, that he order'd a Model of it to be taken, and ſent to Urijah the High-Prieſt at Jeruſalem, † with Injunctions to have another made, as like it as poſſible; and when he return'd, he remov'd the Altar of the Lord out of its Place in the Temple, and order'd this new one to be ſet up in its Stead, and that Sacrifices, for the future, ſhould be offer'd on it alone.

And grows wickeder and wickeder, till at length he dies.

The Truth is, the more his Miſfortunes came upon him, the greater his Contempt of Almighty God grew; inſomuch, that having

* In the Time of Abraham, Damaſcus was in being; and ſome of the Ancients inform us, that this Patriarch reign'd there immediately after Damaſcus its Founder. Thus much is certain, that one, whom he had made free, and appointed Steward of his Houſe, was of Damaſcus, Gen. xv. 2. at the Time that he purſu'd Chedorlaomer, and the five confederated Kings, as far as Hoba, which lies northward of Damaſcus, Gen. xiv. 15. The Scripture ſays nothing more of this City, until the Time of David, when Hadad, who, according to Joſephus, (Jewiſh Antiq. lib. vii. c. 6.) was the firſt, who took upon him the Title of King of Damaſcus, ſending Troops to the Aſſiſtance of Hadadezer King of Zabah, was himſelf defeated by David, and his Country ſubdu'd. Towards the End of Solomon's Reign, Rezin recover'd the Kingdom of Damaſcus, and ſhook off the Jewiſh Yoke, 1 Kings xi. 23, &c. Some Time after this, Aſa, King of Judah, implor'd the Help of Benhadad King of Damaſcus, againſt Baaſha King of Iſrael, 1 Kings xv. 18. And from his Time the Kings of Damaſcus were generally called Benhadad, till, in this laſt Controverſy with them, Ahaz called in the Aſſiſtance of the King of Aſſyria, who killed their King and carry'd his Subjects into Captivity, according to the Predictions of Iſaiah, chap. vii. 9. and Amos, chap. vii. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

‖ In 2 Chron. xxviii. 20. we read, that Tiglath-pileſer came unto Ahaz, and diſtreſſed, but ſtrengthened him not. And yet, in 2 Kings xvi. 9, it is ſaid, that he did help him; and how then can he be ſaid to have diſtreſs'd him? Very well; for, as he came to his Aſſiſtance againſt the King of Syria, ſo he took Damaſcus, carry'd the People captive, and deliver'd Ahaz from the Power of the Syrians; but this did Ahaz little good, for he help'd him not to recover the Cities, which the Philiſtines had taken from him. He lent him no Forces, nor enabled him to recruit his own; on the contrary, he rather weaken'd him, by exhauſting his Treaſures, and deſtroying Samaria, which open'd a Way for the Invaſion of his Country with more Facility, as it happen'd in the next Reign. For it is no uncommon Thing, even in latter Ages, to hear of Kingdoms, that have called in the Help of ſome foreign Prince againſt their Enemies over-run and conquer'd by thoſe, who came to their Aſſiſtance. Patrick's Commentary.

† It muſt not be deny'd indeed, but that the High-Prieſt carry'd his Complaiſance much too far, in obeying the King's Injunction, which he ought, with all his Power and Intereſt, to have oppos'd. God preſcrib'd to Moſes in what Form, and with what Materials, he was to make the Altar, Exod. xxvii. 1, &c. The Altar, which Solomon made, was indeed four Times as large, 2 Chron. iv. 1. but then, God had given ſuch ſolemn Teſtimony of his Approbation of it, that there was no touching it without Impiety: For the High-Prieſt could not but know, that this Innovation of the King's did not proceed from any Principle of Religion, but from a Deſign to degrade the Altar of the Lord, as well as the other ſacred Veſſels of the Temple. But what ſhall we ſay for this? There will, in all Ages, be ſome Men found, who will be ready to execute the moſt impious Commands, that can poſſibly come from the Throne. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

having defac'd † ſeveral of the moſt ſtately Veſſels of the Temple, he caus'd it at laſt to be wholly ſhut up; and, ſuppreſſing all Divine Worſhip throughout the Kingdom, in the Room thereof he ſet up the Worſhip of the Gods of the Syrians †, and of other Nations, alledging, that they had help'd their reſpective People; whereas his God, forſooth, had forſaken him, and therefore deſerved no farther Homage. But, in the Height of all his Impiety and Profaneneſs, he was cut off by a ſudden Stroke, in the very Prime of his Age, after he had liv'd ſix and thirty, and reign'd ſixteen Years; and, being bury'd in the City of David, tho' not in the royal Sepulchres, (for that Honour he was deny'd, becauſe of his Iniquities) he was ſucceeded by his Son Hezekiah, who was a worthy and religious Prince.

Hezekiah's happy Reign, and Reformation of Religion.

‖ IN the five and twentieth Year of his Age, Hezekiah began to reign; and, after he had got the full Poſſeſſion of the Kingdom, (for during his Father's Illneſs he acted only as Vice-Roy under him) he began, in good Earneſt, to † ſet about a thorough Reformation of Religion. To this Purpoſe he cauſ'd the Doors of the Temple, which his Father had order'd to be ſhut up, to be open'd; his Father's new Altar to be remov'd; the Altar of the Lord to be reſtor'd to its Place again; and whatever other Pollutions it had contracted during his Father's Adminiſtration, he order'd them all to be purg'd, and done away. Then, calling the Prieſts and Levites together, he requir'd them to ſanctify themſelves, according to the Directions of the Law; and, after that, the former he appointed to offer Sacrifices †, in order to atone for the King's, their own, and the People's Sins; and the latter, † with muſical Inſtruments, to ſing Praiſes to God, in the Words of David †, and of Aſaph the Seer.

† The Words in the Text, according to our Tranſlation, are, Ahaz cut off the Borders of the Baſes, and remov'd the Laver from off them, and took down the Sea from off the Brazen Oxen, that were under it, and put it upon a Pavement of Stones, and the Covert for the Sabbath, that they had built in the Houſe, and the King's Entry without, turned he from the Houſe of the Lord, for the King of Aſſyria, 2 Kings xvi. 17, 18. His removing the Baſes, the Laver, and the Brazen Sea, was palpably with a Deſign to deface the Service of God in the Temple, and thence to bring it into publick Contempt; but then Commentators are much at a Loſs, to know what we are to underſtand by the Covert for the Sabbath within, and the King's Entry without the Temple. Now the Prophet Ezekiel tells us expreſly, that the Gate of the inner Court, which looked towards the Eaſt, was open'd only on the Sabbath, and on the Day of the New-Moon, and that, in theſe Days, the King was to enter into the Temple at this Gate, and continue at the Entrance of the Prieſts Court (where was the Brazen Scaffold, which Solomon erected, 2 Chron. vi. 13. a Place for the King to pay his Devotions on) until his Sacrifices were offer'd; and, if ſo, the Muſack, which we tranſlate Covert, might be a kind of Canopy, or other cover'd Place under which the King ſat, when he came to the Service of the Temple, on the Sabbath, or other great Solemnities, which was therefore called the Covert of the Sabbath: And the Reaſon, why the King order'd this to be taken away, was, becauſe he intended to trouble himſelf no more with coming to the Temple, and by this Action to expreſs his Hatred likewiſe, and Contempt of the Sabbath. Calmet's and Patrick's Commentaries, and Spencer, de Leg. Hebræor. lib. i. c. 1.

† This was a monſtrous Stupidity, to think, that theſe Gods had any Power over him, who could not defend themſelves from the Arms of Tiglath-pileſer! Thinking however, that they had diſtreſs'd him, he ſacrific'd to them, in order to appeaſe their Wrath, that they might do him no farther Hurt; in the ſame Manner, as the antient Romans were wont to bribe the Gods of their Enemies, with larger Sacrifices than ordinary, in Hopes of bringing them over to their Party, and making them their Friends. Patrick's Commentary.

‖ Of Ahaz it is recorded, that he was but twenty Years old, when he began to reign, and that he reigned ſixteen, before he dy'd, ſo that in the whole he liv'd ſix and thirty Years, 2 Kings xvi. 2. Now his Son Hezekiah is ſaid to have been five and twenty Years old, when he began to reign, 2 Kings xviii. 2. and conſequently, his Father muſt have begot him, when he was eleven Years old, which ſeems a little incredible: And, to ſolve this Difficulty, Commentators have taken ſeveral Ways. Some have imagin'd, that Hezekiah was not the real, but adopted Son only of Ahaz, and might therefore ſucceed his Foſter-Father, at this, or any other Age: But this Hypotheſis (as Bochart obſerves) ſpoils the Deſcent of our Saviour from David. Others ſuppoſe, that there was an Interregnum for ſome Years, occaſion'd by a Sedition, that happen'd in Jeruſalem: But there is no Foundation for this Hypotheſis in Hiſtory; on the contrary, it is much more likely, that, as Hezekiah was a Man grown, and greatly belov'd by the People, he ſhould immediately ſucceed upon his Father's Demiſe. Others again imagine, that, in Deteſtation of Ahaz's Wickedneſs, his Reign is omitted on this Account, and that therefore the Paſſage ſhould be thus render'd: Ahaz was twenty Years old, when his Father began to reign: But this is reverſing the Order of Words in the Text, and turning them into a Senſe that is far from being natural. Others, not ſatisfy'd with any of theſe Solutions, will needs have it, that there is an Error crept into the Text itſelf by the Negligence of ſome Tranſcribers, who, inſtead of twenty, made Hezekiah five and twenty Years old, when his Reign commenc'd, merely by miſtaking the numerical Letters: But it is not ſo well, even in numerical Matters, (which are moſt liable to Variation) to find any Fault with the Text, except where there is no other tolerable Solution, which is not the Caſe here. In theſe Days, and long before, it was no unuſual Thing (upon ſeveral Conſiderations) for Kings to take the Son, who was to ſucceed them, into Partnerſhip with them before they dy'd. Now Ahaz, by his Miſmanagement, had brought himſelf into ſo many Intanglements, (2 Chron. xxviii. 16, &c. and xxix. 7, &c.) as to want an Aſſiſtant in the Government, and, accordingly, it appears that he admitted his Son in that Capacity. For, whereas it is ſaid of Hezekiah, that he began to reign in the third Year of Hoſhea Son of Elah, 2 Kings xviii. 1. and of Hoſhea, that he began to reign in the twelfth Year of Ahaz, 2 Kings xvii. 1. it is evident, that Hezekiah began to reign in the fourteenth Year of Ahaz, his Father, and ſo reign'd two or three Years before his Father's Death. So that, at the firſt Date of his Reign (which was in Conjunction with his Father) he might be but two or three and twenty, and his Father, conſequently, when he begot him, two or three Years older than the common Computation. But there is another Way of ſolving this Difficulty. It is a common Thing, both in ſacred and profane Authors, in the Computation of Time, to take no Notice, whether the Year they mention be perfect or imperfect, whether finiſh'd or but newly begun. Upon this

His renewing the Paſſover, and demoliſhing Idolatry.

HAVING thus reſtor'd the Service of the Temple, he propoſ'd with himſelf to revive the Paſſover, which, by Reaſon of the Diviſion of the Kingdom, and the frequent Commotions that had happen'd thereupon, had not been regularly obſerv'd for a long while. To this Purpoſe he adviſ'd with the Princes, and chief Men of the Kingdom; and, becauſe it was thought, that neither the Temple, the Prieſts, nor the People could be ſufficiently ſanctify'd, againſt the uſual Time of obſerving it, (which was in the firſt Month of the Year) this Account Ahaz might be near one and twenty Years old, when he began to reign, and near ſeventeen Years older, when he died: And, on the other Hand, Hezekiah, when he began to reign, might be but juſt entering into his five and twentieth Year, and, by this Means, Ahaz might be near fourteen Years old, when he begat Hezekiah, which is no extraordinary Thing at all. Nay, even upon the loweſt Suppoſition, that he was but eleven or twelve Years old, yet Inſtances are innumerable (ſuch as Bochart and others have given) of Perſons, that have procreated Children at that Age: For it is not ſo much the Number of Years, as the Nature of the Climate, the Conſtitution of the Body, the Stature of the Perſon, the Quality of the Diet, &c. that ought to be conſider'd in this Affair. Bochart's Phaleg. p. 920. Millar's Hiſtory of the Church, p. 201. Bedford's Scripture Chronology. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

† A great Demonſtration this of his ſincere Piety and Zeal towards God, that he began ſo ſoon to reform the Corruption of Religion, and did not ſtay till he had eſtabliſh'd himſelf in his Throne! He might think however, that the ſureſt Way to eſtabliſh himſelf in the Throne, was to eſtabliſh the true Worſhip of God; tho' he could not but foreſee, that he run a great Hazard in attempting the aboliſhing of Idolatry, which had been confirm'd by ſome Years Preſcription. Patrick's Commentary.

† The Words in the Text are, ——— For a Sin-Offering for the Kingdom, i. e. for the King's Sins, and thoſe of his Predeceſſors; for the Sanctuary, for the Prieſts Sins, and the Profanations of the Temple; and for Judah, i. e. for all the People, who have follow'd the bad Examples of their impious Kings. Now the Offering, which the Law preſcrib'd for the Tranſgreſſions of the People, was a young Bullock; and for the Offences of the Prince, was a Goat, Lev. iv. 23, &c. but good Hezekiah, we find, was willing to do more, than the Law commanded. He was ſenſible, that both Prince and People had been guilty, not only of Sins of Ignorance, (for which theſe Sacrifices were inſtituted) but of wilful and preſumptuous Crimes, of groſs Idolatry, a Profanation of the Temple, and an utter Extinction of the Worſhip of God; and therefore he appointed ſeven Bullocks for a Burnt-Offering, and as many Goats for a Sin-Offering, upon Preſumption, that theſe numerous Sacrifices were, if not neceſſary, at leaſt highly fit and becoming, upon the Account of the great and long Neglect of Divine Service, and the Multitude, and long Continuance of their other Offences againſt God, for which they were now to beg Forgiveneſs. Calmet's and Patrick's Commentaries.

† Moſes, in the Service of the Tabernacle, did not appoint the Uſe of any muſical Inſtruments; only he cauſ'd ſome Trumpets to be made, which, upon ſolemn Occaſions, were to be ſounded, at the Time, when the Burnt-Offering and Peace-Offering were upon the Altar, Numb. x. 10. But David, by the Advice of the Prophets, Gad and Nathan, introduc'd ſeveral Kinds of Muſick into the Service of the Temple, as a Thing highly conducive to inſpire People with Reſpect, with Joy, and with Affection for the Solemnities and Aſſemblies of Religion, 1 Chron. xxiii. 5. and xxv. 1. and 'tis farther obſervable, that the Inſtitution of Muſick, in religious Aſſemblies, is not a Matter of human Invention, but what was ordain'd by God, and has the Sanction and Authority of his Prophets to confirm it, for ſo was the Commandment of the Lord by his Prophets, 2 Chron. xxix. 25.

† David was both a great Poet, and Maſter of Muſick, and might therefore modulate, and compoſe his own Hymns; but, whether the Muſick of them might not be alter'd or improv'd in After-Ages (becauſe the Words only are here taken Notice of) is a Matter of ſome Uncertainty. The Aſaph, here mention'd, was the Perſon who liv'd in David's Day's, ſo famous for his Skill in Muſick, and the ſeveral devout Pieces, which he compoſ'd, are thoſe which we meet with in the Collection of the Pſalms; but others will needs have it, (but for what Reaſon I cannot tell) that the Author of the Pſalms, aſcrib'd to Aſaph, was another Perſon, who liv'd in After-Times, tho' perhaps of the ſame Family, as well as Name with this famous Aſaph, who liv'd in David's. Patrick's Commentary.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

Year) it was reſolv'd, that [†] it ſhould be celebrated in the ſecond: And, accordingly, a Proclamation was iſſu'd out, requiring, not only the People of Judah, [†] but all other Iſraelites of whatever Tribe they were, to come to this Solemnity.

IT could hardly be expected, but that, after ſo long a Diſuſe of this holy Feſtival, an Attempt to revive it ſhould meet with ſome Scorn and Oppoſition; and therefore, we need not wonder, that many of the Tribes of Ephraim, Manaſſeh, and Zebulun, ſhould laugh at Hezekiah's Meſſengers, when they invited them to this Feaſt. Great Multitudes however, even from theſe Parts, came to Jeruſalem upon this Occaſion; and the Concourſe indeed was ſo numerous, that this might be juſtly reckon'd one of the greateſt Paſſovers, that had been ſolemniz'd from the Days of King Solomon. The Time, which the Law directs for the Continuance of this Feaſt, is ſeven Days; but, for aſmuch as it had been long neglected, they now doubled the Time, and kept it for fourteen, with great Joy and Gladneſs of Heart: And as ſoon as the Solemnity was ended, thoſe, that belong'd to the Tribes of Judah and Benjamin [†], went, and brake the Images in Pieces, cut down the Groves, threw down the High-Places, and Altars belonging to ſtrange Gods, and abſolutely deſtroy'd all the Monuments of Idolatry, which were any where to be found, either in Jeruſalem, Judea, or any of the Coaſts belonging to them; as thoſe of the other Tribes, in their Return home, did the ſame in all the reſt of Iſrael; ſo that Idolatry was quite aboliſh'd, and the true Worſhip of God again univerſally reſtor'd.

NAY, there was one Thing, viz. the Brazen Serpent [†], which might have been of of innocent Uſe, and ſerv'd, in the ſame Manner as did the Pot of Manna, and Aaron's Rod, for a Monument of God's miraculous Mercy to the Iſraelites in their Paſſage through the Wilderneſs; but, becauſe the preceding Times of Iniquity had made it an Object of idolatrous Worſhip, Hezekiah thought proper to deſtroy it, in order to take away all Occaſion of the like Abuſe for the future. Having thus remov'd all the Objects of Idolatry, he took care, in the next Place, to reſtore the Temple-Worſhip to its antient Splendor and Purity. To this Purpoſe he put the Prieſts and Levites in their Courſes, and appointed every one his proper Miniſtration. The Tithes and Firſt-Fruits, which idolatrous Princes had detain'd, on Purpoſe to bring the Prieſthood into Poverty, and thence into Contempt, he return'd to the Church; and, † out of his own privy Purſe, (as we ſay) order'd the Expence of the daily Oblations, as well as of the larger Offerings on the great Feſtivals of the Year, to be defray'd.

[†] The Direction, which the Law gives, is, —— That the Paſſover ſhould be celebrated on the fourteenth Day of the firſt Month, which the Jews call Niſan; but, becauſe it was found impoſſible, to get all Things in Readineſs againſt that Time, it was judg'd more adviſable to adjourn it to the fourteenth of the next Month, (which the Jews call Jyan) rather than ſtay to the next Year: And for this they had ſome Encouragement; becauſe the Law allows, that, in caſe any Man ſhall be unclean, by Reaſon of a dead Body, or be on a Journey afar off, he may eat the Paſſover on the fourteenth Day of the ſecond Month, Numb. ix. 10, 11, and what was an Indulgence to particular Perſons, they thought might well be allow'd to the whole Congregation of Iſrael. Patrick's Commentary.

[†] Hezekiah, 'tis certain, had no Right to invite Hoſhea's Subjects to repair to Jeruſalem to the Celebration of his Paſſover; yet, for the doing of this, we may well preſume, that he had Encouragement from Hoſhea himſelf, who, as to the Matter of Religion, (as we ſaid before) has a better Character in Scripture, than any of his Predeceſſors from the Diviſion of the two Kingdoms. But the Truth of the Matter was, that both the Golden-Calves (which had made this political Separation) were now taken away, that of Dan, by Tiglath-pileſer, and the other of Bethel, by his Son Salmaneſer; and therefore the Apoſtate Jews, being thus depriv'd of their Idols, began to return to the Lord, and to go up to Jeruſalem to worſhip for ſome Time, before Hezekiah made them this Invitation to his Paſſover. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 729.

[†] This, as the Text tells us, was done, not only in the Tribes of Judah and Benjamin, but in thoſe of Ephraim alſo, and Manaſſeh, 2 Chron. xxxi. 1. which, tho' they were Part of Hoſhea's Dominion, yet Hezekiah might direct this Abolition of Idolatry in them, in Virtue of a Law, which bound Iſrael as well as Judah, and requir'd the Extirpation of theſe Things in the whole Land of Canaan; by the ſpecial Impulſe and Direction of God's Spirit, which puts Men upon heroick Actions, tho' not to be drawn into Imitation; or out of a firm Perſuaſion, that his Neighbour Hoſhea, who had permitted his Subjects to repair to the Paſſover, would approve, and conſent to what he did in this Reſpect. Pool's Annotations.

[†] The Reaſon, which the Scripture aſſigns for Hezekiah's deſtroying this Brazen Serpent, is, —— becauſe, unto this Day, the Children of Iſrael had burnt Incenſe to it, 2 Kings xviii. 4. We are not however to ſuppoſe, that, all along from the Days of Moſes, this Brazen Serpent was made an Object of religious Worſhip: This is what neither David, nor Solomon, in the Beginning of his Reign, would have allow'd of; nor can we think, but that either Aſa, or Jehoſhaphat, when they rooted out Idolatry, would have made an End of this, had they perceiv'd, that the People, at that Time, either paid Worſhip, or burnt Incenſe to it. The Commencement of this Superſtition therefore muſt be of a later Date, and ſince the Time, that Ahab's Family, by being ally'd to the Crown of Judah by Marriage, introduc'd all Kinds of Idolatry. Now one falſe Inducement to the Worſhip of this Image might be a Miſtake of the Words of Moſes. For, whereas it is ſaid, that whoſoever looketh upon it ſhall live, Numb. xxi. 8. ſome might thence fancy, that, by its Mediation, they might obtain a Bleſſing, and ſo make it the Object of their Superſtition at firſt. However, we may imagine that their burning Incenſe, or any other Perfumes before it, was deſign'd only in Honour to the true God, by whoſe Direction Moſes made it; but then, in Proceſs of their Superſtition, they either worſhipp'd the God of Iſrael under that Image, or (what is worſe) ſubſtituted an Heathen God in his Room, and worſhipp'd the Brazen Serpent, as his Image; which they might more eaſily be induc'd to do, becauſe the Practice

His re-eſtabliſhing the Temple-Worſhip, and ſucceſs in War.

UPON theſe, and ſeveral other Accounts, Hezekiah deſerv'd the Title of one of the beſt of Kings, ‖ that ever reign'd in Judah; nor was God, in the leaſt, wanting to reward his Piety in a moſt ſignal Manner. For, while Salmaneſer was engag'd in the Siege of Samaria, he warr'd againſt the Philiſtines, and not only regain'd all the Cities of Judah, which they had ſeiz'd during the Time, that Pekah and Rezin jointly diſtreſs'd the Land, but alſo diſpoſſeſs'd them of almoſt all their own Territories, except Gaza and Gath.

AS ſoon as the Siege of Samaria was over, Salmaneſer ſent to Hezekiah to demand the Tribute, which his Father Ahaz had agreed to pay to the Kings of Aſſyria, but Hezekiah refus'd to pay it; which would doubtleſs have brought the Aſſyrian upon him with all his Power, had he not been diverted by the War * he enter'd into againſt Tyre, and dy'd, before he had put an End to it.

HE was ſucceeded by his Son Sennacherib, who, as ſoon as he was ſettled on the of ſome neighbouring Nations was to worſhip their Gods under the Form of a Serpent. Upon this Account Hezekiah wiſely choſe rather to loſe this Memorial of God's wonderful Mercy to his People in the Wilderneſs, than to ſuffer it any longer to be abus'd to Idolatry, and therefore he brake it in Pieces, i. e. as the Talmudiſts explain it, he ground it to Powder, and then ſcatter'd it in the Air, that there might not be the leaſt Remains of it. And yet, notwithſtanding all the Care, which he took to deſtroy it, Sigonius, in his Hiſtory of Italy, tells us, that, in the Church of St Ambroſe, in Milan, they ſhew a Brazen Serpent entire, which they pretend to be the very ſame, which Moſes erected in the Wilderneſs; tho', it muſt be own'd, that, among their learned Men, there are ſome, who acknowledge the Cheat, and diſclaim it. Le Clerc's Commentary, and Prideaux's Connection, Anno 726.

† After that David had brought the Ark of the Lord into the Tent, which he had pitch'd for it, near his own Palace, the Scripture ſeems to intimate, 1 Chron. xvi. 1. that he divided the Prieſts and Levites into two Bodies; one of which he left at Gibeah, to attend in the Tabernacle, which Moſes made; and the other he took with him to Jeruſalem. And, from this Time, it is highly probable, that out of his own Eſtate he ſupply'd whatever was neceſſary for the ſacred Miniſtry of this his domeſtic Tabernacle, on Mount Sion. When Solomon had built the Temple, he oblig'd himſelf to defray all the Expences, both ordinary and extraordinary, of the Altar, 2 Chron. viii. 13. And, in like Manner, upon the Re building of the Temple, at the Return from the Captivity, Ezekiel aſſigns a proper Revenue to the King, to anſwer the Expence of all Sacrifices, both ſtated, and occaſional, Chap. xlvi. ſo that Hezekiah, in this, did properly no more, than what was incumbent on him; tho' ſeveral of his idolatrous Predeceſſors had doubtleſs withdrawn the Fund appropriated to that Purpoſe, which made it ſo commendable in him to reſtore it to its proper Channels. Calmet's and Patrick's Commentaries.

‖ The Words in the Text are, ——— So that, after him, was none like him amongſt all the Kings of Judah, nor any that were before him, 2 Kings xviii. 5. Now it is plain, that the ſame Commendation is given of Joſiah, viz. that like unto him was there no King before him, which turn'd to the Lord, with all his Heart, &c. neither after him aroſe there any like him, 2 Kings xxiii. 25. So that this Character of Hezekiah muſt relate to ſome particular Virtue, wherein he ſtood diſtinguiſh'd from the reſt of the Kings of Judah, and that was, his truſting in the Lord God of Iſrael, (as it is in the Beginning of the Verſe) and not in the Help of any Foreign Forces, as all the other Kings, (even the moſt renown'd for their Piety) in ſome Meaſure, are known to have done. Calmet's Commentary.

* The King of Tyre, finding the Philiſtines brought low by the War, which Hezekiah had lately made upon them, laid hold on the Opportunity to reduce Gath (which had, ſome Time before, revolted from him) under his Obedience. Hereupon, the People of Gath, applying themſelves to Salmaneſer, engag'd him in their Cauſe againſt the Tyrians. He ſoon took ſeveral of their Cities, and, at length, cloſely beſieg'd their Capital: But, before he could carry the Place, (which held out for five Years) he died, and, by that Means, gave ſome Reſpite to Hezekiah. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 720.

the Throne, renew'd the Demand for the Tribute, and, upon Hezekiah's refuſing to comply, march'd a great Army into Judea, in order to fall upon him.

His Sickneſs and Recovery.

[‡] NOT long before this, Hezekiah was taken with a ſore Illneſs, and had a Meſſage from God by the Prophet Iſaiah, to ſettle his Affairs, and prepare for Death; but, upon his great Concern, and hearty Prayer to God, he obtain'd another Meſſage from him by the ſame Prophet, promiſing him a Reprieve for fifteen Years longer, and a Deliverance from the Aſſyrians, who were then coming againſt him. Both theſe were Events beyond his Expectation; and therefore, to give him a full Aſſurance of Faith, God, at his Requeſt, made the Sun go backward ten Degrees upon the Sun-Dial, that Ahaz had erected; and when (by the Prophet's Directions) a Plaiſter of Figs was apply'd to his Ulcer, he recover'd in the Space of three Days, and went up to the Temple to return God Thanks for ſo wonderful a Deliverance.

Alliance with the King of Babylon.

UPON Hezekiah's Recovery, Merodach-baladan, King of Babylon, ſent Embaſſadors [†] to congratulate him, and, at the ſame Time, to enter into an Alliance with him againſt Sennacherib, whoſe growing Power the Babylonians, as well as the Jews, had Reaſon to fear: And Hezekiah was ſo taken with the Honour done him upon this Occaſion, that, out of the Vanity and Pride of his Heart, he ſhew'd the Embaſſadors all the Wealth [†] and Strength of his Kingdom; for which the Prophet Iſaiah was ſent to reprove him, and to let him know, that a Day would come, when all the Stores, he made ſuch Oſtentation of, ſhould be carry'd into Babylon; which Admonition [‖] he receiv'd in a very decent and humble Manner.

SENNA-

[‡] In the Courſe of the ſacred Hiſtory, this Sickneſs of Hezekiah's is placed immediately after the Defeat, and Death of Sennacherib; whereas it plainly happen'd before that Time, becauſe in the Meſſage which God ſent him upon his Bed of Sickneſs by the Prophet Iſaiah, he promiſes to deliver Jeruſalem out of the Hands of the King of Aſſyria, 2 Kings xx. 6. The Truth of the Matter is——Hezekiah reign'd, in all, nine and twenty Years, 2 Kings xviii. 2. He had already reign'd fourteen Years, when Sennacherib invaded him, 2 Kings xviii. 13. and after his Sickneſs, he continu'd to reign fifteen Years, 2 Kings xx. 6. ſo that his Sickneſs muſt have happen'd in the very ſame Year, that the King of Aſſyria invaded his Kingdom; but the ſacred Penman deferr'd the Account he was to give of that, until he had finiſh'd the Hiſtory of Sennacherib, which he was willing to give the Reader at one View; and this is the true Reaſon of the Miſlocation. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] The Conqueſts, which the Aſſyrians were every where making, could not fail of giving Umbrage to the neighbouring Powers to confederate againſt them; and therefore, we may well ſuppoſe, that, beſides the Buſineſs of congratulating Hezekiah's Recovery, the Purpoſe of this Embaſſy was to enter into an Alliance with him againſt Sennacherib, whoſe growing Power the Babylonians had Reaſon to fear, as well as the Jews; and (as the Author of the Chronicles expreſſes it) to enquire into the Wonder, that was done in the Land, 2 Chron. xxxii. 31. i. e. to enquire about the Miracle of the Sun's Retrogradation, which could not fail of being a Matter of great Curioſity to the Chaldeans, who, above all other Nations, were at that Time given to the Study of Aſtronomy. Calmet's Commentary, and Prideaux's Connection, Anno 713.

[†] The Things, which Hezekiah ſhew'd to the Babylonian Embaſſadors, were the Riches of his Houſe, his Treaſures, his Armory, and all his Stores, and Strength for War; and the Reaſon for his doing this, was doubtleſs to make the Babylonians put the greater Value upon his Friendſhip: But herein he offended God, that he not only laid a Bait before theſe Foreigners to encourage them to invade his Country, but ſeem'd to place more Confidence in this new Alliance with them, than in the Power of the Almighty, whoſe Favour and Protection he had ſo long experienc'd. The Author of the Chronicles tells us, that, in the Buſineſs of the Embaſſadors of the Princes of Babylon, who ſent unto him to enquire of the Wonder, that was done in the Land, God left him to try him, that he might know all that was in his Heart, 2 Chron. xxxii. 31. And from hence ſome have inferr'd, that Hezekiah's great Offence lay, not ſo much in the Oſtentation of his military Stores, and Treaſures, as in his not giving ſufficient Glory to God for ſo ſignal a Miracle, and his Recovery enſuant thereupon, and in his not repreſenting this Matter to theſe idolatrous Embaſſadors, in ſuch powerful and convincing Terms, as might have drawn them over to the Knowledge of the true God, which was the proper Improvement, he ſhould have made of this Divine Vouchſafement to him. Le Clerc's Commentary.

[‖] The Words in the Text are,——Then ſaid Hezekiah unto Iſaiah, Good is the Word of the Lord, which thou haſt ſpoken. And he ſaid, Is it not good, if Peace and Truth be in my Days? 2 Kings xx. 19. The Prophet had told him, that the very People whom he had been ſo highly complimenting, would carry his Poſterity into Captivity; and to return him ſuch an Anſwer as this, ſhews not all the Concern, which a good Prince ought to have for his People and Poſterity. It ſhews indeed, as if he car'd not what become of them, ſo long as he was permitted to live War and Truce, with the King of Aſſyria.

SENNACHERIB, in the mean Time, advanc'd with a mighty Army againſt the fenc'd Cities of Judah, and, having taken ſeveral of them, he came at length, and ſat down before Lachiſh, and threaten'd, after he had taken That, to beſiege even Jeruſalem itſelf. Hereupon Hezekiah, taking Advice of his Princes and chief Counſellors, made all Manner of Preparations for a vigorous Defence. He repair'd the Walls, and fortify'd them with Towers. He provided Darts and Shields in great Abundance, and all other Arms, and Artillery, that might be uſeful, either to defend the Place, or annoy the Enemy. He had the People enrolled that were fit for War, and plac'd over them good Officers, both to inſtruct them in all military Exerciſe, and to head and conduct them, when they were to make their Sallies. He ſtopp'd up the Fountains [*] for a good Compaſs round, and the Brook [†], that paſs'd by the Walls of the City, in order to diſtreſs the Enemy for Want of Water; and, to ſtrengthen himſelf the more againſt them, he enter'd into an Alliance, offenſive and defenſive, with the King of Egypt. But this Alliance the Prophet Iſaiah highly blam'd, as it imply'd a Diffidence of the Almighty's Power to help him, and would redound to his own Shame, and Reproach, and Confuſion at laſt, which accordingly came to paſs. For, while Sennacherib was beſieging Lachiſh, Hezekiah, obſerving that this new Ally of his made no Haſte to come to his Aſſiſtance, and being ſadly ſenſible, that, of himſelf, he was not ſufficient to reſiſt ſo powerful an Adverſary as the King of Aſſyria, ſent Embaſſadors to him, deſiring him to retire out of his Dominions, and promiſing to ſubmit to ſuch Conditions, as he ſhould be pleas'd to impoſe upon him.

The Demand, which Sennacherib made, was the Payment of three hundred Talents [†] of Silver, and thirty Talents of Gold; which Hezekiah was not able to raiſe, without exhauſting all his Treaſures, and ſtripping the very Doors of the Temple of the Gold-Plates, wherewith they were overlaid. This diverted the King of Aſſyria live eaſy and happy. The Words in the Original are to this Effect, That, which thou haſt told me from God, is good: I willingly ſubmit to it: But ſhall Peace and Truth, i. e. ſolid and laſting Peace, continue for my Time? "May I "flatter myſelf with ſo much Happineſs? And will God be ſo gracious, as not to revoke the Grant, which he hath "made me of a longer Continuance here? He is juſt, no doubt, in every Thing he ſends upon us; but do theſe "Threats relate to me, or my Poſterity only? Well were it for me, if he would ſuſpend the Execution of his Wrath, "for the little Time, that I have to live." This is the natural Senſe of Hezekiah's Anſwer, and accordingly, Joſephus makes him ſay, that tho' I am much afflicted at the Thoughts of the Miſery, that will befal my Family; yet ſince it is God's Pleaſure, that it ſhould be ſo, I have no more to beg of Heaven, than that I may enjoy the ſmall Remainder of my miſerable Life in Peace. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. x. c. 3. and Calmet's Commentary.

[*] It is an old Stratagem in War, to diſtreſs an Enemy by the Want of Water; but this is what the Beſiegers do generally practiſe againſt the Beſieged. In this Manner it was Holofernes intended to diſtreſs Bethuliah, Judith vii. and of Semiramis, Cyrus, and Alexander it is reported, that they all took Babylon by diverting the Current of the Euphrates. But Hezekiah here takes another Method. He is for preventing the Aſſyrians from carrying on the Siege of Jeruſalem by intercepting the Water, i. e. by filling up the Fountain-heads with Earth, that the Enemy might not perceive where any Water was; and ſo carrying their Streams through Pipes, and ſubterraneous Channels, into the City, there to be receiv'd in Baſons and large Pools, for the Benefit of the Beſieged: And this he might do with more Facility to himſelf, and Prejudice to the Enemy, becauſe (except the Springs, and Brooks, that were juſt contiguous to the City) the whole Country, (according to Strabo, lib. xvi.) for the Space of ſixty Furlongs round about, was all barren and waterleſs. Le Clerc's Commentary.

[†] This muſt be the Brook Kidron, which ran in a Valley of that Name, between the City and the Mount of Olives, when it had any Water in it; for, except in the Caſe of great Rains, or the Snow's diſſolving from the Mountains, it was generally dry. However, if it had any Fountain-head, by ſtopping up that, and diverting its Current by Conveyances under Ground, Hezekiah might, in like Manner, make it of no Uſe to the Beſiegers. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

[†] The Hebrew Talent, according to Scripture, (Exod. xxv. 39.) contains three hundred Shekels, and every Skekel anſwering to the Value of three Shillings, theſe three hundred Talents of Silver muſt contain, of our Money, one hundred and thirty five Thouſand Pounds; and the thirty Talents of Gold, two hundred and ſixty Thouſand; ſo that whole Sum, here paid by Hezekiah, amounted to three hundred fifty one Thouſand Pounds of our Money. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 713.

[†] RABSHAKEH (for that was the Name of the Perſon, who deliver'd the Demand from the King of Aſſyria) ſpake in the Hebrew Tongue, and in a very inſolent and imperious Manner, to the three Miniſters of State, whom Hezekiah ſent to parly with him, telling them, "That it was in vain for them to truſt in "their God for Help, becauſe his Maſter's Arms had been all along ſo victo-"rious, that the Gods of other Nations "could not reſiſt their Courſe; and much "more vain would it be, to depend on "the King of Egypt for Aſſiſtance, who "was hardly able to ſupport his own Do-"minions, and would certainly [*] fail them, "when they looked for his Aid. Their "wiſeſt Way therefore would be, to ſur-"render the Town to his Maſter, the "great King of Aſſyria, at Diſcretion; "for if they pretended to ſtand a Siege, "(and this he ſpake with a louder Voice "than ordinary, in the Audience of the "People, that were upon the Wall, and "in Hopes of creating a Revolt among "them) his Maſter would diſtreſs them "to ſuch a Degree, that they ſhould be "compelled to eat their own Excrements, "and drink their own Piſs."

[*] What might poſſibly be the Occaſion of a War between two Kingdoms ſo widely diſtant, as Aſſyria and Egypt were, 'tis difficult to know. We have no where any Information from Hiſtory, and are left therefore to conjecture, ——— That, after Salmaneſer had taken away the ten Tribes, and ſent Colonies in their Room, the Tribe of Simeon, which lay neareſt to Egypt, becoming Part of his Dominions, as well as the reſt, the Egyptians might take the Advantage of the Aſſyrians great Diſtance, and make ſome Encroachments upon it. That Sennacherib, when he was come as far as Judea, might take that Opportunity to proceed with his Arms into Egypt, in order to be revenged of Sevechus, the Son of Sabacon, or So, (whom Herodotus calls Sethon) who was, at this Time, King of Egypt, and the chief Pontiff likewiſe of the God Vulcan? And, as he was a weak Prince, the King of Aſſyria gain'd many Advantages over him; but, ſitting down at length before Peluſium, when he had brought his Platforms (as Joſephus tells us) within a little of the Top of the Walls, and was upon the very Point of giving the Aſſault, News was brought him, that Terhakah, King of Ethiopia, was upon his March, with a great Enforcement, to aſſiſt the Egyptians; whereupon he immediately rais'd the Siege, and drew off his Army, which gave Occaſion to the fabulous Account in Herodotus, viz. "That, upon the King's Prayer to his God Vulcan, there came, in one Night, ſuch Troops of Rats into the "Camp of the Aſſyrians, that they gnaw'd all their Bow-ſtrings to Pieces, and ſo, in Effect, diſarm'd the whole Camp "of the Beſiegers, and made them draw off from the Town, with ſo much Precipitation." Le Clerc's Commentary on 2 Kings xxiii. 29. and Jewiſh Antiq. lib. x. c. 1.

[†] Tartan, Rabſaris, and Rabſhakeh are not the proper Names of theſe Men, but rather denote their Employments and Offices. Tartan ſignifies the Preſident of the Cuſtoms; Rabſaris, the chief Eunuch; and Rabſhakeh, the principal Cup-bearer; and, becauſe he ſpake Hebrew with ſome Fluency, the Rabbins are generally of Opinion, that he was either an Apoſtate Jew, or one of the Captivity of Iſrael. 'Tis certain, that he was a very eloquent Man, and his Speech very excellently well calculated to raiſe Sedition, or Defection among the Beſieged; but that a Perſon of his Education ſhould be vers'd in the Phœnician, which is, in a Manner, the ſame with the Hebrew Language, is no Wonder at all. Moreover, had he been a Jew (tho' an Apoſtate) he ſhould have known better, one would think, than to have upbraided Hezekiah with acting according to the Law, under which he liv'd, in deſtroying the Groves and Altars of Idols, and in requiring his Subjects to worſhip God in Jeruſalem only, 2 Kings xviii. 22. Le Clerc's Commentary.

[*] The Words in the Text are, ——— Now behold thou truſteſt upon the Staff of this bruiſed Reed, even upon Egypt, 2 Kings xviii. 21. The Compariſon is excellent, to denote an Ally, that is not only weak and unable to help, but dangerous likewiſe to thoſe that rely upon him for Succour; and his repreſenting the Power of Egypt to be as brittle as the Canes, or Reeds that grow on the Banks of the Nile, (for it is to this, no doubt, that the Aſſyrian Orator alludes) is a great Beauty in the Similitude. This however muſt be allow'd, that what he here ſpeaks, in Contempt of the Egyptian Strength, has more of Oſtentation in it, than Truth; becauſe the Aſſyrian Army, having lately made an Attempt to ſubdue that Kingdom, was now return'd into Judea with Diſgrace. Patrick's, Le Clerc's, and Calmet's Commentaries.

Menaces of the proud Aſſyrian; for that God would ſoon find out a Method to make him depart his Country; which accordingly came to paſs. For News being brought him, that Tirhakah, King of Ethiopia, (or of the Cuthites rather in Arabia) had invaded ſome Part of his Dominions, he immediately rais'd the Siege of Libnah [†], (where he then was) and march'd againſt the Enemy: However, before he rais'd the Siege, he ſent a ſecond Summons to Hezekiah, as inſolent and blaſphemous as the former. This was deliver'd in a Letter; and Hezekiah had no ſooner read it, but he went into the Temple, ſpread it before the Lord, and implor'd of him a Deliverance from this outrageous Enemy; which Iſaiah aſſur'd him he ſhould have, becauſe that the Lord had taken the City of Jeruſalem under his Protection, and would not therefore ſuffer the King of Aſſyria [*] (notwithſtanding all his vain Boaſtings) to come near it.

In the mean Time, the King of Aſſyria, having engag'd the Ethiopian Army, and given them a great Overthrow, was in full March to Jeruſalem, fluſh'd with this freſh Victory, and reſolv'd to deſtroy the Place, and every Soul in it; when, the very Night after that the Prophet had given the King of Judah this Aſſurance, an Angel [†] of the Lord came down into the Camp of the Aſſyrians, and ſmote no leſs than a hundred fourſcore and five Thouſand Men: So that, terrify'd with this Slaughter, Sennacherib made haſte into his own Country, and took up his Reſidence at Nineveh; where he had not been long, before [*] his two eldeſt Sons, Adrammelech and Sharezar, conſpir'd againſt him, and, as he was worſhipping at the Temple of Niſroch *, his God, fell upon him and ſlew him; and afterwards, making their Eſcape into Armenia, gave Room for Eſarhaddon, their younger Brother, to ſucceed in the Throne.

[†] Libnah was not far from Lachiſh, both ſituated on the Mountains of Judea; and 'tis probable, that Sennacherib, not finding himſelf able to carry the latter, had remov'd the Siege to Libnah, which was a Place not ſo well fortify'd in his Opinion, and yet ſo ſituated, that, by keeping a good Guard in the Chops of the Mountains, he might carry on the Siege, without any Fear of Tirhakah's coming upon him. Le Clerc's Commentary.

[*] The Prophet, in his Anſwer to Hezekiah, has given us an admirable Deſcription of the ridiculous Vanity, and Oſtentation of a King puffed up with great Succeſs; By thy Meſſengers thou haſt reproached the Lord, and haſt ſaid, ——— With the Multitude of my Chariots I am come up to the Height of the Mountains, and the Sides of Lebanon; ——— and I will enter into the Lodgings of his Borders, and enter into the Foreſt of his Carmel. I have digged, and drank ſtrange Waters, and, with the Soles of my Feet, have I dried up all the Rivers of beſieged Places, 2 Kings xix. 23, &c. as if he had ſaid, "What can reſiſt the Force of my victorious Arms? Or, where is the Place, that is unacceſſible to the Strength and Activity of theſe Troops? I have ſcaled the Top of the higheſt Mountains with my heavy Chariots of War. I have aſcended even Lebanon itſelf, and, through the moſt difficult Paſſages, have open'd and plain'd myſelf a Way. ——— Who then ſhall hinder me from taking up my Quarters in what Part of Juden I pleaſe, from either climbing up to the Top of Carmel, or from coming down into the fruitful Vales, by making an entire Conqueſt of the Country? At my Call Fountains, even in the drieſt Places, ariſe; at my Beck, the Hills ſubſide, the Rocks divide, and make me a Way; and, at my Approach, the deepeſt Rivers and Ditches run dry; ſo that Reſiſtance is unavailable, and Victory muſt attend my Standard wherever I go, or whatever Enterprize I take in Hand."

Sub pedibus montes, areſcere vidimus amnes. Claud. de Bello Gallico.

[†] The antient Jews (as well as Perſians and Arabians) were of Opinion, that there is an Angel of Death, or an exterminating Angel, to whom God has given Commiſſion to take away the Lives, either of ſingle Perſons, or of Multitudes of People at once, wherein the Almighty gives the Order, but leaves the Method of doing it to the Diſcretion of the Angel; ſo that, in which Way ſoever the Infliction is made, it is always ſaid to be done by the Angel of God. The modern Jews are much of the ſame Opinion: For they maintain, that this Angel of Death ſtands at every dying Man's Bed's head, with a naked Sword in his Hand, at the Extremity of which there hang three Drops of Gall, and that the ſick Perſon, ſeeing this Angel, in a great Fright opens his Mouth, whereupon he immediately drops into it theſe three fatal Drops; the firſt of which occaſions his Death; the ſecond makes him pale and livid; and the third reduces him to the Duſt in the Grave, with ſome other Notions of the like Nature. Now, ſince the Scripture has no where ſaid expreſly, in what Manner this Aſſyrian Army was deſtroy'd, ſome have thought, that it was by a Plague; others, by Thunder and Lightning; others, by Fire from Heaven; others, by a ſcorching Wind; others, by their falling foul upon one another in the Obſcurity of the Night; but which Way ſoever it was effected, according to the Hebrew Idiom there is no Impropriety in ſaying, that it was done by a deſtroying Angel, which is a comprehenſive Phraſe, that reconciles all the Scripture-Paſſages, wherein this terrible Defeat is mention'd, and all the Sentiments of Commentators concerning it. Calmet's Diſſert. ſur la Défaite de l'Armée de Sennacherib.

[*] When Sennacherib was got home, after the Loſs of ſo great an Army, he demanded of ſome about him, What the Reaſon might be, that the irreſiſtible God of Heaven ſo favour'd the Jewiſh Nation? To which he was anſwer'd, That While Hezekiah lives, and dies in Peace.

AFTER this ſignal Defeat of the Aſſyrian Army, Hezekiah liv'd, the Remainder of his Days, in Peace and Tranquillity, being both honour'd and rever'd by all neighbouring Nations, who, by this, and ſeveral more Inſtances perceiv'd, that he was under the immediate Protection of God, and were therefore afraid to give him any Moleſtation. So that, being at Reſt from Wars, he apply'd his Thoughts to the good Government of his People, and the Improvement of the City of Jeruſalem, by erecting Magazines, and filling them with Arms, and by making a new Aqueduct, which was of great Convenience to the Inhabitants for the ſupplying them with Water. At length, after a Courſe of great and worthy Actions, he dy'd, in the twenty-ninth Year of his Reign, and was bury'd, with great Solemnity, † in the moſt honourable Place of the Sepulchres of the Sons of David. Happy in every Thing elſe, except in being ſucceeded by a Son, whoſe Name was Manaſſeh, and who, in the Beginning of his Reign more eſpecially, prov'd the very worſt of all his Race.

Manaſſeh's Wickedneſs, in the Beginning of his Reign.

MANASSEH was but a Minor of twelve Years old, when he ſucceeded to the Crown; and, as he had the Misfortune to fall into the Hands of ſuch Guardians and Chief Miniſters, as were ill-affected to his Father's Reformation, they took all the Care imaginable to breed him up in the ſtrongeſt Averſion to it, and to corrupt his Mind with the worſt of Principles, both as to Religion, and Government. For he not only worſhipp'd Idols, reſtor'd High-Places, and erected Altars unto Baal; but, in the Room of the Ark of the Covenant, ſet up an Idol even in the Sanctuary itſelf, made his Children paſs through the Fire to Moloch, practis'd Witchcrafts and Enchantments, and conſulted Soothſayers, and ſuch Perſons, as dealt with Familiar Spirits.

NOR was he content to practiſe theſe Abominations himſelf, but, being naturally of a cruel Temper, he rais'd bitter Perſecutions againſt thoſe, who would not conform. The Prophets *, who were ſent to reprove him, he treated with the utmoſt Contempt and Outrage, and filled, in ſhort, all the Land with innocent Blood, which

That Abraham, from whom they were deſcended, by ſacrificing his only Son to him, had purchas'd his Protection to his Progeny; whereupon the King reply'd, If that will win him, I will ſpare him two of mine to gain him to my Side; which, when his two Sons, Sharezer and Adrammelech, heard, they reſolv'd to prevent their own Death by ſacrificing him. But for all this Fiction there is no other Foundation, but that ſcarce any Thing elſe can be thought of, that can afford any Excuſe for ſo wicked a Parricide. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 709.

[*] Some take this God to be the Figure of Noah's Ark; others of a Dove, which was worſhipp'd among the Aſſyrians; and others, of an Eagle. The Hebrew of Tobit, publiſh'd by Munſter, calls it Dagon; but Selden acknowledges, that, in all his Reading, he never met with any Thing that could help him to explain it. Jurieu however ſeems to be more lucky in his Enquiries; for, by ſeveral Arguments, he has made it appear, that this Idol was Jupiter Belus, the Founder of the Babyloniſh Empire, who was worſhipp'd under the Form of an Eagle; and therefore, he obſerves farther, that, as this Belus in profane Hiſtory was the ſame with the Nimrod of Moſes, between Nimrod and Niſroch the Diſſimilitude is not great, nor is it improbable, that, to perpetuate his Honour, his Votaries might change the Name of Nimrod, which ſignifies a Rebel, into that of Niſroch, which denotes a young Eagle. Patrick's Commentary, and Jurieu Hiſtoire des Dogmes, &c. Part iv. c. 11.

[†] In the innermoſt and chiefeſt of the Rooms of the Royal Sepulchres of the Houſe of David, was the Body of Hezekiah placed in a Nich, which, in the upper End of the Room, was very likely at that Time cut on Purpoſe for it, to do him the greater Honour. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 699.

[*] The Prophets, who are ſuppos'd to have been living in this King's Reign, were Hoſhea, Joel, Nahum, Habakkuk, ſome ſay, Obadiah; and, who was the greateſt Prophet of them all, Iſaiah. In the late Reign he was in great Eſteem at Court, and being himſelf of the Blood Royal, and (as ſome ſay) the King's Father-in-law, he thought it more incumbent upon him to endeavour to reclaim him from his degenerate wicked Courſes: But this ſo exaſperated him againſt Iſaiah, that, inſtead of hearkening to his Remonſtrances, he caus'd him to be apprehended, and, to make his Torture both more lingering, and more exquiſite, had him ſawn aſunder with a wooden Saw, to which the Author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, Chap. xi. 37, may be thought to allude. Calmet's Commentary, and Howell's Hiſtory in the Notes.

which he ſhed in carrying on his deteſtable Purpoſes; but it was not long before the Divine Vengeance overtook him.

His Captivity by the King of Babylon, Repentance, Reſtoration, and Reformation.

ESARHADDON, being ſettled in the Kingdom of Babylon, began to ſet his Thoughts on the Recovery of what his Father Sennacherib had loſt in Syria and Paleſtine; and, having rais'd a great Army, march'd into the Territories of the ten Tribes, from whence he carry'd away a great Multitude of Iſraelites, who were Remains of the former Captivity, and ſo, ſending ſome of his Generals with a Part of his Army to Judea to reduce that Country likewiſe, they vanquiſh'd Manaſſeh in Battle, and, having taken him hid in a Thicket of Briars and Brambles, brought him Priſoner to Eſarhaddon †, who put him in Irons, and carry'd him Priſoner to Babylon.

† His Priſon and Chains brought him to himſelf, and made him ſo ſenſible of his heinous Provocations againſt God, that, with deep Sorrow and Humiliation, † he implor'd the Divine Pity and Forgiveneſs, and thereupon prevail'd with God to mollify the King of Babylon's Heart, who reſtor'd him to his Liberty, and re-inſtated him in his Kingdom.

Upon his Return to Jeruſalem, he redreſs'd, as much as he could, the Miſchiefs, which his former Impiety had done. He aboliſh'd the idolatrous Profanations of the Temple; reſtor'd, in all Things, the Reformation, which his Father had made, and oblig'd all his Subjects to worſhip and ſerve the Lord only; ſo that, after this, God bleſs'd him with a long and proſperous Reign; longer, indeed, than any of the Kings of Judah, either before or after him, had reign'd. He poſſeſs'd the Throne full five and fifty Years; and yet, (notwithſtanding his ſignal Repentance) becauſe his former Wickedneſs was ſo great, he was not allow'd the Honour of being bury'd in any of the royal Sepulchres, but was laid in a Grave made in the Garden, belonging to his own Houſe, called the Garden of Uzzah †, and was ſucceeded by his Son Ammon.

Ammon ſucceeds his Father, and is murther'd by his Servants.

This Prince, imitating the firſt Part of his Father's Reign, and not the Repentance of his latter, gave himſelf up to all Manner of Wickedneſs and Impiety; ſo that God ſhorten'd his Government, by permitting ſome of his own Domeſticks, († after a Reign of two Years) to conſpire againſt him, and ſlay him: But, as wicked as

† From Iſaiah xx. 1. we may learn, that Eſarhaddon (whom the ſacred Writer in that Place calls Sargon) King of Aſſyria, ſent Tartan, his General, into Paleſtine; and 'twas he, (very probably) who took Manaſſeh, and carry'd him Priſoner to Babylon. Eſarhaddon was, ſome Time before, no more than King of Aſſyria; but, upon his Acceſſion to the Throne, he made himſelf Maſter of Babylon and Chaldea, and ſo united the two Empires together. Calmet's Commentary, and Prideaux's Connection, Anno 677.

† The Jewiſh Doctors have a Tradition, that, while Manaſſeh was at Babylon, by the Direction of his Conqueror, he was put in a large brazen Veſſel, full of Holes, and ſet near to a great Fire; that, in this Extremity, he had Recourſe to all his falſe Deities, to whom he had offer'd ſo many Sacrifices, but receiv'd no Relief from them; that, remembering what he had heard his good Father, Hezekiah, ſay, viz. When thou art in Tribulation, if thou turn to the Lord thy God, he will not forſake thee, neither deſtroy thee, Deut. iv. 30, 31. he was thereupon immediately deliver'd, and, in a Moment, tranſlated to his Kingdom. But this is no leſs a Fiction, than that miraculous Flame, which the Author of the imperfect Comment upon St Matthew ſpeaks of, that encompaſs'd him on a ſudden, as he was praying to God, and, having melted his Chains aſunder, ſet him at Liberty. Vid. Tradit. Hebr. in Paralip. & Targum in 2 Chron. xxiii. 11. In all Probability, it was Saos duchin, the Succeſſor of Eſarhaddon, who, ſome Years after his Captivity, releas'd Manaſſeh out of Priſon.

† We have a Prayer, which, it is pretended, he made in Priſon. The Church does not receive it as Canonical, but it has a Place among the Apocryphal Pieces, and, in our Collections, ſtands before the Books of the Maccabees. The Greek Church however has receiv'd it into their Euchologium, or Book of Prayers, and they uſe it ſometimes as a Kind of devout Form, and what contains nothing in it deſerving Cenſure. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Manaſſeh.

† This Garden, as ſome think, was made in that very Spot of Ground, where Uzzah was ſtruck dead, for touching the Ark of the Lord, 2 Sam. vi. 7. but others imagine, that this was the Place where Uzziah, who dy'd a Leper, was bury'd, 2 Chron. xxvi. 23. and that Manaſſeh choſe to be bury'd here, as unworthy, becauſe of his manifold Sins, (whereof he nevertheleſs repented) to be laid in any of the Royal Sepulchres of the Kings of Judah. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

† This (as ſome Jewiſh Authors obſerve) is the uſual Number of Years, to which the Sons of thoſe Kings did arrive, who, by their Abominations, provok'd God to Anger; as they inſtance in the Son of Jeroboam, 1 Kings xv. 25. the Son of Baaſha, Chap. xvi. 8. the Son of Ahab, Chap. xxii. 51. Patrick's Commentary.

as he was, the People of the Land took Care to revenge his Murther, by putting all to Death who had any Hand in it, tho' they would not, at his Burial, honour him (any more than his Father) with a Place among the Sepulchres of the Sons of David.

Joſiah*'s good and pious Reign, his Reformation of Religion.*

HIS Son Joſiah, who was then a Child no more than eight Years old, ſucceeded in the Throne; but, having the Happineſs to fall under the Conduct of better Guardians in his Minority, than did Manaſſeh his Grandfather, he prov'd, when grown up, a Prince of very extraordinary Worth, equal, if not ſuperior, in Piety, Virtue, and Goodneſs, to the beſt of his Predeceſſors. In the ſixteenth Year of his Age, he took upon him the Adminiſtration of the Kingdom; and, beginning with the Reformation of Religion, endeavour'd to purge it from all thoſe Corruptions, which had been introduc'd in the preceding Reigns. To this Purpoſe, he took a Progreſs through the whole Kingdom, and, wherever he came, brake down the Altars, cut down the Groves, and brake in Pieces all the carv'd and molten Images, that were dedicated to Idolatry. The Graves of idolatrous Prieſts he dug up, and burnt their Bones upon ſome of theſe Altars, thereby to defile and pollute them for ever; and [†] whatever Prieſts of the Levitical Order had at any Time ſacrific'd on the High-Places, tho' it were to the true God, theſe he took care to depoſe from their ſacerdotal Office. [†] The Houſes of the Sodomites he broke down: Tophet [†], which was in the Valley of Hinnom, he defiled: The Horſes [*] dedicated to the Son, he remov'd: Burnt its Chariots with Fire; and, being not ſatisfy'd with deſtroying all the Monuments of Idolatry in his own Dominions, he viſited in Perſon the Cities of Ephraim, and Manaſſeh, and all the reſt of the Land, which had formerly been poſſeſs'd by the ten Tribes, and there did the ſame. But, while he was at Bethel, [†] diſcovering by the Inſcription the Monument of the Prophet, who was ſent from Judah to declare againſt the Altar, which Jeroboam had there ſet up, and (above three hundred Years before) to name the very Name of Joſiah, who was to deſtroy it; he would not ſuffer it to be touch'd, nor his Bones to be moleſted.

[†] Several of theſe Prieſts, ſeeing the Worſhip of the Temple abandon'd, and, after that the Tenths, and Offerings, and Sacrifices were taken away, having nothing to ſubſiſt themſelves, had the Weakneſs to repair to the High-Places, and there offer unto God ſuch Oblations, and Sacrifices, as the People brought them; (for it does not appear, that any of them enter'd into the Service of falſe Gods) but becauſe this was giving Countenance (by their Preſence and Miniſtry) to a Worſhip, that was forbidden, Deut. xii. 11. he would not receive them any more into the Service of the Temple, tho' he ſuffer'd them to be maintain'd by it. He puts them, in ſhort, into the Conditions of thoſe Prieſts, that had any Blemiſh, who might not offer the Bread of their God, and yet might eat the Bread of their God, both of the Holy, and moſt Holy, Lev. xxi. 21, 22. Calmet's and Patrick's Commentaries.

[†] This was the Name, which is ſometimes given to the moſt infamous of all Proſtitutes, who expoſed their Bodies to be abus'd, contrary to Nature, in Honour of thoſe filthy Deities, whom they worſhipp'd. Their Houſes were near the Temple, and therefore theſe were Perſons conſecrated to Impurity; and, that they might commit their Abominations with a greater Licentiouſneſs, they had Women appointed to make them Tents, wherein they were wont to retire upon theſe deteſtable Occaſions. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] It is the general Opinion of the Jews, that the Word Tophet comes from Thoph, which, in their Language, ſignifies a Drum; becauſe Drums, in this Place, were us'd to be beat, in order to deaden the Cries of thoſe Children which were burnt alive by the Idol Moloch: but there is one Objection to this Etymology, viz. that it does not appear that the larger Kind of Drums, ſuch as are in Uſe now, were at all known to the Ancients. There was a leſſer Sort indeed, or what we call a Taber, wherewith they made Muſick in their Dancing; but theſe were not loud enough for the preſent Purpoſe, and the larger Kind we owe to the Arabians, who firſt brought them into Spain, from whence they were diſpers'd all Europe over. Le Clerc's Commentary.

[*] 'Tis certain, that all the People of the Eaſt worſhipp'd the Sun, and conſecrated Horſes to it, becauſe they were nimble and ſwift in their Courſe, even as they ſuppos'd it to be.

Placat Equo Perſis Radiis Hyperiona cinctum,
Ne detur celeri victima tarda Deo. OVID. Faſt, lib. i.

But then the Queſtion is, whether the People of Judah ſacrific'd theſe Horſes to the Sun, (as 'tis certain the Armenians, Perſians, and other Nations did) or only led them out in State every Morning, to meet and ſalute the Sun, at his Riſing. The Ancients had a Notion likewiſe, that the Sun itſelf was carry'd about in a Chariot; and therefore Chariots, as well as Horſes, were dedicated to it. Since then we find theſe Horſes, and Chariots, ſtanding ſo near together, the Horſes, we may ſuppoſe, were deſign'd to draw the Chariots, and the Chariots to carry the King, and his other great Officers, (who were Idolaters of this Kind) out at the Eaſt-gate of the City, every Morning, to ſalute and adore the Sun, as its coming above the Horizon. Bochart's Hieroz. Part. i. lib. xi. c. 10.

[†] The Jews will tell us, that, on one Side of the Grave, (where the Prophet of Judah and the Prophet of Bethel lay Reparation of the Temple.

Having thus carry'd on the Work of Reformation in the diſtant Parts of his Kingdom, he took care, in the next Place, to have the Temple repair'd. To this Purpoſe, he order'd Hilkiah, the High-Prieſt, to take a general View of it, and ſee what was neceſſary to be done, who, while he was ſurveying, and examining every Place, chanc'd to find a Book of the Law of the Lord, given by Moſes. The Book was carry'd to the King, who, having † heard ſome Part of it read, rent his Robes in Dread of the Curſes denounc'd againſt a wicked People, and immediately ſent the High-Prieſt, and ſome other of his chief Officers, to Huldah † the Propheteſs to enquire of the Lord; who return'd them in Anſwer, "That the "Judgments, threaten'd in the Book of "the Law, would not be long before "they fell upon the Kingdom of Judah; "but that, becauſe the King had expreſs'd "ſo deep a Concern upon hearing the "Denunciation of them, their Execution "ſhould be delay'd till after his Death."

And farther Reformation.

The good King however, in order to appeaſe the Wrath of God, called together a ſolemn Aſſembly, of all the Elders, and People of Judah and Jeruſalem; and going with them to the Temple, he caus'd the Law of God there to be diſtinctly read; and, when that was done, both he and all the People enter'd into a Covenant to obſerve all, that was contain'd in it. After this, he made another Progreſs round the Kingdom of Judah and Samaria to deſtroy every the leaſt Remainder of Idolatry, that he could meet with; and, when the Seaſon of the next Paſſover was come, had it ‖ kept with ſuch Exactneſs and Solemnity, a lay together) there grew Nettles and Thiſtles; on the other, Myrtles, and other odoriferous Plants; ſignifying, that a true and falſe Prophet lay there; and that this rais'd the King's Curioſity to enquire, whoſe that Sepulchre was; but there is no Ground for this fabulous Fancy. The King, we may ſuppoſe, eſpy'd a Stone, or a Pillar, more eminent than the reſt, with the Names of the Perſons, that were bury'd under it, and this made him aſk the Queſtion of the Men of the City, i. e. ſome of the old Inhabitants, that had eſcap'd the Captivity, and not any of thoſe New-Comers, whom the King of Aſſyria had ſent thither; for theſe could give no Account of the ancient Hiſtories of the Iſraelites; neither can we ſuppoſe, that the Sepulchre itſelf, after ſo many Years ſtanding, could have been diſtinguiſhable, had not ſome pious Perſon or other, with an Intent to perpetuate the Memory of the Thing, in each ſucceſſive Age, taken care to preſerve and repair it, Matt. xxiii. 29. Le Clerc's and Patrick's Commentaries.

† Whether it was the whole Pentateuch, or the Book of Deuteronomy only, which the High Prieſt found in the Temple, 'tis generally agreed, that the Part, which Shaphan read to the King, was taken out of the Book of Deuteronomy, and, not without ſome Probability, that the xxviiith, xxixth, and xxxth Chapters were that Portion of Scripture, which the Secretary, who (as we are told, 2 Kings xxii. 8.) had read the Book before he brought it to the King, thought proper upon this Occaſion to turn to; for therein is contain'd a Renewal of the Covenant, which Moſes, as Mediator, had made between God and the People of Iſrael at Mount Horeb; and therein are thoſe Threats and terrible Comminations to the Tranſgreſſors of the Law, whether Prince or People, which affected Joſiah ſo much; and which Moſes had given the Levites to put on the Side of the Covenant, that it might be there for a Witneſs againſt the Tranſgreſſors of it, Deut. xxxi. 25, 26. Calmet's Commentary.

† This is the only Mention we have of this Propheteſs, and certainly it makes much to her Renown, that ſhe was conſulted upon this weighty Occaſion, when both Jeremiah and Zephaniah were at that Time Prophets in Judah. But Zephaniah perhaps at that Time might not have commenc'd a Prophet; becauſe, tho' we are told that he propheſied in the Days of Joſiah, Zeph. i. 1. yet we are no where inform'd, in what Part of his Reign he enter'd upon the prophetick Office. Jeremiah, too, might at that Time be abſent from Jeruſalem, at his Houſe at Anathoth, or ſome more remote Part of the Kingdom; ſo that, conſidering Joſiah's Haſte and Impatience, there might be no other Remedy at Hand to apply to, but this Woman. Great is the Wrath of the Lord which is kindled againſt us, ſays the King to his Miniſters, 2 Kings xxii. 13. and therefore his Intent in ſending them might be to enquire, whether there were any Hopes of appeaſing his Wrath, and in what Manner it was to be done. Being therefore well aſſur'd of this Woman's Fidelity, in delivering the Mind and Counſel of God, the Miniſters, who went to enquire, concluded rightly, that is was much more conſiderable, what Meſſage God ſent, than by whoſe Hand it was that he convey'd it. Pool's Annotations.

IN a Word, this excellent Prince did all that in him lay, to atone for the Sins of the People, and appeaſe the Wrath of God; but his Decree [†] for the Removal of Judah into a Land of their Captivity was paſs'd, irrevocably paſs'd: And therefore, when Pharaoh Necho [*] King of Egypt deſir'd to paſs through Judea, in order to go and attack Charchemiſh [†], a City belonging to the King of Babylon, and ſituate upon the Euphrates, Joſiah would by no Means conſent to it; but, getting together his Forces, poſted himſelf in the Valley of Megiddo [*], on Purpoſe to obſtruct his Paſſage. The Egyptian King, hearing of this, ſent Embaſſadors deſiring him to deſiſt, declaring that he came not to invade his Territories, but purely to do himſelf Juſtice on the King of Babylon; and aſſuring him withal, that what he did, in this Caſe, was by the Order and Appointment of God. Joſiah however thought himſelf no way concern'd to believe him; and therefore, on Necho's marching up to the Place, where he was poſted to receive him, a Battle immediately enſu'd, wherein the Egyptian Archers, diſcovering Joſiah, (tho' he had diſguis'd himſelf before the Action begun) ply'd that Quarter of the Army, where he fought, ſo very warmly with their Arrows, that, at laſt receiving a mortal Wound from

It may not be amiſs therefore to allow, that in theſe Expreſſions there is a Kind of Auxeſis or Exaggeration, not unuſual in ſacred, as well as in profane Authors. For nothing is more common, than to ſay, Never was ſo much Splendor and Magnificence ſeen, when we mean no more, than that the Thing, we ſpeak of, was very ſplendid and magnificent: Unleſs we ſuppoſe with ſome, that a Preference is given to this Paſſover above all the reſt, in Reſpect of the exact Obſervation of the Rites and Ceremonies belonging to it, which, at other Times, were perform'd according to Cuſtom, and ſeveral Things either alter'd, or omitted; whereas, at this, every Thing was perform'd according to the preſcribed Form of the Law, from which, ſince the finding of this authentick Copy of it, Joſiah enjoin'd them not to vary one Tittle. Calmet's and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

They comply'd indeed with the preſent Reformation; but this was only out of Fear of incurring the King's Diſpleaſure, or of feeling the Severity of his Juſtice. Their Hearts were not right towards God, as appears from the Writings of the Prophets, that liv'd in thoſe Times; and therefore, ſeeing no Sign of their Repentance, God had no Reaſon to reverſe his Decree. Calmet's and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

[*] Pharaoh ſignifies no more, in the Egyptian Language, than King, and was therefore given to any one, that ſat upon that Throne: But Necho (according to Herodotus) was his proper Name, tho' ſome will have it to be an Appellative, which ſignifies lame, becauſe this Pharaoh (as they ſuppoſe) had a Lameneſs, which proceeded from ſome Wound, he had receiv'd in the Wars. The ſame Hiſtorian tells us, that he was the Son and Succeſſor of Pſametichus, King of Egypt, and a Man of a bold enterpriſing Spirit; that he made an Attempt to join the Nile and the Red Sea, by drawing a Canal from one to the other; that, tho' he failed in this Deſign, yet, by ſending a Fleet from the Red-Sea through the Streights of Babel-Mandel, he diſcover'd the Coaſts of Africa, and, in this his Expedition to the Euphrates, reſolv'd to bid fair (by deſtroying the united Force of the Babylonians and Medes) for the whole Monarchy of Aſia. Prideaux's Connection Ann. 610, and Marſham's Canon. [†] Geographers make no Mention of this City under this Name; but it is very probably the ſame with what the Greeks and Latins call Cercuſium, or Cerceſium, which was ſituated on the Angle, form'd by the Conjunction of the Chaboras or Chebar, and the Euphrates. Iſaiah, x. 9, ſpeaks of this Place, as if Tiglath-Pileſer had made a Conqueſt of it, and Necho perhaps now was going to re-take it, as we find he did; but Jeremiah informs us, Chap. xlvi. 1, 2. that, in the fourth Year of Jehoiachim King of Judah, it was taken, and quite deſtroy'd by Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon. Calmet's Commentary, and Wells's Geography of the Old Teſtament, Vol. III.

[*] Megiddo was a City in the half Tribe of Manaſſeh, not far from the Mediterranean Sea, which Way Necho was to paſs with his Army, in order to go into Syria, and thence to the Euphrates. In the Valley adjoining to this Place Joſiah was ſlain, while he was at the Head of his Army (as Joſephus tells us) and riding up and down to give Orders from one Wing to the other. This Action Herodotus makes mention of, when he tells us, that Nechos, King of Egypt, having fallen upon the Syrians, near the City Magdol, obtained a great Victory, and made himſelf Maſter of Cadytis: where the Author plainly miſtakes the Syrians for the Jews; Magdolum, a City in the Lower Egypt, for Megiddo; and Cadytis, for Kadeſh, in the upper Galilee, by which he was to paſs in his Way to Charchemiſh; or rather for the City of Jeruſalem, which, in Herodotus's Time, might be called by the neighbouring Nations Cadyta, or Cadyſcha, i. e. the holy City; ſince, even to this Day, it is called by the Eaſtern People Al-huds, which is plainly both of the ſame Signification and Original. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Kadeſh, and Prideaux's Connection, An. 610.

from one of them, he was carry'd in another Chariot * out of the Battle, to Jeruſalem, where, after a Reign of one and thirty Years, he dy'd, and was bury'd in the Sepulchre of his Anceſtors.

* The Death of ſo excellent a Prince was deſervedly lamented by all his People, but by none more ſincerely, than by Jeremiah the Prophet; who, having a thorough Senſe of the Greatneſs of the Loſs, as well as full Foreſight of the ſore Calamities, which were afterwards to follow upon the whole Kingdom of Judah, while his Heart was full with a View of both theſe, wrote a Song of Lamentation * upon this mournful Occaſion; but that is loſt; and the other (which goes under his Name, and is ſtill remaining) was compos'd upon the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Nebuchadnezzar.

The OBJECTION.

“BUT, how religious ſoever we may ſuppoſe Joſiah the King of Judah to have been, we cannot but wonder at his Ignorance in the Law of God. Thoſe, who had the Care of his Education, were requir'd to inſtruct him in it (a) upon all proper Occaſions; himſelf (according to what (b) the Law directs) was to tranſcribe a Copy of it with his own Hand, and to have it ſo conſtantly in his Remembrance, as if it were (c) Frontlets between his Eyes; and yet, when he was no leſs than ſix and twenty Years old, and in the eighteenth Year of his Reign, we find him (d) rending his Cloaths, for Fear of the Threats denounc'd againſt a wicked Prince and People, as if he had never read his Bible, (which the High-Prieſt by the Bye ſeems equally a Stranger to) nor heard a Word of the Book of Deuteronomy before.

“How the choſen People of God came ſo frequently to fall into the deteſtable Sin of Idolatry, we are not at a Loſs to comprehend; but tho', whenever they did ſo, it was the Part of every good Prince to endeavour to reclaim them: Yet we ſhould be glad to know, what Right King Joſiah had to extend his Reformation into other Countries, and to exerciſe this Authority in the Kingdom of Samaria, which was then ſubject to the Aſſyrians; or upon what Pretenſions he oppos'd Necho King of Egypt, when he only civilly aſk'd a Paſſage through his Country, and was going to do himſelf Juſtice upon an

* It was the Cuſtom of War, in former Times, for great Officers, to have their led Horſes, that, if one failed, they might mount another. The Kings of Perſia (as Quintus Curtius informs us) had Horſes attending their Chariots, which, in caſe of any Accident, they might make to; and, in like Manner we may preſume, that, when it became a mighty Faſhion to fight in Chariots, all great Captains had an empty one following them, into which they might betake themſelves, if any Miſchance befel the other. Bochart's Hieroz. * The Author of the Book of Eccleſiaſticus has given us his Encomium in theſe Words:——All, except David, and Hezekias, and Joſias, were defective. They forſook the Law of the Moſt High; even the Kings of Judah failed. But the Remembrance of Joſias is like the Compoſition of the Perfume, that is made by the Art of Apothecary: It is as ſweet as Honey in all Mouths, and as Muſick at a Banquet of Wine. He behaved himſelf uprightly in the Converſion of the People, and took away the Abomination of Iniquity. He directed his Heart unto the Lord, and, in the Time of the Ungodly, he eſtabliſhed the Worſhip of God. Ecclus. xlix. 1, &c.

* The Jews were us'd to make Lamentations, or mournful Songs, upon the Death of great Men, Princes, and Heroes, who had diſtinguiſh'd themſelves in Arms, or by any civil Arts had merited well of their Country. By an Expreſſion in 2 Chron. xxxv. 25. Behold they are written in the Lamentations, one may infer, that they had certain Collections of this Kind of Compoſition. The Author of the Book of Samuel has preſerv'd thoſe, which David made upon the Death of Saul, and Jonathan, of Abner, and Abſalom: But this mournful Poem, which the diſconſolate Prophet made upon the immature Death of good Joſiah, we no where have; which is a Loſs the more to be deplored, becauſe, in all Probability, it was a Maſter-Piece in its Kind; ſince never was there an Author more deeply affected with his Subject, or more capable of carrying it through all the tender Sentiments of Sorrow and Compaſſion. Calmet's Commentary, and Preface ſur les Lamentations de Jeremie.

"Enemy, that had invaded his Territories firſt.

"HAD he ſent indeed in his own Name only, Joſiah might have pleaded, in his Excuſe, the Danger of admitting a large Army into the Bowels of his Country; but ſince (e) the Requeſt was ſent in the Name of God, who had put him upon this Expedition, and accordingly proſper'd him in it, we cannot but ſay, that Joſiah juſtly ſuffer'd for oppoſing the Almighty's Will, and intermeddling in the Matter, wherein he had no Concern: Tho' how to abſolve the Divine Goodneſs and Veracity, in bringing ſo good a Prince to an untimely End, and cauſing him to be ſlain in Battle, when he had promiſ'd, (f) that he ſhould be gather'd into his Grave in Peace, is what we cannot unriddle.

"THE Sting of Death is Sin; but the Man, who can appeal to God for the Truth and Sincerity of his Heart, (as we find Hezekiah appealing) may bid Defiance to that Prince of Terrors: And yet (whatever his Diſtemper might be) the Scripture repreſents this great and good Man, upon Notice of his Death, in a very piteous Plight, (g) weeping ſore, (h) chattering as a Crane or a Swallow, and mourning like a Dove, at the Thoughts of his Diſſolution, which is far from ſetting the Saint and the Hero, much more the Benefits, which accrue from a religious Life, in an advantageous Light.

"A PERSON ſo paſſionately in Love with Life may well be ſuppoſ'd to deſire ſome Aſſurance of his Recovery: But to cauſe the Sun, not only to ſtop its Courſe, but even to go ten Degrees backward for his Conviction, is a little too laviſh.

"INSTEAD of diſturbing the whole Courſe of Nature therefore merely to ſatisfy the Diffidence of one Man, it is more rational to think, (i) that this Miracle was not wrought upon the Body of the Sun, but upon the Dial only, i. e. that God, upon this Occaſion, made no Alteration in the Motion of the Heavens, but only, by the Means of ſome extraordinary Meteors, or Refractions, ſo diſpoſ'd the Rays of the Sun, and directed its Light, that no Shadow could be projected, but where the Prophet foretold.

"BUT, whether this Miracle was in the Motion of the Sun, or in the Direction of its Shadow only, it certainly was a ſufficient Evidence to convince Hezekiah of his future Recovery. Much better, than what God gave this Prince, to aſſure him, (k) that the King of Aſſyria ſhould not inveſt the City of Jeruſalem, nor ſhoot an Arrow there, nor caſt a Bank againſt it. Much better, (l) than what he gave King Ahaz, when, from the Invaſion of two Confederate Kings, he lay under the moſt dreadful Apprehenſions. For, (m) of what Uſe can a Sign be, that is ſubſequent to the Thing ſignify'd? What Conſolation could the Promiſe of the future Birth of a Son be, to a Perſon labouring under Perplexity and Want of immediate Relief? Or, where is the Senſe of the Prophet's ſaying, that, (n) before the Child (to be born ſeven hundred Years hence) ſhall be able to diſtinguiſh between Good and Evil, the Land ſhall be forſaken of both her Kings?

"BUT, of all the Stories in this Period of Time, commend me to that wonderful Novel of young Tobias, and the Angel, in their Adventures to Ecbatana. His Father's loſing his Eye-Sight by the hot Dung of Swallows had been a ſad Family-Accident, had not the Gall of the Fiſh come in opportunely to remedy it; tho' it be the firſt Time that we ever knew, that a Swallow's Dung was pernicious, and a Fiſh's Gall reſtorative

“to the Eye-Sight. This however was nothing, in Compariſon to its Heart and Liver, whoſe very Smoke was enough to drive away the Devil Aſmodeus, as far as the utmoſt Parts of Egypt, where the good Angel took care to chain him down, that he might give the new-marry'd Couple no farther Moleſtation. All this ſounds ſo like a Romance, that we know not what elſe to call it, unleſs we will ſuppoſe, with Grotius (o), that the whole Account is parabolical, and that this pretended Aſmodeus was ſome ill Quality attending Sara's Body, which had prov'd mortal to her other Huſbands, but that Tobias, by uſing proper Fumigations, had preſerv'd himſelf, and cur'd her.”

The Contents of the Book of Tobit vindicated.

THAT the Dung of Swallows is of a very hot and cauſtick Quality, and, when dropt into the Eye, muſt needs be injurious to the Sight, as being apt to cauſe an Inflammation, and thereby a Concretion of Humours, which, in Proceſs of Time, may produce a white Film, that will obſtruct the Light from the optick Nerves; and that the Gall of a Fiſh (eſpecially of the Fiſh called Callionimus) is of excellent Uſe to remove all ſuch Specks and Obſtructions to the Sight, we have the Teſtimony of ſome of the greateſt Men, (p) Phyſicians and Naturaliſts, to produce in Confirmation of this Part of Tobit's Hiſtory. That good Angels are appointed by God to be the Guardians of particular Men, and, in Execution of this their Office, do frequently aſſume human Shapes, to guide them in their Journies, and to deliver them from all Dangers, is a Doctrine (q) as antient, as the Patriarch Jacob's Time, embrac'd by Chriſtians, and believ'd by the wiſeſt Heathens; and that every Man, in like Manner, has an evil Angel, or Genius, whereof ſome preſide over one Vice, and ſome over another; inſomuch, that there are Demons of Avarice, Demons of Pride, and Demons of Impurity, &c. each endeavouring to enſnare the Perſon he attends with a complexional Temptation, is another Poſition, that has been almoſt generally receiv'd, (r) not only in the Jewiſh and Chriſtian, but in the Pagan Theology likewiſe; and therefore thus far the Hiſtory of Tobit can be no Novel or Romance.

THAT good Angels have a ſuperior Power and Controul over the bad, and, by the Divine Authority, can curb and reſtrain their Malice, (which is all that we need underſtand by their binding them up) is evident from a Paſſage in the Revelations very reſemblant to what we read here concerning Raphael and Aſmodeus: (s) I ſaw an Angel come down from Heaven, having the Key of the bottomleſs Pit, and a great Chain in his Hand, and he laid hold on the Dragon, the old Serpent, which is the Devil and Satan, and bound him a Thouſand Years, and caſt him into the bottomleſs Pit, and ſhut him up, and ſet a Seal upon him, that he ſhould deceive the Nations no more: And that this good Angel, perſonating an Iſraelite, and (t) calling himſelf Azarias, the Son of Ananias, was not guilty of any Lye or Prevarication, is plain from Caſes of the like Nature. For, as the Picture is uſually called by the Perſon it repreſents, and he, who in Tragedy, acts the Part of Cato, does, for that Time, go under his Name; ſo Raphael, being ſent by God in the Form and Appearance of a Young-Man, was, in that Capacity, to act and ſpeak as if he had been ſuch. Nor was there any Fallacy in his aſſuming the Name of Azarias, which ſignifies God's Help, or Aſſiſtance, ſince he was manifeſtly ſent for this very Purpoſe, that he might be a Guide and Aſſiſtance to Tobias in his Journey, and therefore very prudently concealed his Quality of an Angel, that he might more conveniently execute his Commiſſion. So that hitherto there is no Incongruity in the whole Narration, if we can but have a farther Account, why (u) the Smoke of the Fiſh's Liver and Heart ſhould be of any Efficacy to put the evil Spirit to flight.

THOSE, who are of Opinion, (x) that Demons, or evil Angels, were inveſted with certain material Forms, wherein they ſnuff'd up the Perfumes, and feaſted themſelves upon the Odours of the Incenſe and Sacrifices, that were offer'd to them, have an eaſy Way of ſolving this Difficulty, by ſuppoſing that the Smell of the burnt Heart and Liver of the Fiſh was offenſive to Aſmodeus, even as they pretend, (y) that in ſome Herbs, Plants, Stones, and other natural Things, there is a certain Virtue to drive away Demons, and to hinder them from coming into ſuch a determinate Place. The Chaldeans, among whom the Book of Tobit was wrote, and the Iſraelites, for whoſe Uſe and Inſtruction it was wrote, might both be of this Opinion:——That Demons, as not abſolutely diveſted of all Matter, were capable of the ſame Senſations and Impreſſions, that belong'd to corporeal Subſtances; and therefore, in Accommodation to the vulgar Idea, and Prejudice of the People, the Author of this Hiſtory might expreſs himſelf, as tho' the Expulſion of this evil Spirit was effected by a natural Cauſe, the Smoke of the Fiſh, even tho', at the ſame Time, he ſufficiently intimates, that it was by a Divine Power that it came to paſs, becauſe we find the Angel thus enjoining Tobias, (z) When thou ſhalt come to thy Wife Sara, riſe up both of you, and pray to God, who is merciful, who will pity you, and ſave you.

UPON the contrary Suppoſition, viz. that this Demon was a Being incorporeal, (and this is the Suppoſition concerning the angelical Nature, which generally prevails) we may ſafely conclude, that the Smoke of the Fiſh's Entrails could have no direct and phyſical Effect upon him; that his fleeing away therefore was occaſion'd by a ſupernatural Power, in the Exerciſe of which, the Angel, appointed to attend Tobias, was the principal Inſtrument; (a) that he order'd the burning of the Fiſh's Entrails, as a Sign, when the evil Spirit, by his ſuperior Power, ſhould be chas'd away; or in the ſame Senſe, that our bleſſed Saviour ſpread Clay upon the Eyes of the Man, that was born blind, and order'd him to waſh in the Pool of Siloah, viz. not as the Cauſe, but the Proof of his Cure; and that he ſent him away (b) into the uttermoſt Parts of Egypt, i. e. into the Deſerts of the Upper Egypt, becauſe our Saviour intimates, that ſuch is the uſual Habitation of evil Spirits, when he repreſents them, (c) as walking through dry Places, ſeeking Reſt, and finding none.

HOWEVER this be, we cannot hold ourſelves concern'd for the Vindication of every Expreſſion in a Book, which our Church has not thought fit to receive into her Canon of Scripture. 'Tis ſufficient for our preſent Purpoſe, that the hiſtorical Ground-Plot of it be true, whatever may be ſaid as to ſome particular Paſſage in it, and tho' its figurative and poetical Stile, as well as near Conformity to the Theology then in Vogue, may give ſome Umbrage to a Reader, that will not be ſo candid, as to think with St Jerom (d), Multa in Scripturis ſanctis dicuntur juxta Opinionem illius Temporis, & non juxta quod Rei veritas continebat.

Temple for the publick Uſe, viz. for the King to read to the People once every ſeven Years, or for the Prieſts to conſult upon any emergent Difficulty, is a Matter of ſome Debate among the Learned. The Teſtimony of the Author of the Book of Chronicles ſeems however to determine the Matter, when he aſſures us, that the Book of the Law, which Hilkiah found, was that, (e) which was given by the Hand of Moſes, and conſequently, the whole Pentateuch, which, by his Command, was repoſited (f) in the Side of the Ark of the Covenant.

That Joſiah had ſeen the Law before.

IT is preſum'd indeed, that Joſiah's three Predeceſſors, Ahaz, Manaſſeh, and Ammon, as not content to be impious themſelves, and to inſtigate their Subjects to Idolatry, had made it their Buſineſs to burn and deſtroy all the Copies of the Law, that they could any where meet with, ſo that there was not ſo much as one left for the King's Uſe; and that this was the Reaſon of his diſcovering ſo great a Surprize at his hearing the Comminations read, becauſe he had never perhaps ſeen any ſuch Volume before. It muſt be acknowledg'd indeed, that Diſuſe often cancels the moſt excellent Laws, and, from Joſiah's Surprize, we have Room to ſuſpect, that he had not as yet tranſcrib'd a Copy of the Law with his own Hand, and had probably for ſome Time neglected the reading it publickly, (g) every ſeventh Year, according to the Command. But, that he had never ſeen ſuch a Tranſcript of it before this Time, we can hardly believe, becauſe it is not conceivable, how he could ſo early apply himſelf to the Service of God, even in Oppoſition to the Corruptions of the Times; how he could begin the Reformation of Religion, the Aboliſhment of Idolatry and Superſtition, and the Eſtabliſhment of ſo many wholſome Ordinances for the Divine Worſhip, without the Aſſiſtance and Direction of this Book.

6

IN this very Year, we are told, that ſuch a Paſſover was ſolemniz'd, (h) as had not been kept, from the Days of Samuel the Prophet, nor among all the Kings of Iſrael; but how the Prieſts could have obſerv'd all the Rites and Ceremonies belonging to it, (which are not a few) if every preſcribed Form of it had been loſt, we cannot conceive; ſince Copies of the Book, which was now found in the Temple, could not be made and tranſcrib'd Time enough, for their Inſtruction in theſe Particulars.

Why the High-Prieſt rejoiced at finding it.

IN the Reigns of Jehoſhaphat and Hezekiah, Copies of the Law (i) were common enough, and in the Reigns of their wicked Succeſſors, the ſacred Hiſtory makes no mention of their being burnt or deſtroy'd. The Jewiſh Doctors indeed tell us, that Manaſſeh blotted the ſacred Name of Jehovah out of all the Books that he could find; but they no where report, that he utterly aboliſh'd them: And therefore we may conclude, that the People, at this Time, had ſeveral Copies of the Law among them, tho' ſome of them perhaps imperfect and corrupt; and that the High-Prieſt might rejoice, when he had found the Original, becauſe by it all the other Copies might be corrected; and rejoice the more, that he had found it at a Time, when the King was going to make a Reformation in Religion, which he could not but look upon as a very remarkable Providence.

And the King was ſurpriz'd at it.

THE four Evangeliſts, who have recorded the Subſtance of the Chriſtian Religion, we have by us, and may read therein every Day; and yet, who can ſay, but that ſome remarkable Paſſage may perchance eſcape his Obſervation? (k) But now, if, by ſome lucky Accident, we ſhould happen to find the Original of St Matthew, or St John, who can doubt, but that we ſhould both read and liſten to it with more Serioufneſs and Attention, than we now do to the ſame Books, that are every Day in our Hands? And, in like Manner, we may ſay, that it was the great Reverence, which Joſiah bore to the original Book of Moſes, as well as the ſeaſonable and remarkable finding it at this Time, that awakened, and quickened him to a more attentive Conſideration of all the Paſſages contain'd in it, than ever he had known before, either in his reading, or hearing the ordinary Copies of the Law.

(k) Calmet's Commentary on 2 Kings xxii. 8.

Why the Kings and People of Iſrael were ſo prone to Idolatry.

MANASSEH was certainly, in the former Part of his Reign, a very impious Prince. The Scripture ſeems to imply, that, till his Miſeries had rectified his Notions, (l) he did not believe at all in the God of Iſrael, nor in the Hiſtory of his Fore-Fathers; but he is not the only Son, that has degenerated from the good Example of a pious Father, neither were his Subjects the only People, that, even in the groſſeſt Irreligion and Profaneneſs, have imitated the Example of their Prince. The Wonder is, how both Prince and People became, upon every Occaſion, ſo prone to fall from the Religion of their Anceſtors into Idolatry, notwithſtanding the frequent Remonſtrances on God's Part to the contrary? Now, to this Purpoſe it may be obſerv'd, (m) that, in the whole Compaſs of the Law, there is no expreſs Revelation made of a future Life; that the Hints, which are given of it, are too obſcure for every common Reader rightly to interpret; and that this Obſcurity might be a Means of throwing the antient Iſraelites into idolatrous Practices. For, as they had no certain Hopes of another Life to rely on, they could not ſee neighbouring Nations in a more flouriſhing Condition, without ſome Uneaſineſs and Perturbation of Mind; and from hence, by Degrees, they might fall into this Opinion, —— That the Gods of theſe Nations muſt needs be more mighty, and powerful, than the God of Iſrael, ſince their Worſhippers were manifeſtly more proſperous; and from hence they were induced to forſake the God of their Anceſtors, and to worſhip the Gods of the Heathen.

IT may be obſerv'd farther, that the Difficulty of keeping the Moſaick Law, eſpecially in what related to its Rites and Ceremonies, was very great, and the Profit, which reſulted from thence, no ways comparable to the Trouble, which it occaſion'd; and from thence they might be tempted to ſhake off (n) a Yoke, which neither they, nor their Fore-Fathers, were able to bear, and betake themſelves to the Obſervance of other Laws, more eaſy and commodious in themſelves, and ſuch as were productive of much more Benefit and Proſperity to the Obſervers of them. Nor ſhould it be forgotten, that, as a great Part of the Revenues of Paleſtine, according to the Conſtitution of the Moſaick Law, fell to the Lot of the Prieſts and Levites, the Laity, upon every Occaſion, might grow weary of paying ſo much; and thereupon be inclin'd to any Innovation in Religion, that ſhould offer itſelf, if it could but be ſupported at an eaſier Expence. And accordingly we may obſerve, that, in the wicked Reigns of Ahaz and Manaſſeh, when the Temple was either quite ſhut up, or converted to idolatrous Purpoſes, the Payment of Tithes and Oblations was ſuſpended, (which might be a great Gratification to the People) until, in the Reigns of Hezekiah and Joſiah, they were again reſtor'd to the Miniſters of God. Theſe, and ſuch Reaſons as theſe, might make the antient Hebrews ſo unſettled in their Obedience of the Law of Moſes, until the Time, that a clearer and more perfect Revelation of a future Life extended their Views and Hopes above the Things of this World, and made them more conſtant and immovable (as the Author to the Hebrews (o) bears them Teſtimony) in the Worſhip of the true God.

That Joſiah had a Right to carry his Reformation into the Kingdom of Iſrael.

JOSIAH may be thought by ſome to have follow'd the Dictates of his Zeal a little too far, in deſtroying the Images, and Altars, and other Monuments of Idolatry, in the Kingdom of Iſrael, where he

he had neither any regal nor judicial Authority: But it ſhould be remember'd, that his Authority in this Regard was founded upon an antient Prediction, (p) where he is particularly nam'd, and appointed to this Work of Reformation by God himſelf, and that, conſequently, he could not be guilty of an Infringement upon another's Right, even though he had no farther Commiſſion. But the ten Tribes, we are to conſider, being now gone into Captivity, the antient Right, which David, and his Poſterity, had to the whole Kingdom of Iſrael (before it was diſmember'd by Jeroboam, and his Succeſſors) devolv'd upon Joſiah. The People, who eſcap'd the Captivity, were united with his Subjects, and put themſelves under his Protection. They came to the Worſhip of God at Jeruſalem, and did doubtleſs gladly comply with his Extirpation of Idolatry; at which the Cuthites, the new Inhabitants of the Country, who worſhipp'd their Gods in another Manner, were not at all offended.

The Kings of Aſſyria, 'tis true, were the Lords and Conquerors of the Country; but, from the Time of Manaſſeh's Reſtoration, they ſeem to have conferr'd upon the Kings of Judah (who might thereupon become their Homagers) a Sovereignty in all the Land of Canaan, to the ſame Extent, wherein it was held by David and Solomon, before it was divided into two Kingdoms. So that Joſiah, upon ſundry Pretenſions, had ſufficient Power and Authority to viſit the Kingdom of Iſrael, and to purge it from Idolatry, as well as his own.

Why he oppos'd the King of Egypt.

And this, by the bye, ſuggeſts the Reaſon, why that good King was ſo very ſtrenuous in oppoſing the King of Egypt, when he demanded a Paſſage through his Country. (q) He was now, as we ſaid, an Homager, and Ally to the King of Babylon, and under a ſtrict Oath to adhere to him againſt all his Enemies, eſpecially againſt the Egyptians, and to defend the Land of Canaan (which was one Barrier of the Empire) againſt their Invaſions; and, being under ſuch an Obligation to his ſovereign Paramount, he could not permit his Enemy to paſs thro' his Country, in order to make War upon him, and not oppoſe him, without incurring a Breach of his Oath, and a Violation of that Fidelity, which, in the Name of his God, he had ſworn to the King of Babylon; and this was a Thing, which ſo good and juſt a Man, as Joſiah was, could not but deteſt.

And that he did not diſobey God herein.

It was the Senſe of his Duty therefore, and not any Raſhneſs of Temper, or Oppoſition to the Divine Will, that engag'd Joſiah in this War with the King of Egypt. The King of Egypt indeed ſent to him to acquaint him, that (r) God was with him, and that therefore oppoſing him would be fighting againſt God: But Joſiah knew very well, that he was an Heathen Prince, who had no Knowledge of the Lord Jehovah, nor had ever conſulted his Oracles or Prophets, and had therefore ſufficient Reaſon to believe, that by the God, who, as he pretended, had ſent him upon this Expedition, he intended no other, than the falſe Egyptian God, whom he ſerv'd, but whom the King of Judah had no Reaſon to regard.

The Truth is, whenever the Word God occurs in this Meſſage from Necho to Joſiah, it is not expreſs'd in the Hebrew Original by the Word Jehovah, which is the proper Name of the true God, but by the Word Elohim, which, being in the plural Number, is equally applicable to the falſe Gods of the Heathens, (and is the very Word that is us'd to denote them, whenever they are ſpoken of) as well as the true God. But even ſuppoſe that Necho, in his Embaſſy to Joſiah, had made uſe of the proper Name of the true God; yet was not Joſiah therefore bound to believe him, becauſe we find Sennacherib, Sennacherib, when he came up againſt Judah, ſending Hezekiah Word, (s) that the Lord (Jehovah in the Hebrew) had ordered him to go up againſt the Land, and deſtroy it; and yet, it is certain, that Sennacherib, in ſo pretending, ly'd to Hezekiah; and why then might not Joſiah have as good Reaſon to conclude, that Necho, in the ſame Pretence, might have ly'd likewiſe? Necho however, in his Meſſage, by uſing the Word Elohim, gave Joſiah to underſtand, that by the falſe Gods of Egypt he was ſent upon that Expedition, and therefore Joſiah could not be liable to any Blame, for not hearkening to the Words which came from them.

How he may be ſaid to die in Peace, tho' he was ſlain in Battle.

HIS Death indeed was ſudden and immature: He fell in Battle againſt the Egyptians; and yet he may be ſaid to have gone to his Grave in Peace, becauſe he was recalled from Life, whilſt his Kingdom was in a proſperous Condition, before the Calamities, wherewith it was threatened, were come upon it, and whilſt himſelf was in Peace and Reconciliation with God. Thus, when (t) the Righteous are taken away from the Evil to come, though (u) in the Sight of the Unwiſe they ſeemed to die, and their Departure is taken for Miſery; yet, in what Manner ſoever their Exit be, they may well be ſaid to die in Peace, who, after their Diſſolution here, (x) are numbered among the Children of God, and their Lot is among the Saints.

Why Hezekiah was concerned at his approaching Death.

(y) TRULY the Light is ſweet, and a pleaſant Thing it is, for the Eyes to behold the Sun, ſays the wiſe Preacher. The Love of Life is natural to us, and in our very Frame and Conſtitution is implanted the Fear of Death; ſo that it requires no ſmall Compaſs of Thought, and ſerious Conſideration, to receive the Sentence of our Diſſolution with a proper Compoſure of Mind. The common Excuſe of human Infirmity might therefore apologize for Hezekiah's Conduct, had we nothing more to ſay in his Behalf; but this is far from being all.

THE Meſſage, which God ſent him by the Prophet Iſaiah, was, that he ſhould die, i. e. that his Diſtemper, according to the natural Courſe of Things, was mortal, and above the Power of human Art to cure. But this Denunciation was not abſolute and irreverſible. It imply'd a tacit Condition, even as did Jonah's Prediction of the Deſtruction of Nineveh, which the Repentance of its Inhabitants prevented, as Hezekiah's Humiliation retarded the Time of his Death. At this Time, however, he was no more than nine and thirty Years old, nor had he as yet any Son; for Manaſſeh was not born, till three Years after his Illneſs. The Aſſyrians too were now making great Preparations to invade his Kingdom; for his Sickneſs was prior to their Invaſion, though, in the Courſe of the Hiſtory, it is placed immediately after it. Putting all theſe Conſiderations together then, the King had ſundry Reaſons, beſides the natural Averſion which all Men have to Death, to be concern'd at its Approach, and to deſire a Prolongation of his Life.

LENGTH of Days, and a peaceable Enjoyment of old Age, was a Promiſe which God had made to his faithful Servants, and the Reward that he uſually paid them in Hand; (z) and therefore Hezekiah was apt to look upon himſelf, as under the Diſpleaſure of God, for his being ſo haſtily ſummon'd away, and this premature Death of his, as a Kind of Token of his final Reprobation. In himſelf he ſaw the Royal Family of David extinct, and all the Hopes of having the Meſſiah born of his Race become abortive. He ſaw the Storm that was gathering, and threatening his Country with Deſolation, while there was none of his Family to ſucceed in his Throne, and all Things were in Danger of running into Anarchy and and Confuſion: And therefore, having this Proſpect before his Eyes, he might well melt into Tears, at the Apprehenſions of his approaching Death, which would extinguiſh all his Hopes, and conſummate all his Fears, in making him go down childleſs to the Grave.

What his Diſtemper was, 'tis uncertain.

WHAT his Diſtemper was, the Scripture has no where expreſsly told us: The original Word denotes an Inflammation; but what Kind of Inflammation it was, or what Part of the Body it affected, we have no Intimation given us: And therefore, being thus left to conjecture, ſome have thought it an Impoſthume; others, a Plague-Sore; and others, a Squinancy; being all led in their Opinions by what (a) the Naturaliſts have told us of the Virtue of the Medicine, that was here apply'd for Cure, viz. that Figs, in a Decoction, are good to diſperſe any Inflammation about the Glands, by gargling the Throat; and that, in a Cataplaſm, they wonderfully ſoften, and ripen any hard Tumour. But, whatever the Quality of the Medicine might be, that there was a Divine Interpoſition in the whole Affair is evident, both from the Speedineſs of the Cure, and the Nature of the Sign, which God gave Hezekiah, in order to convince him of it.

The firſt Inventors of Chronometers.

SOME very conſiderable Writers would endeavour to perſuade us, that, before the Babyloniſh Captivity the Jews had no Inſtruments, whereby to meaſure Time, nor any Terms in their Language, whereby to denote the diſtinct Gradation of it; which, were it true, would effectually deſtroy all that the Scripture relates, both concerning this Sun-Dial, which Ahaz ſet up, and the famous Miracle which was wrought upon it: But who the firſt Inventors of ſuch horological Inſtruments were, 'tis not ſo eaſy a Matter to determine.

(b) THE Egyptians, who always lov'd to magnify the Glory of their Nation, and to lay Claim to the Invention of every learned Science, or curious Art, pretend, that Machines of this Kind were in Uſe among them, many Years, before they appear'd in other Nations. To this Purpoſe, (c) their Hiſtorians have obſerv'd, that, in Acantha, a Town ſituate on the Nile, there was, every Day, a large Veſſel filled with Water, which, as it ſunk gradually by running out at a ſmall Paſſage, diſtinguiſhed the ſeveral Hours of the Day; and that all the Clepſydræ, or Water Hour-Glaſſes among the Greeks and Romans, were afterwards form'd upon this Model.

How Ahaz might come by his Sun-Dial.

THE Babylonians were a People well verſ'd in all Parts of Aſtronomy, and it was from them (as Herodotus (d) obſerves) that the Greeks had the Pole and Gnomon, and the twelve Parts of the Day. For Anaximander, (whom Pliny, by Miſtake, calls Anaximenes) who firſt taught them to diſtinguiſh Time, travelled into Chaldea for the Improvement of Knowledge, and from thence brought away this uſeful Invention. Anaximander indeed is ſaid to have flouriſh'd about two hundred Years after this; but, as the Scripture informs us, that there was a good Deal of Intimacy between Tiglath-pileſer King of Aſſyria, and Ahaz King of Judah, 'tis not improbable, that, as he was taken with the Figure of a ſtrange Altar, when he went to viſit that Prince at Damaſcus, he might then likewiſe ſee ſome of the Sun-Dials (for Sun-Dials might be common in Chaldea, though not in other Countries) which Tiglath-pileſer was accuſtom'd to carry along with him, for the Menſuration of Time wherever he went; and, being highly delighted with ſo curious and uſeful an Invention, might either have one made on the Spot, or take the Model of one, to be made at Jeruſalem, and ſet up in his Royal Palace.

Of what Form it was

IT is no eaſy Matter to determine of what Form the Sun-Dial was, but, (e) if we may be allow'd to gather any Thing from from the Signification of the Word Mahal, (which is always us'd in this Narration) we may, with the learned Grotius, ſuppoſe, that it was not horizontal, (as Sun-Dials are commonly made) but of a concave hemiſpherical Figure *, (much like what the Greeks call σκάφη) and that therein was a Gnomon of ſome Kind or other, which caſt its Shadow upon the Lines engraven in its Concavity.

What the Miracle wrought upon it was.

BUT of what make ſoever this Dial was, we have Reaſon to believe, that the Receſs of its Shadow was a real Miracle, and not the Effect of any natural Cauſe, viz. the Interpoſition of a Cloud, or any other Meteor, which might divert the Rays of the Sun to another Part of the Dial, for ſome ſmall Space of Time.

THE Account, which we have of this Event, in the ſecond Book of Kings, makes no Mention indeed of the Sun's going back, but only of the Shadow upon the Dial; but, in the Book of Iſaiah's Prophecy, wherein we have this Miracle more minutely related, we are told expreſly that (f) the Sun returned ten Degrees; and from hence, the Opinion of the Antients, both Jews and Chriſtians, has been, that the Miracle was wrought, not upon the Shadow *, but upon the Body of the Sun; or that the Sun, (as our excellent Archbiſhop Uſher (g) expreſſes it) and all the heavenly Bodies went back, and as much was detracted from the next Night, as was added to this Day.

THOSE, who embrace the new Philoſophy, which places the Sun in the Center and ſuppoſes the Earth to move round it, have, from their Hypotheſis, no Difficulty in admitting of this Miracle, whether it be ſaid to conſiſt in the different Determination of the Rays, or in the Retrogradation of the Body of the Sun; becauſe it is the ſame Thing, as to all outward Effects, whether the Earth turn round the Sun, or the Sun round the Earth: But, in both Caſes there is this Difficulty:—— (h) That the ſudden and violent Motion, either of the Sun or Earth, to make that Day and Night of no greater Length than the reſt, would be in Danger of ſhocking, or unhinging the whole Frame of Nature, as it certainly would have done, had it not been guided and directed by the ſteady and unerring Hand of the great Creator of the Univerſe, whoſe Motion he can either retard, or accelerate as he pleaſes, without occaſioning any Confuſion in the Order of Things, and with much greater Facility to himſelf, than any human Artificer can cauſe a Machine of his own making to go ſwifter or ſlower, by the ſole Suſpenſion of an heavier or lighter Weight.

---

* Other Authors are of an Opinion quite contrary to this. ——— They ſuppoſe, that, as there is no Mention made of any Sun-Dials in all the Works of Homer, and the Jews, very probably, knew nothing of the Diviſion of the Day into ſo many Hours, till after the Time of the Captivity, the Invention of ſuch Machines was ſubſequent to Hezekiah's Days; and therefore, from the Word ἀναβαθμὸς in the Septuagint, which may properly enough be render'd Steps, or Stairs, they infer, that this famous Chronometron of King Ahaz was nothing but a Flight of Stairs, leading up to the Gate of the Palace, and, according to the Projection of the Sun, mark'd at proper Diſtances with Figures, denoting the Diviſion of the Day, and not any regular Piece of Dial-Work. Univerſal Hiſtory, lib. i. c. 7. But this is too poor a Thing, to be recorded in Hiſtory, as the Invention, or Erection of a King, which every privite Perſon might have, as well as he.

(f) Iſaiah xxxviii. 8.

* Thoſe, who maintain the contrary Opinion, viz. That the whole Miracle was wrought upon the Dial, and occaſion'd only by the Reverſion of the Sun's Beams, while the Sun proceeded in its ordinary Courſe, urge in its Defence: ——— That in 2 Kings xx. 9. where this Miracle is recorded, Mention is only made of the Shadow's going back; and tho', in Iſaiah xxxviii. 8, the Sun is ſaid to return ten Degrees, yet to put the Sun for its Beams is a common Mode of Speech in all Languages. That the Diviſion of the Day into Hours (upon which the Invention of all Horoſcopical Inſtruments muſt depend) was of later Date than this: That Daniel is the firſt Writer in the Old Teſtament, who makes any Mention of it, and that there is no Hebrew Word, in the Compaſs of the whole Language, to denote it. As therefore the Intent of this Miracle was, not to lengthen the Day, as that of Joſhua's, but purely to put back the Shadow upon the Sun-Dial, this might have well enough been done, ſay they, by the ſole Reflection of the Sun's Rays, and without giving any Interruption to the Courſe of Nature. This Interruption, if the Receſs and Return of the Sun (or the Earth if we pleaſe) was gradual, muſt have occaſion'd great Inconveniences to Mankind upon Earth; ſince, if the Degrees were horary, or Lines of an Hour's Diſtance upon the Dial Plate, (as we now ſpeak) to make the Sun recede ten Hours, and after that re-advance ten more, this would have been to prolong that Day for twenty Hours, which, in hot Regions, would be enough to ſcorch the People of the Hemiſphere, that the Sun was over, and, in colder Climates when it happen'd to be abſent ſo long, to freeze the Inhabitants to death. On the other Hand, this Interruption, if the Sun or Earth went back in an Inſtant, and return'd as haſtily again, muſt have been ſeen and felt all the World over, been obſerv'd by the Aſtronomers then living, and recorded in the Writings of ſubſequent Hiſtorians, as well as the Sun's ſtanding ſtill in Joſhua's Time; but, ſince we find no Footſteps of this, on the contrary, by Merodach Baladan's ſending to Hezekiah to inform himſelf about this Phænomenon, it is rather evident, that the Thing had not been obſerv'd as far as Babylon, they thence infer, that there was no Reaſon for God's putting himſelf to the Expence of ſo prodigious a Miracle, as to make an Alteration in the whole Fabrick of the Univerſe, when a bare Refraction of the Sun's Rays upon the Dial-Plate would have anſwer'd the End as well. Le Clerc's Commentary. Lowth's Commentary on Iſaiah xxxviii. and Univerſal Hiſtory, lib. i. c. 7.

Viz. in the Motion of the Sun, and not in the Shadow.

SINCE the Scripture therefore, in this Caſe, tells us as plainly, that the Sun did recede, as, in the Caſe of Joſhua, that it did ſtand ſtill in the Firmament of Heaven, we have no other Warrant, but to take Words in their literal Senſe, even tho' it be attended with ſome Difficulties. Theſe Difficulties ariſe chiefly from the Oppoſition of ſome modern Syſtems of Philoſophy, but whether it be juſt and reaſonable, that Revelation ſhould conform to Philoſophy, or Philoſophy to Revelation, eſpecially when the Expreſſions of Scripture are clear, and Sentiments of Philoſophers but mere Conjectures, is a Queſtion that need require no long Deliberation; eſpecially ſince heavenly Bodies, by Reaſon of their vaſt Diſtance, are inacceſſible to our utmoſt Sagacity, and the greater Part of the Secrets of Nature are not diſcoverable by our moſt indefatigable Search after Truth.

That a Sign, future to the Event, is ſignificant.

(i) THO', at firſt View, we may be apt to think, that a Sign, which precedes the Event, is more ſignificant, becauſe better adapted to our Manner of conceiving it, than one which follows after it; yet, upon a nearer Examination, we ſhall find, that a Sign, which is poſterior to the Event, is not a leſs, but in ſome Reſpects a more convincing Proof, than the other; eſpecially when the Perſon, to whom it is given, lives to ſee both the Sign and the Event accompliſh'd. The Sign, which goes before the Event, proves but one Thing, viz. that the Event was from God, or that the Perſon, who foretold it, was divinely inſpir'd; but the Sign, which is future to the Event, manifeſts theſe three Things: 1ſt, That the Perſon who foretold it was poſſeſs'd with the Spirit of Prophecy: 2dly, That God was the Author of the miraculous Event, which he foretold: And 3dly, That he was the Author likewiſe of the Sign, which follow'd the Miracle; eſpecially if the Sign be miraculous, as it generally is.

The Meaning of that given to Hezekiah.

To apply this now to the Caſe before us. To convince Hezekiah of his approaching Deliverance, God gave him ſuch Things for a Sign, as would not come to paſs, until his Delieverance was accompliſh'd; but then it ſhould be remember'd, that as the People were to be convinc'd, that what happen'd to Sennacherib was not the Work of Chance, or the Effect of natural Cauſes, but immediately inflicted by the Hand of God, his Prophet was to foretel, not only the Particulars of what befel him, but ſuch Conſequences likewiſe, as would appear, not only to be ſupernatural, but Demonſtrations likewiſe of the Divine Power and Goodneſs. To this Purpoſe Iſaiah is ſent, not only to foretel Hezekiah's Deliverance, the Deſtruction of the Aſſyrian Army, and the Death of Sennacherib; but, to fortify the People againſt the Apprehenſions of another Enemy, viz. a grievous Famine, after that Sennacherib was gone, he is order'd to add, that God would find one Means or other to preſerve his People. Tho' the Enemy will deſtroy all the Corn in the Country, yet ye ſhall eat this Year (ſays the Prophet) ſuch Things, as ye can meet with: Tho' the next be the Year of Jubilee, or Sabbatical Year, in which ye are to let the Land reſt, yet ye ſhall eat ſuch Things as grow of themſelves; (k) God ſhall take care one Way or other, that ye ſhall want no Proviſions theſe two Years; and in the third Year there ſhall be no Enemy to moleſt you, and therefore ſow and reap the Fruit of your Labours: For, tho' ye have have been brought low with Loſſes innumerable and Perſecutions, yet, in a ſhort Time, ye ſhall be re-eſtabliſh'd; for the Remnant, that is eſcap'd of Judah, ſhall yet again take Root downward, and bear Fruit upward.

And that to the Princes of Judah.

THE like may be ſaid of the Sign concerning the Virgin, that was to bear a Son, and call his Name Immanuel; tho' it was ſome hundred Years ſubſequent to the Deliverance, which God promis'd Judah, yet was it of great Service to confirm the People in their Expectations of it. To this Purpoſe we may obſerve, that it is not to Ahaz, that the Prophet addreſſes himſelf, (for he, out of a ſpecious Pretence of not being willing to tempt God, rejected all Signs) but to the Princes of the Blood royal; and therefore he ſays, (l) Hear ye now, ye Houſe of David, the Lord himſelf will give you a Sign, a Virgin ſhall conceive. The original Word Alma, (as (m) ſeveral learned Men have obſerv'd) ſignifies almoſt always a Virgin, untainted by a Man; is ſo render'd by the Septuagint in this Place, and cannot, with any Propriety, denote (n) any indifferent young Woman, who ſhould afterwards be marry'd, and have a Son. For how can we imagine, that, after ſo pompous an Introduction, the Prophet ſhould mean no more at laſt by a Virgin's conceiving, than that a young Woman ſhould be with Child? What, does Iſaiah offer Ahaz a Miracle, either in the Depth, or in the Height above? And when he ſeems to tell the Houſe of David, that God, of his own Accord, would perform a greater Work than they could aſk, does he ſink to a Sign, that Nature produces every Day? Is that to be called a Wonder, (which implies an uncommon, ſurpriſing, and ſupernatural Event) which happens conſtantly by the ordinary Laws of Generation? How little does ſuch a Birth anſwer the ſolemn Apparatus, which the Prophet uſes to raiſe their Expectation of ſome great Matter? Hear ye, O Houſe of Judah, —— behold, the Lord will give you a Sign worthy of himſelf; and what is that? Why, a young marry'd Woman ſhall be with Child. How ridiculous muſt ſuch a Declaration make the Prophet! And how highly muſt it enrage the Audience, to hear a Man, at ſuch a Juncture at this, begin an idle and impertinent Tale, which ſeems to banter and inſult their Miſery, rather than adminiſter any Conſolation under it!

That there is no Inconſiſtence in it, but great Comfort to the People.

IT is to be obſerv'd farther, that, in the Beginning of this Paſſage, when God commanded Iſaiah to go, and meet Ahaz, he order'd him to take with him his Son Sear-jaſhal who was then but a Child. Why the Child was to accompany his Father, we can hardly ſuppoſe any other Reaſon, but that he was to be of Uſe, ſome Way or other, to enforce the Prophecy. 'Tis but ſuppoſing then, that the Prophet, in uttering the Words, Before this Child ſhall be able to diſtinguiſh between Good and Evil, (o) pointed at his own Son, (for there is no Neceſſity to refer them to Immanuel) who might then either ſtand by him, or be held in his Arms, and all the Difficulty is ſolv'd: But then the Comfort, which accru'd to the Houſe of David from this ſeaſonable Prophecy, was very conſiderable. For (p) it aſſur'd them of the Truth and Veracity of God's Promiſe, and that he would not ſuffer them to be deſtroy'd, nor the Sceptre to depart from Judah, until the Meſſiah came. It aſſur'd them of his Almighty Power, in that he could create a new Thing in the Earth, by making a Virgin to conceive, and thereby ſhew himſelf able to deliver them out of the Hands of their moſt potent Enemies; and it aſſur'd them likewiſe of his peculiar Favour, in that he had decreed the Meſſiah ſhould deſcend from their Family, ſo that the People, to whom he had vouchſaf'd ſo high a Dignation, might depend on his Promiſe, and, under the Shadow of his Wings, think themſelves ſecure.

DISSERTATION IV.

Of the Tranſportation of the Ten Tribes, and their Return.

The Miſeries, and yet arrogant Pretences of the Jews.

NOTHING (q) in Hiſtory is more common, than to ſee whole Nations ſo chang'd in their Manners, their Religion, their Language, and the very Places of their Abode, as that it becomes a Matter of ſome Difficulty to find out their firſt Original. Large Empires ſwallow up leſſer States; and, in the Courſe of their Conqueſts, ſweeping every Thing before them like a Torrent, they compel the Vanquiſh'd to follow the Fate of their Conquerors, and to inhabit ſuch Countries, as were unknown to them before.

Never was there a People, that had a more ample Experience of theſe unhappy Revolutions, than the Kingdom of Iſrael, which, upon the Revolt of Rehoboam, came to be called the Kingdom of the Ten Tribes. God, by the Mouth of his Servant Moſes, had denounc'd this Judgment upon them, in caſe of their obſtinate Diſobedience to his Law: (r) The Lord ſhall ſcatter thee among all People, from the one End of the Earth to the other; and, among all theſe Nations, thou ſhalt find no Eaſe, neither ſhall the Sole of thy Foot have Reſt. And accordingly, when, by their Idolatry, and other grievous Impieties, they had provoked God to Wrath, and filled up the Meaſure of their Iniquity; in the Reign of Pekah King of Iſrael, (s) he ſent Tiglath-Pileſer King of Aſſyria, who invaded his Country, and, having over-run great Part of it, carry'd away captive the Tribes of Naphtali, Reuben, Gad, and the half Tribe of Manaſſeh, from the Eaſt Side of the River Jordan; and, about twenty Years after this, in the Reign of Hoſhea, ſent his Son Salmaneſer againſt Samaria, who, after a Siege of three Years, took it, and carry'd away all the Remainder of that miſerable People, according to what the Prophet Hoſhea had foretold; (t) Ephraim is ſmitten, their Root is dried up, they ſhall bear no Fruit. —— My God ſhall caſt them away, becauſe they did not hearken unto him, and they ſhall be Wanderers among the Nations.

Such (with very ſmall Exception) has been the Caſe of this unhappy People, ever ſince the Time of the Aſſyrian Captivity; and yet, ſuch is their Pride and Arrogance, that, inſtead of owning the Truth, they have devis'd Fables of their Living all along in great Proſperity and Grandeur, in ſome unknown Land, as a national and united Body, in an independent State, and under Monarchies, or Republicks of their own. So that, before we begin to enquire into the real Places of their Tranſportation, and ſome other Circumſtances thereunto belonging, it may not be amiſs to examine a little the Merit of theſe Pretenſions, and what Foundations they have for ſuch mighty Boaſts.

The falſe Account of Eſdras.

The Author of the ſecond Book of Eſdras informs us, (u) "That the "Ten Tribes, being taken Priſoners by "Salmaneſer, and carry'd beyond the "River Euphrates, enter'd into a Reſo-"lution of quitting the Gentiles, and "retiring into a Country, never inha-"bited before, that they might there "religiouſly obſerve the Law, which "they had too much neglected in their "own Land; that, to this Purpoſe, "they croſs'd the Euphrates, where God "wrought

Confuted.

THIS is the Subſtance of our Author's Account: But now, who can believe, that a People, ſo fond of Idolatry in their own Country, ſhould, in their State of Captivity, be ſo zealous for the Obſervation of the Law? Arſareth, we are told, is a City in Media, ſituate beyond the River Araxes; but, if this was the Place they betook themſelves to for the freer Exerciſe of their Religion, what Need was there for ſo very long a Peregrination? Or, who can ſuppoſe, that their imperious Maſters would ſuffer Captives, upon any Pretence whatever, to retreat in a Body, out of their Country, and ſet up a diſtinct Kingdom in another Place? (x) In ſhort, this counterfeit Eſdras, who ſeems to have been a Chriſtian, and to have liv'd about the End of the firſt, or the Beginning of the ſecond Century, is not only ſo inconſiſtent in his Account of this, and ſeveral other Tranſactions, but ſo fond of uncertain Traditions, and ſo romantick and fabulous about the Divine Inſpiration which he boaſts of, that there is no Credit to be given to what he ſays, concerning the Retreat of the Ten Tribes into an unknown Land.

Benj. de Tudela's romantick Account.

A FAMOUS Jewiſh Traveller (y) of the twelfth Century, and who ſeems to have undertaken his Travels, only to diſcover the State of his diſpers'd Brethren, aſſigns them a large and ſpacious Country, wherein reign'd two Brothers, Deſcendants of the Houſe of David. The elder of theſe (as he tells us) was Annas, who (beſides his Capital Thema) had many other Cities, Caſtles, and Fortreſſes, and an Extent of Ground, which could not be travelled over under ſixteen Days. The other, whoſe Name was Salmon, had in his Dominions forty Cities, two hundred Boroughs, and an hundred Caſtles. His Subjects (who were all Jews) were three hundred Thouſand; Tanai, which was his Capital, contain'd an hundred Thouſand; and Tilimoſa, a ſtrong City, ſituate between two Mountains, where he uſually reſided, as many Inhabitants.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

Confuted.

HERE we have a ſpacious Country of nothing but Jews: But the Author, who pretends to have been there, has ſo miſtaken the Situation of ſeveral Places that he mentions, and gives us ſuch fabulous Accounts of the Manner of the Perſians fiſhing for Pearls; of the Virtue of the Prophet Daniel's Tomb; and of ſome Turks, who had two Holes in the Midſt of their Face, inſtead of a Noſe; that a Man muſt be very fond of Romances, who can give Credit to what ſeems to be calculated on Purpoſe to flatter the Pride of a People, who are ſtill fooliſhly vain, tho' under the Rejection of Almighty God.

Peritſul's Account, and the Deſign of it.

ANOTHER Jewiſh Author (z), in his Deſcription of the World, has found out very commodious Habitations for the ten Tribes, and, in many Places, has given them a glorious Eſtabliſhment. In a Country, which he calls Perricha, encloſ'd by unknown Mountains, and bounded by Aſſyria, he has ſettled ſome, and made them a flouriſhing and populous Kingdom. Others he places in the Deſert of Chabor, which (according to him) lies upon the Indian Sea, where they live, in the Manner of the ancient Rachabites, without Houſes, Sowing, or the Uſe of Wine. Nay, he enters the Indies likewiſe, and peoples the Banks of the Ganges, the Iſles of Bengala, the Philippines, and ſeveral other Places, with the Jews, to whom he aſſigns a powerful King, called Daniel, who had three other Kings, tributary, and dependent on him. But this is all of the ſame Piece, a forg'd Account to aggrandize their Nation, and to make it be believ'd, (a) that the Sceptre is not departed from Judah, nor a Law-giver from between his Feet, and that Shiloh, conſequently, is not yet come.

Manaſſeh's, or Ortelius's Account.

MANASSEH, one of the moſt famous Rabbins of the laſt Age, has aſſerted the Tranſmigration of the Ten Tribes into Tartary, where he aſſigns them a great Province, called Thabor, which in the Hebrew Tongue, ſignifies a Navel, becauſe this Thabor (as he ſays) is one of the middle Provinces of Tartary. Ortelius, in his Geography, is not only of the ſame Opinion, but, in Confirmation of it, adds, that the Ten Tribes ſucceeded the Scythians, its ancient Inhabitants, and took upon them the Name of Gauthei, becauſe they were zealous for the Glory of God; that Totaces (the true Name of the Tartars) is Hebrew, and ſignifies Remains, as the Tribes diſpers'd in the North were the Remains of antient Iſrael; that, among theſe People, there are ſeveral plain Footſteps of the Jewiſh Religion, beſides Circumciſion; and from them, in all Probability, have deſcended the Jews, that in Poland and Muſcovy are found ſo numerous.

Confuted.

(b) IT cannot be deny'd indeed, but that ſeveral of the Iſraelites might paſs into Tartary, becauſe Armenia is the only Country that parts it from Aſſyria, whereunto they were primarily carry'd: But there is no Reaſon for their penetrating Scythia, and thence diſperſing themſelves in the Kingdoms of Poland and Muſcovy; becauſe the Tranquillity and Privileges, which the Princes of theſe Countries have granted the Jews, are the true Cauſe and Motive of their reſorting thither in ſuch Numbers. In Confutation therefore of what has been ſaid above, (c) the Jewiſh Hiſtorian has well obſerv'd, that the antient Scythians were a People too fierce by Nature, and too expert in War, for an Handful of Fugitives (ſuch as the Iſraelites were) ever to conquer or expel; that the People of this Country were all along Idolaters, until they were converted to the Religion of Mahomet, from whence they receiv'd the Rite of Circumciſion, and ſome other Ceremonies conformable to the Law of Moſes; that the Etymology of Names is, of all others, the weakeſt and moſt precarious Argument; and that it is ridiculous to ſeek for the Glory of God among the Tartars, before the Introduction of Mahometiſm, ſince (according to the Account of their (d) Hiſtorian) "Some of them liv'd like Beaſts, without any Senſe of God; others worſhipp'd the Sun, Moon, and Stars; and others again made Gods of the Oxen, that plow'd their Land, or proſtrated themſelves before every great Tree."

Monteſini's fabulous Relation.

MANASSEH, the famous Rabbin, we lately mention'd, publiſh'd a Book, (e) intitled, The Hopes of Iſrael, founded upon the Number and Power of the Jews in America; but in this he was impos'd upon by the fabulous Relation of Monteſini, who reported, "That he found a great Number of Jews, concealed behind the Mountains of Cordilleras, which run along Chili in America; that, continuing his Journey in that Country, he came at length to the Banks of a River, where, upon his giving a Signal, there appear'd a People, who pronounc'd in Hebrew theſe Words out of Deuteronomy, Hear, O Iſrael, the Lord our God is one Lord; that they look'd upon Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob as their great Progenitors, and had been conducted into that Country by incredible Miracles; that the Indians had treated them with great Cruelty, and thrice declar'd War againſt them; "but

“but that, by God's protecting his People againſt Idolaters, they had been as oft defeated, and were now totally deſtroy'd; and that ſome of their Magi, who made uſe of Inchantments, had openly declar'd, that the God of Iſrael was the only true God, and that, at the Conſummation of Ages, their Nation ſhould become the Miſtreſs of the whole Univerſe.”

Manaſſeh's Concluſion from it.

DELUDED with this Account, Manaſſeh endeavour'd to find out the Road, which might poſſibly lead the Iſraelites into the Weſt-Indies; and, to this Purpoſe, ſuppoſing that Aſia and America were formerly one Continent before they were divided by the Streights of Anian, he aſſerted, that the Iſraelites might travel to America by Land, before the Separation happen'd.

Penn's Account.

SIR William Penn, in his preſent State of the Lands of the Engliſh in America, tells us, “That the Faces of the Inhabitants, eſpecially of their Children, are ſo very like the Jews, that, when you look upon them, you would think yourſelf in the Jews Quarter in London; that their Eyes are little and black, like the Jews; that they reckon by Moons; offer their firſt Fruits; have a Kind of Feaſt of Tabernacles; and that their Language is maſculine, ſhort, conciſe, and full of Energy, in which it much reſembles the Hebrew.”

And that of others.

OTHER Hiſtorians (f) have obſerv'd, that ſome of the Americans have a Notion of the Deluge, though they relate it in a different Manner; that they celebrate a Jubilee every fifth Year, and a Sabbath every ſeventh Day; that others obſerve Circumciſion, abſtain from Swine's Fleſh, and purify themſelves by bathing, whenever they have touch'd a dead Carcaſs; that Marriages among others are perform'd (g) in a Manner not unlike what Moſes preſcribes; and that they generally believe a Reſurrection; (h) for which Reaſon they cauſe their Wives and Slaves to be bury'd with them, that, when they ariſe from their Graves, they may appear with an Attendance ſuitable to their Quality.

All refuted.

(i) THIS Conformity of Cuſtoms, and Looks, and Sentiments have induc'd ſeveral to think, that the captive Iſraelites, we are here in Queſt of, went into America, either by Way of China, or Tartary, and there ſettled themſelves. But, how ſpecious ſoever theſe Arguments may appear, there is no Manner of Solidity in them. To prove a Point of this Kind, we ſhould produce a whole Nation, or Province in America, diſtinct from all others in their Ceremonies, and Way of worſhipping God, in a Manner exactly agreeing with the Hebrews: But to ſay, that becauſe, in one Place, the People abſtain from Swine's Fleſh, and in another, they obſerve the ſeventh Day; in one, they offer Sacrifices, and in another, uſe Baths, when they think themſelves polluted, the Americans were originally Iſraelites; is carrying the Conſequence a great deal too far, and what indeed we may prove in any other Nation under Heaven, if we may be allow'd to argue in this Manner from Particulars to Generals.

THE Truth is, the Devil, in all his idolatrous Countries, has made it his Buſineſs to mimick God in the Rites of his religious Worſhip; or, if this were not, there is naturally ſo great a Conformity in Mens Sentiments, concerning theſe Matters, that the Americans might agree with the Jews in the Oblation of their Firſt-Fruits, their Computations by Moons, &c. without having any Commerce, or Affinity with them; and though there be ſomething more characteriſtick in Circumciſion; yet, as ſeveral other Nations us'd it, the Americans, upon this Account, cannot be Jews, becauſe (if we may believe Acoſta, who had made their Cuſtoms a good Part of his Study) they never did circumciſe their Children, and therefore are thus far excluded from being Deſcendants of that Race.

THUS have we endeavour'd to find out the Situation of the Ten Tribes of Iſrael, Iſrael, and yet can meet with nothing, but either the fabulous Accounts of the Talmudiſts, or the uncertain Conjectures of modern Criticks: Let us now have Recourſe to the Scriptures, and know what the Information is, that they can ſupply us with in this our Enquiry.

The Scripture-Account of them, enquir'd into.

THE ſacred Hiſtory thus expreſſes it, ——(k) The King of Aſſyria took Samaria, and carried Iſrael away into Aſſyria, and plac'd them in Halah, and in Habor, by the River Gozan, and in the Cities of the Medes; only we muſt note, that there is ſome Ambiguity in the Tranſlation: For, whereas it looks as if Gozan were the River, and not Habor, there is plainly no River to be found of the Name of Gozan, and therefore the Emendation ſhould be, ——— He placed them in Halah, and by the River Habor, in Gozan, and in the Cities of the Medes.

THE holy Penman, we may obſerve, diſtinguiſhes two Places, into which the Iſraelites were carry'd, (as indeed they were numerous enough to make two different Colonies) Aſſyria, and Media. In Aſſyria we ſee the River Habor, or Chaboras, which riſes from Mount Maſius, and, running through Meſopotamia, falls into the Euphrates. Halah, which, in Ptolomy, is called Chalcitis, is a City and Province ſituate on one Side of its Banks, and Gozan, which is likewiſe a City and Province, is found on the other: So that the Ten Tribes were ſeated in two Provinces, which ſtretch'd along both Sides of this River. An happy Situation for them, ſince they were only ſeparated by a River, which water'd all the Cities, that were aſſign'd for their Habitation!

(l) As to the Cities of the Medes we are more in the Dark, becauſe the Scripture does not ſpecify any; but we may preſume, that this Colony was placed in the mountainous Part of Media, becauſe it was leſs peopled, than the lower Country. It wanted indeed Inhabitants, and, if we will believe (m) Strabo, was ſupply'd by Strangers, and Colonies from abroad.

THE Truth is, the Antients have extolled Media, as a very happy Country. Ecbatana, where the King kept his Reſidence in Summer, was one of the fineſt and largeſt Cities in the World. Suſa, where he ſpent the Winter, was a very conſiderable Place likewiſe: But, on the North-ſide, there were high Mountains, where nevertheleſs there was good Paſturage, ſo that, what the Country wanted was good Huſbandmen, and ſuch as were us'd to Tillage; for which Purpoſe the Iſraelites, who had made that their principal Buſineſs in the Holy Land, were, of all other People, the fitteſt Inhabitants.

IN theſe two Provinces were the Ten Tribes ſeated at firſt; and it is not improbable, that, in a ſhort Time, thoſe of Aſſyria might extend themſelves into ſeveral other Parts of the Empire; for, in Alexander's Time, we meet with * a great Body of them in Babylon; and that thoſe of Media might ſtretch, upon the Right, into the Provinces bordering upon the Caſpian Sea, (or as (n) ſome imagine) even beyond that Sea, as far as the River Araxes; but that they ever became ſo powerful, as * to change the antient Names of Places into thoſe of their own Language, we can hardly believe; becauſe they fell under ſo many bitter Perſecutions, were were ſubject to ſo many Revolutions of the Kingdoms where they liv'd, and, from different Princes, underwent ſuch a Variety of Tranſmigrations, that, before they could gain any ſuch Weight and Authority in the World, we find them here and there ſcatter'd, in leſſer Bodies, as it were, over the whole Face of it.

That they did not return with the Tribes of Judah and Benjamin.

NOT only ſome of the Greek Fathers, but ſome of our modern Criticks likewiſe have maintain'd, that the Ten Tribes were reſtor'd, with thoſe of Judah and Benjamin, under the Conduct of Zorobabel and Nehemiah, when Cyrus and his Succeſſors were ſo kind as to give the Jews in general a full Permiſſion to return into their native Land. (o) To this Purpoſe they have obſerv'd, that ſeveral of the Prophets, who foretold their Captivity, with the ſame Breath, as it were, have predicted their Return; that, in Token of ſuch their Return, (p) twelve Goats, (for every Tribe one) were offer'd at the Dedication of the new Temple, which would ſcarce have been done, had ten of theſe Tribes been left behind beyond the Euphrates; that, under Nehemiah, the Levites confeſs'd the Sins of the Ten Tribes; that, in the Time of the Maccabees, (q) all Paleſtine was full of Iſraelites, as well as Jews; that (r) St Matthew makes mention of the Land of Naphtali; and that St Paul, in his Defence before Agrippa, declares, (s) That from the Promiſe, to which the Twelve Tribes hope to come, he was called in Queſtion.

IT cannot be thought indeed, but that the Love, which the Jews, above all other Nations, bore to their Native Country, and the great Encouragement, which the Princes of the Eaſt were pleas'd to grant to forward the Re-eſtabliſhment, might tempt ſome of each Tribe to take this Opportunity of returning with the two Tribes of Judah and Benjamin; nor can we doubt, but that, upon their Return, they would be apt to aſſume their former Names, and, as far as in them lay, to ſettle themſelves in their antient Poſſeſſions. So that, what with thoſe, that eſcap'd their Conqueror's Fury, and remain'd untranſported; thoſe, who return'd with Ezra, purſuant to the Commiſſion, which Artaxerxes gave him; and thoſe, who took the Advantage of the Revolutions of the Empire, and of the frequent Journies, they made to Jeruſalem, great Numbers of the antient Inhabitants might be found in the Days of the Maccabees, and ſome of every Tribe in our Saviour's Time: But that all theſe Returns did never amount to a full Reſtoration of the People, we have abundant Teſtimony to convince us.

JOSEPHUS (t) indeed tells us, that Ezra, upon the Receipt of his Commiſſion from Artaxerxes, communicated the Contents of it to all the Iſraelites, that were in Exile, ſome of whom reſorted to Babylon in order to return with him; but there were then another Sort of Iſraelites, (as his Words are) who, being wonted to the Place, and ſettled in their Habitations, choſe rather to continue where they were. Upon the whole, he computes, that few or none, but thoſe of the Tribe of Benjamin and Judah, came along with Ezra; and “ This is the Reaſon, (as “ he tells us) that, in his Time, there “ were only two Tribes to be found in “ Aſia and Europe under the Roman “ Empire; for, as for the Ten Tribes, “ they are all planted beyond the Euphrates, “ ſays he, and ſo prodigiouſly increas'd in “ Number, that they are hardly to be “ computed.” Nay, even thoſe, that follow'd “ Sins. The Chaduſians have a little alter'd the Word Chadoſchim, which ſignifies Saints, which was a Title, the “ Jews who called themſelves an holy Nation, much affected. And laſtly, Arſareth, the moſt famous of all the “ Cities built upon the Araxes, had an Hebrew Name, ſignifying the City of Relicks, or the Remains of Iſrael.” But the Author of the Hiſtory of the Jews, ſo often cited upon this Subject, has confuted the Argument drawn from the Etymology of the Words, and, in particular, ſhewn, that the Caduſians were a People much ancienter in the Country, than the Iſraelites, ſince Ninus reckon'd them among his Subjects. follow'd Ezra, (according (u) to the Sentiment of ſome of the Talmudiſts) were but the Dregs of the People, becauſe the Nobility and principal Men of the Houſe of David ſtill continu'd in Chaldea.

HOWEVER this be, 'tis certain, that Philo (x), in his Repreſentation to Caligula, tells him, that Jeruſalem ought to be look'd upon, not only as the Metropolis of Judea, but as the Center of a Nation diſpers'd in infinite Places; among which he reckons the Iſles of Cyprus, and Candia, Egypt, Macedonia, and Bithynia; the Empire of the Perſians, and all the Cities of the Eaſt, except Babylon, from whence they were then expelled. Nay, prior to this we read, (y) that a great Number of theſe Orientals appear'd at Jeruſalem, at the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, when, after our Saviour's Aſcenſion, his Apoſtles began to preach the Goſpel, during that Feſtival. It cannot be thought, that they were only Proſelytes, whom the Jews of the Diſperſion had converted: They muſt have been Jews, who came to ſacrifice at Jeruſalem, according to the Law; for, by St Luke's Enumeration of them, it appears, that they were the Deſcendants of the Tribes, that had been long before ſettled among the (z) Medes, among the Parthians, in Meſopotamia, in Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Aſia Minor, &c. and therefore we find St Peter, the Apoſtle of the Circumciſion, directing his Epiſtle, (a) to the Strangers, ſcattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia, and Bithynia.

UPON the Strength of theſe Authorities we may then conclude, that, tho' Artaxerxes, in his Commiſſion to Ezra, (b) gave free Liberty to all Jews whatever, that were under his Dominions, to return to Jeruſalem, if they were ſo minded, which ſome, without doubt, moſt gladly embrac'd; yet the main Bulk of the Ten Tribes, being loth to remove, continu'd in the Land of their Captivity, where they are ſtill to be found in great Numbers: And therefore all thoſe glorious Prophecies, which ſome by Miſtake have apply'd to their thin Returns under the Jewiſh Governors ſent from Babylon, do certainly relate to a much greater Event, even their Converſion, and final Reſtoration under the Kingdom of the Meſſiah.

That they ſhall return, and be converted at laſt.

THE Prophet Hoſea, ſpeaking of the preſent State of the Jews, gives us this Character, whereby to diſtinguiſh them: (c) They ſhall abide many Days without a King, and without a Prince, and without a Sacrifice, and without an Image, and without an Ephod, and without a Teraphim. In vain do they boaſt of that Power and Authority, which they never had, but in their own Country. The Kings and the Princes, that they talk ſo much of, are all fictitious and imaginary. From the firſt Time of their Tranſmigration to this very Day, they have been a People without any Governor, or Form of Government; and if, in the Midſt of ſo many different Nations, and under ſo ſevere Perſecutions, they nevertheleſs have hitherto been preſerv'd, it muſt be imputed to the ſecret and wonderful Providence of God, who hath ſtill Deſigns of Pity and gracious Loving-Kindneſs towards them. To this Purpoſe the ſame Prophet aſſures us, that (d) The Number of the Children of Iſrael ſhall be as the Sand of the Sea, which cannot be meaſured or numbered; and in the Place, where it was ſaid unto them, ye are not my People, there it ſhall be ſaid unto them, ye are the Sons of the living God. For he ſhall recover the Remnant of his People (ſays another Prophet) (e) that ſhall be left,—— He ſhall ſet up an Enſign for the Nations, and aſſemble the Outcaſts of Iſrael, and gather together the Diſperſed of Judah from the four Corners of the Earth; for (f) behold the Days come, ſaith the Lord by another of his Prophets, that it ſhall no more be ſaid, the Lord liveth, that brought the Children out of the Land of Egypt, but the Lord liveth, who brought up the Children

dren of Iſrael from the Land of the North, and from all the Lands, whither he hath driven them. And I will bring them again into the Land, that I gave unto their Fathers; and, when this is done, (g) I will no more hide my Face from them; but (h) will rejoice in Jeruſalem, and joy in my People. (i) They ſhall be no more a Prey to the Heathen: (k) Violence ſhall be no more heard in their Land, Waſting, nor Deſtruction within their Borders; but they ſhall call their Walls Salvation, and their Gates Praiſe. (l) Their Land ſhall no more be termed deſolate, (m) but they ſhall dwell in the Land, that I have given to Jacob my Servant, even they and their Children's Children for ever; and my Servant David (not the Son of Jeſſe, who was dead long before Ezekiel propheſy'd, but the Meſſiah, who was to be of the Lineage of David, as Kimchi explains it) ſhall be their Prince for ever. Moreover, I will make a Covenant of Peace, which ſhall be an everlaſting Covenant with them; and I will ſet my Sanctuary among them for evermore. My Tabernacle ſhall be with them; yea, I will be their God, and they ſhall be my People.

(n) Now tho' it cannot be deny'd, that theſe, and ſeveral other Prophecies to the like Purpoſe do denote a great and glorious Reſtoration to God's People; yet it ſeems very evident, that ſcarce any of them can be apply'd to the Return of the Jews from their Captivity in Babylon. Long ſince that Time, and almoſt ſeventeen hundred Years ago, his Covenant of Peace has been departed from them; Violence has been in their Land, which has been laid deſolate; their Tabernacle and Sanctuary have been conſum'd; they have been a Prey to the Heathen; and have long ceas'd to be God's People, and he to be their God: And therefore theſe Prophecies muſt be underſtood of ſome other Event, which can only be the general Converſion of the Jews to Chriſtianity, and their Re-eſtabliſhment in the Holy Land. For this Myſtery the Apoſtle has reveal'd, (o) that Blindneſs in Part hath happened to Iſrael, until the Fulneſs of the Gentiles be come in, and ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, as it is written, (p) there ſhall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and ſhall turn away Ungodlineſs from Jacob. (q) Then ſhall the Lord ſet his Hand again, a ſecond Time, to recover the Remnant of his People, and to aſſemble the Outcaſts of Iſrael, from every Kindred, and Tongue, and Nation, and People, that, at (r) the Blowing of the great Trumpet, they may come from the Land of Aſſyria, and Egypt, and may worſhip the Lord in the holy Mount at Jeruſalem. When this great Event ſhall happen, 'tis impoſſible for us to determine; but our Buſineſs, in the mean Time, is to pray, that (s) the Salvation of Iſrael may come out of Zion, that Jacob may rejoice, and Iſrael may be glad.

CHAP. V.

From the Death of JOSIAH, to the BABYLONISH Captivity.

The HISTORY.

Jehoahaz's wicked Reign, and Depoſition.

AFTER the unhappy Death of good Joſiah, his Son Jehoahaz † (who was alſo called Shallum) was anointed King; but, as he was far from following his Father's Example, he was ſoon † tumbled down from his Throne into a Priſon, where he ended his Days, with Miſery and Diſgrace, in a ſtrange Land. For Pharaoh-Necho, upon his Return from the Expedition againſt the Babylonians, (wherein he had great Succeſs) hearing, that Jehoahaz had taken upon him the Kingdom of Judah without his Conſent, ſent for him to Riblah in Syria, and, on his Arrival, caus'd him to be put in Chains, and ſent Priſoner to Egypt *, where he dy'd. He had an elder Brother, whoſe Name was Eliakim; but Necho, when he came to Jeruſalem, chang'd it into Jehoiakim †; and, having conſtituted him King, and put the Land to an annual Tribute of an hundred Talents of Silver, and † Jehoahaz was not the eldeſt Son of Joſiah, as appears from this, —— That he was but three and twenty Years old, when he began to reign, and reign'd but three Months; after which his Brother Jehoiakim, when he was made King, was five and twenty Years old, 2 Kings xxiii. 31, 32. For this Reaſon, 'tis ſaid, that the People anointed him, becauſe, as he did not come to the Crown by Right of Succeſſion, his Title might have otherwiſe been diſputed; for, in all diſputed Caſes, and where the Kingdom came to be conteſted, Anointing was ever thought to give a Preference. At this Time however, the Jews might have ſome Reaſon to prefer the younger Brother, becauſe very probably he was of a more martial Spirit, and better qualify'd to defend their Liberties againſt the King of Egypt. His proper Name, 'tis thought, was Shallum; but our learned Uſher ſuppoſes, that the People, looking upon this as ominous, (becauſe Shallum, King of Iſrael, reign'd but one Month) chang'd it to Jehoahaz, which prov'd not much more fortunate to him, for he reign'd but three. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

† The Scripture no where tells us, upon what Occaſion it was, that Jehoahaz fell into the King of Egypt's Hands, or for what Reaſon it was, that he us'd him ſo ſeverely; but it is preſumable, that, to revenge his Father's Death, he might raiſe an Army, and engage him in a pitch'd Battle, tho' he failed in the Attempt. For why ſhould he put him in Bands, if he voluntarily went, and ſurrender'd himſelf at Riblah? Or why be ſo highly offended at him, for accepting of a Crown, which the People conferr'd on him? The general Opinion therefore is, that he was a Man of a bold and daring Spirit, and therefore thoſe Words, in the Prophet Ezekiel, are apply'd to him: Thy Mother is a Lioneſs; —— ſhe brought up one of her Whelps; it became a young Lion; —— but he was taken in the Pit, and he was brought with Chains unto the Land of Egypt; for which Reaſon Pharaoh-Necho treated him in this Manner, that he might put it out of his Power to give him any farther Diſturbance. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

* This the Prophet Jeremiah foretold, where he bids the King, and the People of Judah, not to weep for the Dead, (meaning Joſiah) but for him, that goeth away; for he ſhall return no more, nor ſee his native Country. Becauſe, thus ſaith the Lord concerning Shallum, (which was the original, and right Name of Jehoahaz) the Son of Joſiah, King of Judah, who reigned inſtead of Joſiah, his Father, and who went forth out of this Place, he ſhall not return hither any more, Jer. xxii. 11.

† It was an uſual Thing for Conquerors to change the Names of the Perſons, they vanquiſh'd in War, in Teſtimony of their abſolute Power over them. Thus we find the King of Babylon changing the Name of Mattaniah into Zedekiah, when he conſtituted him King of Judah, 2 Kings xxiv. 17. But our learned Uſher has farther remark'd, that the King of Egypt gave Eliakim the Name of Jehoiakim, thereby to teſtify, that he aſcrib'd his Victory over the Babylonians to Jehovah, the God of Iſrael, by whoſe Excitation (as he pretended, 2 Chron. xxxv. 21, 22.) he undertook the Expedition. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

a Talent of Gold, he return'd with great Triumph into his own Kingdom.

Jehoiakim's wicked and cruel Reign, and Perſecution of the Prophets.

JEHOIAKIM, ‖ being thus plac'd on the Throne, went on in his Brother's Steps to relax all the good Order and Diſcipline which his Father had inſtituted, and the People (who never heartily came into that good King's Reformation) took this Opportunity to follow the Bent of their depraved Inclinations; whereupon the Prophet Jeremiah went firſt to the King's Palace, where he denounc'd God's Judgments againſt him, and his Family, and afterwards into the Temple, and there ſpoke to all the People after the ſame Manner. The Prieſts, offended at this Freedom, caus'd him to be ſeiz'd, and brought before the King's Council in Hopes of having him put to Death; but Abikam †, who was one of the chief Lords thereof, ſo befriended him, that he got him diſcharg'd by the general Suffrage, not only of the Princes, but alſo of all the Elders of the People, that were then preſent.

But (a) Urijah, * another Prophet of the Lord, who, in like Manner, had declar'd againſt the Iniquity of the Prince and People, did not ſo eaſily eſcape: For, tho' he fled into Egypt, when he underſtood that Jehoiakim had a Deſign againſt his Life; yet this did not hinder the Tyrant from purſuing him thither, where having procur'd him to be ſeiz'd, he brought him Priſoner to Jeruſalem, and there had him executed, and his dead Body contemptuouſly us'd; which was no ſmall Aggravation to all his other Crimes.

Nebuchadnezzar invades Jeruſalem, takes it, and the King Priſoner, but afterwards releaſes him.

He had not been above three Years upon the Throne, before Nabopollaſar, King of Babylon, being now become old and infirm, and perceiving that, upon the late Advantage which the King of Egypt had gain'd againſt his Arms, all Syria and Paleſtine had revolted from him, took his Son Nebuchadnezzar into Partnerſhip with him in the Empire, and ſent him, with a ſtrong Army, into thoſe Parts, in order to recover what had been loſt.

It

Asto the Time, when Jehoiakim came to the Throne, the Difference is very remarkable: For in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9. it is ſaid, that he was but eight Years old, but in 2 Kings xxiv. 8. that he was eighteen, when he began to reign; and yet, conſidering how common a Thing it was for Kings to make their Sons their Aſſociates in the Kingdom, thereby to ſecure the Poſſeſſion of it in their Family, and prevent all Contention among the other Brothers, the Difference is eaſily reconciled, by ſuppoſing, that, when his Father had reign'd one Year, he took him to reign in Conjunction with him, when he was no more than eight years old. With his Father he reign'd ten Years; ſo that, when his Father died, he was eighteen Years old, and then he began to reign alone, which was no more than three Months. The Author of the Book of Kings makes Mention therefore only of the Years, when he began alone; but the Author of the Chronicles ſpeaks of all that he reign'd, both with his Father, and alone. This is a fair Solution; tho' I cannot ſee, what Injury it can do to the Authority of the ſacred Text, if we ſhould acknowledge, that there is an Error in the Tranſcriber of the Book of Chronicles; becauſe two of the moſt antient and venerable Verſions, the Syriack and Arabick, have render'd it, in that Place, not eight, but eighteen, which they were doubtleſs induc'd to do, by thoſe antient Hebrew Copies, from whence they form'd their Tranſlation. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† This Abikam was the Father of Gedaliah, (2 Kings xxv. 22) who was afterwards made Governor of the Land, under the Chaldeans, and the Son of Shaphan, the Scribe, (who was chief Miniſter of State under King Joſiah, 2 Kings xxii. 12.) and Brother to Gemariah, Jer. xxxvi. 10. Elaſah, Chap. xxix. 3. and Jaazaniah, Ezek. viii. 11. who were great Men in thoſe Days, and Members likewiſe of the Council with him; where, in Conjunction with them, he could not fail of having a powerful Intereſt, which he made Uſe of on this Occaſion, to deliver the Prophet from that Miſchief, which was intended againſt him. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 609.

(a) Jer. xxvi. 20, &c.

* About this Time alſo were living the Prophets, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, and Nahum, who, being called to the Prophetick Office in the Reign of Joſiah, continu'd (very likely) to this Time, becauſe we find them propheſying the ſame Things that Jeremiah did, viz. the Deſtruction and Deſolation of Judah and Jeruſalem, for the many heinous Sins, that they were guilty of. As to Habakkuk, neither the Time, in which he liv'd, nor the Parents from whom he was deſcended, are any where named in Scripture; but his propheſying the Coming of the Chaldeans, in the ſame Manner, that Jeremiah did, gives us Reaſon to believe, that he liv'd in the ſame Time. Of Zephaniah, it is directly ſaid, Chap. i. that he propheſy'd in the Time of Joſiah, and in his Pedigree, (which is alſo given us) his Father's Grandfather is called Hezekiah, whom ſome take for the King of Judah, and, conſequently, reckon this Prophet to have been of royal Deſcent. As to Nahum, laſtly, 'tis certain, that he propheſy'd after the Captivity of the Ten Tribes, and before that of the other two, which he foretold, Chap. i. Tho' therefore the Jews do generally place him in Manaſſeh's Reign, yet others chuſe to refer him to the latter Part of Joſiah's, as being nearer to the Deſtruction of Nineveh, and of the Aſſyrian Monarchy, to which ſeveral Prophecies of his do principally relate. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 609, and Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes.

IT was in the fourth Year of Jehoiakim, when Nebuchadnezzar, having defeated Necho's Army on the Banks of the Euphrates, march'd into Syria and Paleſtine, in order to recover theſe Provinces, which he ſoon did; and, having beſieg'd Jeruſalem, took it, and carry'd away the King, and Part of the Veſſels of the Temple along with him to Babylon. In a ſhort Time however, he releas'd him and reſtor'd him to his Crown, on Condition, that he ſhould become tributary to him, which he continu'd to be for three Years; but, in the fourth, he retracted from that Subjection, whereupon Nebuchadnezzar came upon him with a freſh Invaſion.

Jeremiah upbraids the People with their Diſobedience, and propheſies their Captivity.

UPON the firſt Invaſion, the Rechabites, who, according to the Inſtitution of Jonadab the Son of Rechab, their Founder, had always abſtain'd from Wine, and hitherto only liv'd in Tents, apprehending themſelves in more Danger in the open Country, came to Jeruſalem for Safety. By theſe People God intended to convince the Jews of their Diſobedience to him; and therefore he order'd his Prophet Jeremiah, to bring them to an Apartment of the Temple, and there offer them Wine to drink, which when they refus'd upon Account of its being contrary to their Inſtitution, which they never yet had violated, the Prophet, (after due Commendation [*] of their Obedience) turn'd it upon the Jews, and reproach'd them, who were God's peculiar People, for being leſs obſervant of his Laws, than the poor Rechabites, who were not of the Stock of Iſrael, had been of the Injunctions of their Anceſtor.

BEFORE the next Invaſion, Jeremiah propheſy'd that Nebuchadnezzar would again come againſt Judah and Jeruſalem; that he would waſte the Country, and carry the People captive to Babylon, where they ſhould continue in that Condition, for the Space of ſeventy Years; with many more Calamities, and woeful Deſolations, that were ready to fall upon them, if they did not repent. But this was ſo far from making any ſaving Impreſſion upon them, that it only enrag'd and exaſperated them the more againſt him, inſomuch that, for Fear of their Malice and wrathful Indignation, he was [†] forc'd to keep himſelf conceal'd.

DURING his Concealment, God commanded him to collect together, and digeſt into one Volume, all the Prophecies, which he had given him againſt Iſrael, againſt Judah, and againſt other Nations, from the Time that he firſt began to propheſy, (which was in the thirteenth Year of Joſiah) if haply, by hearing all his Judgments ſumm'd up together againſt them, they might be brought to a better Senſe of their Tranſgreſſions. To this Purpoſe,

[*] The Prophet's Words, upon this Occaſion, are theſe: ——— Becauſe ye have obey'd the Commandments of Jonadab, your Father, and kept all his Precepts, and done according to all, that he hath commanded you; thus ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, the God of Iſrael, Jonadab, the Son of Rechab, ſhall not want a Man to ſtand before me for ever, Jer. xxxv. 18, 19. To ſtand before a Prince, or to ſee his Face, in Scripture Phraſe, denotes the Honour, which accrues from being in his Service; but the Rechabites were neither Prieſts, nor Levites. Hitherto they had liv'd in the Fields, ſeparate from Towns and Villages, and were averſe indeed to any Employment, either in Church, or State: But, from the Time of their Captivity, (for they were carry'd along with the Two Tribes) we find them employ'd, as Singers and Porters, in the Service of the Temple. To ſerve in this Capacity, there was no Neceſſity for their being of the Tribe of Levi; the Declaration of the Divine Will, by the Mouth of the Prophet Jeremiah, was, in this Caſe, a ſufficient Vocation. Calmet's Commentary on Jer. xxv. 19.

[†] Jeremiah's Words, upon this Occaſion, are: ——— I am ſhut up, I cannot go into the Houſe of the Lord, Chap. xxxvi. 5. But then the Queſtion is, what we are to underſtand by his being ſhut up? For, that he was not, at that Time, ſhut up in Priſon, is plain from the Prince's adviſing him, and Baruch, to hide themſelves, ver. 19. Junius and Tremellius do therefore ſuppoſe three Ways of his being ſhut up, and leave it to our Choice, which to take. The firſt is, that the King had forbidden him to go any more into the Temple to propheſy ſuch terrible Things to the People; but the Prophets of God did not uſe to obſerve ſuch Prohibitions of their prophetick Miniſtry. The ſecond is, that the chief Prieſts had excommunicated him, and therefore he might not go; but this, in all Likelihood, he would have leſs regarded, for the ſame Reaſon. The third is, that God, to provide for the Safety of his Prophet, and to puniſh the Obſtinacy of the People, would not permit him to go any more among them. This, of the three, ſeems the moſt probable; tho' the Phraſe may very properly denote no more, than the Prophet's concealing himſelf, and keeping at Home, for fear of ſome Miſchief from the People. Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

Purpoſe, the Prophet employ'd Baruch †, his Diſciple and Amanuenſis, to take a Copy † of them from his Mouth, and, when he had ſo done, order'd him to go up into the Temple, on the Day of Expiation †, and there read it in the Hearing of all the People.

Pursuant to his Inſtructions Baruch went, and, in Gemariah's † Apartment, read the Book, firſt to the People, who ſtood below in the Courts, and afterwards to the Princes, who were met together in the Secretary's Chamber, and who thereupon advis'd him, and his Maſter Jeremiah, both † to keep out of the Way, until they had known the King's Pleaſure concerning † Baruch, the Son of Neriah, and Grandſon of Maaſelah, was of an illuſtrious Birth, and of the Tribe of Judah. Seraiah, his Brother, had a conſiderable Employment in the Court of King Zedekiah, but himſelf kept cloſe to the Perſon of Jeremiah, and was his moſt faithful Diſciple, tho' his Adherence to his Maſter drew upon him ſeveral Perſecutions, and a great deal of bad Treatment. After the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Nebuchadnezzar, Baruch and his Maſter were permitted to ſtay in the Land of Judea; but when the Remains of the People, which were left behind, after having ſlain their Governor Gedaliah, were for retiring into Egypt, they compelled Jeremiah, and his Diſciple, to go along with them, where the Prophet dy'd, and Baruch ſoon after made his Eſcape to his Brethren in Babylon, where, according to the Tradition of the Rabbins, he likewiſe dy'd in the twelfth Year of the Captivity. But of what Authority the Book, which goes under his Name, is, or by whom it was written, and whether any Thing related therein be hiſtorically true, or the whole of it a Fiction, is altogether uncertain. Grotius, in his Commentary upon it, thinks it an entire Fiction of ſome Helleniſtical Jew, under the Name of Baruch: And St Jerom, long before him, (in the Preface to his Expoſition of Jeremiah) tells us, that the Reaſon, why he did not make a Comment on this Book (though, in the Edition of the Septuagint, it be join'd with Jeremiah) was, becauſe it was not deem'd canonical among the Hebrews, and contains an Epiſtle, which falſely bears the Name of Jeremiah. This Epiſtle is annex'd to the Book, and, in the common Diviſion of it, makes the laſt Chapter: But the main Subject of the Book itſelf is likewiſe an Epiſtle, either ſent, or feign'd to be ſent by King Jehoiakim, and the Jews, who were in Captivity with him in Babylon, to their Brethren the Jews, who were ſtill left in Judah and Jeruſalem: Wherein they recommend to their Prayers the Emperor Nebuchadnezzar and his Children, that, under his Dominion, they may lead quiet and peaceable Lives; wherein they confeſs their Sins, and aſk Pardon for what is paſt, take Notice of the Threats of the Prophets, which they had ſo long deſpis'd, and acknowledge the Righteouſneſs of God, in what he had brought upon them; wherein they remind them of the Advantages, which the Jews had in their Knowledge of the Law of God, and of true Wiſdom, above all other Nations, and thereupon exhort them to reform their Manners, and forſake their evil Cuſtoms, which would be the only Means to bring about their Deliverance from the Captivity, under which they groan'd. The Whole is introduc'd with an hiſtorical Preface, wherein it is related, that Baruch, being then at Babylon, did, in the Name of the captive King and his People, draw up the ſame Epiſtle, and afterwards read it to them for their Approbation; and that, together with it, they ſent a Collection of Money to the High-Prieſt at Jeruſalem for the Maintenance of the daily Sacrifices. This is the Subſtance of the Book itſelf: And, in the Letter annex'd to it, which goes under Jeremiah's Name, the Vanity of the Babyloniſh Idols and Idolatry is ſet forth at large, and with Livelineſs enough. Of the Whole there are but three Copies; one in Greek, and the other two in Syriack, whereof one agreeth with the Greek, though the other very much differs from it; but in what Language it was originally written, or whether one of theſe be not the Original, or which of them may be ſo, 'tis next to impoſſible to tell. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 595. and Calmet's Preface ſur Baruch.

† How Jeremiah could remember all the Prophecies, that he uttered, for the Space of two and twenty Years together, we can hardly conceive, unleſs we allow, that he had the particular Inſpiration of God to bring all Things to his Remembrance, that he might neither forget, nor miſrepreſent them in his Recital to Baruch: For, without ſuch a ſupernatural Aſſiſtance, what Security have we, that this Part of the Scriptures is the Work of the Holy Ghoſt? Calmet's Commentary on Jer. xxxvi. 4.

† Some are of Opinion, that this was done on the great Day of Faſting, or ſolemn Expiation, which was obſerv'd at the Beginning of the Civil Year, on the tenth Day of the Month Tizri, which anſwers to the latter End of our September, and the Beginning of October; but the Context ſeems to denote, that it was on the Faſt day, mention'd in the ninth Verſe to have been proclaim'd in the fifth Year of Jehoiakim, which muſt have been a Faſt extraordinary, and appointed upon ſome particular Occaſion of the State, becauſe the Law had ordain'd no ſuch Obſervation on the ninth Month: But what that particular Occaſion was, it is not ſo well known; tho' ſome have imagin'd, that it was in Commemoration of the Calamity, which had befallen Jeruſalem the Year before, when Nebuchadnezzar had ſent to Babylon Part of the Veſſels of the Houſe of the Lord, and was upon the Point of ſending away captive the King, and all his Princes. Calmet's Commentary on Jer. xxvi. 4, 9.

† This Gemariah was one of the Captains of the Temple, whoſe Apartment was near the New Gate, whereof he kept Guard, and had a certain Number of Levites under him, who conſtantly ſtood Centinel. For the Temple, we muſt know, was guarded like a King's Palace; and, as the upper Court, which is mention'd in the Text, was, in all Probability, the Prieſts Court; ſo the Gate, whereof Gemariah had Charge, muſt have been the Eaſt Gate of that Court, which, in the Reign of Jehoſhaphat, 2 Chron. xx. 5, is called the New Court. Calmet's Commentary.

† The Advice, which the Princes of Judah give, upon this Occaſion, is very remarkable, becauſe it reconciles their concerning it. As ſoon as the King was inform'd of the Book, he ſent one of his Attendants for it, and commanded him to read it: But he had not gone far, before the King, impatient to hear the Judgments denounc'd againſt him, ſnatch'd it out of his Hand, and, notwithſtanding the Importunity of his Nobles to diſſuade him, cut it to pieces, and threw it into the Fire *, which was upon the Hearth, (for it was then the Winter-Seaſon) where it was conſum'd; and then immediately ſent out his Officers to apprehend the Prophet and his Amanuenſis, but they had both withdrawn to a Place of Security, and could not be found.

Which accordingly Nebuchadnezzar executes, and ſlays the King.

Upon burning the Book, Jeremiah was commanded to make another in the ſame Manner; to have the ſame Prophecies inſerted in it, with ſome (b) farther Denunciations againſt Jehoiakim and his Houſe, which, in a ſhort Time, began to take Effect. For Nebuchadnezzar, (as we ſaid) having invaded Judea, and laid Siege to Jeruſalem, ſoon took it, and put Jehoiakim in Chains to carry him to Babylon; but, upon his Humiliation, and ſwearing Fealty to him, he again reſtor'd him to his Kingdom, and left Jeruſalem in order to purſue his Victories againſt the Egyptians: But, before he did that, he * caus'd great Numbers of the People to be ſent Captives to Babylon, and gave particular Orders to Aſhpenaz the Maſter of his Eunuchs, that, out of the Children of the Royal Family, and of the Nobility of the Land, he ſhould make choice of ſuch, as ſurpaſs'd others in Beauty and Wit, that, when they came to Babylon, they might be made Eunuchs too, and attend in his Palace. This Aſhpenaz accordingly did; and, among the Children, that were carry'd away captive * for this Purpoſe, were Daniel, Hananiah, Miſhael, and Azariah. Daniel, upon his Arrival in Babylon, was called Belteſhazzar, and the Duty to God, to Juſtice, and to Charity, with what they were oblig'd to from their Prince. Their Prince, they knew, was of an haſty and violent Temper; and yet the Contents of the Book was ſuch, that it would not be ſafe for him to be ignorant of it; and therefore, being in Duty bound to acquaint him with it, they adviſ'd Baruch and his Maſter to provide for their own Security, until they ſhould ſee what Effect it would have upon the King, whereof they promiſ'd, no doubt, to give them Intelligence. Calmet's Commentary.

* The Text tells us, that it was in the ninth Month, (which anſwers in part to our Month of November) when the King burnt the Book. After that the Rain began to fall in the Month of September, the Weather generally grew raw and cold, ſo that a Fire, at this Time, was not unſeaſonable: The Cuſtom however, in this Country, was not to have Chimnies, as it is among us. The Fire was made in the Middle of the Room, upon an Hearth, or in a Stove, and the Smoke went out, either at the Door, or Window, or ſome Opening made on purpoſe in the Roof of the Houſe, as we ſee in ſome of our College-halls, and ſome Kitchens in ancient Monaſteries, where the Chimney is in the Midſt of the Roof, in the Form of a Cupola, with ſeveral Openings, for the Smoke to fly out at. For, that there were formerly no Chimnies, in the Manner we make them now, is plain from the Obſervation, which his Annotator makes upon Vitruvius, viz. that, in all his Book of Architecture, he makes no Mention of Chimnies, which he queſtionleſs would have done, had they been of Uſe in his Time. Calmet's Commentary, and M. Perault ſur Vitruv. liv. vi. c. 8.

(b) Jer. xxxvi. 30, 31.

* Since the People were thus carry'd into Captivity; the Sons of the Royal Family and of the Nobility of the Land made Eunuchs and Slaves in the Palace of the King of Babylon; the Veſſels of the Temple carry'd thither, the King made a Tributary, and the whole Land now brought into Vaſſalage under the Babylonians; from hence we muſt reckon the Beginning of the ſeventy Years Captivity foretold by the Prophet Jeremiah, Chap. xxv. 11. and xxix. 10. and in the fourth Year of Jehoiakim muſt be the firſt in that Computation. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 606.

* Some indeed do place their Captivity ſeveral Years later, but it is abſolutely inconſiſtent with what is elſewhere ſaid in Scripture: For, theſe Children, after their carrying away to Babylon, were to be three Years under the Tuition of the Maſter of the Eunuchs, Dan. i. 5. to be inſtructed by him in the Language and Learning of the Chaldeans, before they could be admitted into the Preſence of the King, to ſtand and ſerve before him. But, in the ſecond Year of Nebuchadnezzar's Reign, after his Father's Death, (which was but the fourth Year after his firſt taking of Jeruſalem) Daniel had not only Admiſſion and Freedom of Acceſs to the King, but we find him there interpreting his Dream, Dan. ii. and immediately thereupon advanc'd to be the Chief of the Governors of the wiſe Men, and Ruler over all the Provinces of Babylon; and leſs, than four Years Inſtruction in the Language, Laws, Uſages, and Learning of the Country, can ſcarce be thought ſufficient to qualify him for ſuch a Truſt, nor could he any ſooner be old enough for it, becauſe we may obſerve, that, when he was firſt carry'd away from Jeruſalem, he was but a Youth. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 606.

the other three were nam'd Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, of whom we have ſeveral Things to ſay in another Place.

JEHOIAKIM, after he had liv'd in Subjection to the King of Babylon for three Years, rebelled againſt him; and refuſing to pay him any more Tribute, renew'd his Confederacy with Necho King of Egypt. Hereupon Nebuchadnezzar [*], not being at Leiſure to come himſelf to chaſtiſe him, ſent Orders to all his Lieutenants, and Governors of Provinces in thoſe Parts, to make War againſt him, which brought upon him Inroads and Depredations from every Quarter; till, in the eleventh Year of his Reign, all Parties join'd together againſt him, and, having ſhut him up in Jeruſalem, they took him Priſoner in a Sally, which he made upon them, ſlew him with the Sword, and, in the Completion of the (c) Prophet's Prediction concerning him, [‖] caſt his dead Body in the High-Way, without allowing it the Decency of a Funeral.

Jehoiachin ſucceeds his Father, and is depos'd by Nebuchadnezzar.

AFTER the Death of his Father, Jehoiachin [‖] (who is likewiſe called Coniah, and Jeconiah) aſcended the Throne; but, for the little Time, that he continu'd thereon, perſiſting in his Father's Impieties, he drew upon himſelf (d) a bitter Declaration of God's Wrath, which was ſpeedily executed. For, in three Months after his Father's Death, Nebuchadnezzar [†], coming in Perſon with his royal Army to Jeruſalem, (which was then block'd up by his Lieutenants) caus'd the Place to be begirt with a cloſe Siege on every Side. This ſo terrify'd Jehoiachin, that, [†] taking his Mother, his Princes, and his chief Miniſters with him, he went out to Nebuchadnezzar, and deliver'd himſelf into his Hand; who, tho' he ſpar'd his Life, put him in Chains, and ſent him to Babylon, where he continu'd in Priſon, until the Death of his Conqueror. But when Evilmerodach * ſucceeded to his Father's Throne, he not only releas'd him from his Impriſonment, (which had continu'd for ſeven and thirty Years) but treated him with great Humanity and Reſpect, allowing him an honourable Maintenance, and giving him the Precedence of all other Princes in Babylon.

[*] What detain'd him from going in Perſon againſt Jeruſalem we are not told; only it appears, that, in the tenth Year of Jehoiakim, he was engag'd in an Arbitration between the Medes and Lydians, the Occaſion of which was this, ——— After the Medes had recover'd all the Upper Aſia out of the Hands of the Scythians, and again extended their Borders to the River Halys which was the common Boundary between them and the Lydians, it was not long before there happen'd a War between theſe two Nations, which was manag'd for five Years together with various Succeſs. In the ſixth Year, intending to make one Battle deciſive, they engag'd each other with their utmoſt Strength; but, in the Midſt of the Action, and while the Fortune of the Day ſeem'd to hang in an equal Balance between them, there happen'd an Eclipſe, which overſpread both the Armies with Darkneſs; whereupon they deſiſted from fighting, and agreed to refer the Controverſy to the Arbitration of two neighbouring Princes. The Lydians choſe Siennefis, King of Cilicia; and the Medes, Nebuchadnezzar, (who, by Herodotus, lib. i. is called Labynetus) King of Babylon, who concluded a Peace between them, on the Terms, that Aſtyages, Son of Cyaxares, King of Media, ſhould take to Wife Ariena, the Daughter of Halyattis, King of the Lydians; of which Marriage, within a Year after, was born Cyaxares, who is called Darius the Mede, in the Book of Daniel. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 528.

(c) Jer. xxii. 18, 19.

[‖] In 2 Kings xxiv. 6. we are told expreſsly, that Jehoiakim ſlept with his Fathers, and yet it is very certain, that he was neither bury'd with them, nor dy'd in his Bed, but lay above Ground unbury'd, according to the Prediction of the Prophet, Jer. xxxvi. 30. expoſed in the Day to the Heat, and in the Night to the Froſt; from whence it appears, that to ſleep with one's Father ſignifies no more, than to die, as they did. Patrick's Commentary.

[‖] His ſucceeding his Father in the Throne of Judah may ſeem to diſagree with the Threat, which the Prophet denounces againſt his Father, Jer. xxxvi. 30. ——— He ſhall have none to ſit upon the Throne of David. But as Jehoiachin's Reign laſted little more, than three Months, during which Time he was abſolutely ſubject to the Chaldeans, a Reign of ſo ſhort a Continuance, and ſo ſmall Authority, may very juſtly be look'd upon as Nothing. Calmet's Commentary.

(d) Jer. xxii. 24,—30.

[†] It is very probable, that Nebuchadnezzar heard, that he had enter'd into a Confederacy with the King of Egypt, as his Succeſſor did; and therefore ſent an Army againſt him, in the very Beginning of his Reign, to lay Siege to Jeruſalem, againſt which he intended to come himſelf: But the Jews have a Conceit, that Nebuchadnezzar's Counſellors repreſented to him, how unadviſedly he had acted, in making him King, whoſe Father had been in Rebellion againſt him, and that, upon their Repreſentation, he reſolv'd to depoſe him. From an ill Dog there never comes a good Whelp, was the Proverb, they ſay, which the Counſellors made uſe of on this Occaſion; and, to make this more feaſible, to the Father and Son they generally apply that Paſſage in Ezekiel, ——— She took another of her Whelps, and made him a young Lion, and he went up and down among the Lions. He became a young Lion, and learned to catch the Prey, and devour Men. ——— Then the Nations ſet againſt him on every Side, from the Provinces: They ſpread their Net over him, and he was taken in their Pit, Chap. xix. 6, &c. Calmet's and Patrick's Commentaries.

[†] It is very probable, that he made this Surrender, at the Advice of the Prophet Jeremiah, who gave the ſame Counſel, more than once, to his Succeſſor Zedekiah, Jer. xxi. 9.—xxvii. 17.—xxxviii. 2.

At this Time, Nebuchadnezzar carry'd away with him (beſides the King and his Family) a vaſt Number of other Captives, (among whom was Ezekiel the Prophet) all the mighty Men of Valour, and all the uſeful Artificers, out of Jeruſalem, || to the Number of ten Thouſand Men, together with all the Treaſures, and † rich Furniture of the Temple, and of the royal Palace. What he left in the Land were only the poorer Sort of People, over whom he made Mattaniah, the third Son of Joſiah, King. Of him he took a ſolemn Oath to be faithful and true in his Obedience to the Crown of Babylon; and to engage him the more to be ſo, he chang'd his Name to Zedekiah, (which ſignifies the Juſtice of the Lord) intending thereby to put him in Mind of the Vengeance, he was to expect from the Juſtice of the Lord his God, if he violated that Fidelity which he had, in his Name, ſworn unto him.

Zedekiah is made King in his Room, and adviſ'd by the Prophet Jeremiah, to live in Obedience to the King of Babylon.

ZEDEKIAH was but juſt ſettled in the Throne, and Nebuchadnezzar departed out of Judea and Syria, when (e) ſeveral Kings of the neighbouring Nations, viz. the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Edomites, the Zidonians, the Tyrians, &c. ſent their Embaſſadors to Jeruſalem, to congratulate him upon his Acceſſion to the Throne, and to propoſe a League againſt the King of Babylon, in order to ſhake off his Yoke, and prevent his Return into thoſe Parts any more. Upon this Occaſion, Jeremiah, by God's Command, made him Bonds and Yokes, which he ſent by the ſaid Embaſſadors to their reſpective Maſters, with this Meſſage from God, viz. " That he had given all their " Countries

* During his Father's Indiſpoſition, who fancy'd himſelf metamorphos'd into an Ox, he took upon him the Adminiſtration of the Government; but, after ſeven Years, when his Father recover'd his Underſtanding, ſo as once more to aſcend the Throne, Evilmerodach, as ſome believe, was impriſon'd by his Father, and, in his Confinement, contracted an Acquaintance and Intimacy with Jehoiachin; ſo that, after his Father's Death, and his full Acceſſion to the Throne, he releas'd him out of Priſon, and heap'd many Favours upon him: And 'twas by his Advice, (as the Jews tell us) that Evilmerodach took his Father out of the Ground, after he was dead and bury'd, cut his Body in Pieces, and gave them to three hundred Ravens, leſt he ſhould return from his Grave, as he had before recover'd from his Metamorphoſis into an Ox. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Evilmerodach.

|| This muſt be underſtood of the whole Number of the People, that were at this Time carry'd captive, which (according to Abarbinel) was thus made up; ——— Jehoiachin, and all his Court, and great Men were ſeven Thouſand; the Craftſmen a Thouſand; and other conſiderable Men in the Country two Thouſand, which compleated the Number. Jeremiah indeed computes them to be little above three Thouſand, that were now carry'd away, but he reckons only thoſe, that were carry'd from Jeruſalem; whereas, in 2 Kings xxxiv. 16, there is an Account of thoſe, who were carry'd from other Cities, and out of the Tribe of Benjamin, which were ſeven Thouſand; and this reconciles the Difference. Patrick's Commentary.

† Nebuchadnezzar carry'd away the Veſſels, and rich Furniture of the Temple, at three different Times. 1ſt, In the third Year of the Reign of Jehoiakim, when he firſt took Jeruſalem, he carry'd Part of the Veſſels of the Houſe of God away, into the Land of Shinar, and put them into the Houſe of his God, Dan. i. 2. Theſe were the Veſſels, which his Son Belſhazzar profan'd, Dan. v. 2. and which Cyrus reſtor'd to the Jews, (Ezra i. 7) to be ſet up again in the Temple when rebuilt. 2dly, In the Reign of Jehoiachin, he took the City again, and cut in Pieces a great Part of the Veſſels of Gold, which Solomon had made, 2 Kings xxiv. 13. and, by ſome Chance or other, had eſcap'd his former Plunder. 3dly, In the eleventh Year of Zedekiah, he pillag'd the Temple once more, when he brake in Pieces the Pillars of Braſs, and the Baſes, and the Brazen Sea, and took along with them all the Veſſels of Silver and Gold that he could find, and carry'd them to Babylon, 2 Kings xxv. 13, &c. It is ſomewhat ſtrange, that, among all this Inventory, we hear no Mention made of the Ark of the Covenant, which, of all other Things, was held moſt ſacred; but it is very probable, that it was burnt together with the Temple, in this laſt Deſolation. For, what ſome ſay of its being hidden by the Prophet Jeremiah, in a certain Cave in Mount Nebo, is a mere Fable. Patrick's and Calmet's Commentaries, and Diſſertation ſur l'Arche d'Alliance.

(e) Jer. xxxvii.

“ Countries to the King of Babylon, and “ therefore their wiſeſt Courſe would be “ to ſubmit to his Yoke, which if they “ refus'd to do, both they and their Coun- “ tries ſhould moſt certainly be deſtroy'd:” But to Zedekiah he went in Perſon, and, having perſuaded him to ſubmit to the King of Babylon, and not to give Credit to falſe Prophets, who might flatter him with a Deliverance from his Power, he prevailed with him, for that Time, not to enter into the League, that was propos'd.

He had, before this, (f) under the Emblem of two Baſkets of Figs, foretold Zedekiah the Reſtoration, which God intended for thoſe, that were gone into Captivity, and the Miſery and Deſolation, which ſhould befal them, who were ſtill in the Land; and now, in Purſuance of his prophetick Office, he * took the Opportunity of the King's ſending an Embaſſy to Babylon to direct a Letter to the Jews of the Captivity, adviſing them not to be deceiv'd with ſuch Prophets *, as made them entertain falſe Hopes of a ſpeedy Reſtoration; that, by the Ordination of God, their Captivity was to laſt ſeventy Years; and that the People left at Jeruſalem would be of little Uſe to aſſiſt them in their Deliverance, becauſe God, in a ſhort Time, would afflict them with the Sword, with Famine, and with Peſtilence, ſo as to conſume the greateſt Part of them, and ſcatter the reſt over the Face of the Earth; and therefore he exhorts them to live quietly and peaceably in the Country, whither they were carry'd, without expecting any Return, until the Time which God had appointed.

For which the Prophet is groſſly abus'd.

Upon the Receipt of this Letter, one Shemaiah, a popular Man among the Captive Jews at Babylon, took upon him to write to Zephaniah, the ſecond Prieſt, and to all the Prieſts and People of Jeruſalem, repreſenting Jeremiah as a mad Man, and a falſe Pretender to Prophecy, and adviſing them to confine him: Which Jeremiah hearing, was commanded by God to ſend again to the Captives of Babylon, to let them know, that he would puniſh Shemaiah and his Poſterity very ſeverely, for having deluded them with falſe Prophecies; and, at the ſame Time, (to convince thoſe, that were left in Jeruſalem) he ſhew'd them, (g) by the Emblem of a Potter's Veſſel, that it was in the Almighty's Power to deſtroy what Nation or People he pleas'd. But all this availed nothing. They ſtill reſolv'd to go on in their wicked Ways: And, to avenge themſelves of the Prophet, who gave them ſome Diſturbance therein, they abus'd him with Words and Blows, and, at length, put him in the Stocks.

Jeremiah, at Jeruſalem, propheſies the ſame Things, that Ezekiel did at Babylon.

It was no ſmall Comfort to him however, under all his Afflictions, to find, that (f) Jer. xxiv.

* At what Time, and upon what Occaſion, Zedekiah ſent this Embaſſy to the King of Babylon, the ſacred Hiſtory is ſilent; but it is very preſumable, that it was at the Beginning of his Reign, and that, as Judea was then tributary to the Chaldeans, the King's Policy was to keep up a good Underſtanding with them. Ezekiel however was not as yet poſſeſs'd of the Spirit of Prophecy; and, for this Reaſon, Jeremiah was oblig'd to take care of the Jews, who were gone Captives into the Land of Babylon, and to ſend them Inſtructions in what Manner they were to behave, viz. to ſeek the Peace of the City, whither they were carried away, Jer. xxix. 7. purſuant to which Inſtruction, we find thoſe in Babylon requiring their Brethren at Jeruſalem to pray for the Life of Nabuchodonoſor King of Babylon, and for the Life of Belthaſar his Son, that their Days may be upon Earth as the Days of Heaven: —— That they might live under the Shadow of Nebuchodonoſor, and under the Shadow of his Son, and find Favour in their Sight, Baruch i. 11, 12.

* The two Perſons mention'd in Scripture, who took upon them to be Prophets ſent from God, were Ahab the Son of Kolaiah, and Zedekiah the Son of Maaſeiah, two of the Captivity among the Jews at Babylon; who, feeding the People with falſe Promiſes of a ſpeedy Reſtoration, hinder'd them from making any Settlements in the Places aſſign'd for their Habitation: But, as the Prophet Jeremiah denounc'd their ſudden and fearful Deſtruction, Nebuchadnezzar, underſtanding that they diſturb'd the People by their vain Prophecies, caus'd them both to be ſeiz'd, and roaſted to Death in the Fire. The later Jews ſay, that theſe two Men were the two Elders, who would have corrupted Suſanna, and that Nebuchadnezzar commanded them to be burnt for this Reaſon: But the whole Foundation of this Conceit is, that Jeremiah (Chap. xxix. 23. where he ſpeaks of theſe Men) ſays, that they committed Villainy in Iſrael, and Adultery with their Neighbours Wives; from whence they conjecture all the reſt. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 597.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

that Ezekiel, who, much about this Time, was called to the prophetick Office, propheſy'd the ſame Things at Babylon, that he did at Jeruſalem. At Jeruſalem, Jeremiah (h) foretold the Divine Judgments which were to be executed upon Chaldea, and Babylon, by the Medes and Perſians, which he wrote in a Book, and (i) deliver'd it to Seraiah ‖, who was then going to Babylon upon an Embaſſy, with Inſtructions to read the Contents of it to his Captive Brethren upon the Banks of the River Euphrates; and, when he had made an End of reading, to tie a Stone to it, and * throw it into the River, thereby to denote, that, as it would naturally ſink, ſo ſhould the Babyloniſh Empire be totally deſtroy'd, and never riſe any more.

At Babylon, Ezekiel, by ſeveral Types, and prophetical Revelations, foretold the Taking of Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans; Zedekiah's Flight from the City by Night; the putting out of his Eyes; his Impriſonment, and Death at Babylon; the carrying away the Remainder of the Jews into Captivity; the Deſolation of their Country, and the many and great Calamities, which ſhould befal them for their Iniquities. But to thoſe of the Captivity, who, avoiding theſe Iniquities, did endeavour to keep themſelves ſteady and faithful in God's Service, God, by the Mouth of his Prophet, promiſ'd to become a Sanctuary in a ſtrange Country, and to bring them back again unto the Land of Iſrael, where they ſhould flouriſh in Peace and Righteouſneſs, and, once more, (k) become his People, and he their God.

Thus did theſe two great Prophets viſit the People, which were ſtill remaining in Jeruſalem, with ſeveral Warnings; endeavouring, both by ſignificant Emblems, and direct Predictions, to reclaim them. But, when they ſtill perſiſted in their Obſtinacy and Diſobedience, God at length brought upon them the Calamities, which he had ſo often foretold, and ſo ſeverely threaten'd.

(h) Jer. l. and li.

(i) Chap. li. 59, 64.

‖ The Words in the Text, according to our Tranſlation, are, —— The Word, which Jeremiah the Prophet commanded Seraiah, the Son of Neriah, &c. when he went with Zedekiah, the King of Judah, into Babylon, in the fourth Year of his Reign, and this Seraiah was a quiet Prince, Jer. li. 59. and from hence ſome Hebrew Interpreters infer, that Zedekiah went to Babylon in the fourth Year of his Reign, to make his Court and cultivate the good Graces of his Patron, and Paramount Nebuchadnezzar. But this Opinion, though follow'd by ſeveral, has no Foundation in any other Part of Scripture, and the Paſſage now before us may, according to the Original, be very properly render'd in this wiſe: ——— The Word, which Jeremiah commanded Seraiah, when he went to Babylon upon an Embaſſy from Zedekiah. The chief Buſineſs of this Embaſſy was to requeſt of Nebuchadnezzar a Reſtitution of the ſacred Veſſels of the Temple which he had taken away, when he carry'd Jehoiakim Captive into Babylon: Our Tranſlation however is not at all ſignificant in this Place, when it ſtiles this Seraiah a quiet Prince. The Septuagint have very properly render'd the Words, ἄρχων δώρων, the Prince of the Preſents, which ſome apply to the Preſents, which King Zedekiah made to the Temple, and others, to the Things he daily ſupply'd for Sacrifices; but the moſt natural Senſe in this Place, is, that he was charg'd with the Preſents and Tribute, which Zedekiah was oblig'd to ſend to Nebuchadnezzar; that his Buſineſs was to preſent them to the Emperor, and, upon that Occaſion, to ſollicit the Reſtoration of the ſacred Veſſels; upon which Account, the Vulgate has render'd the Words, Princeps Prophetiæ, the chief Perſon in the Embaſſy, who, at the Time of Audience, was to make a Speech to the Emperor, in his Prince's Name. Calmet's Commentary.

* We have an emblematical Action of the like Kind deſcrib'd in the Book of the Revelation of St John, —— And a mighty Angel took up a Stone, like a great Mill-ſtone, and caſt it into the Sea, ſaying, Thus, with Violence, ſhall that great City Babylon be thrown down, and ſhall be found no more at all, Chap. xviii. 21. where the Word Babylon is taken in an analogical Senſe, becauſe the Deſtruction of that great City and Empire (as we ſhall ſee hereafter) was ſo remarkable, as to afford a Compariſon for any other great and opulent State brought to Ruin and Deſolation.

* It is a great Diſpute among the Learned, whether this Hiſtory of Judith was tranſacted before, or after the Babyloniſh Captivity. Thoſe, who maintain the latter Opinion, found a great deal upon the Words of the Hiſtory itſelf, wherein the Author (according to the Greek Verſion, Chap. iv. 3.) expreſsly tells us, that the Iſraelites were newly returned from Captivity, and all the People of Judea were lately gathered together, and the Veſſels, and the Altar, and the Houſe were ſanctified after their Profanation: And, wherein it is farther affirm'd, that they were led Cap- tives into a Land that was not theirs, that the Temple of their God was caſt to the Ground, and their Cities taken by the Enemies; but now are they come up from the Places, where they were ſcattered, and have poſſeſſed Jeruſalem, Chap. v. 18, 19.—— It is in vain, ſay they, to endeavour to correct the Senſe of theſe Paſſages: The bare Reading of them, and the firſt Impreſſion they make upon the Mind, naturally leads one to ſay, that this Hiſtory was not tranſacted, till after the Return from the Captivity, which, in a great Meaſure, is confirm'd by the Opinion of almoſt all the Ancients, and a great many of the Moderns; but then they widely diſagree in their Computations of the Period of Time, when this remarkable Event happen'd. For ſome place it under Cambyſes, the Son of Cyrus; others under Xerxes; others under Darius; and others again under Antiochus Epiphanes, in the Time of the Maccabees: which laſt Opinion is the moſt tenable, if we will but allow, that a Feaſt was inſtituted in Commemoration of it, as we read in the Vulgate, but in none of the other Tranſlations. Thoſe, who maintain, that this Tranſaction happen'd before the Captivity, are, in like Manner, divided: For ſome place it under Manaſſeh, and others under Zedekiah: Thoſe, who contend for Zedekiah's Reign, make the Nabuchodonoſor in the Book of Judith, and the Nebuchadnezzar in the 2d of Kings, the ſame Perſon; and as it is poſitively ſaid in the 2d Chapter of Judith, that he put his General Holofernes on this Expedition, in the firſt Month of the eighteenth Year of his Reign, which was the ninth of Zedekiah King of Judah, Holofernes's Death and the Siege of Jeruſalem happen'd, they ſay, in the ſame Year; only it muſt be ſuppos'd, that the Attempt againſt Bethulia was in the Beginning of the Year, and the Siege of Jeruſalem at the End of it. The Captivity therefore, from which the Jews are ſaid to have newly return'd, muſt be that in Jehoiakim's Time, for that in Zedekiah's continu'd ſeventy Years, before which Nebuchadnezzar had quite ſubdu'd Arphaxad, King of the Medes, and demoliſh'd Ecbatana. And as for the Bethulians enjoying Peace, during the Life of Judith, it may be ſuppos'd, that Nebuchadnezzar, being employ'd two Years in the Siege of Jeruſalem, might ſpend ſome Years in reducing other Parts of the Country; and ſeeing Bethulia was a Place naturally ſtrong, and ſituated among the Mountains, he might be unwilling to foil his Army before it, and (eſpecially conſidering the ill Succeſs of his General) to make any freſh Attempt upon it, until he had ſubdu'd all the reſt. Thoſe again, who contend for Manaſſeh's Reign, make the Nabuchodonoſor in Judith to be the ſame with Saoſduchinus in Ptolemy, and Arphaxad the ſame with Phraortes, mention'd by Herodotus; and that, as theſe two Princes made War with one another, wherein Phraortes was vanquiſh'd, and periſh'd with his Army, all the other Things recorded of Saoſduchinus and his General might happen without Inconſiſtency. For the Captivity there mention'd might be that, from whence Manaſſeh, with ſome of his Subjects, had lately return'd, when the Temple which had been profan'd, was purify'd again, and the Service of the Sanctuary reſtor'd to its antient Dignity, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 1, &c. This is a ſhort State of the ſeveral Opinions concerning the Date of this Tranſaction, and the laſt of theſe, in our Judgment, ſeems to be beſt founded. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 665. Calmet's Preface à le Livre de Jud.

[†] For though the Jews and antient Chriſtians did not receive this Book of Judith into their Canon of Scripture, yet they always look'd upon it as a true Hiſtory; and, accordingly, Clement, in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, has cited it, as well as the Author of the Apoſtolick Conſtitutions, which go under his Name; and, as St Athanaſius, or the Writer of the Synopſis, that is aſcrib'd to him, gives a ſummary Account of it, even as he does of other ſacred Books, from his Example we may be permitted to juſtify the ſhort Abridgment, which we have made of it in our Hiſtory of the Holy Bible. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Judith.

[*] Who this Author was, it no where appears. St Jerom ſeems to think, that Judith wrote it herſelf, but produces no good Authority for his Opinion. Others will have it, that the High-Prieſt Joakim, mention'd in this Book, was the Author of it; but this is equally a bare Conjecture; nor is there much more Certainty in thoſe, who, ſuppoſing the Hiſtory to have happen'd in the Time of Cambyſes, aſcribe it to Joſhua, the Son of Joſedek, who was High-Prieſt at that Time. But whoever the Author was, he ſeems to be poſterior to the Facts, which he relates, becauſe he ſpeaks of the Feſtival inſtituted in Memory of Judith's Victory, as ſtill continu'd in his Time, Judith xvi. 20. The Book was originally written in the Chaldee Language, which is not now extant; but from thence, at the Deſire of Paula and Euſtochium, St Jerom form'd the Tranſlation, (which we now have in the Vulgar Latin Edition of the Bible) not rendering it Word for Word, (as himſelf tells us in his Preface to the Hiſtory) but repairing the Corruptions of the various Readings, and giving us, according to the beſt of his Judgment, the true and entire Senſe of the Original. Beſides this Tranſlation of St Jerom's, there are two others, one in Greek, and the other in Syriack. That which is in Greek is attributed to Theodotion, who liv'd in the Time of Commodus, who was made Emperor of Rome in the Year of Chriſt 180. But the Verſion was much antienter; for Clemens Romanus, as we ſaid, in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, (which was wrote near 126 Years before) has a Quotation from it. The Syriack Tranſlation was made from the Greek, and ſo was alſo the Engliſh, which we, at preſent, have among the Apocryphal Writings in our Bible. And of all theſe three laſt Verſions, it may be obſerv'd, that there are ſeveral Particulars in them, which are not in St Jerom's, and which ſeem to be thoſe various Readings, which he profeſſes to have cut off, as vicious Corruptions of the Text: So that, in this Reſpect, St Jerom's Tranſlation ought to have the Preference, whenever there is any remarkable Difference between them. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 655, and Calmet's Diſſert. ſur le Livre de Judith.

bylon to that of Aſſyria) ſucceeded to his Acquiſitions; and the Reaſon why the Author of this Book of Judith, who apparently wrote either in Babylon, or ſome other Part of Chaldea, calls him Nabuchodonoſor, is, becauſe this was the common Name (as Pharaoh was in Egypt) of the Kings of that Country. Calmet's Commentary on Judith, and Prideaux's Connection.

† The Plains of Ragau are very probably thoſe which lie about Rages, a Town of Media, ſtanding upon the Mountains of Ecbatana, and diſtant about a ſmall Day's Journey from that City. Calmet's Dictionary.

† Both our learned Prideaux and Primate Uſher are of Opinion, that this Arphaxad was the Perſon, whom profane Hiſtorians call Dejoces, the firſt King of the Medes, and Founder of Ecbatana: But the Account, which the Book of Judith gives of Arphaxad, and of the Circumſtances of his Death, ſeems to be more applicable to what Herodotus relates of Phraortes, his Son and Succeſſor. For, as Arphaxad had many Nations under his Dominion, and fell in Battle againſt the King of Aſſyria, Judith i. 6, 15. ſo Herodotus, (lib. i.) tells us of Phraortes, "That, having ſubdu'd the Perſians, and made them Part of his Empire, he ſoon overcame the reſt of the People of the Upper Aſia, (i. e. all that lay North of Mount Taurus, to the River Halys) paſſing from Nation to Nation, and always attended with Victory; until, coming with an Army againſt the Aſſyrians, with an Intent to beſiege Nineveh their Capital, he was vanquiſh'd, and ſlain, in the two and twentieth Year of his Reign. Dejoces indeed is ſaid, by Herodotus, to have been the firſt Founder of Ecbatana; but, as the Undertaking was very great, it is not improbable, that he left enough to his Succeſſor, Phraortes, to compleat: So that all the Works, which the Author of Judith aſcribes to Arphaxad, (Chap. i.) might be his." Calmet's Commentary, and Dictionary, and Prideaux's Connection, Anno 635.

* This City, Herodotus ſays expreſsly, was built by Dejoces, the firſt King of the Medes: But that Author is wrong, in aſcribing the Honour of the whole Work to him, which his Son Phraortes, at leaſt, finiſh'd and beautify'd to ſuch a Degree, that, tho' the Scripture is ſilent, profane Authors have given us a very advantageous Account of it. The City, according to them, was ſituate in a ſpacious Eminence, and into it Dejoces had brought together the whole Nation of the Medes, who never before had liv'd in any Thing but Caves and Huts, diſpers'd up and down in the Country, which great Concourſe of People made it very large and populous. It was encompaſs'd with ſeven Walls, at equal Diſtance from each other. The firſt was the loweſt, and equal in Circumference with thoſe of Athens, i. e. according to Thucydides, lib. ii. an hundred and ſeventy-eight Furlongs. The reſt roſe gradually, and overlook'd each other, about the Height of a Battlement. The Battlements were of different Colours. The firſt was white; the ſecond black; the third red; the fourth blue; the fifth of a deep red; the ſixth of a Silver, and the ſeventh of a Gold Colour; and for this Reaſon, (as Bochart has obſerv'd) this City was uſually called, by the Ancients, Agbata, which, in the Arabian Language, ſignifies a Thing of different and diſtinct Colours. The Royal Palace and Treaſury ſtood within the ſeventh Wall; and the Palace alone (according to Polybius, lib. x.) was ſeven Furlongs round, and built with all the Coſt and Skill that a ſtately Edifice did require; for ſome of it's Beams are ſaid to have been of Silver, and the reſt of Cedar, which were ſtrengthen'd with Plates of Gold. Calmet's Commentary, and Dictionary, under the Word, and Wells's Geography of the Old Teſtament, Vol. III.

* Some Annotators are of Opinion, that the Word Holofernes is of Perſian Extract, in the ſame Manner, as Tiſaphernes, Intaphernes, &c. But others imagine, that this General was a Native either of Pontus, or Cappadocia. Polybius makes mention of one of that Name, who, having conquer'd Cappadocia, ſoon loſt it again, becauſe he was for changing the ancient Cuſtoms of the Country, and introducing Drunkenneſs, together with Feaſts and Songs to Bacchus; whereupon Caſaubon conjectures, that this was the ſame Holofernes, that commanded Nabuchodonoſor's Forces, as it muſt be own'd, that his Riot and Debauchery, as well as the Rapidity of his Conqueſts, makes him not unlike him. Vid. Polyb. apud. Athen. lib. x. c. 11. and Caſaub. in Athen.

† The Author of Judith's Hiſtory has thus deſcrib'd it ——Holofernes muſtered the choſen Men for the Battle, as his Lord had commanded him, unto an hundred and twenty Thouſand, and twelve thouſand Archers on Horſeback—— A great Multitude of ſundry Countries went with them, like Locuſts, and like the Sand of the Earth; for the Multitude was without Number, Judith ii. 15, 20.

† Our modern Travellers to the Holy Land do almoſt unanimouſly agree, that Bethulia is ſituate in the Tribe of Zebulon, about a League from Tiberias towards the Weſt, where they pretend that ſome Marks of Holofernes's Camp are are ſtill to be ſeen: But ſome great Men are apt to ſuſpect the Report of theſe Travellers, who are too much accuſtom'd to take up with the Traditions of the Country, though there is not always the greateſt Certainty in them. This however is inconteſtable, that both Judith and her Huſband were of the Tribe of Simeon, Judith viii. 1. and ix. 2. and for what Purpoſe they ſhould remove to ſo great a Diſtance from their own Inheritance, and ſettle in a different Tribe, we cannot ſee. Since therefore the Scripture takes notice of a Place in the Tribes of Simeon nam'd Bethul, or Bethuel, Joſhua xix. 4. a Place dependent on Gaza of the Philiſtines, and famous for its Temples which were very remarkable, both for their Antiquity, and fine Structure, (from whence, not unlikely, it had its Name of Bethuel or the Houſe of the Lord) there is much more Reaſon to conclude, that this was the Place; ſince the other, which Travellers talk of, in the Tribe of Zebulon, muſt be of too modern a Date to be the City intended here, becauſe we find neither Joſhua, nor Joſephus, nor Euſebius, nor St Jerom, making any Mention of it. Calmet's Diſſertation, and Commentary, ſur le Livre de Judith.

* The Character, which the Hiſtorian gives her, with Reſpect to this, is,——That there was none who gave her an ill Word, for ſhe feared the Lord greatly, Judith viii. 8. which is certainly an high Commendation, conſidering how tender and delicate a Thing the Reputation of a young and beautiful Widow is, according as St Jerom has elegantly expreſs'd his Remark upon it. Tenera Res Fœminis Fama Pudicitiæ, &, quaſi Flos pulcherrimus, citò ad levem marceſſit auram, levique Flatu corrumpitur; maximè ubi Ætas conſentit ad Vitium, & maritalis deeſt Authoritas, cujus Umbra Tutamen Uxoris eſt. Hieron. ad Salvinam.

† The Word, in ancient Tranſlations, is Abra, which ſignifies a Companion, or Maid of Honour, (ſuch as Ladies of the firſt Condition had) rather than a Servant; for the ſame Word, in the Septuagint, is apply'd to the Women, that attended both Pharaoh's Daughter, Exod. xi. 5. and Queen Eſther, Chap. iv. 4.

† There was no Law of God, that prohibited the Jews from eating ſeveral Things, that the Gentiles made uſe of. Bread, Wine, and Fruits, were allow'd them in common with other People; but either ſome Tradition then prevailing among the Jews, or ſome religious Vow, that Judith might have bound herſelf under, the Fear of giving Scandal to her Countrymen, when ſhe return'd, or the Prayers and Pagan Invocations, which were made over the Meat, that was ſerv'd up to Holofernes; ſome of theſe Reaſons, I ſay, very likely, hinder'd her from accepting the Offer, which the General made, of Proviſions from his Table, and inclin'd her to deſire to eat alone: A Reſtraint, which we find Daniel putting himſelf under, in the Court of Nebuchadnezzar, Chap. i. 8. and Tobit, in that of Salmaneſer, Chap. i. 10, &c. where he ſays of himſelf, that——when all my Brethren, and thoſe, that were of my Kindred, did eat of the Bread of the Gentiles, I kept myſelf from eating, becauſe I remembered God with all my Heart. Calmet's Commentary.

† As Prayer, no doubt, is beſt perform'd in Places of Retirement, and the Hurry of a Camp muſt needs be inconvenient for Religious Offices, Judith, who profeſs'd herſelf a Woman of ſtrict Piety, had a good Pretence to requeſt of the General a Liberty to retire out of the Camp, (when ſhe thought proper, and without any Queſtions aſk'd her) to perform her Devotions, which, ſhe foreſaw, would be a Means to favour her Eſcape, after ſhe had executed the Deſign, ſhe came about. For it was on this Precaution, rather than any Obligation, either from the Law, or from Cuſtom, that this Devotion of her praying without the Camp was founded. Calmet's Commentary.

votions, which accordingly was readily granted her: That, having liv'd in this Manner for three Days, on the fourth, Holofernes invited her to a ſplendid Entertainment, where ſhe appear'd in her choiceſt Ornaments of Dreſs: and the General, in Hopes of enjoying the beautiful Stranger that Night, gave a looſe to Mirth, and drank more plentifully, than ever he was known to do: That, in the Evening, all the Company being diſmiſs'd, except Judith, who was left alone with the General, intoxicated with Liquor, and now fallen faſt aſleep upon the Bed, ſhe thought this a proper Opportunity to put her Deſign in Execution; and therefore approaching the Place, where he lay, and taking down his Scymitar, which hung by him, ſhe firſt pray'd to God to ſtrengthen her in the Enterprize, and then, at two Strokes, ſever'd his Head from his Body, which ſhe gave to her Maid, (who by her Order was waiting [†] at her Tent-Door) to put in the Bag wherein her Proviſions were brought: That, having thus accompliſh'd their Deſign, they paſs'd through the Camp unobſerv'd, and made the beſt of their Way to Bethulia, where Judith, acquainting the Governor, and Elders of the City, with what ſhe had done, and, in Teſtimony thereof, producing the Head of Holofernes, adviſ'd them to hang it out upon the Walls, as ſoon as the Morning appear'd, and then every one to arm and ſally out of the Gates, as if they meant to attack the Enemy, but, in Reality, only to give them an Alarm, that thereupon they might have Recourſe to their General, (as ſhe ſuppos'd they would) and ſo come to know what Fate had befallen him: That, upon the Bethulians appearing in Arms, the Out-Guards gave Notice to their Officers, and the Officers ſent to their General; but when they underſtood that their General was dead, his Head gone, and nothing left behind, but a ſenſeleſs Trunk wallowing in Blood, ſuch a general Conſternation overſpread the Camp, that, inſtead of preparing themſelves to fight, the Aſſyrians threw away their Arms, and fled; while the Bethulians, and other neighbouring People (to whom Ozias had ſent Intelligence of this their Diſaſter) attack'd them in ſmall Parties, from ſeveral Quarters; and, having ſlain a conſiderable Number of them, greatly enrich'd [†] themſelves with their Spoils. That a Deputation of the Elders from Jeruſalem, with their Chief-Prieſt accompanying them, came to Bethulia to compliment Judith upon this her great Atchievement, with whom ſhe repair'd to the Temple at Jeruſalem; where publick Thanks were given, and burnt Sacrifices offer'd to God, for this ſignal Victory, and Judith's Oblation [*], upon this Occaſion, was the Plunder of Holofernes's Tent, with all his rich Equipage, which the Soldiers had preſented her with: And, laſtly, that after theſe publick Rejoicings [†], ſhe went back to Bethulia again, where ſhe liv'd in great Splendor and Renown, and, after a good old Age, dy'd, and was bury'd with her Huſband, Manaſſeh, much belov'd, and much lamented by the People. But to look back to the Affairs of Judea.

[†] Viz. To go along with her out of the Camp to Prayers, as ſhe had done the Nights before: For it does not appear, from the whole Hiſtory, that Judith had communicated her Deſign to her Woman, but rather, that ſhe took upon herſelf the Riſque of the whole Affair, which could not be conducted with too much Secrecy and Prudence. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] So great was the Number of theſe, that the Text tells us, the Bethulians were thirty Days in gathering them, Chap. xv. 11. For, conſidering the Largeneſs of the Camp of the Aſſyrians, and the ſeveral Detachments they might have, ſome on the Mountains, and others on the Plains; the many valuable Things which might-be hid, or thrown aſide in their Flight; and the much Time it would coſt the Bethulians to ſearch diligently, and collect them all, and to provide Carriages to bring them Home to the City, there to be diſtributed equally among the People, and according to the Preſcription of the Law, Numb. xxxi. 27. conſidering all this, I ſay, thirty Days may not be thought an unreaſonable Space; tho' it muſt be own'd, that the Syriack Verſion reads it only three. Calmet's Commentary.

[*] Nothing is more common, both in ſacred and profane Hiſtory, than to meet with ſeveral Kind of Spoils taken in War dedicated to God, in Acknowledgment of his Goodneſs, and in Memory of the Victory, which, by his Bleſſing and Aſſiſtance, was then obtain'd. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] The Joy, which the People of Jeruſalem expreſſed upon Judith's Entry is thus related:——Then all the Women of Iſrael ran together to ſee her, and bleſſed her, and made a Dance among them for her; and ſhe took Branches in her Jeruſalem beſieg'd by Nebuchadnezzar. Jeremiah propheſies its Deſtruction, and is barbarouſly us'd for it.

IN the ſeventh Year of his Reign, Zedekiah, being grown impatient of the Babyloniſh Yoke, had ſent his Embaſſadors, and made a Confederacy with Pharaoh Hophra King of Egypt; which when Nebuchadnezzar underſtood, he drew together a great Army out of all the Nations, that were under his Dominion, and, in a ſhort Time, march'd towards Judea, to puniſh him for his Perfidy and Rebellion. His victorious Army ſoon over-ran the Country, and, having taken moſt of the Cities, in the ninth Year of Zedekiah's Reign, the tenth Month of the Year, and the tenth Day of the Month, it came before Jeruſalem, and block'd it cloſe up on every Side; ſo that, in a ſhort Time, the Famine began to prevail: And in Memory of this, the Jews have ever ſince obſerv'd the tenth Day of Tebeth; (the Month when this happen'd) as a Day of ſolemn Faſting and Humiliation even to this Time.

ON that very Day of the Month, when the Siege of Jeruſalem began, Ezekiel, then a Captive in Chaldea, had it reveal'd to him by the Type of a boiling Pot, what a diſmal Deſtruction ſhould be brought upon that City; and, in the Beginning of the next Year, Jeremiah was order'd to declare to the King, that the Babylonians, who were then beſieging the Town, would certainly take it, and burn it with Fire; make him Priſoner, and carry him to Babylon, where he ſhould die: Which provok'd Zedekiah to ſuch a Degree, that he order'd him to be clapp'd up cloſe in Priſon.

AS Nebuchadnezzar's Army was approaching Jeruſalem, Zedekiah, and his People, in Dread of what might follow, made a ſhew of returning unto the Lord their God. They enter'd into a ſolemn Covenant thence-forward to ſerve him only, and to obey his Laws; and, in Purſuance of that, agreed to proclaim a Manumiſſion, or Liberty to all Hebrew Servants of either Sex, according to what the Law † enjoin'd; but, upon the coming of Hophra, King of Egypt, to the Relief of Jeruſalem, and Nebuchadnezzar's raiſing the Siege to meet him, and give him Battle, the Jews were generally of Opinion, her Hand, and gave alſo to the Women, that were with her, and they put a Garland of Olive upon her, and on her Maid, that was with her, and ſhe went before all the People in the Dance, leading the Women, and all the Men of Iſrael followed with Garlands, and with Songs in their Mouths, Judith xv. 12, 13.

† The Words of the Law are theſe: ——— If thy Brother, an Hebrew Man, or an Hebrew Woman, be ſold unto thee, and ſerve thee ſix Years, then, in the ſeventh Year, thou ſhalt let him go free from thee; and when thou ſendeſt him out free from thee, thou ſhalt not let him go away empty; thou ſhalt furniſh him liberally out of thy Flock, and out of thy Floor, and out of thy Wine-Preſs; of that, wherewith the Lord hath bleſſed thee, thou ſhalt give unto him: And thou ſhalt remember, that thou waſt a Bondman in the Land of Egypt, and the Lord thy God redeemed thee. ——— It ſhall not ſeem hard unto thee, when thou ſendeſt him away free from thee; for he hath been worth a double hired Servant to thee, in ſerving thee ſix Years, and the Lord thy God ſhall bleſs thee in all that thou doeſt, Deut. xv. 12. &c. Now, for the better underſtanding of this, we muſt obſerve, that there were two Periods of Time, wherein this Releaſe of Jewiſh Bond-Slaves was enjoy'd, the Year of Jubilee, which was every fiftieth, and the Sabbatical Year, which was every ſeventh Year. The Sabbatical Year is what is here intended: It now happen'd in the eighth Year of Zedekiah's Reign; but (as Prideaux in his Preface remarks) had not been obſerv'd for above 360 Years before; for which Reaſon, the Jews, being now in a State of Compunction, were for reſtoring it to its primitive Inſtitution; but, upon the Removal of their Fears by the withdrawing of Nebuchadnezzar's Forces, they repented of their good Intentions, and recalled their Servants to their Slavery again. Why the Obſervation of ſuch a Year in ſeven was enjoin'd, the Reaſons are pretty obvious: For, beſides the Commemoration of the Iſraelites Releaſe from the Egyptian Bondage, which the Text ſpecifies, the general Releaſe of Servants, and the Reſtoration of Lands and Tenements to their firſt Owners, which were then to be tranſacted, were to hinder the Rich from oppreſſing the Needy, and reducing them to perpetual Slavery; that Debts ſhould not be too much multiply'd, nor the Poor, conſequently, entirely ruin'd; but that a Liberty of People's Perſons, an Equality of their Fortunes, and the Order and Diſtinction of their Tribes and Families (as far as it was poſſible) might be preſerv'd: And it was ſomething like this, that Lycurgus eſtabliſh'd among the Lacedemonians, in his inſtituting an Equality among Perſons, baniſhing Slavery, and preventing (as far as he could) any one's becoming too powerful, or too rich. Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. iv. c. 4. and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Sabbath.

Opinion, that the Chaldeans were gone for good and all, and thereupon repented of their Covenant of Reformation, and caus'd every Man his Servant, and every Man his Hand-Maid, to return to their Servitude: Which baſe and inhuman Prevarication ſo provok'd God, that he order'd his Prophet to proclaim Liberty to the Sword, and to the Famine, and to the Peſtilence, to execute his Wrath upon them, and their King, and their Princes, and all Judah, and Jeruſalem, to their utter Deſtruction.

JEREMIAH indeed, in all the Anſwers, which he return'd the King, (who, upon the Departure of the Chaldeans, ſent frequently to conſult him) was always poſitive, that the Egyptians, whom he depended upon, would certainly deceive him; that their Army would return without giving him any Aſſiſtance; and that the Chaldeans would thereupon renew the Siege, take the City, and burn it with Fire. During their Abſence however, he thought it no improper Time to endeavour to avoid the approaching Siege, by retiring to Anathoth, his native Place; but as he was paſſing the Gate of the City, which led that Way, the Captain of the Guard ſeiz'd him as a Deſerter and brought him before the Princes, who, in much Rage, fell upon him, and beat him, and then committed him to the common Jail, where he continu'd for many Days.

Is caſt into a diſmal Dungeon, and has his laſt Interview with the King.

In the mean Time, the Egyptians, not daring to engage the Chaldean Army, retir'd before them into their own Country, leaving Zedekiah and his People, with their unequal Strength, to contend with Nebuchadnezzar, who now return'd more exaſperated than ever, to re-inveſt the City of Jeruſalem. Nor had he been long before it, e're the King ſent Meſſengers to Jeremiah, to enquire of him then in Priſon, concerning the Fate of the preſent War: But his conſtant Anſwer was, "That God, being highly provok'd againſt "him and his People, for their manifold "Iniquities, would fight againſt the City, "and ſmite it; that both King and People "ſhould be deliver'd into the Hands "of the King of Babylon; that thoſe who "continu'd in the City, during the Siege, "ſhould periſh by the Peſtilence, by the "Famine, and by the Sword; but that "thoſe, who endeavoured to eſcape, tho' "they fell into the Hands of the Chaldeans, would have their Lives pre"ſerv'd:" At which, ſeveral of the Princes, and chief Commanders, being very much offended, preſs'd the King againſt him, as one, who, by his Speeches, diſcourag'd the Soldiers, and People, and was enough indeed to occaſion a Defection.

In this Conjuncture of Affairs, the King was oblig'd to deliver him into their Hands; and they, with unrelenting Cruelty, caſt him into a naſty Dungeon †, where inevitably he muſt have periſh'd, had not Ebed-Melech †, one of the King's Eunuchs, interceded with his Maſter to have him releas'd from thence, and ſent back to his former Priſon; for which Favour, the Prophet aſſur'd him from God that he ſhould not periſh at the Sacking of the City.

As the City began to be preſs'd more by the Siege, the King deſir'd a private Conference with Jeremiah, who accordingly was ſent for to an Apartment of the Temple; but the Prophet could give no other Anſwer to his Queſtions, than what he had done before; only he adviſ'd him to ſurrender to the Enemy, as the beſt Expedient, to ſave both himſelf, and the City.

(l) Lament. iv. 4, 5. and Ezek. v. 10.

* It is a hard Matter to conceive, how the Beſieged could make their Eſcape, ſeeing that the Chaldeans had begirt the City round about. Joſephus indeed gives us this Account: —— "That, as the City was taken about Mid-" night, the Captains, with the reſt of the Soldiers, went directly into the Temple; which King Zedekiah perceiving, " he took his Wives, Children, Commanders, and Friends, and they ſlipt all away together, by a narrow Paſſage, " towards the Wilderneſs." But then what this narrow Paſſage was, is ſtill the Queſtion. The Jews indeed think, that there was a ſubterraneous Paſſage from the Palace to the Plains of Jericho, and that the King, and his Courtiers, might endeavour to make their Eſcape that Way. Dion, tis true, tells us, lib. lxvi. that, in the laſt Siege of Jeruſalem, the Jews had covert Ways, which went under the Walls of the City, to a conſiderable Diſtance into the Country, out of which they were wont to ſally, and fall upon the Romans, that were ſtraggling from their Camp: But, ſince neither Joſephus, nor the ſacred Hiſtorian, takes notice of any ſuch ſubterraneous Conduit at this Siege, we may ſuppoſe, that, the Chaldeans having made a Breach in the Walls, the Beſieged got away privately between the Wall and the Out-Works, in a Paſſage, which the Enemy did not ſuſpect. The Words in the ſecond Book of Kings are: —— They went by the Way of the Gate, between the two Walls, which is by the King's Garden, Chap. xxv. 4. which, in Jeremiah, are thus expreſs'd: —— They went by the Way of the King's Garden, by the Gate between the two Walls: So that, as the King's Gardens fac'd the Country, very likely there was ſome very private and imperceptible Gate, through which they might attempt to eſcape, and the Beſiegers perhaps might not keep ſo ſtrict Watch at that Part of the Town, (eſpecially in the Hurry of ſtorming it) becauſe it led to the Plain, and made their Eſcape in a Manner impracticable. Jewiſh Hiſt. lib. x. c. 11. Patrick's, Le Clerc's, and Calmet's Commentaries.

† Riblah was a City of Syria, in the Country of Hamah, which Country is the neareſt to Judea, and which City, according to St Jerom, was the ſame with what was afterwards called Antioch; and, as it was the moſt pleaſant Place in all Syria, here Nebuchadnezzar lay, to attend the Succeſs of the Siege of Jeruſalem, to ſend his Army proper Supplies, and to intercept any Relief, that might come to the Beſieg'd. Patrick's Commentary.

* Nebuchadnezzar no ſooner caſt his Eye upon him, ſays Joſephus, (Jewiſh Antiq. lib. x. c. 11.) but he called him all the faithleſs and perfidious Names, that he could think of: Did you not promiſe me to manage the Power and Authority, that I put you in Poſſeſſion of, for my Advantage and Behoof? And am not I well requited, do you think, for making you a King in your Brother Jehoiakim's Place, by your employing of the Credit and Intereſt, that I gave you, to the Ruin of your Patron and Benefactor? But that God is great and juſt, who, for the Puniſhment of your Treachery and Ingratitude, hath now made you my Priſoner. But there is a Miſtake in this Speech of Nebuchadnezzar's, viz. his making Zedekiah ſucceed his Brother Jehoiakim, whereas he was put in the Place of his Nephew Jehoiachin; but his Nephew's Reign was ſo very ſhort, (little more than three Months) that this imperious Monarch might look upon it as nothing at all.

‖ Joſephus takes notice, that the ſeeming Contradiction in the Prophecies of Ezekiel, and Jeremiah, concerning the Fate of Zedekiah, made that Prince give no Heed to what was foretold. Ezekiel's Prophecy is deliver'd in theſe Words: —— I will bring him to Babylon, to the Land of the Chaldeans, yet ſhall he not ſee it, tho' he die there, Chap. xii. 13. and Jeremiah's in theſe: —— He ſhall be deliver'd into the Hands of the King of Babylon, and ſhall ſpeak with him Mouth to Mouth, and his Eyes ſhall behold his Eyes, Chap. xxxii. 4. both of which were literally accompliſh'd: For Zedekiah was carry'd to Riblah, where he ſaw the King of Babylon, and ſpake to him, and beheld his Children executed; but had afterwards his Eyes put out, and was then carry'd to Babylon, where he was incapable of ſeeing the City, becauſe he had loſt his Eye-ſight. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. x. c. 11. Calmet's and Patrick's Commentaries.

put in Priſon for Life, to the full Accompliſhment of [*] what the two Prophets, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, had foretold concerning him.

The City and Temple plunder'd and burnt; the Nobles and great Men executed, but Jeremiah the Prophet preſerv'd, and honourably treated.

As ſoon as Nebuchadnezzar had Advice of the Taking of Jeruſalem, he ſent Nebuzaradan, the Captain of his Guards, with Orders to raze the Place, plunder the Temple, and carry the People, that were left, Captives to Babylon; which he failed not to execute with the utmoſt Rigour and Cruelty. For, having taken all the Veſſels out of the Houſe of the Lord, and gather'd together all the Riches, that he could find, either in the King's Palace, or in any great Mens Houſes, he [*] ſet both the Temple and City on fire, and overthrew all the Walls, Fortreſſes, and Towers thereunto belonging, until he had brought the Whole to a perfect Deſolation: And upon theſe two ſad Occaſions, viz. the Taking of the City, and the Deſtruction of the Temple, the Prophet Jeremiah compos'd a mournful Poem, which is called his Lamentations [†], and the Jews obſerve two annual Faſts, the one in the fourth Month, which falls in with our June, and the other in the fifth Month, which anſwers Part of our July, even to this Day.

Having thus deſtroyed the City and Temple, Nebuzaradan made all the People, that he found in the Place, Captives. Some of the Chief of theſe, ſuch as Seraiah the High-Prieſt, Zephaniah [†] the ſecond Prieſt, and about ſeventy others, he carry'd to Riblah, where Nebuchadnezzar [†] caus'd them all to be put to Death. The poorer and labouring Part of the People, ſuch as could till the Ground, and dreſs the Vineyards, he left behind him, and made

[*] The Reflection, which Joſephus makes upon this Occaſion, is very good and moral: —— "This may ſerve "to convince even the Ignorant, ſays he, of the Power and Wiſdom of God, and of the Conſtancy of his Counſels, "through all the various Ways of his Operations. It may likewiſe ſhew us, that God's Foreknowledge of Things "is certain, and his Providence regular in the ordering of Events; beſides that, it holds forth a moſt exemplary In"ſtance of the Danger of our giving way to the Motions of Sin and Infidelity, which deprive us of the Means of "diſcerning God's Judgments, which are ready to fall upon us." Jewiſh Antiq. lib. x. c. 11.

[*] The Temple was burnt, from the Time that it was built, four hundred Years, ſays Sir John Marſham; four hundred and twenty-four Years, three Months, and eight Days, ſays Primate Uſher; four hundred and thirty Years, ſays Abarbinel, and other learned Jews: But Joſephus computes the Thing ſtill higher; for he tells us, that the Temple was burnt four hundred and ſeventy Years, ſix Months, and ten Days, from the Building of it; one Thouſand and ſixty Years, ſix Months, and ten Days, from the Iſraelites Coming out of the Land of Egypt; one Thouſand nine hundred and fifty Years, ſix Months, and ten Days, from the Deluge; and three Thouſand five hundred and thirty Years, ſix Months, and ten Days, from the Creation of the World. Joſephus ſtands amaz'd, that the ſecond Temple ſhould be burnt by the Romans in the ſame Month, and on the very ſame Day of the Month, that this was ſet on fire by the Chaldeans, and, as ſome of the Jewiſh Doctors ſay, when the Levites were ſinging the ſame Pſalm in both Deſtructions, viz. xciv. 23. He ſhall bring upon them their own Iniquity, and he ſhall cut them off in their own Wickedneſs; yea, the Lord our God ſhall cut them off. Patrick's Commentary, and Jewiſh Antiq. lib. x. c. 11.

[†] The Hebrews call this Book Echa, (how) from the firſt Word in the Text, How does the City ſit, &c. or Kinnoth, which ſignifies Lamentations, and the Greeks call it θρῆνοι, a Word of the like Import. In the two firſt Chapters, the Author is employed in deſcribing the Calamities of the Siege of Jeruſalem; in the third, he deplores the Perſecutions, which himſelf had ſuffer'd; in the fourth, he bemoans the Fate of the City and Temple, and Zedekiah's ſad Misfortune; and, in the fifth, he addreſſes his Prayer to God in Behalf of his Brethren the Jews, under their Diſperſion and Captivity. The Whole is wrote in a very lively, tender, and pathetick Stile; and all the Chapters, except the laſt, (which ſeems to have been of later Compoſition than the reſt) are in Acroſtick Verſe, i. e. every Line, or Couplet, begins, in an Alphabetical Order, with ſome Letter in the Hebrew Alphabet. In the third Chapter, each Letter is ſucceſſively thrice repeated; but in the ſecond, third, and fourth Chapters, there is this Thing peculiar, viz. that the Letter Pe is ſet before Ain; whereas, in the firſt Chapter, as well as in all the Acroſtick Pſalms, Ain is continually firſt; but the Reaſon of this is hard to tell: For what ſome advance, viz. that, as the Letter Ain ſignifies ſeventy, the Tranſpoſition ſeems to denote the Confuſion, which the Prophet was in, when he conſider'd that this Captivity was to laſt ſeventy Years; this has too great an Air of a Fiction in it. Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi. c. 3. and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Lamentations.

[†] The Jews call their ſecond Prieſt their Sagan, whoſe Buſineſs it was to ſupply the Function of the High-Prieſt, in caſe he was ſick, or any other Incapacity attending him. We find no ſuch particular Inſtitution under the Law; but Eleazar, the Son of Aaron, who is ſtiled the Chief over the Chief of the Levites, and who had the Overſight of them who kept the Charge of the Sanctuary, Numb. iii. 32. and whoſe Authority was not much inferior to that of the High-Prieſt, may (not improperly) be deem'd one of that Order. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] Becauſe, very probably, he look'd upon them as the King's principal Counſellers, who adviſ'd him to rebel againſt him. Patrick's Commentary.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

Gedaliah † their Governor; but as for all the reſt, he carry'd them directly away to Babylon; only Jeremiah, (of whom Nebuchadnezzar had given him Charge to take particular Care) he not only took out of Priſon when he firſt came to Jeruſalem, but, as the reſt were upon their Departure, gave him his Option, whether he would go with him to Babylon, where he ſhould be maintain'd very plentifully at the King's Charge, or elſe remain in the Country; and, when the Prophet had choſe the latter, he diſmiſs'd him honourably, with an handſome Preſent, and with Letters of Recommendation to the Governor Gedaliah, wherein he gave him a ſtrict Charge to take particular Care of him.

The OBJECTION.

“BUT how careful ſoever the Babylonians might be of the Prophet Jeremiah, becauſe they might ſuppoſe that his Predictions had done them Service; yet certainly they would have entertained no great Opinion, either of him or them, had they been inform'd, in what a wild and frantick Manner, both he, and ſome other Prophets were accuſtom'd to deliver them. For, (m) what can we ſay leſs, of his making (n) Bonds and Yokes to put upon his own Neck, and to ſend to ſeveral Kings, neighbouring upon Judea, by the Hands of their Embaſſadors, then reſiding in Jeruſalem, to put them in Mind of their future Captivity to the King of Babylon? A notable Preſent for any great Miniſter to make to his Prince, upon his Return from abroad! (o) What can we ſay leſs, of (p) his taking a Journey, at two ſeveral Times, from Jeruſalem to the River Euphrates, of about five hundred and fifty Miles, merely to hide his Girdle in the Hole of the Rock, that, when he fetch'd it again, he might find it all moulder'd and tatter'd, and, upon that Preſumption, have it to ſay to his Countrymen, that (q) God would, in like Manner, mar the Pride of Judah, and the great Pride of Jeruſalem?

“(r) WHAT can we ſay leſs of his Brother Ezekiel's drawing Figures upon a Slate, (the common Amuſement of Fools and Children) and (s) pourtraying Jeruſalem, with a Fort, and Mount, and Camp, and Battering-Rams, and an Iron-Pot, to repreſent its Walls; and all this, for a Sign to the People, that their City, in like Manner, ſhould be beſieg'd? What leſs, of (t) his ſhaving his Head and Beard, (which was contrary to the Law) his dividing and burning his Hair, and his (u) baking his Bread with human Dung, to prefigure the ſore Famine, that would fall upon them in the Siege? (x) What leſs, of his digging through the Wall of his Houſe to bear off his Goods at Noon-Day, packing them up, and carrying them upon his Shoulders, from Place to Place, to denote the Suddenneſs of their Flight from the vanquiſh'd City? What leſs, of his lying three hundred and ninety Days on his left, and forty Days on his right Side, without being once allow'd to turn himſelf, to ſignify the Continuation of Iſrael's and Judah's Captivity?

† Gedaliah, we underſtand, was the Son of Abikam, Jeremiah's great Friend; and 'tis not unlikely, that, by the Prophet's Advice, who exhorted all, both King and People, to ſurrender themſelves to the Aſſyrians, Jer. xxxviii. 5, 17. he made his Eſcape from the City, and went over to the King of Babylon; and for this Reaſon was promoted to the Government of Judea. Calmet's and Patrick's Commentaries.

“These are Actions, one would think, unbecoming the Wiſdom of God to enjoin, or the Gravity of his Prophets to perform; and yet (y) there is ſomething more abſurd, and indecent, in requiring Hoſea (z) to marry a known Whore, that he might (with a better Grace) upbraid the People with their Apoſtacy; and (a) Iſaiah, to go three Years together naked, to exemplify the Captivity of the Egyptians, when the Aſſyrians ſhould lead them away Priſoners, young and old, naked and barefoot, even with their Buttocks uncovered, to the Shame of Egypt, as the Prophet expreſſes it. But, allowing that Prophets were Perſons extraordinary, and that great Allowances ſhould be given to their Actions, yet what ſhall we ſay to the Hiſtory of Judith?

“(b) It ſpeaks of Nabuchodonoſor, as King of Aſſyria; whereas all Hiſtory makes mention of none, under that Name, but only of the King of Babylon. It ſpeaks of Arphaxad, as the firſt Builder of Ecbatana; whereas Herodotus expreſly tells us, that Deioces was the Founder of that fair City. It makes Arphaxad to be vanquiſh'd, and ſlain by Nabuchodonoſor; whereas the ſame Hiſtorian aſſures us, that, after a long and proſperous Reign, he died in Peace. It ſpeaks of Joakim, as High-Prieſt at this Time; and yet it is certain, that there was no Perſon of that Order, ſo nam'd before the Captivity. It places the chief Management of publick Affairs in his Hands; and yet it is evident, that, whether we ſuppoſe that this happen'd in Manaſſeh's, or in Zedekiah's Reign, the whole Adminiſtration was in the Power of the King. It repreſents Holofernes, as behaving rather like a Perſian, than a Chaldean; and yet the Name of the Perſians was hardly known in the Days of Nabuchodonoſor. It gives him the Honour of conquering more Provinces in the Space of three Months, than another General would have march'd through in that Time; and yet it leaves upon him the Diſgrace of having the Career of his Conqueſts ſtopp'd by the little Town of Bethulia.

“How the Bethulians durſt adventure to oppoſe ſo ſucceſsful a Conqueror, or how one ſingle Woman could take it in her Head to reſcue her Country from ſo formidable an Enemy, 'tis hard to conceive; but certainly the Author of the Hiſtory does not his Heroine Juſtice, to make her act and talk in a Manner, not ſo well comporting with all the Senſe of Virtue and Religion, (c) which ſhe pretends to have.

“For, to ſay nothing of the baſe and perfidious Murther, which ſhe commits; when he puts in her Mouth ſo many Lyes and Prevarications; when he repreſents her as a Woman void of Modeſty, who endeavour'd to enſnare Holofernes in a ſinful Paſſion, and anſwer'd to the Declarations of that Paſſion with too little Modeſty and Reſerve; when, (d) in her Prayer to God, he introduces her as commending Simeon's cruel Perfidy to the Sechemites, (e) (tho' the Patriarch Jacob held it in Deteſtation) as requeſting that the (f) Deceit of her Lips might be ſucceſsful to the Accompliſhment of her bloody Deſign; as declaring, that her Deſign in deſerting the City (g) was purely to deliver it up to the General, without ſo much as the Loſs of one Man; and as replying to the Suggeſtions of the Eunuch, in Favour of his Maſter's Luſt, (h) Who am I, that I ſhould gainſay my Lord; ſurely whatſoever pleaſeth him, will I do ſpeedily: When we find him proceeding at this ſtrange and incongruous Rate, I ſay, we cannot but agree, with the learned Grotius, that, the whole is a parabolical Fiction, written in the Time of Antiochus Epiphanes, when he came into “Judea

“Judea to raiſe a Perſecution againſt the Jewiſh Church; and that the Deſign of it was, under that Perſecution, to confirm them in their Hopes of ſome ſpeedy and wonderful Deliverance; that, accordingly, by Judith, is meant Judea, which is called a Widow, becauſe ſhe was deſtitute of Relief; by Bethulia, the Temple of God; by Nabuchodonoſor, the Devil; by Holofernes, the Inſtrument of the Devil in that Perſecution, viz. Antiochus Epiphanes; and by Judith's Word, the Prayers of the Saints, which prevailed with God for their Deliverance, &c.

Anſwer'd, by ſhewing the Truth, tho' not Divine Authority of the Book of Judith.

WE, who have not receiv'd the Book of Judith in our Canon of Scripture, are not under the like Neceſſity of vindicating its Divine Inſpiration and Authority, as are they, who, (i) by a publick Act of Council, have thought proper to admit it; but ſtill we ſee no Reaſon, why we ſhould recede from the Opinion of the Antients, merely becauſe ſome modern Commentators (who, by the ſame Freak of Fancy, might have turned the plaineſt Narrative in Scripture into an Allegory) have adventur'd to call it a Parable. Myſteries indeed may be made of any Thing, and, in a pregnant Brain, fit Alluſions will never be wanting, when once a full Scope is given to the Imagination, and a Writer is permitted to invent what he pleaſes: But it would be Madneſs to give up the Truth of hiſtorical Facts, merely becauſe the Man has Ingenuity enough to apply them to a foreign Purpoſe, eſpecially when, upon Examination, we find, that there are ſufficient Proofs and Teſtimonies of their Reality, and no inſuperable Objections to the contrary.

LET us ſuppoſe then, that the Events, contain'd in this Hiſtory, happen'd before the Babyloniſh Captivity, and in the Reign of Manaſſeh King of Judah; that Nabuchodonoſor in Judith was the ſame with Saoſduchinus in Ptolemy, who reign'd over the Aſſyrians, and Chaldeans, having ſubdu'd Eſarhaddon King of Aſſyria; that Arphaxad is the ſame with Phraortes, mention'd in Herodotus, and that theſe two Kings waged War with each other; that Saoſduchinus, having overcome Arphaxad, reſolv'd to reduce all the Nations, ſpoken of in Judith, under his Dominion, and, to that Purpoſe, ſent Holofernes at the Head of his Forces, to ſubdue thoſe Countries, that would not ſubmit; that, at this Time, Manaſſeh, who had been a little before deliver'd from the Captivity, in which he had been carry'd to Babylon, dwelt at Jeruſalem, concerning himſelf but little with the Government, and leaving the Care of publick Affairs to Joakim the High-Prieſt; that the Inhabitants of Bethulia reſolv'd, by God's Aſſiſtance, to preſerve their Religion and Liberties, and, accordingly ſhut their Gates againſt Holofernes; and that Judith, a Woman of great Courage and Conduct, ſeeing the Extremity, to which the City was reduc'd, undertook to deſtroy Holofernes, and, in her Attempt, ſucceeded. Suppoſing all this I ſay, (and this is the Subſtance of the Whole) where do we find any Thing contrary to the Rules either of Hiſtory or Chronology?

THE War, we ſuppoſe, commenc'd between Nabuchodonoſor and Arphaxad, in the Year of the World 3347; the Expedition and Death of Holofernes were both in the next Year 3348; Manaſſeh was taken and carry'd to Babylon 3349; he return'd ſome Years after, and dy'd 3361: So that here we find a proper Space for the Things, related in this Hiſtory, to be tranſacted; and that they were really thus tranſacted, we have the concurring Teſtimony both of the Jewiſh and Chriſtian Church, who, tho' they deny the Book a Place in the Number of their ſacred and Divine Writings, yet did always eſteem it as one of their Apocryphal Pieces, and a true and inconteſted Hiſtory, well contriv'd for the Edification of the Vulgar, tho' not of Authority enough to determine any Controverſy in Matters of Religion.

From 1 Kings viii. to the End of 2 Chron.

(k) JOSEPHUS indeed makes no Mention, either of the Book of Judith, or of her famous Exploit in killing Holofernes; but his Silence is no Argument againſt what we aſſert, becauſe he no where profeſſes to take notice of every Thing, that occur'd in the Jewiſh Republick; on the contrary, (l) he openly declares, that his Purpoſe was to relate only ſuch Things, as were recorded in Books, which were originally written in Hebrew, and declar'd Canonical, which that of Judith never was.

'Tis ſome Confirmation of its Genuineneſs however, that in Writings, which are of undoubted Authority, we meet with ſome Citations out of it: And therefore when we find St Luke, in Elizabeth's Salutation of the Virgin Mary, uſing the Words,—— (m) Bleſſed art thou among Women, which are manifeſtly taken from the Compliment, which Ozias makes Judith, (n) Bleſſed art thou of the Moſt High God, above all the Women upon Earth; and St Paul, in his Exhortation to the Corinthians, uſing theſe,—— (o) Neither murmur ye, as ſome of them alſo murmured, and were deſtroyed of the Deſtroyer, which he certainly borrows from the tenth Chapter of Judith, according to the Greek Interpretation; we cannot forbear concluding, that, in the Apoſtolick Age, this Book was look'd upon as a Piece of true and uncontroverted Hiſtory.

Why the King of Nineveh might be called Nabuchodonoſor.

Difficulties indeed there will occur in Relation to Names, Dates, and other Particulars, almoſt in all Hiſtories, and eſpecially in the Oriental (p), when we ſhall find, not only in Writers of different Characters, the Greek and Hebrew, the ſacred and profane, but even in Writers of the ſame Nation, the ſame Perſon under different Appellations. Tho' therefore, in Strictneſs of Speech, it may be accounted an Error in Hiſtory, to call the King of Nineveh by the Name of Nabuchodonoſor, yet as it was the Stile and Manner of the Jews to denote any Prince, who liv'd beyond the Euphrates, by that Name, we need not wonder, that we find an Author, who liv'd in an Age, when the Fame and Reputation of Nabuchodonoſor the Great had quite eclips'd the Name of all his Predeceſſors, calling another Prince, who liv'd at a far Diſtance, i. e. Saoſduchinus, the King of Aſſyria, by the Name of the King of Babylon, which perhaps, at that Time, might be the ſtanding Name of every great and diſtant Monarch.

Why Arphaxad may be ſaid to have built Nineveh.

Nor is there any great Treſpaſs againſt the Truth of Hiſtory, (q) in this Author's aſſerting, that Arphaxad built the Walls, the Towers, and the Gates of Ecbatana; ſince by Arphaxad he does not mean the Dejoces in Herodotus, but his Son Phraortes, who ſucceeded him in the Kingdom of Media: For, that he muſt mean ſo, is plain, becauſe he gives us to underſtand, that this Arphaxad was defeated, and (r) himſelf ſlain by the Aſſyrian Archers, which even Herodotus (s) himſelf makes to be the Fate, not of Dejoces the Father, but of his Son Phraortes, who, having ſubdued the Perſians, (as he tells us) and made himſelf Maſter of almoſt all Aſia, was not content therewith, but coming at laſt, to attack Nineveh, and the Aſſyrian Empire, was overcome, and killed in the bold Attempt.

His Father indeed might lay the Foundation of Ecbatana, and, during his Life-Time, carry on the Building; but a Work of this Kind is not ſo ſoon effected, but that he might leave the Completion of it to his Son, who, being a Prince of a warlike Spirit, and having many Forces under his Command, is therefore, in the Book of Judith, not improperly ſaid to have made the Gates of this royal City (t) in Height ſeventy Cubits, and in Breadth forty Cubits, for the going forth of his mighty Armies, and, for the ſetting in Array his Footmen.

The Succeſſion of the High-Prieſts is ſo imperfectly recorded, that Joakim's might be omitted.

WHOEVER looks into the Order and Succeſſion of the Jewiſh High-Prieſts, as we have them delivered to us in the firſt Book of Chronicles (u), in the Books of Ezra (x), Nehemiah (y), and in the Hiſtory of Joſephus (z), will find them ſo intricate and perplex'd, ſo many Omiſſions and Miſlocations, ſuch a Diverſity of Names and Numbers, and ſuch ſeeming Contrariety in the ſeveral Accounts, as will coſt him no ſmall Pains to reduce them to any tolerable Regularity. The Reaſon is, becauſe the Scripture no where profeſſes to give an exact Catalogue of all ſuch, as had been admitted to that Office and Dignity, until the Captivity.

THAT in the Book of Chronicles ſeems to bid faireſt for it: But, upon Examination, it will appear (a) to be only a direct lineal Deſcent of the Pontifical Family, from Aaron to Jeſodack the Son of Seraiah, who was High-Prieſt at the Captivity; and not a Succeſſion of ſuch, as had borne the pontifical Office, becauſe ſeveral in that Pedigree are inſerted, that were never High-Prieſts †, and ſeveral are omitted, that were. The Pedigrees of the High-Prieſts in Ezra, and Nehemiah, are but imperfect Parts of that, which we have in the Book of Chronicles; and as for the Catalogue of Joſephus, it is ſo corrupted, that ſcarce five of the Names in it do agree with any Thing, that we have in Scripture: So that, conſidering the Defect of theſe Accounts, we may be allow'd to infer, that Joakim, or Eliakim (for they are Names both of the ſame Import) might have been High-Prieſt in the Time of Manaſſeh; even tho' we ſhould ſuppoſe, that there was no Mention made of him, as ſuch, either in the Holy Scriptures, or in the Hiſtory of Joſephus.

Tho' there is Reaſon to think that he is not; and why he only might be mention'd.

(b) THE Scripture however takes notice of one Eliakim, the Son of Hilkiah, whom (according to the Prophet (c) Iſaiah) God promis'd to cloath with a Robe, and to ſtrengthen with a Girdle, i. e. to inveſt with the pontifical Habit and Office; and therefore his being a Father to the Inhabitants of Jeruſalem, and to the Houſe of Judah, and his having the Key of the Houſe of David laid upon his Shoulder; ſo he ſhould open, and none ſhould ſhut, and he ſhould ſhut and none ſhould open, does very well agree with the Part, which Joakim is ſaid to have acted in the Book of Judith. For tho' the ſupreme Power was doubtleſs in Manaſſeh, yet ſince his Return from the Captivity, having either ſequeſtered himſelf from publick Buſineſs, or (d) being engag'd in the Defence of his Country in ſome other Place, he might intruſt the Management of his Affairs in Jeruſalem to the High-Prieſt, who, having ſuch an Amplitude of Power, and acting as chief Miniſter in that Place, might be well enough mention'd in this Tranſaction of Judith, and (e) in the Deputation of the Elders from Jeruſalem to thank her for it, without naming his Maſter at all.

Holofernes's acting like a Perſian.

WHAT the Manners and Cuſtoms of the Perſians were, we may in ſome meaſure learn from the Greek Hiſtorians, who, upon the Diſſolution of that Monarchy by the Conqueſt of Alexander, were oblig'd to ſay ſomething of a People, whom they ſucceeded in the Dominion of the Eaſt; but, as theſe Hiſtorians did not write, till after the Kingdom of Perſia was deſtroy'd, they have taken little or no Notice of other Oriental Nations, and therefore what Affinity there might be in their Manners and Uſages, we cannot tell; and (f) conſequently, muſt not blame the Author of the

† The High-Prieſts of the Family of Eli are Inſtances of the latter; for they are left out of that Pedigree, tho' they were High-Prieſts; and thoſe of the true Race, who were excluded by them, are Inſtances of the former; for they are in it, tho' they were never High-Prieſts; and it is very likely that, from the Time of Solomon to the Captivity, many more ſuch Inſtances might have happen'd, to hinder that Pedigree from being an exact Catalogue of the High-Prieſts. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 655.

the Book of Judith, for making Holofernes act out of Character, (as we think) unleſs we know how far the Cuſtoms of the Aſſyrians and Perſians did conform, or diſagree.

The Rapidity of his Conqueſts, and being ſtopt at Bethulia, accounted for.

Herein however we know that all Oriental Nations were unanimous, viz. in affecting Pomp and Grandeur; and therefore (whether it was a Perſian Cuſtom, or no) we need not wonder, that we find Holofernes, the Captain-General of the Aſſyrian Army, (g) reſting upon his Bed, under a Canopy, which was woven with Purple, and Gold, and Emeralds, and precious Stones; and, when Judith was introduc'd coming out before his Tent, † with Silver Lamps going before him. We need not wonder at the Rapidity of his Conqueſt, ſince doubtleſs he had ſeveral Lieutenant-Generals under him, who, with ſtrong Detachments from the grand Army, might, in ſeparate Bodies, invade all the Provinces, which the Hiſtorian mentions; and, ſince he no where met with any Oppoſition, until he came into Paleſtine, but expected a great deal in Egypt, he thought it adviſable to halt, for ſome Time, in the Neighbourhood of Bethulia, and put his Men into Quarters of Refreſhment, until the Forces, which he had detach'd upon ſundry Expeditions, were come up, and had join'd him. And for this Reaſon, he was not ſo eager to preſs the Siege of Bethulia, that he might not harraſs and fatigue his Men in fighting againſt Rocks and inacceſſible Mountains, but preſerve them freſh and unfoiled, for their great and more important Expedition againſt Egypt.

Why the Bethulians and Judith durſt venture to oppoſe him.

The Truth is, the King of Nineveh was reſolv'd, not only to ſubdue the ſeveral Nations from the Euphrates to Ethiopia, but intended likewiſe to oblige them all to (h) adore and acknowledge him only to be God *; and therefore the Bethulians, who could not, without Impiety, and a Renunciation of their Religion, ſubmit to the Dominion of ſuch a King, had Reaſon to promiſe themſelves the Aſſiſtance of God, in the Proſecution of this War: And Judith, who found herſelf under a divine and irreſiſtible Impulſe to go upon ſo adventurous an Exploit, had good Reaſon to hope for Succeſs againſt a Prince, who had declar'd himſelf an Enemy to the God of Heaven, and an Uſurper of that Honour and Adoration, which belong'd to him alone.

Why ſhe might juſtly ſlay him.

† Holofernes may be thought, in this Piece of State, to imitate the Cuſtom of the Perſians, among whom it was uſual to carry Fire before their Kings, as it was afterwards done before the Roman Emperors, and is at preſent before the Emperor of the Turks; but the Reaſon of this might be no more, than either that Judith and her Maid were apprehended, and brought to Holofernes before it was quite Day, or that the inner Apartment of his Tent was ſo very dark, that he had Lights continually burning in it. Calmet's Commentary on Judith x. 22.

(h) Judith vi. 2.

* How great ſoever the Folly and Impiety was, in deſiring to paſs for a God, yet the King of Nineveh was not the only Prince that we find infected with it. The Flatterers of Nebuchadnezzar the Great propos'd to him, to make a Decree, that, under Pain of being caſt into the Den of Lions, no one ſhould dare to aſk a Petition of any God or Man, but of him only, for the Space of thirty Days, Dan. vi. 7. When Alexander the Great took it in his Head to exact the ſame divine Honours of his People, that they had formerly paid to the Kings of Perſia his Predeceſſors, he found People about him, baſe and proſtitute enough to commend the Deſign, and to maintain, that thus to advance Kings above the Rank of mortal Men was not only a pious, but a prudent and advantageous Thing; for ſo the Hiſtorian expreſſes it, Perſas non tantum piè, ſed etiam prudenter, Reges ſuos inter Deos colere, majeſtatem enim imperii ſalutis eſſe tutelam, Quint. Curt. lib. viii. The Egyptians had their Princes in the like Veneration, and look'd upon them as highly rais'd above the Condition of other Men: But the Grecians, it muſt be own'd, had all this Baſeneſs and abject Flattery in a juſt Deteſtation, inſomuch, that the Athenians put Timagoras to Death, for having proſtrated himſelf before the King of the Perſians; and Sperchius and Bulis, two Lacedæmonians, though then in a State of Captivity, could not be brought to pay that Adoration to Artaxerxes, which he required of every one that approach'd him. Plut. in Artax.

unto him, neither ſhall thine Eye pity him, neither ſhalt thou ſpare, neither ſhalt thou conceal him, but thou ſhalt ſurely kill him: And, in Purſuance of this Law, much more might Judith, or any other Inhabitant of Bethulia, whom God had inſpir'd with the like Courage and Magnanimity, endeavour to counterplot the Deſigns of any Perſon, who in an hoſtile Manner ſhould come, not only to invade their civil Rights and Liberties, but to extirpate their Religion; and, inſtead of enticing, to compel them by Force of Arms, to receive a Form of Idolatry, which neither they, nor their Fathers knew.

Tho' her Conduct, in this Affair, is not to be entirely juſtify'd.

MANY Things may be alledg'd againſt Judith's Method of proceeding in this Affair, but they are moſt of them reduceable to the common Stratagems of War, which not only the Law of Arms, but the Commands of God in ſome Caſes, and the Examples of ſeveral of the beſt Men in ſacred Hiſtory, have declar'd to be allowable. What comes not under this Denomination, we ſhall not pretend to vindicate; (k) For the Notion of mental Reſervations, and ironical Speeches, which are not allow'd in common Converſation, are but the poor Subterfuge, which Commentators have us'd, to apologize for the Conduct, that they can by no Means juſtify.

THE Hiſtory indeed repreſents this Judith, as a Woman of great Courage; but it no where intimates, that ſhe was without Faults. The Manner of her Preparation for the Undertaking, and the Succeſs, wherewith it was attended, may make us preſume that its Deſign was originally from God; but then the continu'd Train of Falſhood and Diſſimulation, wherewith it was carry'd on, muſt needs perſuade us, that the Means of conducting it was left to the Woman, who, on this Occaſion, has given us a very remarkable Specimen of the Cunning and Sagacity, the Guile and Artifice of her Sex.

Her Anſwer to the Eunuch, in ſome Meaſure, juſtify'd.

ONE Thing however may be ſaid, and that without any forc'd Explication, in Favour of her Conduct: —— That her Anſwer to the Eunuch's Suggeſtion ſhe might deſign for no more than a common Compliment, which the Situation of her Affairs, at that Time, oblig'd her to make. (l) She might perceive, very likely, the bad Deſign which the Aſſyrian General had upon her; but ſhe did not think herſelf concern'd to diſcover that ſhe perceiv'd it. She pretended in ſome Meaſure to be ignorant of it; and, to pretend an Ignorance in what is propos'd, when the Thing is naughty, and will not bear Examination, is a Point of Modeſty, as well as Prudence; as, where it will admit of a double Conſtruction, there to take it in the better Senſe, is even reputed an Act of Candour and good Breeding. Let not this fair Damſel fear (ſays the old Pander) to come to my Lord, and to be honoured in his Preſence, and drink Wine, and be merry with us, and be made this Day as one of the Daughters of the Aſſyrians, who ſerve in the Houſe of Nabuchodonoſor. How the Daughters of Aſſyria, who ſerv'd in this Capacity, were us'd, Judith very probably had been inform'd; but ſince the Eunuch ſeem'd to put it on the Foot of a great Favour, and Dignation done her, ſhe could not do leſs, than return him a Compliment: But then we all know, (m) that the Offers of Service, which, upon every Occaſion, we are ſo apt to make to one another, and thoſe Expreſſions of Submiſſion and Reſpect, which ſo commonly paſs among us, are not to be taken in a literal Senſe, becauſe they always imply a tacit Condition: And therefore the Anſwer, which the Hiſtorian puts in Judith's Mouth, Surely whatever pleaſeth him, I will do ſpeedily, will fairly admit of this Conſtruction, "Whatever Holofernes ſhall "deſire of me, ſo far as it is conſiſtent "with my Duty, my Honour, and my "Religion, I will not fail to do."

Why ſome Things in this Book cannot be accounted for.

THUS we have endeavour'd to ſatisfy moſt of the popular Objections, and to reconcile moſt of the ſeeming Inconſiſtencies, that occur in the Hiſtory of Judith; and if

if there ſtill remain any, that cannot ſufficiently be clear'd up, they ought, in Juſtice, to be imputed to our Ignorance and Want of better Information. Had we the antient Books of the Chronicles of the Kings of Iſrael and Judah, (to which we are ſo often referr'd in Scripture) or had we the Hiſtories of the Aſſyrians, Chaldeans, Medes, Perſians, and Egyptians, (with whom the Jewiſh Nation had ſo long an Intercourſe) perfect and entire, it is not to be doubted, but that many of the Difficulties, which at preſent ſeem unſurmountable, would then eaſily ſubſide and ſink into nothing. The plain Truth is, "There was ſcarce ever an Hiſtory written, (according to our learned Prideaux's (n) Obſervation) but what in the very next Age will ſeem to have Inconſiſtencies enough in it as to Time, Place, and other Circumſtances, when the Memory of Men concerning them begins to fail; and therefore we may be much more apt to blunder, when we take our View, at the Diſtance of above two Thouſand Years, and have no other Light to direct us to our Object, but ſuch Glimmerings from broken Scraps of Hiſtory, as are, in Effect, next to nothing."

The Prophets Way of writing thought proper in their Days.

THE like is to be ſaid of the ſeveral ſeeming Abſurdities, that may be obſerv'd in the Writing and Behaviour of the Prophets: —— That were we ſufficiently acquainted with the Stile and Manner of Writing, that was in uſe in thoſe Days, and eſpecially in the Eaſtern Countries, we ſhould think it no ſtrange Thing to find them expreſſing themſelves by Types and Figures, parabolical Repreſentations, and emblematical Actions. For, however it comes about, ſo it is, that Mankind has all along been marvellouſly taken with Story and Picture. (o) Theſe excite the Curioſity of our Nature: They tempt us to learn, help us to remember, and convey Inſtruction to the Mind, in a more pleaſing and effectual Manner, than plain Documents can: And hence it came to paſs, that a great Part of the Learning of the wiſe Men of the Eaſt conſiſted in (p) Prophecies, in ſubtle and dark Parables, and in the Secrets of grave Sentences, as the Author of the Book of Eccleſiaſticus has branch'd it out; for (q) to underſtand a Proverb, and the Interpretation, the Words of the Wiſe and their dark Sayings, was the very beſt Deſcription that Solomon himſelf could give of Wiſdom. (r) Among the Antients, indeed, Mythology was in the higheſt Eſteem. The Egyptians, who were in great Reputation for Learning, deliver'd their Notions in Hieroglyphicks; and from them the Grecians took the Mode of couching their Meaning in Fable. Heſiod (s), who contends with Homer for Antiquity, is ſuppos'd by Quintilian to be the Author of the Fables, which go under the Name of Æſop; but however this be, the very Suppoſition of his being ſo, makes it probable, that he did write Fables, as perhaps moſt Men of Learning and Note, in thoſe Days, accuſtom'd themſelves to this Form of Writing.

(t) BUT, beſides this parabolical Way of Writing, which was in great Vogue among the Antients, and to which the Jews, by a Kind of natural Genius, were wonderfully inclin'd, the People of the Eaſt had a Way of expreſſing themſelves by Actions, as well as Words, and, to enforce the Matter they were upon, would frequently make uſe of outward and viſible Signs and Repreſentations. (u) This, our learned Mr Mede ſhews, was the Practice of the Indians, Perſians, and Egyptians; and, even among the Romans, (who were a People that us'd great Modeſty of Stile, and more Gravity in their Actions, than many other Nations) it was a cuſtomary Thing in their Orations and Pleadings, to uſe all Arts to raiſe the Paſſions, by Actions and Repreſentations, as well as Words; inſomuch, (x) that they would frequently hang hang up the Picture of the Thing, they were to ſpeak to. Cicero tells us of himſelf, that he ſometimes took up a Child, and held it in his Arms to move Compaſſion; and to excite Horror and Indignation, nothing was more common, than for the Accuſers to produce, in open Court, a bloody Sword, or the Garments of the Wounded; to ſhew the Bones that had been taken out of the Wound, or the Scars that it had left behind it, Quarum rerum ingens plerumque vis eſt, (ſays (y) Quintilian) veluti in rem præſentem animos hominum deucentium; for it can hardly otherwiſe happen, but that by this Means they ſhould fix the Attention of their Hearers, when, at one and the ſame Time, they ſpeak to their Eyes and Ears both.

The different Ways of interpreting them.

FROM theſe few Remarks it appears in general, that the figurative Expreſſions of the Prophets, their Actions, and Types, and Parables, were not incongruous to the Cuſtoms of the Times and Places where they liv'd, and yet very proper Means to give a lively and affecting Repreſentation of the Meſſage they had to deliver: And ſo proceed we to the Paſſages, which ſeem to give Diſguſt.

TO take ſeveral of theſe in their literal Senſe, would be an effectual Way to diſparage the Divine Precept, which, according to this Acceptation, would put the Prophet upon acting in a Manner quite inconſiſtent with common Prudence: And therefore, Interpreters are generally agreed, that the Things of this Kind, which will not come under a literal Conſtruction, were either tranſacted in Viſion, i. e. the Prophet in a Dream, or ſome other Deliquium, imagin'd that he did ſuch and ſuch Things, and then related them to the People; or that they were Parables, which God dictated to the Prophet, and the Prophet recited to the People: Only it muſt be obſerv'd, (z) that the literal Interpretation of a Text always claims the Preference, if there be not ſome weighty Reaſon againſt it, or ſome Intimation in the Text itſelf, that the Words are figurative and enigmatical.

Jeremiah*'s carrying the Cup, and ſending Yokes, and carrying his Girdle, explain'd.*

THE Prophet Jeremiah (a) is order'd by God, to take the Wind-Cup of his Fury at his Hand, and to carry it up and down, far and near Jeruſalem, and the Cities of Judah, and the Kings and Princes thereof; to Pharaoh King of Egypt, and his Servants, Princes, and People; to all the Arabians, and Kings of the Land of Uz; to the Kings of the Land of the Philiſtines, Edom, Moab, and Ammon; to the Kings of Tyre and Zidon, and of the Iſles beyond the Sea, Dedan, Tema, and Buz; to the Kings of Zimri, of the Medes, and Perſians, and all the Kings of the North. Now, ſince is was morally impoſſible for the Prophet to viſit all theſe Kings and Nations in Perſon, and the Nature of the Thing would not admit of any real Performance, it could be no otherwiſe done than in Viſion. The Cup of God's Wrath is a common Figure in Scripture, to denote the Severity of his Judgments; and therefore when the Prophet ſays, that he took the Cup at the Lord's Hand, and made all the Nations drink thereof, he can mean no more, than that he propheſied againſt theſe ſeveral Nations, and by Virtue of the Spirit of Foreknowledge, which God had imparted to him, pronounc'd their Doom.

(b) IN like Manner, his ſending Yokes and Bonds to ſeveral Kings, whoſe Embaſſadors were then at Jeruſalem, can hardly be underſtood in a Senſe altogether literal; becauſe it is not probable, either, that the Embaſſadors would take the Yokes at his Hands, or carry them to their reſpective Maſters; but then, as Yokes and Bonds are common Figures in Scripture, to denote Captivity, and the Miſeries that do attend it, his ſending the Yokes and Bonds may ſignify no more, * than his declaring from God the Fate of theſe Princes, when the King of Babylon was let looſe upon them. Only it muſt be obſerv'd, that the Prophet might really make ſome of theſe Yokes, and Bonds, (as the Scripture ſays expreſsly, that he put one upon himſelf) to enliven the Idea, and make the Impreſſion of what he was to ſay more ſtrong and emphatical. For theſe ornamental Figures, and affecting Images interſpers'd with it, added new Force and Dignity to the Prophet's Meſſage, made it more awful and ſolemn in the Delivery, and gave it the Advantage of a deeper and more durable Impreſſion.

IN like Manner again the whole Affair of this Prophet's Girdle, his carrying it to the Euphrates, hiding it in a Rock, and, at ſuch a determinate Time, going for it again, and finding it quite rotten and ſpoiled, can hardly be taken in a literal Senſe; becauſe the vaſt † Diſtance of the Place, and Trivialneſs of the Errand, as well as the Impoſſibility of getting out of Jeruſalem, if it was then inveſted by the Babylonians, make ſtrongly againſt it; and therefore we may ſuppoſe, that all this was tranſacted in the Prophet's Imagination only; that, in the Night-Time, God ſent upon him a Viſion, wherein all this Series of Things ſeem'd to be perform'd by him, to imprint it the deeper upon his Underſtanding, viz. that the Kingdom of Judah, which was once as nearly united to God, as the Girdle is to a Man's Loins, ſhould be utterly ruin'd and deſtroy'd; and tho' the River Euphrates be at a wide Diſtance from the Prophet's Place of Abode, yet in the Viſion, (which is never confin'd to Places) it might be more aptly made choice of than any other, thereby to denote to the Jews, that over that River they were to be carry'd captive to the City of Babylon.

Several Commands to Ezekiel never intended to be done.

THE Short of the Matter is, —— Several Things, which the Prophets ſet down, as Matters of Fact, might not be actually done, but only repreſented as done, to make the more lively Impreſſion upon their Readers and Hearers. Nay, there are ſeveral Commands, which God gives Ezekiel in particular, ſuch as his lying for 390 Days on one Side, (which was next to a Thing impoſſible) his baking his Bread with Man's Dung (which was a Thing unſeemly) and his ſhaving his Head and Beard (which, as he was a Prieſt) (c) was a Thing expreſsly forbidden him) that the Prophet is never once ſaid to have perform'd, nor were they indeed given him with an Intent that he ſhould perform them, but only relate them to the People, and ſo make them Signs unto the Houſe of Iſrael, i. e. either Reſemblances of Things paſt, or Prognoſtications of Things to come.

St PETER, we may obſerve, (d) was commanded, in his Viſion, to do what he never did; Riſe, Peter, kill and eat: Nay, by his Reply it appears, that himſelf did not think, that he was any Ways bound to obey the Command; Not ſo, Lord; for I have never eaten any Thing, that is common or unclean. And yet the Uſe, which he made of this Viſion, was to report it to the Church as a Sign, or emblematical Indication of God's having accepted the Gentiles into the Goſpel-Terms of Salvation. And, in like Manner, when Ezekiel, in his Viſion, receiv'd the Command of ſhaving his Head and his Face, his Anſwer might have been in St Peter's Strain, Not ſo, Lord; for, by thy Law, I am forbidden to make Baldneſs upon my Head, or to ſhave off the Corner of my Beard; and yet he might relate this Viſion to the People, the better

† The Learned Bochart has invented a new Solution of this Difficulty. He ſuppoſes, that, as it is a common Thing for the initial Letter to be dropp'd, in the Names of Places and Perſons, the Hebrew Word Phrath may be ſuppos'd to ſtand for Ephrath, or Ephratah, which is Bethlehem, about five or ſix Miles diſtant from Jeruſalem; by which Means the Prophet's Journey is greatly ſhorten'd, and the Pains of going thither once again is not much. But whether this Solution (as ingenious as it is) will bear the Teſt, is left to the Examination of the Criticks. Calmet's Commentary, and Scripture vindicated, in Locum.

better to inforce the Threats, which God had authoriz'd him to denounce againſt Jeruſalem: (e) Therefore thus ſaith the Lord God, behold I, even I am againſt thee, and will execute Judgments in the Midſt of thee, in the Sight of the Nations; and I will do in thee that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like, becauſe of all thy Abominations.

And why improper.

IN a Word, the Prophets, in their Viſions, might receive ſeveral Commands concerning Things illegal or indecent; (f) but then they conſider'd theſe, not as formal Commands, but as Types, Emblems, and Predictions, deliver'd to them in a preceptive Form, in order to imprint the Things intended the deeper upon their Minds, and to make the Repreſentation thereof to the People with whom they had to do, more lively and affecting: Nor ſhould it ſeem ſtrange, that the Divine Wiſdom, in this Caſe, makes choice of Things improper, and ſometimes impracticable, ſince his Purpoſe in ſo doing is to make the Prophet perceive at once, that it was all ſymbolical, and not deſign'd to direct him how, and what to act, but how, and what to apprehend, foreſee, and foretel of Things to come.

Hoſea's marrying an Adultereſs, may be taken either figuratively or literally.

WHETHER the Command given to Hoſea to marry a Woman, that either had been, or would prove a Proſtitute, is to have a literal or figurative Conſtruction, Commentators and Criticks, both antient and modern, are not a little divided: But, ſince in the figurative there is no Violence offer'd to Scripture, and in the literal there is nothing immoral or abſurd; it matters not much in which Senſe we take it. In Scripture it is a common Thing to repreſent the Defection of a People from the Service of God, (g) by the Metaphors of Adultery, and Fornication; and therefore, to introduce the Prophet as marrying a Woman, that prov'd an Adultereſs, as having ſeveral Children by that Marriage, and as calling theſe Children by ſuch Names, as denoted the Deſtruction of a rebellious Nation, is no bad Manner of expreſſing the near Relation between God and his People; his conſtant Care in preſerving and multiplying them; their vile Ingratitude in revolting from him; and the great Severity, wherewith he intended to puniſh their Revolt. Or, take the Words in a literal Senſe, and that the Prophet was really commanded to marry a Woman of a bad Repute; yet might there not be many prudential Conſiderations to make ſuch a Match eligible? The Scripture, we may obſerve, in the Appellations which it gives Perſons and Things, has leſs Regard to what they actually are, than to what they once were; and hence it is, that Moſes's Rod, when turn'd into a Serpent, (h) is ſtill called his Rod; and thoſe whom our Saviour healed of their ſeveral Infirmities, are ſtill the Deaf (i), the Lame, &c. even after they are cur'd. Now, if the Woman, whom Hoſea was order'd to marry, (tho' once ſhe had liv'd an incontinent Life) was now become chaſt and virtuous, where was the great Abſurdity of his actually doing it, ſince (beſides other Motives to us unknown) he was, in this Action, to be a Sign to the Iſraelites, and to ſet an Example to them, who had gone a whoring after other Gods, (k) that, if they would forſake their falſe Deities, and return to their true God, the God of their Fathers, he would ſtill accept, and receive them, in the like Manner as the Prophet had taken an Adultereſs to his Wife, upon Aſſurance that ever, for the future, ſhe would prove faithful to his Bed?

Ezekiel's moving his Goods, and delineating the Siege of Jeruſalem.

THE Account of Ezekiel's packing up his Houſhold Goods, removing them by Night, and breaking through the Walls of his Houſe to carry them away more ſecretly, tho' ſome Interpreters have look'd upon it as the mere Narration of a Viſion, or the Recital of a Parable, yet to me it ſeems more probable, that the Whole was tranſacted juſt in the Manner wherein it is deſcrib'd; eſpecially conſidering the near Reſemblance between the Prediction and the Event. For, after that the Prophet, by the ſymbolical Action of removing his Goods in a Fright, had typify'd the Taking of Jeruſalem, he proceeds to apply what he had done in this Prediction —— (l) I am your Sign; like as I have done, ſo ſhall it be done unto them: They ſhall remove, and go into Captivity; they ſhall dig through the Wall to carry out thereby; and the Prince that is among them, ſhall bear upon his Shoulder in the Twilight, and ſhall go forth. —— My Net alſo will I ſpread upon him, and he ſhall be taken in my Snare, and I will ſcatter, toward every Wind, all that are about him to help him, and all his Bands. And accordingly the Event happen'd; for (m) when the City was broken up, ſays the Hiſtorian, all the Men of War fled by Night, by the Way of the Gate, between two Walls, which is by the King's Gardens, (for the Chaldees were againſt the City round about) and the King went the Way toward the Plain. But the Army of the Chaldees purſued after the King, and overtook him in the Plains of Jericho, and all his Army were ſcattered from him.

His pourtraying the City in a Siege.

The like is to be ſaid of the ſame Prophet's being order'd by God to delineate upon a Slate the City of Jeruſalem, and the Babyloniſh Camp inveſting it, viz. That the Pourtraiture of the Fort, the Mount, the Camp, and battering Rams againſt it, (n) are ſo very like to what happen'd at the Siege, that we can hardly forbear preſuming, that the whole Narration is literal, or that the Prophet did really draw a Sketch of the Siege of the City, as God commanded him. For, ſince (as we obſerv'd before) it was a Practice ſometimes among the beſt of Orators to repreſent, in a Picture, the particular Thing they were to ſpeak to, thereby to gain the readier Attention of their Hearers, why ſhould it be thought inconſiſtent with the Character of a Prophet, or any Diminution of his Diſcretion, or Gravity, to do the ſame Thing, in order to gain the ſame End?

And Iſaiah's walking naked, to be taken literally.

TO walk naked indeed for three Years together, as the Prophet Iſaiah (o) is ſaid to have done, does not ſo well comport with the Rules of Decency, and ſeems to carry in it an Appearance of Frenzy or Madneſs; but we are to remember, that, in Scripture-Phraſe, thoſe are ſaid to go naked, who either go without (p) their upper Garment, or without the (q) Habit, that is proper to their Station or Quality; and that the Hebrew Text does not ſay, that Iſaiah walked in this Manner for three Years together, but that he thus walked as a Type, or Sign of the three Years Calamity, which would come upon Egypt and Ethiopia. So that the Senſe of the Paſſage is this: —— That Iſaiah went about, without his upper Garment, in Token, that the Egyptians and Arabians ſhould undergo a Calamity of three Years Continuance from the King of Aſſyria; but how long, or how often he did this, the Scripture is ſilent; only it may be preſum'd, that he did it in ſuch a Manner, (whether three Days together, or thrice the ſame Day) as might beſt prefigure the three Years Calamity: And, ſince the Action was to be typical, the Prophet, who (through the Iniquity of the Times) could ſcarce gain the Audience of the People at any Rate, was to appear in an uncommon Garb, and with ſomething particular in his Manner, to ſtrike the Eyes, and awaken the Obſervation of all around him: For, had not there been ſome viſible Impropriety in the Action, ſomething ſeemingly inconſiſtent with the Character of ſo grave a Man, it would not have anſwer'd the Purpoſe of exciting the Curioſity and Attention of the People, for which it was intended.

The Sum of the whole.

Thus we have endeavour'd to vindicate the Actions of the Prophets, or rather the

DISSERTATION V.

Of the ſacred Chronology, and profane Hiſtory, during this Period.

To what Period of Time this famous Paſſage in Ezekiel relates.

THE particular Differences, and ſeeming Incongruities, in Point of Chronology, that have occurr'd in this Period of Hiſtory, we have endeavour'd to ſolve and reconcile in the Notes that are annex'd to it: But there is a Paſſage in the Prophet Ezekiel, generally ſuppos'd to relate to this Time, wherein ſome learned Chronologers do not ſo well agree.

The Paſſage is this: —— (s) I have laid upon thee the Years of their Iniquity, according to the Number of Days, three hundred and ninety Days; ſo ſhalt thou bear the Iniquity of the Houſe of Iſrael. And when thou ſhalt accompliſh them, lie again on thy right Side, and thou ſhalt bear the Iniquity of the Houſe of Judah forty Days. I have appointed thee each Day for a Year. The Generality of Commentators, who take God's laying upon the Prophet the Years of his People's Iniquity, to denote his forbearing to puniſh them for their Offences for ſuch a determinate Time, do agree, (t) that there is an exact Sum of three hundred and ninety Years mention'd in this Place; that this Sum is to begin from the Time, that Jeroboam firſt ſet up the Golden Calves; and that the 390 and 40 Years are not diſtinct Numbers, but that the leſs is to be included in the greater; but then the Queſtion is, where we are to end theſe three hundred and ninety Years? or to which of the Captivities do they extend?

Several learned Men of great Authority make theſe Years to end (u) at the laſt Captivity by Nebuzaradan, Captain of the Guards under Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, and four Years after the laſt Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which happen'd in the eleventh Year of Zedekiah; for, from the Time of the ſetting up the Calves, (x) ſay they, to this laſt Inſtance of God's Severity, are juſt 390 Years; from the eighteenth Year of Joſiah, (when the Kingdom of Judah enter'd into Covenant with God) to this Time, are juſt 40 Years; and, by this laſt Captivity, all the Predictions of the ſeveral Prophets, relating thereunto, were perfectly fulfilled.

It is to be obſerv'd however, that this laſt Captivity was ſo ſmall, ſo ſudden, and attended with ſo little Difficulty, as can by no Means come up to the Pomp and Solemnity of the Prophet's Deſcription, in that very Chapter, wherein this Epocha is mention'd. The Account, which we have of the Invaſion, is this: (y) —— “Whilſt Nebuchadnezzar lay at the Siege of Tyre, he ſent Nebuzaradan, with Part of his Army, to invade the “ Land of Iſrael, on purpoſe, as is ſuppos'd, to revenge the Death of Gedaliah; becauſe there was no other Reaſon for his falling upon the poor Remains of thoſe miſerable People, whom “ he himſelf had left, and ſettled there. “ In this Expedition Nebuzaradan ſeiz'd “ upon all the Jews, whom he found in “ the Land, made them Captives, and “ ſent them to Babylon; but they all “ amounted to no more, than ſeven hundred and forty-five Perſons.” Here was no Reſiſtance made, no Siege maintain'd, no Famine incurr'd. The People fell a cheap and eaſy Prey, becauſe they were ruin'd and deſtroy'd before. But now in the Expedition, to which the Prophet (z) alludes, Jeruſalem was beſieg'd, and the Defendants reduc'd to the Neceſſity of (a) eating Bread by Weight, and with Care, and of drinking Water by Meaſure, and with Aſtoniſhment, as he expreſſes it.

FOR this Reaſon, we ſhould rather incline to the Hypotheſis of thoſe, who end both the Computations at the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem in the eleventh of Zedekiah; who, according as they compute the Time from Jeroboam's Apoſtacy, make the Period of God's forbearing the Houſe of Iſrael, from thence to the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, to contain juſt three hundred and ninety Years; and who begin the forty Years of God's Forbearance of the Houſe of Judah, from the Miſſion of the Prophet Jeremiah to preach Repentance to them, i. e. (b) from the thirteenth Year of Joſiah, when he was firſt called to this Office; from which Time, to the laſt Year of Zedekiah, when Jeruſalem was deſtroy'd, were exactly forty Years. For, (c) ſince the hundred and twenty Years of God's forbearing the old World is reckon'd from the Miſſion of Noah to preach Repentance, there ſeems to be ſome Parity of Reaſon, that his forty Years Forbearance of the Kingdom of Judah ſhould be reckon'd from the like Miſſion of Jeremiah.

Another Way of explaining the Paſſage.

BUT there is another Way of explaining this Paſſage: For, if by the Word Iniquity, which God imputes to the Houſe of Iſrael and Judah, we are to underſtand the Puniſhment of their Iniquity, (which is very common, and ſeems to be the moſt natural Senſe in this Place) 'tis plain, that, as the whole Tenor of the Prophet's Diſcourſe ſeems to denote an Event future, and far diſtant, it may not improperly relate to the Continuation of God's Puniſhment upon the Tribes of Iſrael and Judah, for their great and manifold Provocations.

(d) NOW the Puniſhment of Iſrael for their Iniquities may be ſaid to commence at the Taking of Samaria, in the Reign of Hoſhea; as that of Judah did, at the Taking of Jeruſalem, in the Reign of Zedekiah. If then we reckon from the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem to the Time when Cyaxares the IId (whom (e) the Scripture calls Darius the Median) became King of Babylon, we ſhall find it about forty Years; and as he was a known Favourer of the Jews, and might therefore give them leave to return Home, we may be allow'd to infer, that here the Term of their Puniſhment did expire. And, in like Manner, if we reckon from Salmanaſer's Taking Samaria to the laſt Victory which Alexander the Great obtain'd over Darius Codomannus, whereby he became ſole Monarch of all Aſia, we ſhall find it to be much about 390 Years: And, as his Kindneſs to the Jews was very remarkable, we may here date the Reſtoration of their Liberty and, conſequently, their Releaſe from the Puniſhment, which God inflicted on them for their Sins.

THUS, accordingly as we take the Senſe of the Words in the Prophet, the Hiſtory which is alluded to, puts on a different Aſpect, and relates to a different Period: But proceed we now to the profane Hiſtory itſelf.

The profane Hiſtory of this Period.

What we are farther concern'd to do, is to take notice of ſome more remarkable Events, which, during this Period of Time, are ſuppos'd to have happen'd in the World.

The Inſtitution of the Olympick Games.

(f) IN the thirty-fifth Year of the Reign of Uzziah King of Judah, and while there was an Interregnum in the Kingdom of Iſrael, the Olympick Games were inſtituted in Greece. The Uſe and Deſign of them was to train up the Youth in active and warlike Exerciſes, that, if Occaſion requir'd, they might be capable of doing their Country Service in the Field: And it was not from the Mountain Olympus in Theſſaly, but from the City Olympia (ſince called Piſa, near Elis, a City in Peloponneſus, where they were celebrated in the adjacent Plains, near the River Alpheus) that they took their Names. Here was the ſplendid Temple of Jupiter, which had vaſt Treaſures belong'd to it, by Reaſon of the Oracles, which were there given out, and theſe Games, which were there celebrated in Honour of that Deity; and here was likewiſe that famous Statue of Jupiter *, made by Phidias, which was accounted one of the Wonders of the World, and from which he obtain'd the Name of Jupiter Olympius.

IT was about for hundred and forty Years before this Time, that theſe Games and Exerciſes were at firſt inſtituted by one Hercules; not the Son of Jupiter and Alcmena, ſo much celebrated by the Greek and Latin Poets, but one of the Prieſts of Cybele called by that Name, who came into Greece from Ida, a Mountain in Phrygia, (whence he and his Companions were called Idæi, Dactyli, and Corybantes) and brought in many ſuperſtitious Rites with them. After the Death of this Hercules, theſe Games were diſcontinu'd for many Years, till, by Advice from the Oracle of Apollo, Iphitus eſtabliſh'd them again, even in the Life-time of Lycurgus, who is no where ſaid to have oppos'd them; and ſo they continu'd, until the Time of Conſtantine the Great, who, upon his Profeſſion of the Chriſtian Faith, firſt ſlighted

* This Statue of Jupiter is deſcrib'd by Pauſanias, in the following Manner: —— " He is made ſitting on a " Throne of Gold and Ivory, with a Crown on his Head, which ſeems to be made of Olive-Branches. In his Right- " Hand he holds an Image of Victory, made of Ivory likewiſe, that has on its Head-Dreſs a Crown of maſſy Gold; " and in his Left a Sceptre, made of all Kinds of Metals mix'd together, with an Eagle on the Top of it. His " Shoes and Stockings are all of Gold, and the reſt of the Drapery is of the ſame Metal, adorn'd with Figures of " various Animals, and a great Number of Flower-de-luces. His Throne is embelliſh'd with Ivory, Ebony, Gold, " precious Stones, and a Multitude of emboſs'd Figures. At the four Feet, or Pedeſtals of the Throne, are four " Victories, and two others at the Feet of the Statue. At the two Feet, on the Fore-ſide of the Throne, on one " Hand are the Figures of Sphinxes, who are carrying off ſome Theban Youths; and, on the other Side, are repre- " ſented the Figures of the Children of Niobe, whom Apollo and Diana ſhot to Death with their Arrows. Between " the Feet of the Throne is repreſented Theſeus, and the reſt of the Heroes who accompany'd Hercules to the War " againſt the Amazons, together with ſeveral Athletæ of diverſe Kinds; and the Place is all around adorn'd with " Pictures, repreſenting the Labours of Hercules, together with ſeveral other of the moſt renown'd hiſtorical Subjects. " On the upper Part of the Throne, on the one Side are engraven the Graces, and on the other the Hours, becauſe, " according to the Poets, both theſe were the Daughters of Jupiter. On the Footſtool of the Statue are golden " Lions, and a Repreſentation of the Combat of Theſeus with the Amazons; and on a Baſis thereof, are innumer- " able golden Figures, ſuch as that of the Sun going into his Chariot, of Jupiter and Juno, Mercury, Veſta, and " Venus, who has Cupid ſtanding by her; of Apollo, Diana, Minerva, Hercules, Amphitrite, Neptune, and the " Moon, which is here repreſented ſitting upon an Horſe." This is the Subſtance of what Pauſanias ſays of this famous Statue: But, notwithſtanding that its Workmanſhip was the Wonder of all the Antients, and the Curioſity of ſeeing it might increaſe the Number of thoſe, who came to the Olympick Games, yet Strabo finds great Fault with it, for Want of a due Proportion, becauſe it was of ſuch a prodigious Bigneſs, that, if it had ſtood upright, it muſt have made a Hole in the Roof of the Temple. Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi. c. 2. in the Notes.

ſlighted the Ludi Seculares, and afterwards all other Games, as Monuments of Pagan Superſtition; ſo that falling by Degrees into Diſeſteem, in the Time of Theodoſius the Great, if not before, they were utterly unfrequented, and dwindled into nothing.

Their Primary,

THESE Games were us'd to be perform'd at the End of every four Years, (and ſo every four Years made an Olympiad) and laſted for five Days; when the Youth of Greece contended for Maſtery in five Sorts of Exerciſes, one for each Day, viz. the Cæſtus, or Whirle-Bat, the Coit, Leaping, Wreſtling, and Racing, either on Foot or Horſeback, or in Chariots; all which Exerciſes were thought ſo honourable, that even Kings themſelves did not diſdain to become Competitors for the Victory; and, accordingly, we find Pindar, the moſt celebrated Poet in thoſe Days, addreſſing his firſt Olympick to Hiero King of Syracuſe, for having won the Prize in one of the Horſe-Races.

THE Prize however was not great: It was no more than a Garland of Palm, or Olive; but the Victor was treated with ſuch Tokens of Reſpect and Eſteem, and was attended by the People with ſuch loud Acclamations, while he rode into the City in a Coach through a Breach in the Wall, which, upon this Occaſion, was made for his more pompous Entrance; and while he was ſure to have the beſt of Poets to celebrate his Praiſe, and rank him even among the Gods; that to come off Conqueror, and be crown'd in this Place, was thought an Honour, not inferior to that of a Triumph in Rome; and this the rather, becauſe the Inhabitants of Elis, who were the Preſidents of theſe Games, were ſo remarkably impartial in giving Sentence according to Merit, that, whoever was crown'd by their Order and Determination, was always thought juſtly to deſerve it.

And ſecondary Uſe.

THUS (g) it appears, that the original Uſe of theſe Olympick Games was to encourage Activity of Body: But, in Proceſs of Time, they came to be employ'd to a quite different Purpoſe, even to fix the Chronology of the Hiſtory of the Greeks, among whom † it grew a Cuſtom to reckon by Olympiads; for, before that Cuſtom prevail'd, their Hiſtorians were vaſtly negligent in fixing the Date of ſuch Tranſactions, as they related. Varro, the moſt learned Perſon among the Romans, both for Hiſtory and Antiquity, reckons three Sorts of Times. The 1ſt, from the Beginning of Mankind to the firſt Flood, which he calls uncertain, becauſe no Account is given of it by any Heathen Writer. The 2d, from the Flood to the firſt Olympiad, which he calls fabulous, becauſe many ſtrange Stories are reported of the Gods and Demigods in thoſe Times, but without any Method, or Order. The 3d, from the firſt Olympiad to his Time, which he calls hiſtorical, becauſe thence-forward all Tranſactions were laid in their proper Places; but, before the Inſtitution of this Method of Computation, every Thing was confus'd in the Grecian Hiſtory, (as Euſebius (h) tells us) and (i) no one Thing written with any tolerable Exactneſs.

† Of the Time, when this City was built, there are two Accounts, the Varronian, and the Capitolian. The Varronian places it in the Year before, but the Capitolian in this Year, and yet they may be both eaſily reconciled; for, Æra commenc'd, and was in Uſe throughout all the Empire, upon the Building of the City of Rome, the Hiſtory of which is as follows.

AFTER the Deſtruction of Troy (k), Æneas, landing in Italy, was at firſt oppos'd by Latinus, King of the Latines, or Aborigines; but, being overcome in Battle by the Trojans, Latinus made Peace with their Leader, and permitted him, and his Men, to live independent in his Kingdom. Enrag'd at this Treatment, Turnus, King of the Rutili, fomented a freſh War againſt Æneas; but, in the Concluſion, he was ſlain in ſingle Combat by the Grecian Chief, and his Miſtreſs Lavinia, (who was the Occaſion of all this Contention) was, by her Father Latinus, given to the Conqueror for a Wife. Æneas (it muſt be obſerv'd) had another Son by a former Wife, nam'd Creüſa, who was loſt in the Siege of Troy; and after his Death, his Relict Lavinia, being great with Child, and fearing the Power of Aſcanius, (for that was his Name) fled into the Woods, and was there deliver'd of a Son, who, for that Reaſon, was called Sylvius, and, becauſe he was born after his Father's Funeral, was likewiſe called Poſthumus. It was not long however, before the People began to expreſs their Reſentment of this hard Uſage of Lavinia, ſo that Aſcanius was oblig'd to recal her; and, to avoid all Occaſions of Diſagreement for the future, he left to her, and her Son Sylvius, the City of Lavinia, which Æneas had built, and called after her Name, whilſt himſelf remov'd to Alba-longa, a City of his own erecting, and where he liv'd for the Remainder of his Days, highly delighted with the Situation of the Place.

AFTER the Death of Aſcanius, there happen'd a Contention between this Sylvius the Son of Æneas, and Iülus the Son of Aſcanius, about the Succeſſion to the Kingdom; but, as the Relations of Lavinia had the more prevalent Intereſt in the Country, the Matter was ſo compromis'd, that Iülus was made High-Prieſt, and Sylvius King; in whoſe Family the Kingdom continued for ſeveral Generations, and every ſucceeding Prince was nam'd Sylvius.

OF this Race was Latinus the Second, Grandſon to Sylvius, who built ſeveral Towns on the Borders of Latium; and their Inhabitants, ſtanding much upon the Honour of their Original, were afterwards called Priſci Latini. Of this Race was Tiberinus, who (as ſome ſay) was drown'd in the Tiber, and from that unhappy Accident gave Name to the River. Of this Race was Aventinus, who, by being bury'd in the Place, gave Name to one of the Mountains, on which Rome was built; and of this Race was Procas, who, after his Death, left his two Sons, Numitor and Amulius, to reign alternately every Year: But Amulius the younger depos'd Numitor, ſlew his Son Ægiſthus, and, to cut off the whole Race, compelled his Daughter Ilia to enter into a Vow of perpetual Virginity, by becoming a Prieſteſs to the Goddeſs Veſta. Her Vow however did not laſt long; for a certain Soldier found Means to get her with Child, but, to cover the Diſgrace, a Report was rais'd, that all this was done by Mars, the God of War. At length ſhe was deliver'd of two Sons, Romulus and Remus, whom their Uncle Amulius commanded to be drown'd, and their Mother to be bury'd alive, as being the Puniſhment, for, as it was cuſtomary in thoſe Times, when they began to build a City, to go round it with a Plough, and make a Furrow, where the Walls were to be built, but leave a void Space for the Gates; the Year before they might thus mark out the City, dig the Foundation of the Walls, and provide Stones, Timber, and other Materials, and this Year lay the Foundation; ſo that the Computation might eaſily begin from either Year, tho' the Capitolian is the general Account. Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi. c. 2.

Puniſhment, which the Law inflicted, when Veſtal Virgins had violated their Chaſtity.

Whether the Mother underwent this Puniſhment, or, (as ſome will have it) upon the Intreaty of Antho, the Daughter of Amulius, obtain'd her Pardon; it is certain, that the two Children were thrown into the Tiber, in order to be drown'd: But, as the Stream was low, and much Mud was in the Place, a certain Woman, nam'd Lupa, found them before they were dead, and having ſuckled them for ſome Time, (from whence the Story of their being nurs'd by a She-Wolf took its Riſe) brought them at length to Fauſtulus, the King's Shepherd, who recommended them to the Care of his Wife Laurentia, and ſo they were both preſerv'd.

As ſoon as they came to a proper Age, they liv'd at firſt in the Capacity of Shepherds; but, being naturally of a brave and martial Temper, they apply'd themſelves, not only to the Buſineſs of hunting wild Beaſts, but of clearing the Country likewiſe of ſuch Gangs of Robbers, as came to plunder and infeſt it; ſo that, in a ſhort Time, the Fame of their Adventures made Multitudes of the neighbouring Youth, who were of the like Complexion, reſort unto them. Enrag'd at their Proceedings, a ſtrong Company of theſe Robbers ſet upon them at a certain Time, and, tho' Romulus defended himſelf againſt their Attack, took Remus Priſoner, and, pretending that he had plunder'd the Eſtate of his Grandfather Numitor, deliver'd him to King Amulius, who ſent him to his Brother Numitor to be executed for the Fact.

When Remus was brought before Numitor, he behav'd with ſuch Courage and Intrepidity, that he could not but ſuſpect ſomething uncommon in him; and thereupon, hearing that he had another Brother, and that they were Twins, and comparing their Age with the Time, when his Daughter Ilia's two Children were expos'd, he began to think, that theſe, without Doubt, muſt be the Boys, whom ſome good Providence had wonderfully preſerv'd; and being confirm'd in his Opinion by the Information of Fauſtulus, who had brought them up, he enter'd into a Conſpiracy with them, againſt his Brother Amulius, wherein it was agreed, that Romulus, with his Men, ſhould privately enter the City, and, being join'd with ſuch Forces as Remus could muſter up in Numitor's Family, ſhould, all on a ſudden, attack the Palace, and ſeize the King.

The Plot ſucceeded. Amulius was taken, and killed: And, after that Numitor had congratulated his Grandſons upon their Succeſs, he aſcended the Roſtrum, and, in a full Aſſembly of People, declar'd how wicked and inhuman his Brother Amulius had been; that theſe were his two Grandchildren; how they were born, and bred up, and came to be diſcover'd; and that by their Contrivance it was, that the Tyrant was taken off; whereupon the People immediately came to a Reſolution, that Numitor ſhould be their King, and that, next under him, Romulus and Remus ſhould be held in the greateſt Veneration.

As ſoon as theſe Matters were ſettled and adjuſted, the two young Princes (to perpetuate the Memory of their Preſervation) reſolv'd to build a City upon the Spot, where they had been nouriſh'd and brought up; and ſeveral of the neighbouring People, as well as their own Men, came in to their Aſſiſtance. It was not much doubted, but that this new City would, in Proceſs of Time, outvie all the other Towns in Italy; but then, as the two Brothers were Twins, and it was not well known which was the elder, they agreed to determine, by the Flight of Birds, who ſhould give the Name to the City, and, upon the Grandfather Numitor's Deceaſe, which of them ſhould reign firſt.

To this Purpoſe they went each of them to the Top of an Hill. Romulus aſcended what was afterwards called Paaltinus, and Remus, Aventinus, from whence he diſcover'd ſix Vultures firſt; but his Brother afterwards ſaw twelve, ſo that the Diſpute was never the nearer an End. Remus laid claim to the Sovereignty, becauſe he ſaw the firſt Vultures, and Romulus becauſe he ſaw the moſt; inſomuch, that from Words proceeding to Blows, Remus was unhappily ſlain by his Brother, and, in his Death[*], put an End to the Controverſy.

WHEN the City was built, Romulus called it Roma, which, in the Greek Tongue, ſignify'd Strength, and not by his own Name Romula, becauſe it was a Diminutive. As the City however, when finiſh'd, had not a ſufficient Stock of Inhabitants, he found out an Expedient to remedy this Defect, by making a neighbouring Grove an Aſylum, or Place of Refuge to all Malefactors and diſcontented Perſons; ſo that, in a ſhort Time, vaſt Numbers of all Nations, that could not live in their own Country with Safety, fled hither for Protection, and peopled the City. Theſe Inhabitants however could laſt but for one Age, becauſe they were moſt of them Men, and, when they deſir'd to marry with their Neighbours, were rejected with Scorn; ſo that they were under a Neceſſity to get themſelves Wives by ſome Stratagem or other. To this Purpoſe Romulus proclaim'd a Feaſt, and publick Games, in the Honour of Neptune, to be celebrated near his new City; and when the Virgins from every Quarter came thither to ſee, and divert themſelves, upon a Signal given, they were all ſeiz'd by Force, carry'd into the City, and compelled to become Wives to thoſe, that wanted them. Exaſperated with this baſe Treatment, the neighbouring People immediately prepare for War; but are repuls'd with Loſs by the Romans: Till the Sabines, who were their moſt formidable Enemy, and principally concern'd in the late Affront, march'd againſt them, and, under the Command of their King Tatius, were juſt upon giving them a total Defeat; when their Daughters, who were now become Wives to the Romans, ran between the two Armies, and, with their Hair torn, and all other Indications of Sorrow, acquainted their Parents, that they had been uſed civilly, and that, if Matters were carry'd to ſuch Extremities, nothing could be expected on their Side, but Ruin and Deſtruction. Hereupon their Parents, being overcome by their Prayers, and Tears, and Arguments, laid aſide all angry Reſentments, and enter'd into a Treaty with their Sons-in-Law, which ſucceeded ſo well, that ſeveral of them left their antient Habitations, and came, with all their Subſtance, and liv'd in Rome. From ſo ſmall a Beginning did this City gradually increaſe to be the Seat of the Weſtern Empire, and the Miſtreſs of the then known World!

The Diſſolution of the Aſſyrian Monarchy.

ONE very remarkable Event more, which happen'd the very next Year after the Building of Rome, viz. in the twelfth Year of Jotham King of Judah, and the thirteenth of Pekah King of Iſrael, was the Diſſolution of the Aſſyrian Monarchy, upon the Death of Sardanapalus, as ſeveral Heathen Authors have thus related it. This Emperor exceeded all his Predeceſſors in Sloth and Voluptuouſneſs. He cloth'd himſelf in Women's Attire; he painted his Face, and deck'd his Body more like a Strumpet, than a King; he affected an effeminate Voice; ſpun fine Wool and Purple among his Concubines, and proceeded to ſuch a Degree of Luxury and Shameleſſneſs, that he wrote Verſes in Commemoration of his diſſolute Manner [*] Florus makes the Occaſion of the Death of Remus to be another Matter: For, having obſerv'd that Romulus, by the greater Number of the Vultures, which he ſaw, had got the better, and built his City, with good Hopes, that it would be remarkable for warlike Affairs, becauſe thoſe Birds were accounted Birds of Prey; 'ere the Walls were rais'd to any great Height, his Brother Remus made a Jeſt of them; which exaſperated the other to that Degree, that he order'd him immediately to be ſlain.

Manner of Life, and commanded after his Death to have them inſcrib'd on his Tomb.

The Kings of the Eaſt ſeldom appear'd in Publick: But Sardanapalus was never ſeen by any, but ſuch only, as were either Aſſiſtants, or Aſſociates in his Laſciviouſneſs; until Arbaces, the General of the Median Forces, brib'd one of his Eunuchs, by giving him a golden Cup, to be introduc'd into his Preſence; where, ſeeing his vile degenerate Behaviour, he began to think it a Diſparagement, that ſo many brave and gallant Men ſhould be under the Dominion of a worthleſs Wretch, that affected to be a Spinſter, rather than a King. This he communicated to his Friends and Acquaintance, to the Governors of ſeveral Provinces, but more eſpecially to Beleſis, the Governor of Babylon, with whom he enter'd into a cloſe Confederacy to depoſe the preſent Emperor, and to divide his Dominions between them, whereof Beleſis was to have Babylon, Chaldea, and Arabia, and himſelf all the reſt.

(l) When Matters were thus agreed on, Arbaces endeavour'd, by all Sorts of Arts and Inſinuations, to make himſelf acceptable to the Medes; to perſuade them to invade the Aſſyrian Empire, and (in Hopes of regaining their Liberty) to draw the Perſians into the like Confederacy. On the other Hand, Beleſis prevail'd with the Babylonians to revolt, and gain'd the King of Arabia (with whom he had a very great Intimacy) to his Party; ſo that, when all their Forces were join'd together, the Army is ſaid to have conſiſted of four hundred thouſand Men.

SARDANAPALUS, ſeeing ſuch a ſtrong Confederacy, and Combination of Arms againſt him, thought it high Time to ſhake off his Sloth; and having drawn forth the Forces of the reſt of the Provinces, he engag'd the Enemy thrice, and as many Times defeated them. In the firſt Action he purſu'd them to the Mountains, ſeventy Furlongs beyond Nineveh. In the ſecond he ſo defeated them, that they were all upon the Point of returning home, had not Beleſis (who was a Babyloniſh Prieſt, and pretended to great Skill in Aſtrology * and Divination) gave them Aſſurance, that God would at laſt reward their Labours with Succeſs. In the third Engagement Arbaces himſelf was wounded, and his Army routed, and purſu'd as far as the Mountains of Babylon; ſo that the chief Officers were for diſperſing, and ſhifting for themſelves, when Beleſis gave them once more Aſſurance, (l) Bedford's Scripture Hiſtory, lib. vi. c. 2.

* Whatever Skill he might pretend to in Aſtrology, 'tis certain, that he was an excellent Aſtronomer, and when he came to Babylon, and was made Emperor there, ſet himſelf to rectify the Chaldean Year, which ſeems to have ſtood unalterable from the Flood, till that Time. The antient Year of the Chaldeans conſiſted of three hundred and ſixty Days, or of twelve Months, with thirty Days to each Month; but, as this was five Days and a Quarter leſs than the Revolution of the Sun to the ſame Point of the Equinox, the Egyptians, in the Time of Thoth, (their ſecond King, and Grandſon of Ham) added five Days to the Year, ſo that every Year conſiſted exactly of three Hundred and ſixty-five Days: But then, in four Years, there was one Day leſs, than in ſo many Julian Years, which in a great Length of Time, (viz. in 1460 Years) made the Beginning of the Year run through all the Seaſons. To prevent this Inconſiſtency, the Chaldeans, about every ſix Years, added to their Year of 360 Days an Intercalary Month, which made their Years unequal; and therefore Beleſis, being well acquainted with the Egyptian Aſtronomers, and finding that their Year was equal, tho' not abſolutely perfect, reduces the Babylonian Year to the ſame Standard, i. e. he makes it conſiſt of three Hundred and ſixty-five Days, which were divided into twelve Months, of thirty Days each, and five Days, which were added at the End of the Year. But then, becauſe, in each of theſe Years, there would be a redundant Quarter of a Day, and, in four Years, one whole Day, inſtead of the Biſſextile Day (as it is in the Julian Computation) he began every fourth Year a Day ſooner. This Alteration he order'd to begin in the firſt Year of his Reign, and from thence it was called the famous Æra of Nabonaſſar, (for ſo Beleſis was likewiſe nam'd) which continu'd in Egypt to the Death of Anthony and Cleopatra, and was afterwards in Uſe among the Mathematicians and Aſtronomers, to the Time of Ptolemy, who made his Canon by this Account, which is juſtly eſteem'd the ſureſt and moſt uſeful Guide of antient Chronology, where the ſacred Hiſtorians are ſilent. Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi. c. 2. Whiſton's Theory, lib. ii. and Chronology of the Old Teſtament, p. 12.

rance, that, if they would but continue together for five Days longer, every Thing, in that Time, would have a different Turn.

WITH much Intreaty was the Army prevail'd on not to diſperſe, when ſuddenly News was brought, that a great Inforcement was coming from Bactria to join the King, ſo that the only Game which Arbaces had to play, was to march againſt them, and by all Means imaginable, prevail with them to revolt; wherein he ſucceeded beyond all Mens Hopes and Expectations, and ſo gave another Turn to the Face of Affairs.

SARDANAPALUS, in the mean Time, knowing nothing of this, and being elated with his repeated Succeſſes, was indulging his Sloth and Luxury, and preparing Beaſts for Sacrifice, with Plenty of Wine, and other Things neceſſary to feaſt and entertain his Soldiers; when Arbaces, having Intelligence by Deſerters in what Condition his Army lay, fearleſs of any Foe, and overcome already with Surfeiting and Drunkenneſs, broke into their Camp by Night, and, having made a terrible Slaughter of moſt of them, forc'd the reſt into the City.

THE King, after this Defeat, took upon him the Defence of the Place, and committed the Charge of the Army to Salamenus, the Queen's Brother; but Salamenus was worſted in two pitch'd Battles, one in the open Field, and the other before the Walls of Nineveh, where himſelf was ſlain, and moſt of his Men cut to Pieces; ſo that all the Reſource which Sardanapalus had, was to ſuſtain the Siege as long as he could, until the Succours (which he had ſent for out of all his Provinces) ſhould come to his Aſſiſtance: And this he had ſome Hopes of being able to do, becauſe there was an ancient Prophecy, that Nineveh never could be taken by Force, until the River became its Enemy.

ARBACES, on the other Hand, was much encourag'd by his Succeſſes, and carry'd on the Siege with the utmoſt Vigour; but the prodigious Strength of the Walls, which were an hundred Feet high, and ſo very broad, that three Chariots might go a-breaſt upon them, and the vaſt Plenty of all Manner of Stores and Proviſions, neceſſary for a long Defence, hinder'd him from making any conſiderable Progreſs.

THUS two Years were ſpent, without any Proſpect of Relief on the one Side, or of taking the Town on the other. In the third Year, a continu'd Fall of Rains made the Tygris overflow to ſuch a Degree, that, coming into the City, it tore along with it twenty Fathom of the Wall, which Sardanapalus concluding to be the Accompliſhment of the Oracle, becauſe by this Means the River was apparently become an Enemy to the City, he grew quite diſpirited, and gave up all for loſt. However, to prevent his falling into the Hands of the Enemy, he cauſ'd a large Pile of Wood * to be made in the Court of his Palace, and there heap'd together all his Gold, Silver, and royal Apparel, and, having encloſ'd his Eunuchs and Concubines in the Midſt of it, order'd it to be ſet on Fire, and ſo burnt himſelf, and them together. The only Action, wherein (m) theſe Hiſtorians, who make no Mention of his Victories, repreſent him as a valiant Man! Arbaces, being inform'd of this, march'd his Army through the Breach of the Wall, and took the City.

* Concerning this Pile, Athenæus informs us, ——— That it was four hundred Feet high, upon which he plac'd 150 golden Beds, and as many golden Tables; that he had thrown into it ſome Millions of Talents of Gold and Silver, beſides the richeſt Furniture of Purple, and the fineſt Garments; and that this Pile was fifteen Days in burning. To which Diodorus adds, that Beleſis, by Craft, obtain'd Leave of Arbaces to carry off the Aſhes, under Pretence of building an Altar with them at Babylon, by which Means he gain'd an immenſe Treaſure. But all this looks more like a Romance, than a true Hiſtory. Bedford's Scripture Chronology, lib. vi. c. 2. in the Notes.

After this he rewarded his Followers according to their Merit; made Beleſis Governor of Babylonia, Chaldea, and Arabia, according to their Compact, and took the reſt of the Empire to himſelf; which put an End to the Aſſyrian Monarchy, after it had govern'd all Aſia (n) above thirteen hundred Years, and, (according to the Viſion, which Daniel (o) had of it) in it Conqueſt had been as ſwift as an Eagle, but now its Wings were pluck'd.

Sons of Kereah, and Iſhmael, the Son of Nethaniah, with divers others: But Iſhmael came to him out of a treacherous Intent only; for, being of the Blood-Royal, he reckon'd to make himſelf King of Judea, now that the Chaldeans were gone, and, to that Purpoſe, had form'd a Conſpiracy to kill Gedaliah, and ſeize on the Government, wherein Baalis †, King of the Ammonites, was confederate with him.

His Deſign however was not carry'd on ſo ſecretly, but that Johanan, the Son of Kereah, got notice of it, and acquainted the Governor with it: But, he being a Man of a generous Temper, and not apt to entertain Jealouſies of others, took no Notice of Johanan's Information, but continu'd the ſame friendly Correſpondence with Iſhmael, that he had ever done. This gave the Traytor an Advantage against him; for, pretending to pay him a Viſit one Day, he and his Confederates (at a Time when the People were gone out to Harveſt-work) fell upon him, and ſlew him, even while he was entertaining them at his Table. With him he murther'd all the Jews and Chaldeans, that were at Mizpah, except ſome few, whom he made Captives; and having kept the Matter private, the next Day but one, he deſtroy'd fourſcore Iſraelites, who were coming, in a mournful Manner *, with their Oblations into the Town, and there put them all to the Sword, except ten, who, for the Redemption of their Lives, offer'd him all the * Treaſures they had in the Field.

After this Maſſacre, Iſhmael, not thinking himſelf ſafe in Mizpah, took the Captives with him, (among whom were King Zedekiah's Daughters) and was making the beſt of his Way to the King of the Heap of Stones, as alſo Miſpeh, i. e. a Watch-Tower, becauſe at the Covenant, which was made between Laban and him, a Heap of Stones was gather'd to remain a Monument of it, and, upon that Occaſion, Laban's Expreſſions are theſe——The Lord watch between me and thee, when we are abſent one from another. If thou wilt afflict my Daughters, or if thou wilt take other Wives, beſides my Daughters, no Man is with us; ſee, God is Witneſs between me and thee, Gen. xxxi. 49, 50. From that Time, the Place, where this Covenant was made, and where probably in Memory of it a City in After-Ages was built, was called Mizpah. It was ſituate on the Eaſt-Side of the River Jordan, and, in the Diviſion of the Land, fell to the Tribe of Dan; and here it was, that Gedaliah choſe to fix his Habitation, or perhaps was order'd to fix it here, becauſe it lay neareſt of any to Babylon, from whence he was to receive his Inſtructions, as to the Adminiſtration of the Government. Wells's Geography of the Old Teſtament, Vol. I.

† That Iſhmael, who was of the Blood-Royal of Judah, ſhould attempt to take away the Life of Gedaliah, is no Wonder at all. His Envy of the other's Promotion, and his Ambition to make himſelf a King, might be ſtrong Incitements to what he did; but why Baalis ſhould have any Hand in ſo black a Deſign, we can hardly imagine any other Reaſon, than the antient and inveterate Hatred, which the Ammonites always had againſt the Hebrews, and therefore this King of theirs, ſeeing that the Jewiſh Nation was, at this Time, in a Manner, brought to nothing, was minded to take Revenge for all the Injuries, that his Anceſtors had receiv'd from them, and to give the finiſhing Stroke to their Ruin, by cutting off their Governor, and ſo diſperſing all the Remains of that unhappy People, which was now gather'd together at Mizpah. But, whatever their Views might be, it is certain, that they put their Deſign in ſpeedy Execution; for the Murther of Gedaliah happen'd but two Months after the Deſtruction of the City and Temple of Jeruſalem, viz. in the ſeventh Month, (which is Tiſri, and anſwers in Part to our September and October) and on the thirtieth Day of the Month: For that Day the Jews have kept as a Faſt, in Commemoration of this Calamity (which indeed was the Completion of their Ruin) ever ſince. Calmet's Commentary on Jer. xl. 14. and Prideaux's Connection, Anno 588.

* The Tokens of their Mourning are ſaid to be,——That they had their Beards ſhaven, and their Cloaths rent, and that they had cut themſelves, Jer. xli. 5. For tho' it was an expreſs Prohibition in the Law, Ye ſhall not make any Cuttings in your Fleſh for the Dead, nor print any Marks upon you, Levit. xix. 28. yet this ſeems to relate only to ſuch Practices, when they became ſuperſtitious, and were done in Honour to falſe Gods; for, in Caſes of ordinary Mourning for the Dead, or for any other grievous Diſaſter, the Words of the Prophet ſeems to imply, as if they had been permitted in common Uſe: Both the Great and the Small ſhall die in the Land: They ſhall not be buried, neither ſhall Men lament for them, nor cut themſelves, nor make themſelves bald for them, neither ſhall Men tear themſelves in Mourning to comfort them for the Dead, Jer. xvi. 6, 7.

* Treaſures (according to the common Phraſe of Scripture) ſignify any Thing, that is hid or kept in Reſerve, whether it be Gold, Silver, Corn, Wine, Oil, Apparel, or any other Thing: And, among the People of the Eaſt, it was an uſual Thing to bury their Corn, and other Proviſions in deep Holes, and Caverns, which they dug and filled up ſo very dexterouſly, that no one could perceive that the Earth had been mov'd, nor could any find them out, but thoſe who made them. Calmet's Commentary.

the Ammonites, when Johanan, and the reſt of the Captains of Judah, hearing of this deteſtable Deed, made after him with what Forces they could get together: But, when he perceiv'd them coming, he left all his Train behind him, and with only eight Men, made his Eſcape into the Land of Ammon.

The Jews, that were left, after his Eſcape, retreat into Egypt.

JOHANAN, and the reſt of the Captains, being thus left with all the People, and now reflecting on what Iſhmael had done to Gedaliah, began to be apprehenſive, that the Chaldeans might poſſibly revenge his Death upon them, and therefore, for Fear of the worſt, they retir'd to Chimham [†], not far from Bethlehem, that, in Caſe they were called to an Account, they might more readily make their Eſcape into Egypt.

JEREMIAH, from the Time that he parted with Nebuzaradan, had taken up his Abode with Gedaliah the Governor; but, after his Death, among the reſt of the Captives, was carry'd from thence by Iſhmael the Conſpirator, and, now, upon his Defeat, accompany'd Johanan, and the reſt of his Countrymen, to their new Habitation at Chimham. Here they had not been long, before Johanan and the other Princes of the People came to requeſt of him, that he would conſult the Lord concerning their intended Journey into Egypt, with warm Profeſſions however of a ready Compliance with whatever he ſhould think fit to enjoin them. The Prophet did ſo: And, in ten Days Time, return'd them this Anſwer from God,——"That, if they would "tarry in Judea, and live peaceably un-"der the King of Babylon, he would "ſcreen them from their preſent Danger, "and incline the Heart of their Conque-"ror to be favourable to them; but that, "if they perſiſted in their Intention of "going into Egypt, he would infallibly "cauſe every Thing, they dreaded, the "Sword, the Famine, and the Peſtilence, "to purſue them." But, notwithſtanding both their own Profeſſions, and the Prophet's Declarations, (wherein they [†] blam'd Baruch, as being acceſſary) they were reſolutely bent upon going into Egypt; and accordingly, taking all the Remnant of Judah, Men, Women, and Children, the King's Daughters, Jeremiah the Prophet, and Baruch his Scribe, with them, they went and ſettled in the Country, until the Judgments, wherewith God had threaten'd their Diſobedience, came upon them.

[†] This Place may be ſuppos'd, from 2 Sam. xix. 38, to have been antiently given by King David to Chimham, the Son of old Barzillai the Gileadite, and which, at this Time, bore his Name, tho' near five hundred Years after the firſt Donation. It was in the Neighbourhood of Bethlehem, about two Leagues from Jeruſalem, and hither the poor People betook themſelves, becauſe it was at a much farther Diſtance from Babylon, than Mizpah, and in their ſtrait Way to Egypt, in caſe they ſhould determine to go thither, as they ſeem'd inclinable to do, becauſe there they ſuppos'd they ſhould have no War, nor hear the Sound of the Trumpet, nor have Hunger of Bread, Jer. xlii. 14.

But what Foundation the People ſhould have for this their Accuſation againſt Baruch, it is no eaſy Matter to conceive; only we may ſuppoſe, that as Baruch was preſerv'd, and taken Care of by the Chaldeans, as well as his Maſter, and was equally againſt maintaining the Siege of Jeruſalem, when Nebuchadnezzar came before it; and that, as he had been ſome Time at Babylon himſelf, (Vid. Baruch i. 1, 3.) and was probably not ſo virulent in his Speeches againſt the Chaldeans, as the other Jews were; this, to a blind and mutinous Mob, was Reaſon enough to ſuſpect him of being engaged in the Enemies Party. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] The Places, in which the Jews are ſaid to have ſettled themſelves in Egypt, were Migdol, Tahpanhes, Noph, and the Country of Pathros, Jer. xliv. 1. Migdol is the ſame Place in Egypt, which Moſes makes mention of, Exod. xiv. 2. over-againſt Baal-zephon, not far from the Red-Sea. Tahpanhes is Daphne, not far from Peluſium, the firſt City in Egypt, in the Road from Judea, and, as it were, its Key. Noph is Memphis, ſituate above the Parting of the Nile, or where the Delta begins, and not a little famous for its Pyramids; and the Country of Pathros is the ſame with Thebais, or the Upper-Egypt, ſo called from the City Thebes, which was the firſt Capital of it.

Some Account of his Prophecies, and thoſe of Ezekiel.

AFTER this we have no more of the Prophet Jeremiah *, and very little of his Contemporary, Ezekiel *. They both, no doubt, continu'd in their prophetick Office until their Death; but when, and where that happen'd, or by whoſe Means it was occaſion'd, the Scripture is ſilent, and Tradition is uncertain. This however we may learn from their own Writings, that, after they had diſcharg'd their Duty to their own People the Jews, they were directed by God to addreſs the reſt of their Predictions chiefly to the Gentiles. Accordingly we find Jeremiah propheſying againſt Egypt in the xlvith Chapter; againſt all the Philiſtines, in the xlviith: againſt the Moabites, in the xlviiith; againſt Ammon, Edom, and other People, in the xlixth; and againſt Babylon in the lth and liſt; with ſome Promiſes, here and there interſpers'd, concerning the Redemption of Iſrael. In like Manner we find Ezekiel propheſying againſt the Ammonites, in the xxvth Chapter; againſt the Tyrians, and thoſe that traded with them, in the xxvith and xxviith; againſt the Prince of Tyre, in the xxviiith; aagainſt Egypt, in the xxixth, xxxth, xxxiſt, and xxxiid; againſt the Shepherds of Iſrael, in the xxxvth; againſt the Edomites in the xxxvth; and againſt the Enemies of the Church of God, under the Name of Gog and Magog, in the xxxviiith and xxxixth; with Promiſes of a Reſtoration (eſpecially in the xxxvith and xxxviith) to his Captive Countrymen, and a long Deſcription of the Rebuilding of the Temple and City, (wherewith he concludes) as a ſure Confirmation of it.

† It is very obſervable, that, in ſeveral Places of Jeremiah's Prophecy, (viz. Chap. xxv. 9. Chap. xxvii. 6. and Chap xliii. 10.) Nebuchadnezzar is called God's Servant, on Purpoſe to ſhew us, that, as great a Prince as he was, he was no more than the Executioner of his Commands; that he was the General of his Troops, and that all the Victories he gain'd, and the Conqueſts he won, were by his Direction and Appointment; for no Writers ſpeak with ſo much Deference of God, as do the Prophets, becauſe they only knew, by the Inſpiration of the Divine Spirit, to expreſs, with a proper Dignity, what the greateſt Monarchs are in Compariſon with the Divine Majeſty. Calmet's Commentary.

* St Jerom (in the Life of this Prophet) and Dorotheus (in his Synopſis of the Lives and Deaths of the Prophets and Apoſtles) tells us, that he was ſton'd to Death in Egypt by his own Renegado Countrymen, the Jews, for preaching againſt their Idolatry; and of this ſome interpret St Paul's ἐλιθάσθησαν, they were ſtoned, Heb. xi. 37. It appears indeed by the Account we have of their Behaviour, Jer. xliv. 16. that they were bent both againſt him, and his Reproofs; and therefore it was the more likely that they were the Authors of his Death, than (as ſome ſay) the Egyptians were, for his propheſying againſt them, and their King Pharaoh-hophra. For the Egyptians (according to the ſame Tradition) having, by the Prophet's Prayers, been freed from the Crocodiles, which very much infeſted them, had him in ſuch great Honour and Eſteem, that, in Teſtimony thereof, they bury'd him in one of their royal Sepulchres. The Truth is, Jeremiah was, all his Life-Time, expos'd to the ill Treatment of the Jews, whoſe Irregularities and ſad Apoſtacy he was always reproving; and therefore the Author of the Book of Eccleſiaſticus, in the Encomium which he gives of this Prophet, ſeems to draw his Character from the Perſecutions he endur'd; They intreated him evil, who nevertheleſs was a Prophet, ſanctify'd in his Mother's Womb, Ecclus. xlix. 7.

* St Jerom, in his Life of this Prophet, tells us, that he was put to Death by a Prince of the Children of Iſrael, whom he reprov'd for his Idolatry; but who this Prince of the Jewiſh Nation ſhould be, upon the River Chebar, where Ezekiel, in the Time of his Captivity, liv'd, it is difficult to tell. He was bury'd, as ſome ſay, in the ſame Cave, wherein Shem and Arphaxad were depoſited, upon the Banks of the Euphrates; but Benjamin of Tudela (in his Travels) tells us, that at ſome Leagues from Bagdat, he ſaw a magnificent Mauſolæum, which was ſaid to be this Prophet's Tomb, upon the Top of which there was a famous Library, wherein (as they ſay) was the Original of the Prophet's Prediction, written with his own Hand; that, in the Prophet's Tomb, there is a Lamp continually burning, maintain'd at the Expence of the Head of the Captivity of Bagdat; that, every Year, this Tomb is frequented by the ſeveral Heads of the Captivity, who reſort thither with a numerous Retinue; and that, not only the Jews, but the Perſians, Medes, and many of the Muſſulmen made this a Place of Devotion, and came thither to make their Preſents, and perform their Vows. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Ezekiel.

Daniel's Name chang-ed, and his great Proficiency in Learning in Babylon.

DANIEL, who was deſcended from the Royal Family of David, in the firſt Captivity of Judah (which happen'd under King Jehoiakim) together with his Friends Hananiah, Miſhael, and Azariah, was carry'd to Babylon, when he was as yet but a Youth. The Cuſtom among Conquerors then was to change the Names of their Captives, (eſpecially when they were to ſerve in any Capacity about the Court) and therefore, by the Order of Aſpenaz † Maſter of the Eunuchs, Daniel † was called Belteſhazzar; Hananiah, Shadrach; Miſhael, Meſhac; and Azariah, Abednego.

FOR three Years they were inſtructed in all the Learning of the Chaldeans, and had a daily Allowance of Meat and Wine from the King's Table; but Daniel, who was a devout Obſerver of the Religion of his Country, deſir'd of the chief Eunuch, that they might be excus'd from that, and have only a ſufficient Quantity of Water and Pulſe allowed them, which accordingly was granted; and, by the Time that they had finiſh'd their Studies, they were found to excel in the ſeveral Parts of Learning there in Vogue; all the Magicians in the Country †, and eſpecially Daniel, was become very famous for his ſingular Skill in the Knowledge and Interpretation of Dreams.

From Jer. xl. 7. to xlv. all Daniel, and from Ezra i. to v.

He tells the King his Dreams, and their Interpretation.

IT ſo happen'd one Night, that King Nebuchadnezzar had a Dream, which left ſtrong Impreſſions upon his Spirits; but the Thing which made him uneaſy, was, that he could not recollect the Subſtance of it. To aſſiſt his Memory in this Reſpect, he ſummon'd all his wiſe Men together, (thoſe eſpecially that pretended to Divination) demanding of them what his Dream was; but, when they endeavour'd to excuſe themſelves upon the preſum'd Impoſſibility of the Thing, he fell into ſuch a Paſſion, that he order'd all, who profeſs'd Magick † in his Dominions, to be inſtantly put to Death.

† What we render Maſter of the Eunuchs, may very likely ſignify the chief Miniſter of Nebuchadnezzar's Court. Such Officers, in the Palaces of Eaſtern Princes, were uſually called Eunuchs; becauſe they, who had the Controul of the King's Houſhold (as we ſay) were ordinarily ſuch, tho' many Times it might be otherwiſe. The Jews have a Notion, that Daniel, and his three Companions, were, by the Order of Nebuchadnezzar, made Eunuchs, that the Prophecy of Iſaiah might be fulfilled, Thy Sons that ſhall iſſue from thee, ſhall they take away, and they ſhall be Eunuchs in the Palace of the King of Babylon, Chap. xxxix. 7. But that is no concluſive Reaſon; becauſe, in that Prophecy, as well as in the Paſſage we are now upon, the Name of Eunuch might mean no more, than any Perſon, who had an Employment at Court. Calmet's Commentary.

† It is very remarkable, that, as all their former Names related to the true God, ſo all the Names, which, on this Occaſion, were impos'd upon theſe four Jewiſh Youths, had ſome Reference or other to Babyloniſh Idols. Daniel, in Hebrew, ſignifies God is my Judge; Belteſhazzar, in Chaldee, is the Treaſure of Baal; Hananiah, in Hebrew, is well-pleaſing to God; Shadrach, in Chaldee, the Inſpiration of the Sun; Miſhael, in Hebrew, proceeding from God; Meſhac, in Chaldee, belonging to the Goddeſs Sheſhach; Azariah, in Hebrew, God is my Help; and Abednego, in Chaldee, the Servant of Nago, i. e. the Sun, or the Morning-Star, both Deities among the Babylonians, and ſo called, becauſe of their Brightneſs. Calmet's Commentary on Dan. i. 7.

† The Prophet Daniel makes great Mention of theſe Sort of People, and ranks them under theſe four different Kinds. The Chartumim, the Aſaphim, the Mecaſphim, and the Chaſdim, Chap. ii. 2. Chartumim, according to the Septuagint, ſignifies Sophiſts; but, according to St Jerom, Diviners, Fortune-tellers, Caſters of Nativity, &c. Aſaphim has no Derivation from the Chaldee Tongue, but no ſmall Reſemblance to the Greek Word σοφὸς, (whether the Greeks took this Word from the Babylonians, or the Babylonians from them) and therefore the Septuagint have render'd it by Philoſophers. Mecaſphim is thought by ſome to be Necromancers, ſuch as pretended to raiſe the Dead to gain Intelligence of Things future; but the Septuagint have render'd it by a Word, that denotes ſuch Enchanters, as made Uſe of noxious Herbs, and Drugs, the Blood of Victims, and the Bones of the Dead, for their ſuperſtitious Operations. The other Word, Chaſdim, is the ſame with Chaldeans, and here ſignifies a Sort of Philoſophers among the Babylonians, who dwelt in a ſeparate Part of the City, and were exempt from all publick Offices and Employments. Their Study was natural Philoſophy, Aſtrology, Divination, or the Foretelling of future Events by the Obſervation of the Stars, the Interpretation of Dreams, the Science of Auguries, the Worſhip of their Gods, &c. as Diodorus Siculus, lib. i. gives us an Account of them. Calmet's Dictionary under the Word Magicians.

† Magick is properly of three Kinds, Natural, Artificial, and Diabolical. The firſt of theſe is no other than Natural Philoſophy, but highly improv'd and advanc'd; whereby the Perſon, that is well ſkilled in the Power and Operation of natural Bodies, is able to produce many wonderful Effects, miſtaken by the Illiterate for diabolical Performances,

UNDER this Denomination, and Sentence, were Daniel and his three Friends included; and therefore, underſtanding the Reaſon of this ſudden Decree, Daniel apply'd himſelf to Arioch, Captain of the Guard, deſiring a ſhort Reſpite of its Execution, in which Time he did not in the leaſt doubt but to give the King full Satiſfaction both as to his Dream †, and the Interpretation of it: And ſo proceeding to his three Friends, he acquainted them with what he had undertaken, and deſir'd their joint Prayer to God, that he would be pleas'd to reveal this great and important Secret to him; which accordingly was done that very Night.

THE next Morning, after he had return'd Praiſe and Thankſgiving to God for this ſingular Vouchſafement, he repair'd to the Palace, and, being introduc'd by the Captain of the Guard, was aſk'd by the King, if he had found out his Dream? "You ſaw *, ſays he, O King, an Image of a vaſt Dimenſion †, excellent in Brightneſs, but terrible in Aſpect. The Head of this Image was of fine Gold, the Breaſt and Arms of Silver, the Belly and Thighs of Braſs, the Legs of Iron, and the Feet, partly Iron, and partly Clay. You ſaw likewiſe, O King, a Stone cut out of the Mountain, but from whence it came you knew not. This Stone, falling upon the Feet of the Image, brake them into Pieces, and then the reſt of the Image moulder'd into Duſt, which the Wind diſpers'd, ſo that it was no more to be ſeen; but the Stone, which, in this Manner, deſtroy'd the Image, increas'd to a great Mountain, and filled the Earth. This, O King, was formances, but ſuch as lie perfectly within the Verge of Nature. Artificial Magick is what we call Legerdemain, or Sleight of Hand (the merry Tricks of Jugglers, as we corrupt the Joculatores) far from exceeding the Power of Art, tho' many Times they paſs with the Vulgar for diabolical likewiſe. Diabolical Magick is that which is done by the Help of the Devil, who, having great Skill in natural Cauſes, may aſſiſt thoſe, that are in League and Covenant with him, to do many ſtrange and aſtoniſhing Things. It ſeems however by the Diſcourſe, which paſs'd between Nebuchadnezzar and his Magicians, that they had no Knowledge in the Sciences they pretended to; that the King himſelf look'd upon them as no better than a Pack of Impoſtors: And that they had no Familiarity with any wicked Demons, who might have help'd them out at this dead Lift; otherwiſe, they would not have told the King, It is a rare Thing, which the King requireth, and there is none other, that can ſhew it before the King, except the Gods, whoſe Dwelling is not with Fleſh, Dan. ii. 11. Vid. Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I.

† Some are of Opinion, that Nebuchadnezzar's Dream, and the Interpretation thereof, were both revealed to Daniel, while he was aſleep; but others rather think, that it was in a Viſion, while he was awake, becauſe the Prayer and Thankſgiving which he made to God, ſeem to inſinuate, that he was awake; tho' we cannot ſee, why he might not receive the Revelation in his Sleep, and return God Thanks for it, as ſoon as he awoke. Calmet's Commentary.

* Joſephus introduces Daniel, as making this Preamble to his Diſcovery, and Explanation of the King's Dream: "It is not any high Conceit of my own Wiſdom, as if I underſtand more than the Chaldeans do, or any deſign'd Reproach upon them, for not being able to reſolve a Queſtion, which I am able to unriddle, that I engage in this Matter; for I am not a Perſon, that pretends to more Skill and Knowledge, than my Neighbours; but it is purely the Work of God, in Pity to the Miſerable, and in Mercy to my Prayers, for the Life and Safety of myſelf and my Friends, that has now laid open this Dream to me, and explain'd the Meaning of it. Nor have I been ſo ſollicitous for the Safety of myſelf, and my Companions under your Diſpleaſure, as for your own Honour and Glory, leſt you ſhould tarniſh them, by putting to death (contrary to all Right and Juſtice) ſo many worthy Men, merely becauſe they were not able to do a Thing, that is impoſſible for Fleſh and Blood to perform." Jewiſh Antiq. lib. x. c. 11. This is to be obſerv'd however, that, tho' a great Part of the Book of Daniel be in Hebrew, yet this Speech of his to the King, as well as the Dialogue, which paſs'd between the King and the Magicians; the King's Decree, wherein he orders the Golden Statue to be worſhipp'd; and that other, wherein he declares his Dream of the vaſt large Tree, which Daniel expounded; the Hiſtory of the Feaſt, which Belſhazzar made; of his Profanation of the ſacred Veſſels, and the terrible Viſion of the Hand-Writing, which he ſaw upon the Wall; the Beginning of the Reign of Darius; the Honours he conferr'd on Daniel, and the Viſion of the four Beaſts, denoting the four Monarchies; that all theſe, I ſay, (viz. from the 4th Verſe of the iid Chapter, to the Beginning of the viiith Chapter) are wrote in the Chaldee, or Syriack Language, which, at that Time, were both the ſame, and both as familiar to our Prophet, as was his Mother Tongue. Calmet's Commentary on Dan. ii. 4.

† Grotius accurately obſerves, that the Image appear'd with a glorious Luſtre in the Imagination of Nebuchadnezzar, whoſe Mind was wholly taken up with Admiration of worldly Pomp and Splendor; whereas the ſame Monarchies were repreſented to Daniel under the Shape of fierce and wild Beaſts, (Chap. vii.) as being the great Supporters of Idolatry and Tyranny in the World. Lowth's Commentary, on Dan. ii.

Surpriz'd at this wonderful Diſcovery, the King fell proſtrate before Daniel, † and was ready to pay him divine Honours. † By theſe different Emblems of Metals and Stones, God intended to ſignify to Nebuchadnezzar the ſeveral Empires, that were to be in the World. The Aſſyrian or Chaldean is repreſented by Gold, becauſe it was the firſt, and the moſt magnificent, if not the moſt extenſive ; and Nebuchadnezzar, being then upon the Throne, is ſaid to be Head of it. That of Silver is the Perſian, founded by Cyrus, upon the Ruins of the Chaldean, but inferior to the Chaldean in its Duration at leaſt, if not in its Extent. That of Braſs is the Grecian, founded by Alexander, upon the Ruins of the Perſian, and its Character is, that it ſhould bear Rule over all the Earth, Dan. ii. 39. which was verify'd in its great Founder ; for, upon his Return from India to Babylon, the Embaſſadors of almoſt all the known Parts of the World reſorted thither, to pay their Homage and Acknowledgment of his Dominion. That of Iron is the Roman Empire, which is diſtinguiſh'd by its breaking in Pieces, and ſubduing all Things, Ver. 40. For, whilſt it was in its full Strength and Vigour, under its Conſuls and firſt Emperors, it brought under its Dominion all the Kingdoms and States, that were then ſubſiſting in Europe, Africa, and a great Part of Aſia ; but, from that Time, it became a Mixture of Iron and Clay. Its Emperors prov'd moſt of them vicious and corrupt, either by their Tyranny making themſelves hateful to their Subjects, or, by their Follies and Vices, contemptible. Laſtly, that of the Stone out of the Mountain is the fifth Monarchy, or the Kingdom of the Meſſias ; which, againſt all the Power and Policy of the Roman Empire, prevailed, not by an external Force, but by the powerful Preaching of the Goſpel, to the Suppreſſion and Defeat of Wickedneſs and Impiety, Idolatry and Superſtition, and it ſhall ſtand for ever, and never be deſtroyed, Dan. ii. 44. which can be ſaid of no other Kingdom, but that of Jeſus Chriſt, which, for theſe ſeventeen hundred Years and upwards, has withſtood the Violence of Perſecutions, and all other Contrivances form'd againſt it, and has the ſure Promiſes of its Almighty Founder on its Side, that the Gates of Hell ſhall not prevail againſt it, Matt. xvi. 18. Calmet's Commentary.

† Nebuchadnezzar ſeems, in a ſudden Tranſport, to have look'd upon Daniel, as having ſomething more than Human in him ; juſt as the Barbarians thought of St Paul, Acts xxviii. 6. and therefore it is ſaid, that he fell on his Face and worſhipped him ; becauſe the doing of Reverence, by Way of Proſtration, is not only an Act of Worſhip paid to God, but frequently given to Kings and great Men in the Old Teſtament, according to the Cuſtom of Eaſtern Countries, 2 Sam. ix. 6. and ſometimes even to Prophets, on Account of the Sanctity of their Office, 1 Kings xviii. 7. nor was it uſually refus'd by them, except ſuch Circumſtances were added to it, as made it look like Divine Worſhip, and then it was always rejected, as in the Caſe of St Peter, Acts x. 26. Lowth's Commentary on Dan. ii. 43.

(a) Viz. in the ſeventh Year of Jehoiakim, according to Prideaux.

* Grotius is of Opinion, that the Image, which Nebuchadnezzar ſet up, was the Figure of his Father Nabopolaſſer, whom, by this Means, he intended to deify ; but others think, that it was his own Statue, which he erected, to gain the Adorations of his People in this Form. We cannot however, in what we find Nebuchadnezzar ſaying to Daniel's Friends, perceive that he any where upbraids them with Contempt offer'd either to his Perſon, or his Statue, but only that they would not ſerve his Gods, nor worſhip the Image, which he had ſet up, Dan. iii. 14. and therefore others have imagin'd, that this was neither his own, nor his Father's Statue, but that of Jupiter, which was afterwards found in the Temple of Belus, when Xerxes plunder'd it of its immenſe Riches, among which were ſeveral Images of maſſy Gold, but one more eſpecially fifty Feet high, which might be the ſame, that Nebuchadnezzar conſecrated in the Plains of Dura. For, tho' that is ſaid to have been ſixty Cubits, i. e. ninety Feet high, yet we may ſuppoſe, that it ſtood upon a Pedeſtal of fifty Feet high, and ſo the Image, and the Pedeſtal together, might make ninety (vid. Page 179, in the Notes) otherwiſe there would be no Proportion between its Height and its Breadth, according to the Deſcription we have of it, in Dan. iii. 1. Prideaux's Connection An. 573.

proportionable Bigneſs; and having ſet it up in the Plains of Dura, near Babylon, he ſummon'd all his Subjects, of whatever Order and Degree, to be preſent at the Dedication of it, and, the Moment they heard the Muſick ſtrike up, (which was to be the Signal) to fall proſtrate on their Faces, and adore it, upon Pain of being thrown into a burning [†] Furnace.

Among the Captive Jews, the three Friends of Daniel, Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, were accus'd to the King, as having violated his Command; and, when they were brought before him, perſiſted in their Refuſal to pay Adoration to the Image, with ſo much Conſtancy, that the King, being incens'd thereat, order'd thoſe about him to have the Furnace made ſeven times hotter, than it was before; to bind theſe bold Contemners of his Will, and caſt them immediately into it.

The Furnace indeed was ſo intenſely hot, that the Perſons who were order'd to throw them in, were ſcorch'd to Death, but they themſelves came to no Manner of Harm: For an Angel [†] from Heaven came, and, ſuſpending the Agency of the Fire, walk'd in the Midſt of the Furnace with them, bleſſing [†] and praiſing God; ſo that when the King (who ſtay'd to ſee the Execution) perceiv'd it, he ſtarted up on a ſudden, and, coming nearer to the Mouth of the Furnace, called upon them to come forth, which they inſtantly did, in the Preſence of him, and all his Attendants, without [*] ſo much as an Hair of their Heads being ſing'd, or the leaſt Smell of Fire about them. Convinc'd by the Greatneſs of this Miracle, the King himſelf glorify'd the God of Iſrael; publiſh'd an Edict in Favour of the Jewiſh Religion; and gave theſe three glorious Confeſſors ſtill higher Promotion in the Province of Babylon.

[†] This Kind of Puniſhment was pretty common in theſe Parts of the World, ſo that ſome will have it, that Abraham, before he departed from Chaldea, was made to undergo it, but eſcap'd by a miraculous Preſervation; founding their Opinion on Gen. xi. 31. Of this Furnace in particular it is related, that the King's Servants, having receiv'd the Command to heat it ſeven Times hotter, ceaſed not to make the Oven hot with Roſin, Pitch, Tow, and ſmall Wood; ſo that the Flame ſtreamed forth above the Furnace forty and nine Cubits; and paſſed through, and burnt the Chaldeans, it found about the Furnace. The Song of the three holy Children, Ver. 23, &c.

[†] Nebuchadnezzar's Expreſſion upon this Occaſion, is, Lo! I ſee four Men walking, looſe in the Midſt of the Fire, and the Form of the Fourth is like the Son of God, Dan. iii. 25. whereupon ſome have thought, that this Prince, having little or no Knowledge of the true Religion, imagin'd, that he ſaw ſome Demi-god, (an Apollo, an Hercules, a Mercury for Inſtance) the Son of a ſuperior God, walking with the three Hebrew Youths in the fiery Furnace. The Notion, it muſt be own'd, agrees very well with the antient Theology of the Grecians, to which that of the Chaldeans had no ſmall Reſemblance: But, as Angels are ſometimes in Scripture called the Sons of God, Job i. 6. and xxxviii. 7. and moſt Nations had not only a Belief of their Exiſtence, but high Conceptions likewiſe of their Power; the King explains himſelf what he means by the Son of God, when, in Joy for their Deliverance, he cries out, Bleſſed be the God of Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, who hath ſent his Angel, and delivered his Servants, that truſted in him! Dan. iii. 28. For, (as it is in the Song of the three holy Children) The Angel of the Lord came down into the Oven, together with Azariah and his Fellows, and ſmote the Flame of the Oven, and made the Midſt of the Furnace, as it had been a moiſt and whiſtling Wind, ſo that the Fire touched them not at all, neither hurt, nor troubled them.

[†] According to the Vulgar Latin Edition, in the Third Chapter of Daniel, between the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Verſes, is added the Song of the three Children; but being no where extant, either in the Hebrew, or Chaldee Language, and never receiv'd in the Canon of Holy-Writ by the Jewiſh Church, or by the ancient Chriſtians, our Church has thought proper to place it among the Apocryphal Writings, where it ſtands next to the Book of Baruch, tho' the Church of Rome, by a Decree of the Council of Trent, (Seſſ. iv.) has not only given it, but the Hiſtory of Suſanna likewiſe, and of Bel and the Dragon, (which moſt of the Antients look'd upon as mere Fables) a Place among the Canonical Scriptures. The Song itſelf conſiſts of two Parts; a Prayer, and a Thankſgiving. The Prayer is a devout Confeſſion of the Sins of the People, and Acknowledgment of God's Righteouſneſs, in bringing their Captivity, and other Calamities upon them: And the Thankſgiving is a ſolemn Excitation of all Creatures whatever, but more eſpecially of the three Hebrew Children, who were thus ſaved from the Hand of Death, to bleſs the Lord, praiſe him, and exalt him above all for ever.

denounc'd againſt his Countrymen, the Jews, when they rejected the Counſel of God, and fled into Egypt for Protection, (as they vainly thought) began to operate: For, when Nebuchadnezzar underſtood [*], that the Subjects of Pharaoh Hophra had revolted from him, and declar'd Amaſis (an Officer of his Court) their King, he took the Advantage of the inteſtine Troubles enſuant thereupon, and having, in a ſhort Time, over-run the Country from Migdol to Syene [†], i. e. from one End of Egypt to the other, he plunder'd, and laid it waſte; and of the Jews, who, after the Murther of Gedaliah, had fled thither, ſome he ſlew, and others he carry'd away Captive to Babylon; ſo that ſcarce any eſcap'd, but ſuch as fled out of Egypt, and afterwards ſettled themſelves in their own Land, at the End of the Captivity.

Daniel interprets another Dream of his.

Having thus reduc'd the Kingdom of Egypt, and conſtituted Amaſis his Viceroy, he return'd to Babylon, where he had another Dream, which gave him freſh Diſquiet. This Dream he very well remember'd; and therefore he ſent for his own Magicians firſt, in Hopes that they could have interpreted it; but, when he met with no Satisfaction from them, he was forc'd to have Recourſe to Daniel again; and thus, upon his Entrance, he accoſted him:

From Jer. xl. 7. to xlv. all Daniel, and from Ezra i. to v.

"I saw [†] a Tree of a prodigious Bigneſs, which ſeem'd to reach from Earth to Heaven. It was fair, and full of Fruit; yielded Shelter to the Beaſts, and Fowls, and Suſtenance to all Fleſh. I ſaw [†] likewiſe an Angel coming down from Heaven, who cry'd with a loud Voice, Hew down the Tree, cut off the Branches, ſhake off the Leaves, ſcatter the Fruit, and let all Creatures depart from it; but let the Stump remain in the Earth, and bind it with a Band of Iron and Braſs, in the tender Graſs of the Field, and let it be wet with the Dew of Heaven, and let his Portion be with the Beaſts in the Graſs of the Earth: Let his Heart be chang'd from that of a Man, and a Beaſt's Heart be given him

[*] The Occaſion of this Revolt is, to this Effect, related by Herodotus,———That Pharaoh Hophra (whom he calls Apries) having loſt a great Army in Lybia (and as ſome imagin'd) on Purpoſe, that, being rid of them, he might, with more Eaſe and Security, govern the reſt, fell under the Reſentment of his Subjects to ſuch a Degree, that ſeveral of them join'd together in a Body, and revolted from him; that, to appeaſe, and reduce them to their Duty, he ſent Amaſis, one of the Officers of his Court, to them, but, inſtead of his perſuading them, they prevail'd with him to be their King; that hereupon Hophra ſent Palerbamis, a Perſon of the firſt Rank, to arreſt Amaſis, and bring him with him; but, when he return'd without being able to execute his Commiſſion, he commanded his Ears and his Noſe to be immediately cut off, which Indignity to a Man of his Worth and Character ſo exaſperated the reſt of his Subjects, that they, almoſt all, forſook him, ſo that he was forc'd to hire an Army of Foreigners, wherewith he attempted to give Amaſis Battle not far from Memphis; but had the Misfortune to be vanquiſh'd, taken Priſoner, and carry'd to the City Sais, where he was ſtrangled in his own Palace. Herodotus, lib. i. and Diodorus Siculus, lib. i. Part ii.

[†] This is a City in the Southern Frontiers of Egypt, between Thebes and the great Cataracts of the Nile, of which the Antients ſpeak frequently, as the fartheſt Part in Egypt of any Note towards Ethiopia. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

[†] It is very obſervable, that, in the Writings of the Prophets, Princes are frequently compar'd to Trees, (Ezek. xvii. 5, 6. and xxxi. 3. Jer. xxii. 15. Pſal. xxxvi. 35.) and 'tis the Notion of Grotius, that a Tree ſeen in a Dream, according to the Principles of the Indians, Perſians, and Egyptians, denotes ſome great and excellent Perſonage; but nothing is more precarious than theſe Principles, or more uncertain than theſe Obſervations, becauſe in the Dreams, which come from God, he may repreſent an eminent Perſon under a thouſand different Types, as well as that of a ſtately Tree. Calmet's Commentary on Dan. iv. 7.

[†] The Words, in our Tranſlation, are, I ſaw a Watcher, which, as it came down from Heaven, could be no other than an Angel. The Chaldee Word is Nir, from whence St Jerom imagines that the Pagans deriv'd their Iris, the Meſſenger of the Gods; and by ſome Expreſſions in Dan. iv. 17. it looks as if the Chaldeans had a Notion, (for the King, we may ſuppoſe, ſpeaks according to the common Sentiments of the People) that theſe Watchers, or Holy Ones in Heaven, did conſtitute an Aſſembly of Judges, or were an Order of bleſſed Spirits, who took under their Cognizance and Deciſion the Fate of Men; for by the Decree of theſe Watchers it was, that the Tree (in the Viſion) was order'd to be cut down. Calmet's Commentary.

"him †, and let ſeven Times paſs over "him."

As ſoon as Daniel heard the Dream, he was ſo affected with the dreadful Judgments, which it portended to the King, that he ſtood ſilent for the Space of an Hour; but being encourag'd by the King to expound the Thing to him, be it what it would, he addreſs'd himſelf to him in theſe Words:—— "The Tree, O "King, which thou ſaweſt in thy Dream, "is thyſelf; for thy Greatneſs reacheth "unto the Heavens, and thy Dominions "to the End of the Earth: But the An"gel, which came from Heaven with "Orders to cut down the Tree, denotes "the Decree of the Moſt High, which "is determin'd againſt thee, viz. that "thou ſhalt be driven from Men, and thy "Dwelling ſhall be with the Beaſts of the "Field; that thou ſhalt eat Graſs with "the Oxen, and be wet with the Dew "of Heaven; that ſeven Years ſhall paſs "over thee, before thou comeſt to con"ſider, that God ruleth over the Kingdoms "of Men; and that, after ſuch a Term, "thou ſhalt be reſtor'd to thy King"dom again, which is the Thing inti"mated by the Stump of the Tree, that "was order'd to be left. And now, that "thou haſt heard the Interpretation of "this Dream, permit me, O King, to ad"viſe thee to atone for thy Sins by an "holy Life, and by Acts of Mercy to the "Poor, and to recommend thyſelf to the "Mercy of God, that he may prolong thy "Poſterity." This was the Advice of a faithful Miniſter; but Nebuchadnezzar, it is to be fear'd, had † not the Heart to purſue it.

From Jer. xl. 7. to xlv. all Daniel, and from Ezra i. to v.

Nebuchadnezzar chang'd into a Beaſt, and, in ſeven Years, reſtor'd to his Reaſon again.

His Ceſſation from War, (in which he had been long engag'd) had by this Time given him an Opportunity of finiſhing his ſtately Buildings at Babylon; and upon the Survey of theſe, as well as other Monuments of his Greatneſs, he became ſo intoxicated with Pride and Arrogance, that God, in Puniſhment of his haughty Mind, depriv'd him of his Senſes, and, for exalting himſelf above the State of Men, reduc'd him to the Condition of a Beaſt.

For ſeven Years he liv'd abroad in the Fields, eating Graſs like an Ox, and taking up his Lodging on the Ground in the open Air. But at the Expiration of this Time, when he became ſenſible of God's ſuperior Power and Dominion, his Senſes return'd to him again. His Kingdom was reſtor'd, and he re-inſtated in his former Majeſty; whereupon he made this ſolemn and grateful Acknowledgment: (c) And now I, Nebuchadnezzar, praiſe, and extol, and honour the King of Heaven,

† The Ambiguity of this Expreſſion (which the Prophet, in his Expoſition of the Dream, ſtill adheres to) has occaſion'd a great Variety of Opinions concerning it. Some maintain, that, as the Perſians diſtinguiſh'd their Years into two Seaſons, Winter and Summer, the ſeven Years of Nebuchadnezzar muſt be reckon'd in this Manner, which will therefore reduce them to the Space of three Years and an half. Dorotheus (in his Synopſis of the Lives of the Prophets and Apoſtles) tells us, that God did indeed condemn Nebuchadnezzar to ſeven Years Habitation with Brutes, but that, at the Prayers and Interceſſions of Daniel, the ſeven Years were reduc'd to ſeven Months. The Word Time, according to others, denotes no more than the Space of a Month; ſo that the King's Diſorder, of courſe, laſted no longer than ſeven Months; whereof (according to their Computation) for the firſt forty Days he continu'd in his Frenzy, as a Madman; in the forty Days following, he bewail'd his Offences; and, in the laſt forty Days, he recover'd by Degrees from his Infirmity: But all theſe are idle Conjectures. A Year was a common Meaſure of Time among the Chaldeans, eſpecially in the Chronicles of their Kings; and therefore, in this Particular, we need no other Interpreter for Daniel, than Daniel himſelf, who in ſundry Places of this Prophecy, particularly in Chap. xii. 7, has ſet a Time, and Times, and the dividing, or half of a Time, for the Space of three Years and an half. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Nebuchadnezzar.

† God delay'd the Execution of his Threats againſt this Prince, and gave him a whole Year's Reprieve, Chap. iv. 29. to ſee, if he would repent, and turn unto him; but, perceiving that he ſtill perſiſted in his Crimes, as ſoon as the Meaſure of his Iniquity was full, he ſmote and reduc'd him to the Condition of a Beaſt. This is Theodoret's Notion of the Matter; but St Jerom rather thinks, that this King, being terrify'd with the Threats, and touch'd with the Exhortations of the Prophet, began to ſet about his Reformation, and, by Acts of Charity and Mercy, to reconcile himſelf to God, for which he obtain'd a Delay of his Puniſhment for a Year's Space; but that, inſtead of perſevering in theſe good Purpoſes, he ſuffer'd himſelf to fall into Pride, upon the Contemplation of the mighty Works, he had done, and ſo, by his Vanity, loſt what he had gain'd by his Charity. Bonum Miſericordiæ perdidit malo Superbiæ. Calmet's Commentary.

UPON the Death of Nebuchadnezzar [*], (for he liv'd not long after his Reſtoration) his Son Evil-merodach ſucceeded to the Throne of Babylon, and, to make ſome Amends for his Father's hard Uſage of Jehoiachin, the captive King of Judah, he releas'd him (as we ſaid before) from an Impriſonment, that had laſted near 37 Years, and promoted him to great Honour in his Palace. His Reign however was but ſhort: For his Luſts and Wickedneſſes had, in the Space of two Years, made him ſo intolerable, that even his own Relations conſpired againſt him, and put him to Death; whereupon Nerigliſſar, his Siſter's Huſband, (who was at the Head of the Conſpiracy) reign'd in his Stead; and, as Jehoiachin [†] did not long ſurvive him, Salathiel, his Son, ſucceeded as nominal Prince [†] of the Jews. Upon his Acceſſion to the Throne, Nerigliſſar made great Preparations for War againſt the Medes, which oblig'd Cyaxares, their King, to call in the Aſſiſtance of his Nephew Cyrus [†] out of Perſia, who, coming with a Body of thirty Thouſand Perſians, was by his Uncle made General of the Medes likewiſe, and thereupon, with his joint Forces, gave Nerigliſſar Battle, ſlew him, and put his Army to the Rout.

[*] This Prince died in the Year of the World 3442, and before Chriſt 562; after he had reign'd, from the Death of his Father, according to the Babyloniſh Account, three and forty Years. He was certainly one of the greateſt Princes that had appear'd in the Eaſt for many Ages before him, and, according to Megaſthenes, (as he is cited by Joſephus, Antiq. lib. x. c. 11.) both for his Enterpriſes, and Performances, far excelled even Hercules himſelf. The ſame Hiſtorian (as he is quoted by Euſebius, Præp. lib. ix. c. 41.) informs us, that, a little before his Death, he foretold his Subjects of the Coming of the Perſians, and their ſubduing the Kingdom of Babylon; but this he might gather from the Prophet Daniel, and eſpecially from the Interpretation of his Dreams. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 562.

[†] 'Tis not unlikely, that Jehoiachin, being a Favourite, fell with him; for that beſt agrees with Jeremiah's Prophecies concerning him, wherein it is denounc'd, Chap. xxii. 30. that he ſhould not proſper in his Days; which could not be ſo well verify'd of him, had he died in the full Poſſeſſion of all that Proſperity, to which Evil-merodach had advanc'd him. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 559.

[†] Long after the Loſs of all Authority, the Jews kept up the Title of a King among them, and had a Perſon deſcended of the Houſe of David, who, by the Name of the Head of the Captivity, was acknowledg'd and honour'd as a Prince, and, as far as it was conſiſtent with the Government, they liv'd under, was inveſted with ſome Sort of Juriſdiction over them. Nay, to this very Day, the ſame Pageantry is ſaid to be kept up among the Jews, and chiefly with this View, that they may be furniſh'd from hence with an Anſwer againſt the Chriſtians, urging the Prophecy of Jacob againſt them, viz. that the Sceptre is departed from Judah; for thereupon their uſual Reply is, That the Sceptre is ſtill preſerv'd among them, in the Head of the Captivity; though ſome of them have Modeſty enough to give up this. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 559.

[†] It is on all Hands agreed, that Aſtyages, King of the Medes, had a Son, whom profane Hiſtory calls Cyaxares; and a Daughter whoſe Name was Mandana, marry'd to Cambyſes, a Perſian, by whom ſhe had Cyrus; but whether this Cambyſes was King of the Country, or only a private Perſon, it is not ſo well agreed. The two chief Hiſtorians who write of this Matter, are Herodotus and Xenophon; but their Relations in this Regard are different; foraſmuch as the latter makes his Father King of Perſia, the former a meaner Man. The Account of Herodotus indeed contains Narratives, that are much more ſtrange and ſurpriſing, and conſequently, more diverting and acceptable to the Reader; and for this Reaſon, more have choſen to follow him, than Xenophon: But though Xenophon (as being a great Commander, as well as a great Politician) had certainly grafted many Maxims of War and Policy into his Hiſtory, yet, where nothing of this appears, he muſt be allow'd to be an Hiſtorian of much more Credit in Matters of Fact, than Herodotus. Herodotus having travelled through Egypt, Syria, and ſeveral other Countries, in order to the writing of his Hiſtory, did, (as Travellers us'd to do) put down all Matters upon Truſt, and in many, no doubt, was impos'd on: But Xenophon was a Man of another Character. He wrote all Things with great Judgment, and due Conſideration; and, having liv'd in the Court of Cyrus the Younger, a Deſcendant of the Cyrus, whom we now ſpeak of, had Opportunities of being better inform'd of what he wrote concerning this great Prince, than Herodotus had; and confining himſelf to this Argument only, no doubt he examin'd all Matters relating to it more thoroughly, and gave a more accurate and juſt Account of them, than could be expected from the other, who wrote of all Things at large, as they came in his Way. Prideaux's Connection Ann. 563.

all Manner of Wickedneſs[*], Cruelty, and Injuſtice, for which he became ſo odious to his own Subjects, that they conſpir'd againſt him and ſlew him, after he had reign'd only nine Months.

BELSHAZZAR[†] (in all Probability the Grandſon of the great Nebuchadnezzar) ſucceeded him; in the firſt Year of whoſe Reign, (d) Daniel had his Dream of the four Beaſts, repreſenting the four Empires of the Chaldeans, Perſians, Greeks, (e) and Romans; and, in the third, the famous Viſion of the Ram and the He-goat, by the latter of which was ſignify'd Alexander the Great, and by the former Darius Codomannus, the laſt of the Perſian Kings, who were the Succeſſors of Cyrus. Cyrus indeed, who was to lay the Foundation of the Perſian Monarchy, had ſeveral Conflicts with Belſhazzar's Armies, but at length, having overthrown him in a pitch'd Battle, he ſhut him up in the City of Babylon, and there beſieg'd him.

From Jer. xl. 7. to xlv. all Daniel, and from Ezra i. to v.

To him Daniel explains the Hand-Writing on the Wall, which portended his Deſtruction.

During the Siege, Belſhazzar, having made a great Feaſt for all his Courtiers, order'd that the Veſſels of Gold and Silver, which his Grandfather Nebuchadnezzar had taken out of the Temple of Jeruſalem, ſhould be brought into the Banqueting-houſe, that he and his Princes, together with his Wives and Concubines, might drink out of them; which accordingly was done, and (to add to their Profaneneſs) in the Midſt of their Cups, they ſang Songs in the Praiſe of their ſeveral Idols. But it was not long before God[†] put a Damp to the King's Mirth, by cauſing an Hand to appear upon the Wall, which in three Words wrote the Sentence of his Condemnation. The King ſaw the Hand that wrote; and, being exceedingly affrighted and troubled at it, he commanded all his Wiſemen, Magicians, and Aſtrologers, to be immediately called, that they might read the Writing, and explain its Meaning; but when none[†] of them could do either, notwith-

[*] Two Acts of his tyrannical Violence, towards two of his principal Nobility, Gobrias, and Gadates, are particularly mention'd by Xenophon, viz. That the only Son of the former he ſlew at an Hunting, to which he had invited him, for no other Reaſon, but his throwing a Dart with Succeſs at a wild Beaſt, when he himſelf had miſs'd it: And that the other he caus'd to be caſtrated, merely becauſe one of his Concubines had commended him for an handſome Man. Cyropædia, lib. 5.

[†] Great is the Difference among Hiſtorians, and others, who this Belſhazzar (who is generally believ'd to be the ſame with the Nebonnedus in Beroſus, and the Labynetus in Herodotus) was. Some will have him to be of the Royal Blood of Nebuchadnezzar, and others, no Way related to him. Some maintain, that he was a Babylonian, and others affirm, that he was a Mede; and of thoſe, who allow him to be of the Royal Family of Nebuchadnezzar, ſome will have it, that he was his Son, and others that he was his Grandſon; and therefore, to clear this Matter, we muſt obſerve, 1ſt, That Belſhazzar (be he who he will) was certainly of the Seed of Nebuchadnezzar, becauſe he is expreſsly called his Son in ſeveral Places of the vth Chapter of Daniel, and in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 20. it is ſaid, that Nebuchadnezzar and his Children, or Offspring, reign'd in Babylon, until the Kingdom of Perſia commenc'd. 2dly, That according to the Prophecy of Jeremiah, (Chap. xxvii. 7.) the Nations of the Eaſt were to ſerve Nebuchadnezzar, and his Son, and his Son's Son, and therefore he muſt have had a Son, and a Son's Son, Succeſſors to him in the Throne of Babylon. 3dly, That as Evil-merodach was Nebuchadnezzar's Son, of all the Kings, that reign'd after him at Babylon, none but Belſhazzar could be his Son's Son: For Neriglissar was only his Daughter's Huſband, and Laboroſoarchod was Neriglissar's Son; ſo that neither of them was either Son or Grandſon to Nebuchadnezzar. 4thly, That, according to Herodotus, lib. i. the laſt King of Babylon (who without Doubt was Belſhazzar, becauſe, immediately after his Death, the Kingdom was given to the Medes and Perſians, Dan. v. 28, 30, 31.) was Son to the great Queen Nitocris; but now Nitocris, to have a Child, that was Grandſon to Nebuchadnezzar, could be Wife to no other, than Evil-merodach; and therefore putting all this together, it appears, that Belſhazzar, the laſt King of Babylon, was the Son of Evil-merodach, by Nitocris his Queen, and conſequently, Son's Son to Nebuchadnezzar; nor muſt it ſeem ſtrange, that we find him in Dan. v. called Nebuchadnezzar's Son, and Nebuchadnezzar his Father, becauſe it is the uſual Stile of Scripture to call any Anceſtor upward, Father, and any Deſcendant downward, Son. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 555.

(d) Chap. vii. (e) Chap. viii.

[†] Next to Murther, no Sin is ſo remarkably puniſh'd in this World, as that of Sacrilege. This appears from innumerable Inſtances taken from all Hiſtories, both ſacred and profane. But, in the heathen Story, remarkable Examples of this Kind are the miſerable End of the Phoceans, who robb'd the Temple of Delphos, and were the Occaſion of that War, which was called from thence the Holy War: The Deſtruction of the Gauls in their Attempt upon the ſame Temple, and of Craſſus, who plunder'd the Temple of Jeruſalem, and that of the Syrian Goddeſs; as theſe two laſt Stories are related by Prideaux, Part ii. Lowth's Commentary on Dan. v. 5.

As ſoon as he came into the King's Preſence, he [‖] receiv'd him very courteouſly, and made him the ſame Offer of Honours and Preſents, that he had done to his own Magicians, if he would but explain the Writing. Daniel modeſtly refus'd the Offers he made him; but, having undertook to perform what he requir'd of him, he firſt reprov'd him, with ſome Freedom, for his Ingratitude to God, who had advanc'd him to the Rank of a Sovereign, and for the Profanation of the Veſſels, which were conſecrated to his Service; and then proceeded to the Interpretation of the Words, which were theſe, MENE. and Samaritan were; or, if they were acquainted with the Character, yet ſuch is the Genius of moſt of the Oriental Languages, where ſo little Uſe is made of Vowels, and where the Pronunciation and Sequel of the Diſcourſe generally determine the Signification of the Letters, that a Man may be a perfect Maſter of a Language, and yet not able to read and comprehend a Word, when it ſtands alone, and without any Context, as it is in the Caſe of Mene. Tekel. Upharſin. A Man, for Inſtance, that underſtands the Hebrew Tongue never ſo well, were he to meet dbr ſtanding alone, would have much ado to read them, becauſe, according to the Manner, that we pronounce them, the Letters will admit of many different Significations; and 'tis much the ſame in the Chaldee Language, wherein the Words, we are now ſpeaking of, were wrote. Calmet's Commentary on Dan. v. 7.

[†] The King's Words are theſe,——— Whoſoever ſhall read this Writing, and ſhew me the Interpretation thereof, ſhall be cloathed with Scarlet, and have a Chain of Gold about his Neck, and ſhall be the third Ruler in the Kingdom, Dan. v. 7. From whence it appears, that the Kings of Babylon wore the ſame Ornaments, and, in rewarding their Favourites, gave the ſame Marks of Honour, that the Kings of Perſia and their Succeſſors did. For Purple, we find, in ſeveral Greek Authors, was the ordinary Habit of the Kings of Perſia, and of the Princes of their Court, that were in the higheſt Poſts of Honour. The Chain, or Collar of Gold, was one of the greateſt Marks of Diſtinction, that the Perſian Kings could beſtow upon their Subjects; and to be the third Ruler of the Kingdom was the ſame ſublime Office, that Darius the Mede put Daniel in, Chap. vi. 1, 2. when he conſtituted him one of the Preſidents over the hundred and twenty Princes, that he had made Governors over Provinces. Xenophon's Cyropædia, lib. viii. Diodorus, lib. xviii. Joſephus's Antiquities, lib. xi. c. 6. Briſſon, de Regno Perſar. lib. i.

[‖] In the 2d Verſe of the vth Chapter of Daniel, we read, that the King, his Princes, his Wives, and his Concubines were all at the Feaſt, which he made for them; and yet, in the 10th Verſe, it follows, that the Queen, upon hearing the News of the Hand-writing, came into the Banquet-Houſe; but then it muſt be obſerv'd, that this Queen was not one of his Wives, but Nitocris, his Mother, and ſhe ſeems there to be called the Queen by Way of Eminency, becauſe ſhe had the Regency of the Kingdom under her Son, for which her great Wiſdom duly qualify'd her. For this Reaſon Herodotus ſpeaks of her, as if ſhe had been Sovereign of the Kingdom, (in the ſame Manner, as Semiramis is ſaid to have been) and attributes to her all thoſe Works about Babylon, which other Authors aſcribe to her Son. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 547.

[‖] And yet it is obſervable, that, when he came into his Preſence, he aſk'd him, Art thou that Daniel? Which ſeems to imply, that, tho' he was one of the chief Miniſters of State, Dan. v. 13. the King did not know him: But this only ſhews, that Belſhazzar was a Man, who minded nothing but his Pleaſures, and left all Things elſe to the Management of others; a Conduct too often follow'd by ſuch Princes, as think Kingdoms made for nothing elſe, but to ſerve their Pleaſures, and gratify their Luſts! Prideaux's Connection, Anno 547.

[†] Daniel, in repeating the Words, inſtead of Upharſin, puts in Peres; but they both ſignify the ſame Thing.

[*] Cyrus had lain before the Town to little or no Purpoſe for the Space of two Years, when, underſtanding that a great annual Feaſt was approaching, wherein the Babylonians, in Honour of their Idol Sheſhach, were wont to ſpend the whole Night in Revelling and Drunkenneſs, he thought this no improper Time to attempt to ſurprize them. Darius's great Eſteem for Daniel, which occaſion'd Ill-Will, and Conſpiracies againſt him.

From Jer. xl. 7. to xlv. all Daniel, and from Ezra i. to v.

Surprize †, Belſhazzar ſlain, and the Kingdom tranſlated to Cyaxares †, whom the Scripture calls Darius the Mede.

DARIUS, from his very firſt Acceſſion to the Throne, had a great Eſteem for Daniel, as knowing him to be a Perſon of extraordinary Parts and Learning, and long verſ'd in Affairs of State; and therefore, having divided the whole Empire into an hundred and twenty Provinces, over which he ſet Governors, and over theſe three Preſidents, as the King's chief Miniſters, he made Daniel the Firſt of theſe; but it happen'd to him, as it uſually does to all Favourites, to be malign'd, and envy'd by others.

His Adminiſtration of publick Affairs however was ſo juſt, that, in that Capacity, he gave them no Room for any Accuſation againſt him, and therefore they laid their Plot another Way. He, they knew, was a ſtrict Obſerver of the Religion of his Country, and a conſtant Reſorter to God in Prayer; and therefore they apply'd themſelves to Darius, in the Name of his whole Council and Officers of State, that he would be pleaſ'd ſo far to indulge his People, as to paſs a Decree, (only for thirty Days) that, whoever † ſhould aſk any Petition either of God or Man, except of the King only, for that Space of Time, ſhould be thrown to the Lions: Which the King, taking it for a great Teſtimony of their Affection and Loyalty to him, at his firſt Acceſſion to the Throne, without any Manner of Heſitation, paſſed into an Act, and iſſu'd out his Proclamation to that Purpoſe.

DANIEL was not ignorant that this wicked Contrivance was deſign'd to enſnare him; but, nevertheleſs, he continu'd his uſual Courſe of paying his Adorations to God, three Times every Day, and that, not in any clandeſtine Manner, but with his Chamber-Window open towards Jeruſalem †. His Enemies who had laid this Snare for him, were not forgetful to watch him diligently; and therefore, having Palace, where they ſlew the King, and all thoſe that were about him. By this Stratagem, Cyrus became Maſter of Babylon, but he took no Care to repair the Breach in the Banks of the River; ſo that all the Country, on that Side, was overflown, and the Current, which went to Babylon, grew afterwards ſo ſhallow, as to become unfit for the ſmalleſt Navigation. So fully verify'd were all theſe Prophecies, concerning Babylon: Behold I will ſtir up the Medes againſt her, Iſa. xiii. 17. I will dry up her Sea, and make her Springs dry, Jer. li. 36. Babylon, the Glory of Kingdoms, the Beauty of the Chaldees Excellency, ſhall be like Sodom and Gomorrah, Iſa. xiii. 19 for I will make it a Poſſeſſion for the Bittern, and Pools of Water, Iſa. xiv. 23. ſaith the King, whoſe Name is the Lord of Hoſts. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 547.

† Of the Manner wherein this was done, we find Xenophon (Cyropædia lib. vii.) thus relating the Story, viz. "That two Deſerters, Gadata and Gobryas, having aſſiſted ſome of the Perſian Army, to kill the Guards, and ſeize "upon the Palace, they enter'd into the Room where the King was, whom they found ſtanding up in a Poſture of "Defence, but that they ſoon diſpatch'd him, and thoſe that were with him, and thereby fulfilled the Prophecy of "Jeremiah," I will make drunk her Princes, and her wiſe Men, her Captains, and her Rulers, and her mighty Men; and they ſhall ſleep a perpetual Sleep, and not awake, ſaith the King, whoſe Name is the Lord of Hoſts. Chap. li. 57. Lowth's Commentary on Dan. v. 30.

† For, tho' the whole Power of the Army and the chief Conduct of other Affairs were in the Hands of Cyrus, (and therefore we find him, in Ptolemy's Canon, ſet down, as immediate Succeſſor to Belſhazzar, who is there called Nabonadius) yet, as long as his Uncle liv'd, Cyrus allow'd him a joint Title with him in the Empire, and, out of Deference to him, yielded him the firſt Place of Honour in it; tho', in Reality, he had no more, than the Name and Shadow of Sovereignty, except in Media, which was his own proper Dominion before any Conqueſts were made. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 538.

† It may ſeem a little ſtrange, that Darius ſhould ſo readily accept of an Honour, which was due to God alone: But we ſee what a Pitch of Vanity and Arrogance theſe Eaſtern Princes were arriv'd at, when we find Nebuchadnezzar, in Daniel, aſking the three Hebrew Youths, Who is that God, that ſhall deliver you out of my Hands? Dan. iii. 15. when we find it ſaid of another of that Name, in the Book of Judith, Who is God, but Nabuchodonoſor? He will ſend his Power, and deſtroy them from the Face of the Earth, Chap. vi. 2, 3. and, more eſpecially, when we find the Perſians making it a Matter of State-Policy, to have the Perſons of their Kings in the ſame Veneration as they had their Gods. Quint. Curt. lib. viii.

† It was a conſtant Cuſtom among the Jews, for thoſe, that were in the Country, or in any diſtant Land, to turn themſelves towards Jeruſalem; and for thoſe, that were at Jeruſalem, to turn towards the Temple, when they pray'd: And the probable Reaſon of this might be, the Words of Solomon, in his Prayer to God, at the Conſecration of the Temple: If thy People, when led away captive, pray unto thee toward their Land, which thou gaveſt unto their Fathers, the City, which thou haſt choſen, and the Houſe, which I have built for thy Name; then hear thou their Prayers, and their Supplication, in Heaven, thy Dwelling Place, and maintain their Cauſe, 1 Kings viii. 48, 49.

having taken him in the Act of Prayer, they immediately went to the King, accus'd Daniel of a Contempt of his Decree, and deſir'd that the Sentence might inſtantly be executed upon him.

He is caſt into the Lions Den; is miraculouſly deliver'd from thence.

THE King too late perceiv'd, that his eaſy Compliance with a fallacious Offer had betray'd him into a Miſtake, that was likely to prove fatal to his Servant Daniel, and therefore he labour'd, what he could, to reverſe the Decree; but the Grandees, on the other Hand, repreſented to him, that the Royal Decrees (according to the Law of the Medes and Perſians [†]) were unalterable, and conſequently, the Penalty, which Daniel had incurr'd, irreverſible; ſo that, what through the Importunity of theſe wicked Men, and a falſe Notion of Honour in adhering to his Word, the King deliver'd up Daniel to their Mercy, but not without ſome glimmering Hopes, that the God whom he ſerv'd continually, would, by ſome Means or other, preſerve him.

NO ſooner was Daniel deliver'd into their Hands, but they hurry'd him away to the Lions Den; and, having thrown him in, they not only rolled a large Stone to the Mouth of it, but had it ſeal'd likewiſe [†] with their own, as well as the King's Signet, that thereby they might prevent all Poſſibility of his making an Eſcape. The King, in the mean Time, went penſive home; and, having paſſed the Night in much Uneaſineſs and Anxiety of Mind, he roſe early next Morning, and repair'd to the Den, where, to his great and ſurpriſing Joy, he found Daniel alive; and, having caus'd him to be taken out, he order'd, that his Accuſers [†], their Wives, and their Children, ſhould all be caſt into it, where the Lions fell upon them, and inſtantly deſtroy'd them: While the King, in grateful Acknowledgment of a wonderful Providence in Daniel's Preſervation, made publick Proclamation, that, in all the Parts of his Dominions, the God, whom Daniel worſhipp'd, ſhould be revered.

And makes Interceſſion with God for the Reſtoration of the Jews.

THE Term of ſeventy Years, which the Prophet Jeremiah [†] had prefix'd for the Continuance of Judah's Captivity, being now drawing toward a Concluſion, Daniel (f) thought it his Duty to humble himſelf before God, and to make his ardent Supplications to him, that he would remember

[†] So Diodorus Siculus tells us (lib. iv.) of Darius, the laſt King of Perſia: That he would have pardon'd Charidemus after he was condemn'd to Death, but could not reverſe the Law that had paſs'd againſt him. What made theſe Laws thus unalterable, we are at a Loſs to know, unleſs we ſuppoſe, that, when they paſs'd, either the King confirm'd them by an Oath, and then they became immutable; or, that they were ſealed not only by the King, but by all the Princes then in Council, as one would be apt to gueſs, from Dan. vi. 8. and xii. 9. Lowth's Commentary on Dan. vi. and Patrick's Commentary on Eſther i.

[†] By this it ſeems, as if the Perſian Government, at this Time, was a Kind of mix'd Monarchy, conſiſting of a King and Nobles; foraſmuch as we find that the King could do nothing of Importance without his Counſellors, nor had he Power to alter any Thing, that was determin'd in Council. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] The Lex Talionis condemn'd all Calumniators to the ſame ſort of Puniſhment, which they intended to have brought upon others; and, in this Caſe, among the Perſians, it was a frequent Thing to include all the Family in the Penalty inflicted on the Father; but Abominandæ Leges (ſays Ammianus Marcellinus) per quas, ob noxam unius, omnis propinquitas perit. Calmet's Commentary.

[†] The particular Prophecies, to which Daniel alludes, might probably be theſe,——Thus ſaith the Lord of Hoſts, becauſe ye have not heard my Words, behold, I will ſend and take all the Families of the North, and Nebuchadnezzar, the King of Babylon, my Servant, and will bring them againſt this Land, and the Inhabitants thereof,——And this whole Land ſhall be a Deſolation, and an Aſtoniſhment, and theſe Nations ſhall ſerve the King of Babylon ſeventy Years; and it ſhall come to paſs, when ſeventy Years are accompliſhed, I will puniſh the King of Babylon, and that Nation, ſaith the Lord, for their Iniquity: But I will viſit you, and perform my good Word towards you, in cauſing you to return to this Place. For I know my Thoughts that I think towards you, ſaith the Lord, Thoughts of Peace, and not of Evil, to give you an expected End, Jer. xxv. 8, &c. and xxix. 10, 11. But Prophecies, he knew very well, were but conditional, and, for their Accompliſhment, dependent in a great Meaſure upon the Behaviour of thoſe, to whom they were made. One Part of this Prediction he had ſeen executed, in the Puniſhment of the King of Babylon, and the Tranſlation of his Kingdom to the Medes and Perſians; but Reaſon good he had to fear, leſt the Sins of his Countrymen, the Jews, ſhould retard the Completion of the other Part, viz. their Return from Captivity, beyond the Compaſs of ſeventy Years: And this was both the Cauſe of his Grief, and the Motive of his Prayer. Calmet's Commentary.

† It is a good deal more than probable, that this Decree in Favour of the Jews was, in a great Meaſure, owing to Daniel's good Offices. Cyrus, at his firſt coming to Babylon, after he had taken the City, found him there an old Miniſter of State, fam'd for his great Wiſdom over all the Eaſt, and, in many Things, for a Knowledge ſuperior to the reſt of Mankind; and, accordingly, we find, that he not only employ'd him as ſuch, but, upon the ſettling of the Government of the whole Empire, made him firſt Superintendant, or Prime Miniſter of State, over all the Provinces of it. In this Station of Life, Daniel muſt have been a Perſon of great Authority at Court, and highly in the Eſteem of his Prince, and therefore, as we find him earneſt in his Prayer to God for the Reſtoration of his People, Dan. ix. we cannot but think, that he would be equally warm in his Interceſſions for it with the King. To which Purpoſe it is not improbable, that he might ſhew him thoſe Paſſages in Iſaiah, which ſpeak of him by Name, (an hundred and fifty Years before he was born) as a great Prince, and Conqueror, the Ruler of many Nations, and the Reſtorer of his People, by cauſing his Temple to be built, and the City of Jeruſalem re-inhabited. For, that Cyrus had ſeen thoſe Prophecies, the Thing is plain, not only from the Teſtimony of Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xi. c. 1. but from the Recital, that is made of them in the Decree itſelf, Ezra i. 2. and, if ſo, who ſhould be ſo proper to ſhew them to him, and to recommend the Accompliſhment of them to his Princely Care, as Daniel, who had ſo great Credit with him, and ſo paſſionate a Concern for the Reſtoration of Sion? Prideaux's Connection, Anno 538.

† Some are of Opinion, that, among the ſacred Things, which Cyrus order'd to be reſtor'd, the Ark of the Covenant was one; but it no where appears, that this Ark was carry'd from Jeruſalem to Babylon. They tell us indeed, that, in the ſecond Temple, Sacrifices were offer'd, as in the firſt, and all ſolemn Days obſerv'd, eſpecially the great Day of Expiation, when the Law ordain'd, that the Blood ſhould be ſprinkled before the Mercy-Seat; and the Mercy-Seat, ſay they, was Part of the Ark: But, beſides that the Ark, without the Shechinah, or Divine Glory, (which was then withdrawn) would have been of no great Significance, the Jews univerſally acknowledg'd that the Ark was one of the five Things, that were wanting in the ſecond Temple.

|| The Sum total of the Veſſels, as they are nam'd in Ezra i. 9, 10, do not amount to half this Number; and therefore ſome have thought, that there muſt be a numerical Error, either in one Place, or the other; whilſt others ſuppoſe, that, as in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 18. Nebuchadnezzar is ſaid to have carry'd away all the Veſſels, both great and ſmall, in this Detail the larger Veſſels only, and ſuch as were of great Value, are mention'd, but that the groſs Sum comprehends all, and amounts to the Number ſpecify'd. Patrick's Commentary on Ezra i. 11.

* Joſephus has recorded one, which is directed to the Governors of Syria, in the following Manner:

" Cyrus, the King, to Syſina and Sarabaſan, ſendeth greeting.

" Be it known unto you, that I have given Leave to all the Jews, that are in my Dominions, to return into their own " Country, and there to rebuild their capital City, with the holy Temple at Jeruſalem, in the ſame Place, where " it ſtood before. I have likewiſe ſent my Treaſurer Mithridates, and Zerubbabel, the Governor of Judea, to ſuper-" intend Governors of ſeveral Provinces to aſſiſt the Jews in their Undertaking.

The Encouragement, which was given them by Virtue of this Decree, made the Jews ſoon gather together out of the ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom of Babylon, to the Number of forty-two Thouſand three hundred and ſixty, which, together with their Servants, (who were ſeven Thouſand three hundred and thirty-ſeven more) amounted in all to 49,697 Perſons. For, not only thoſe of Judah and Benjamin, but ſeveral alſo of the other Tribes, that had been carry'd away by Tiglath-Pileſer, and Eſarhaddon, yet ſtill retain'd the true Worſhip of God in a ſtrange Land, took the Benefit of this Decree to return into their own Country.

Their chief Leaders, their Return, and laying the Foundation of the new Temple.

The chief Leaders of theſe returning Captives were Zerubbabel and Joſhua. Zerubbabel † (whoſe Babyloniſh Name was Sheſhbazzar) was the Son of Salathiel, the Son of Jehoiakim King of Judah, who was kept ſo long Captive in Babylon; and Joſhua was the Son of Jozadach, the Son of Seraiah, who was High-Prieſt, when Jeruſalem was deſtroy'd, and put to Death by Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah in Syria; ſo that the former of them was deſcended from the Regal, and the latter from the Pontifical Family in a direct Line. Zerubbabel was made Governor of the Land by a Commiſſion from Cyrus; Joſhua of courſe ſucceeded to the chief Prieſthood; and with them were joined ſeveral others, as Aſſiſters for the ſettling all Affairs both in Church and State.

From Jer. xl. 7. to xlv. all Daniel, and from Ezra i. to v.

On the firſt Month of the Jewiſh ſacred Year, (which is called Niſan, and anſwers to Part of March, and Part of April, in our Calendar) the People arriv'd in Judea; and, having diſpers'd themſelves, according to their Tribes and Families, in their ſeveral Cities, they ſet about the Rebuilding of their Houſes, and the Cultivation of their Lands, after they had laid deſolate, from the Murther of Gedaliah, two and fifty Years. On the ſeventh Month, (which is called Tizri, and anſwers in Part to our September and October) all the People, from their ſeveral Cities, met together at Jeruſalem, and, on the firſt Day of that Month, there celebrated the † Feaſt of the Trumpets. On the tenth was the great Day of Expiation “ intend the Building, and to ſee it rais'd ſixty Cubits upward from the Ground, and as many over; the Walls to “ be three Rows of poliſh'd Stone, and one of the Wood of the Country, together with an Altar for Sacrifices, “ and all this to be done at my Charge. ——— It is my further Pleaſure, that they receive entire to themſelves “ all the Profits, and Revenues, that were formerly enjoy'd by their Predeceſſors, and that they have an Allowance “ paid them of 205,500 Drachma's, in Conſideration of Beaſts for Sacrifices, Wine, and Oil, and 2,500 Meaſures “ of Wheat, in Lieu of fine Flour, and all this to be rais'd upon the Tribute of Samaria; that the Prieſts may offer “ up Sacrifices, according to the Laws and Ceremonies of Moſes, and pray daily for the King, and the Royal Family, “ and for the Welfare and Happineſs of the Perſian Empire; and let no Man preſume to do any Thing, contrary to the Tenor of this my Royal Will and Proclamation, upon Pain of forfeiting Life and Eſtate.” Jewiſh Antiq. lib. xi. c. 1.

† In the Time of the Captivity, it was a common Thing for the great Men of Judah to have two Names; one of their own Country, which was domeſtick, and another of the Chaldeans, which was us'd at Court. Zerubbabel was born in Babylon; and his Name, which ſignifies an Exile, or Stranger in Babylon, imports the Miſery of the People of Iſrael at that Time; but Sheſhbazzar, which is a Compound of two Words, ſignifying fine Linnen and Gold, ſeems to be a Name of a better Omen, and to denote their future more flouriſhing Condition. Patrick's Commentary.

† The firſt Day of the Month Tizri was the Beginning of the Jewiſh Civil Year, and on it was the Feaſt of Trumpets, ſo called, becauſe it was proclaim'd by Sound of Trumpet; but, upon what Occaſion it was at firſt inſtituted, the Scripture is ſilent. Theodoret (Quæſt. xxxii. in Levit.) is of Opinion, that it was in Memory of the Thunder and Lightning upon Mount Sinai, when God gave his Law from thence. The ancient Rabbins will have it, that it was in Remembrance of the Deliverance of Iſaac, in whoſe Stead Abraham ſacrific'd a Ram; but ſome modern Jews maintain, that it was in Memory of the World's Creation, which they accordingly aſſert was in the Beginning of Autumn; and, as they hold it by Tradition, that on this Day God particularly judges all the Actions of the foregoing Year, and diſpoſes all the Events of the Year following, for this Reaſon, they generally apply themſelves, for the whole eight Days preceding this Feaſt, to the Works of Penance and Mortification. On the Feaſt itſelf (which laſts for two Days) all Labour and Buſineſs is ſuſpended, and (while Sacrifices were in Uſe) the Jews offer'd, in the Name of the whole Nation, a ſolemn Holocauſt of a Calf, two Rams, and ſeven Lambs, all of the ſame Year,

Expiation †, when the High-Prieſt made Atonement for all the People; and on the fifteenth began the Feaſt of Tabernacles †, which laſted till the twenty-third. During all which Solemnities, the People ſtay'd at Jeruſalem, and, to promote the Reſtoration of God's Worſhip in that Place, the Free-Will Offerings, which they made upon that Occaſion, (beſides an hundred Veſtments for the Prieſts) amounted to ſixty-one Thouſand Drams of Gold, and five Thouſand Mana's of Silver, which, in all, comes to about † ſeventy-five Thouſand five hundred Pounds of our Money;

Year, together with the Flour and Wine, that uſually went along with ſuch Sacrifices: But, inſtead of that, they now go to the Synagogue, where they repeat ſeveral Prayers and Benedictions, and, having taken the Pentateuch very ſolemnly out of the Cheſt, and read to five Perſons the Sacrifice, that us'd to be perform'd on that Day, they ſound twenty Times upon an Horn, ſometimes very low, ſometimes very loud; and this, they ſay, makes them think of the Judgments of God, to intimidate Sinners, and put them upon Repentance. Calmet's Dictionary under the Word Trumpet.

† This was one of the principal Solemnities of the Jews, and the Ceremonies to be obſerv'd hereon were ſuch as theſe. The High-Prieſt, after he had waſh'd, not only his Hands and Feet, (as uſual in common Sacrifices) but his Body likewiſe, dreſs'd himſelf in a plain Linnen Garment like one of the Prieſts, and had neither his Purple Robe, his Ephod, nor his Pectoral on, becauſe he was going to expiate his own, as well as the People's Sins. He firſt of all offer'd a Bullock and a Ram for his own Sins, and thoſe of the other Prieſts, putting his Hand upon their Heads, and confeſſing his own Sins, and the Sins of his Houſe; then he receiv'd from the Princes of the People two Goats for a Sin-Offering, and a Ram for a Burnt-Offering, to be offer'd in the Name of all the People. By Lots it was determin'd which of the two Goats ſhould be ſacrific'd, and which ſet at Liberty; and therefore, after that he had perfum'd the Sanctuary with ſome burning Incenſe, he took of the Blood of the Bullock, which he had ſacrific'd, and, dipping his Finger in it, ſprinkled it ſeven Times between the Ark and the Veil, which ſeparated between the Holy of Holies, and the Body of the Tabernacle, or Temple. After this, he came out again, and, having ſacrific'd the Goat upon which the Lot was fallen, he return'd with ſome of its Blood into the Sanctuary, and there ſprinkled it, as he had done before: Then, coming out again, he ſprinkled both Sides of the Court with the Blood of the Goat, and ſo proceeding to the Altar of Burnt-Offerings, he wet the four Horns of it with the Blood of the Goat and the Bullock, and ſprinkled it ſeven Times with the ſame. After all theſe Ceremonies were finiſh'd, the Goat, that was to be ſet at Liberty, (which was commonly called the Scape-Goat) was brought to the High-Prieſt, who put both his Hands upon its Head, and having confeſs'd all his own Sins, and the Sins of the People, deliver'd it to Perſons appointed to that Office, who carry'd it into the Wilderneſs, and left it upon the Brink of a Precipice, at twelve Miles Diſtance from Jeruſalem. After all which, the High-Prieſt waſh'd himſelf all over again in the Tabernacle, or Temple, and, putting on his pontifical Dreſs, ſacrific'd two Rams for a Burnt-Offering, one for himſelf, and the other for the People; and ſo concluded the Day, with reading the Law, and giving the Bleſſing to the People, who all upon this Occaſion, behav'd with great Devotion, faſted punctually, and return'd Home with a full Perſuaſion and Aſſurance, that their Sins were entirely done away, and expiated. The modern Jews, who have no Sacrifices, content themſelves with reading in Leviticus what relates to the ſolemn Service of this Day, and the Ceremonies concerning the Scape-Goat. They, in like Manner, faſt very ſtrictly, and pray very devoutly, until the Concluſion of the Day, when, having receiv'd the Rabbin's Bleſſing, they go home, fully ſatisfy'd that all their Iniquities are pardon'd: For their ſtanding Maxim is, that Repentance, though accompanied with a Reſolution of living well, does but ſuſpend Sins; whereas the Feaſt of Expiation does abſolutely aboliſh them. The Reader, that is deſirous to know more of this, may conſult Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Expiation.

† This was one of the great Solemnities of the Jews, wherein all the Males were oblig'd to preſent themſelves before the Lord. In Hebrew it is called Chag haſſuchoth, the Feaſt of Tents; becauſe it was kept under green Tents and Arbours, in Memory of their dwelling in Tents in their Paſſage thro' the Wilderneſs, and immediately after the Harveſt, in grateful Acknowledgment to God for the Fruits of the Earth, which they had lately gather'd in. It was obſerv'd for ſeven Days; and, of the ſeveral Sacrifices, which were appointed for each Day, we have a punctual Account in the Book of Numbers, Chap. xxix. 12, &c. The modern Jews, not having now an Opportunity of going to the Temple, and performing all the Ceremonies preſcrib'd by Moſes, make (each for himſelf) in ſome open Place, a Bower, or Arbour, of the Branches of Trees of ſuch a determinate Height, hung round about, and adorn'd, as much as they can; where they eat and drink, and paſs at leaſt as much Time, as they do in their Houſes, for all the Days of the Feſtival; but ſuch as are old, or ſick, are excus'd, and, when it rains very hard, they are permitted to retire to their Houſes. On the firſt Day of the Feaſt, they take one Branch of Palm, three of Myrtle, and one of Willow, bound together, which they carry in their Right-Hand, and, having a Branch of Citron, with its Fruit, in their Left, they thus make four Turns, about the Reading-deſk, in their Synagogues. On the ſeventh Day, (which is accounted more holy than the reſt) they riſe with the Sun, and, going to the Synagogue, ſing abundance of Prayers (which they repeat all the Feaſt) with prodigious Rapidity, as ſuppoſing, that, during their Journey, they were oblig'd to make haſte even in the Service of God. On the eighth, (for they have added two Days to what Moſes at firſt preſcrib'd) they get their Friends together, and give them an Entertainment; and on the ninth, which they call the Joy of the Law, they compleat the Reading of the Pentateuch, according to the Order of its Sections. Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Tabernacles.

Money; and with this Fund they began the Work of rebuilding the Temple.

TO this Purpoſe, having employ'd the firſt Year in preparing Materials and providing Workmen, in the ſecond Month of the ſecond Year, (which anſwers in Part to our April and May) they laid the Foundation of it with great Joy and Solemnity; only the old Men, who had ſeen the Glory of the firſt Temple, and had no Expectation, that This, which was now a-building by a few poor Exiles, lately return'd from their Captivity, would ever equal That, which had all the Riches of David and Solomon (two of the wealthieſt Princes of the Eaſt) expended on it, wept at the Remembrance of the old, whilſt the others rejoic'd at the laying the Foundations of the new Temple.

The Samaritans offer their Aſſiſtance, but, being refus'd, obſtruct the Work.

WHILST the Jews were going on with this Work, the Samaritans, who were planted in ſeveral Cities of Iſrael in the Room of the Iſraelites, whom Salmanaſſar, King of Aſſyria, had long before carry'd away Captive, hearing that they were about rebuilding their Temple, came to the Governor Zerubbabel, and deſir'd to join with them in the Work, alledging, that they worſhipp'd the ſame God, that the People of Judah did. The Governor, however, and the Chiefs of the Families of Iſrael would by no Means allow them to have any Share in the Work, being apprehenſive, that they, who were no better than Idolaters †, notwithſtanding they pretended to worſhip the God of Iſrael, might have ſome evil Deſign in the Offer of their Service, and therefore they abſolutely refus'd them; which ſo exaſperated the other, that, from that very Moment, they made it their Endeavour, as much as in them lay, to obſtruct the Work: And tho' they could not alter the Decree, which Cyrus had made in Favour of it; yet, by Bribes, and underhand Dealings with his Miniſters, they, in a great Meaſure, defeated its Effect. So that, for ſeveral Years, the Building went but ſlowly on, and, upon the Death of the Prophet * Daniel, who was a powerful Advocate for his

† For although, from the Time that they had been infeſted with Lions, in the Days of Eſarhaddon, they had worſhipp'd the God of Iſrael, yet it was only in Conjunction with their other Gods, whom they worſhipp'd before; and therefore, notwithſtanding their Worſhip of the true God, ſince they worſhipp'd falſe Gods too at the ſame Time, they were, in this Reſpect, Idolaters, which was Reaſon enough for the true Worſhippers of God to have no Communion with them. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 534.

* We do not find that Daniel took the Advantage of the Edict, which Cyrus made in Favour of the Jews; and therefore we may ſuppoſe, that, as he did not return with them to Jeruſalem, the King might require his Continuance with him, and Daniel might the rather conſent to it, as having thereby a better Opportunity to befriend his Countrymen upon any Exigence. To this Purpoſe, it is highly probable, that he attended the Perſian Court, which, after the taking and defacing of Babylon, reſided in Summer at Shuſhan, or Suſa, and, in Winter, at Ecbatana. In the Palace of Shuſhan, Daniel (as himſelf tells us, Chap. viii. 1, &c.) had ſeveral Viſions. In this City (as Joſephus informs us, Antiq. lib. x. c. 12. where, inſtead of Ecbatana, St Jerom reads Suſa) he built a famous Edifice, finiſh'd with ſuch exquiſite Art, that it continu'd freſh and beautiful in his Days; and in this City, the common Tradition is, that he died in the third or fourth Year of Cyrus and about the 91ſt Year of his Age; for even to this Day (as we learn from Benjamin's Itinerarium) the Inhabitants of the Place (at preſent called Tuſter) ſhew his Monument. But the moſt valuable Monument, left behind him, is in his Writings, whereof the Jewiſh Hiſtorian gives us this Character:——"He had this peculiar Bleſſing attending him, that he liv'd in great Reputation, both with Prince and " People, and, when he died, left an immortal Memory behind him. His Writings which are ſtill extant, and in " common Uſe, we keep as a ſure Pledge, that he had an Intimacy and Converſation with God:——For, " whereas other Prophets were more employ'd in foreboding Calamities, and ill News, which drew upon them Diſ" grace from Princes, and Hatred from the People, Daniel, on the contrary, foretold nothing, but happy Events, " and what was agreeable; ſo that the Nature of his Predictions were ſuch, as gain'd him the Good-Will of all, and " ſuch the Certainty of them, as gain'd him a ready Credence with all: Which (as the Hiſtorian remarks) may ſerve, " not only to eſtabliſh a Veneration for the Memory of a Man, whom God ſo ſignally honour'd, but to confound " likewiſe the impious Doctrines of the Epicureans, which will not allow of any over-ruling Providence interpoſing in " the

The OBJECTION.

"BUT what Credit ſoever Daniel might have with Cyrus the Perſian, and with the Kings of Babylon, his Predeceſſors, as a State-Miniſter and Politician, 'tis certain, that he never was look'd upon, even by his own Countrymen, as a Prophet; nor was the Book, which goes under his Name, ever receiv'd into their Canon of Holy Writ. The Truth is, the Method of his Education was abhorrent to the Spirit of Prophecy. He was inſtructed in the Learning of the Chaldeans, and (k) bred among a Set of Magicians, Sorcerers, and Aſtrologers, whom, in their different Faculties, he is ſaid (l) to have vaſtly ſurpaſs'd, and was therefore (m) made their Preſident: But, though with theſe Qualifications, he might have ſet up for a top Conjurer, yet who would ever have ſuſpected his taking upon him the Character of a Prophet?

"(n) THE Law of Moſes threaten'd with immediate Death, not only the Profeſſors of Magick, but every one, who reſorted to them. The People, whom God had expelled from Canaan, were Diviners, Soothſayers, Obſervers of Times, and Interpreters of Dreams, (o) whom he declares to be his Abomination; and therefore we may juſtly wonder, that Daniel, who ſeem'd to be ſo ſcrupulous in other Matters, (p) as not to dare to eat of the Meat, which the King had appointed for him and his Companions, for Fear of Pollution, ſhould not much more fear to be defiled, by living in Community with ſuch, as taught theſe black Arts, and by becoming himſelf one of their Diſciples; and much more may we wonder, how he comes to deſerve ſo high a Commendation for that very Thing, viz. (q) his underſtanding Viſion and Dreams, for which other Pretenders to that Kind of Knowledge were accounted an Abomination.

"(r) IN all Matters of Wiſdom and Underſtanding, that the King enquired of them, his Companions, he found them ten Times better, than all his Magicians, and "the Government and Preſervation of the Univerſe, but will have the whole Courſe of ſublunary Things to be nothing more, than one grand Huddle of Contingencies. For, when I conſider the Prophecies of Daniel, (ſays he) I cannot but blame the Ignorance, or Irreverence of thoſe, who make it their Profeſſion to decry Providence, as if God took no Care of us; ſince it is impoſſible to conceive, how there ſhould be ſuch a Correſpondence between the Things foretold at one Time, and fulfilled ſo many Ages after, if, according to their Opinion, every Thing were left to run at Random, and fall out at Hap-hazard." Jewiſh Antiq. lib. x. c. 12.

[*] It is generally agreed by Hiſtorians, that Cyrus was much about ſeventy Years old, when he died, but then they widely differ among themſelves, as to the Manner of his Death. Some ſay, that he was taken in an Engagement, and hang'd; others, that he died of a Wound, which he receiv'd in his Thigh; and others, that he was killed in a Battle with the People of Samos. Herodotus, Juſtin, and Valerius Maximus relate, that, in his War againſt the Scythians, falling into an Ambuſh, which Queen Thomyris had laid for him, he was taken Priſoner, and, with Inſult enough, had his Head cut off by her Order; but Xenophon's Account is,———That he died peaceably in his Bed, amidſt his Friends, and in his own Country; as indeed there is little Reaſon to think, either that ſo wiſe a Man, as Cyrus, ſhould, in his advanc'd Years, engage in ſo deſperate an Undertaking, as this Scythian Expedition is repreſented on all Hands; or that, had he died in Scythia, his mangled Body could have ever been got out of the Hands of theſe Barbarians to be bury'd at Parſargada in Perſia, as moſt Authors agree it was, and where his Monument was to be ſeen, in the Time of Alexander the Great. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Cyrus, and Prideaux's Connection, Anno 530.

“ HOWEVER this be, 'tis certain, that the Author of the Book, which goes under Daniel's Name, was never a Prophet, but a certain Hiſtorian, who liv'd ſome hundred Years after Daniel's Time; and, relating Events, which, a long while before, were paſs'd and gone, made uſe of Allegories, and a ſymbolical Way of expreſſing himſelf, merely to give his Writings the Air of Prophecies. (s) For, if the ancient Daniel, who was carry'd away in the Babyloniſh Captivity, was the Author of this Book, how comes it to paſs, that he miſtakes the very Names of the Princes, whoſe Courts he liv'd in; and uſes ſo many Words, derivative from the Greek, which was a Language unknown to the Jews, till a long while after this Captivity? How comes he not to be found (as well as other Books of the Old Teſtament) in the Verſion of the Seventy; not to be nam'd among the Prophets, recited in Eccleſiaſticus (t); nor ſo much as taken notice of by Jonathan, who is ſuppos'd to have made, ſome Time before our Saviour's Coming, his Paraphraſes upon the Books of the Prophets.

“ HAD he been thought of Canonical Authority, it is ſcarce imaginable, how he could have been paſs'd by in this diſhonourable Manner: But the Truth is, the Jews, to do themſelves Credit, were great Compoſers of Books under the Names of their Prophets, and particularly under the Name of Daniel. We have ſeveral ſpurious Pieces, ſuch as the Song of the three Children, the Stories of Suſanna and the two Elders, and of Bel and the Dragon extant at this Day; and, in like Manner, have Reaſon to believe, that the Author of the Book of Daniel was a Counterfeit, who liv'd about the Time of Antiochus Epiphanes, and wrote of Things paſt, in a prophetical Stile; eſpecially conſidering, that the Way of repreſenting large Scenes of Affairs by ſuch Images and Symbols, as he makes uſe of, is intirely unlike the Books of the other Prophets, but vaſtly conformable to the Mode of Writing, which, at that Time, prevail'd in the Schools of the Greeks.

“ ÆSOP's Lion indeed may be a fit Emblem of a lawleſs Tyrant, or his Fox, of a crafty Politician; but where is the Senſe of (u) a Lion with Eagle's Wings, or a Bear, with three Ribs in his Mouth; of a Leopard with four Heads, or another Beaſt, different to all theſe, with Eyes in his Horns? A Ram with two Horns (tho' the one may chance to be higher than the other) is not ſo incongruous a Matter; but an He-goat, caſting down the Hoſt of Heaven, and trampling upon the very Stars, is a mad Hyperbole, and can have nothing reſemblant of it in Nature. (x) The Angel indeed may pretend to unfold the Myſteries couch'd under theſe dark Hieroglyphics, but what he ſays upon that Head conveys no more Knowledge to the Reader, than does his

“The Truth is, the very Notion of a Revelation implies, that all Things in it ſhould be made plain. An obſcure Diſcovery of this Kind ſeems to be a Contradiction in Terms: And therefore we can hardly blame thoſe of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, who were for ſuppreſſing the Prophecies of Ezekiel, (as well as his Brother Daniel's) (z) becauſe the Viſion of the myſterious Chariot, in the firſt Chapter, and the Story of Gog and Magog, towards the Concluſion of the Book, they could not but look upon as a ſtrange Rhapſody of unintelligible Jargon.

“But it is not a greater Flaw in a Revelation to be unintelligible, than it is to be abſurd and contradictory; and therefore, when, in comparing the groſs Sum and Particulars together of the People, that return'd from the Captivity, we find the latter fall ſhort to the Number of above twelve Thouſand Perſons, we cannot but think, that ſome Error has crept into the Text itſelf. When we find (a) fourſcore Iſraelites coming with Offerings and Incenſe in their Hands, to bring them to the Houſe of the Lord, when they could not but know that it was utterly deſtroy'd above ſix Months before, we cannot but conceive, that herein muſt be ſome ſmall Slip of Memory in the ſacred Penman; and, (b) to introduce the Elders of Iſrael, as diſturbing the publick Joy, at the laying of the Foundation of the Temple, with their Cries and Tears, when Thankfulneſs (tho' but for ſmall Beginnings) would have much better becom'd them, is far from placing theſe venerable Rulers of the People in any advantageous Light.”

Anſwer'd, by ſhewing the Genuineneſs of Daniel's Book, from ancient Teſtimonies.

That there was ſuch a Perſon as Daniel, of the Jewiſh Captivity in Babylon, famous for his Diſcovery of future Events, and for his great Piety and Devotion towards God, can hardly be deny'd; that the Diſcourſes and Predictions of a Perſon, ſo highly in Favour with God, ſhould be put in Writing, either by himſelf, or ſome other, and, when committed to Writing, ſhould be carefully preſerv'd, is reaſonable to believe; and that the Book, which has deſcended to us, contains the Revelation, and other Accounts of Things, which God was pleas'd to communicate to him, will ſufficiently appear by the Sequel.

The Character, which the Prophet Ezekiel gives his Contemporary Daniel, (c) is, his ſingular Prevalence with God in Prayer; and, whoever looks into the Book, that goes under his Name, will find its Author verifying (d) this Character, and his Succeſs in this Particular exemplify'd in ſeveral Inſtances. (e) His Deliverance out of the Den of Lions, and that of his Companions out of the fiery Furnace, (Facts that are recorded in the preſent Book) are expreſsly mention'd in the Prayer of (f) old Eleazar in Egypt, under the Rage of Ptolemy Philopater againſt the Jews, and (g) of Mattathias (the Father of the Maccabees) in Judea, under the Perſecution of Antiochus Epiphanes; and their Examples (among other Scripture Inſtances) are propos'd, as Motives to Confidence in God, and Conſtancy in their Religion: (h) So that the Jews, in thoſe Times, took this Book to be written by Daniel himſelf, and accordingly made uſe of it. Nay, long before theſe Times, (i) we find Nehemiah beginning his ſolemn Prayer to God in Daniel's own Words, almoſt with no Variation: O Lord, the great and dreadful God, keeping the Covenant and Mercy to them, that love him, and keep his Commandments, which which is a plain Proof, not only that he look'd upon this Book of Daniel as true and authentick, but that he eſteem'd his Manner of praying likewiſe not unworthy his Imitation.

Particularly that of Joſephus.

JOSEPHUS, we know, was a Prieſt, well vers'd in the Law, and in the ſacred Writings, whoſe Authority he profeſſes to follow thro' all his Antiquities; and yet he ſeems to prefer Daniel above other Writers of that Kind, and to give us a more particular Account of his, than of all the other Prophecies of the Old Teſtament put together: For he informs us, (k) "That Daniel not only foretold "future Things, (which was common to "him with other Prophets) but that he "ſet the Time likewiſe for their coming "to paſs; (l) that this Book therefore "was held among the ſacred Writings, "and (m) read in publick Aſſemblies "(which is the peculiar Privilege of "Canonical Books) in his Days, becauſe "the Completion of the Events he foretold gain'd him Belief with all Mankind." Nay, if we will give Credit to this ſame Joſephus, this Book of Daniel's was look'd upon as genuine, and of divine Authority, even in the Days of Alexander the Great; otherwiſe, the High-Prieſt had put a Banter upon him, when, (n) at his coming to Jeruſalem, and going into the Temple, he ſhew'd him a Paſſage in it, wherein it was foretold, under the Emblem of an He-goat with one Horn, overcoming a Ram with two, that a certain King of Greece would conquer the Perſians; which Alexander took to himſelf, and perhaps, upon that very Account, might treat the Jewiſh Nation with more Clemency, than he did their Neighbours.

And the People, who liv'd in our Saviour's Time.

BUT however this be, 'tis certain, that in, and before the Time of our bleſſed Saviour, the Jews receiv'd the Book of Daniel, as authentick Scripture, without any Suſpicion to the contrary. For, whereas the Name of the Meſſias, and of the Son of Man, which they apply'd to the Deliverer, whom they expected, the Title of the Kingdom of God, and of Heaven, us'd for the State of Things under that Deliverer, his coming in the Clouds of Heaven, his taking all Judgment upon himſelf, and the Reſurrection of the Dead, purſuant upon that his Coming, are Expreſſions manifeſtly borrow'd from Daniel: Theſe Expreſſions were, at that Time, the current Language of the Jews, inſomuch, that we find none of them ſurpris'd, when they heard the Baptiſt telling them, that the Kingdom of God was at hand, or our Saviour calling himſelf ſo frequently the Son of Man, and citing Daniel the Prophet by Name; which they certainly would have been, and thereupon rais'd no ſmall Clamour, had they perceiv'd that he was obtruding a ſpurious Book upon them for canonical.

UPON the whole therefore we may conclude, that, ſince there confeſſedly was ſuch a Perſon as Daniel, whoſe Character in the Prophet Ezekiel agrees with what we find in our preſent Daniel; ſince this Book of his has the Teſtimony of Joſephus, (no incompetent Judge in a Matter of this Nature) was commonly cited in the Times of our Saviour, was referr'd to before the Times of the Maccabees; nay, was thought genuine in the Times of Alexander, and has receiv'd no ſmall Confirmation from the Uſe and Application, which Nehemiah makes of it; either we muſt ſuppoſe, that all theſe Perſons, in their different Generations, were miſtaken, or elſe we muſt allow, that our preſent Book of Daniel is no fictitious Piece of later Date, but the Work of the Prophet, whoſe Name it bears, and who liv'd in the Age, which the ſacred Records have aſſign'd him.

To which, his Education in the Chaldean Learning.

IT is no valid Objection, either againſt his perſonal or prophetick Character, that he was educated in the Learning of the Chaldeans, and became a remarkable Proficient ficient therein. The Learning of the Chaldeans conſiſted chiefly in what they call Aſtrology, or the Knowledge of the celeſtial Motions, the Art of Building, and the Art of War. Some curious and ſuperſtitious Arts, that were abhorrent to the Law of Moſes, they were famous for practiſing; but there is no Neceſſity for us to infer from thence, that Daniel and his Friends were ever initiated in theſe; on the contrary, we may be allow'd to argue thus:——That, had there been any Thing criminal in the Method of their Education, they, who refus'd to defile themſelves with the King's Meat, would never have comply'd with it. They refus'd the King's Proviſions, not only becauſe he might probably have ſuch Things ſerv'd up at his Table, as were prohibited by their Law, but becauſe it was cuſtomary likewiſe in moſt Nations, before their Meals, to make an Oblation of ſome Part of what they eat or drank, to their Gods, as a thankful Acknowledgment, that whatever they enjoy'd proceeded from their Bounty: So that every Entertainment had in it the Nature of a Sacrifice; and therefore Daniel and his Friends look'd upon the Proviſions, which came from the King's Table, as Meats offered to Idols, and upon that Account eſteem'd them unclean. But the ſame Principle, that mov'd them to this, would have reſtrain'd them from the Study of the Chaldean Learning, had any of their impious or unwarrantable Sciences been impos'd upon them.

The King indeed is ſaid (o) to have found them ten Times better, than all the Magicians, and Aſtrologers, that were in his Realm: But theſe Words in antient Times were not appropriated to the evil Senſe, which they now bear, but ſignify'd, in the general, Men of Wiſdom and Learning, ſkilled in the Knowledge of Things natural and divine. (p) Thoſe, who in St Matthew are called μάγοι, our Tranſlation has render'd wiſe Men, becauſe the Evangeliſt ſeems to have given them that Name, not as a Note of Infamy, but as an honourable Title. And, in like Manner, why may not the Words be here underſtood of ſuch Perſons, as employ'd themſelves in the lawful Search of natural Cauſes and Effects, of the curious Products of the Earth, and the regular Motions of heavenly Bodies? For, when Daniel made Interceſſion to the Captain of the Guard, that (q) the wiſe Men of Babylon might not be ſlain, we can hardly ſuppoſe, that all of theſe were ſuch, as ſtudy'd unlawful Arts and Sciences, ſince he himſelf was afterwards made Maſter and Preſident over them.

Nay, even ſuppoſing, that theſe wiſe Men of Babylon made Profeſſion of ſome Sciences, whoſe only Foundation was Superſtition and Deceit, yet, why muſt their Hebrew Diſciples be oblig'd to purſue the ſame? Might they not follow ſuch Studies, as beſt ſuited their Genius, and the Principles of their Religion? The ſame Indulgence, which they obtain'd from the Maſter of the Eunuchs, with Regard to their Proviſions, may well be ſuppos'd to have been granted them in Relation to their Studies, in Caſe any Difficulty of this Kind had been impos'd upon them. But there is no Occaſion for our imagining this. The Maſters of theſe occult Sciences (as they call them) had many good Reaſons for not obtruding them upon their Diſciples; and Daniel, and his Companions, who were deſign'd to attend in the King's Preſence, were more properly to be educated in another Way, viz. in the Knowledge of the Purity of the Chaldee Tongue, of the Arts of War and Policy, of the State and Revenues of the Kingdom, and ſuch other lighter and more polite Accompliſhments, as would make their Perſons and Services more acceptable at Court, than any Proficiency in theſe abſtruſe Matters could do. But, put the Caſe, that they were at any Time called to Lectures in any of the Sciences, that were not ſo ſtrictly warrantable, we cannot ſee why they might not be permitted to attend to them with the ſame Spirit, that (r) Moſes was Exemption from the fiery Furnace.

It was not for any more excellent Proficiency therefore in thoſe black Arts, which were prohibited by the Law of God, that Daniel obtain'd an Exemption from the Puniſhment of the fiery Furnace, but either becauſe he was abſent upon ſome Pretence or other, (as moſt of the Jews might chuſe to be abſent upon this Occaſion) or becauſe he was not accus'd to the King, at this Time, for refuſing to worſhip the Idol which he had ſet up, tho' he might be preſent at the Dedication.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR, (t) we read, had ſummon'd all his Princes, Counſellors, Governors, Captains, and all other his Officers and Miniſters, to be preſent, and aſſiſting at the Solemnity of this Dedication; and therefore 'tis not likely, that Daniel, who was one of the chief of them, ſhould be allow'd to be abſent; but his Enemies thought it more adviſable, not to begin with him, becauſe of the great Authority he had with the King, but rather to fall firſt upon his three Friends, (whoſe Promotion in the Province of Babylon rais'd their Envy) that thereby they might more ſucceſsfully pave the Way to his Ruin: But the miraculous Interpoſition of Providence, in Behalf of his Friends, quaſh'd all farther Accuſations againſt him; and for this Reaſon it is, that no Mention is made of him in this whole Tranſaction.

His Knowledge in Dreams.

It is ſaid indeed of him, (u) that he had Underſtanding in all Viſions and Dreams, and Dreams, we know, among the Eaſtern People, were held in great Regard. They obſerv'd them much, and apply'd to ſuch Perſons, as pretended to explain them, for their Interpretation: Nor can it be deny'd, that, in the earlieſt Ages of the World, it was the receiv'd Opinion, that ſuch Dreams, as were attended with unuſual Circumſtances, did portend, and ſignify ſome future Event; that they were frequently ſent from God, (x) who in a Dream, in a Viſion of the Night, ſpeaks once, yea twice, to Men, as Eliſha affirms in Job. Now, if Dreams be ſignificative, and often ſent from God, it can hardly be thought, that, in all Caſes, the Interpretation of them ſhould be unlawful; and therefore we may obſerve, that, in that very Place, where Moſes forbids the Hebrews to conſult Magicians and Interpreters of Dreams, he nevertheleſs tells them, (y) that the Lord their God would raiſe up to them, from among their Brethren, a Prophet like unto him, whom they ſhould conſult, and hearken to. So that, tho' the Iſraelites were forbidden to make uſe of Soothſayers, or Diviners, as the Cuſtom of the Nations was, to whoſe Poſſeſſions they ſucceeded; yet they were permitted to addreſs themſelves to God, and his Prophets, in order to learn the Explanation of their Dreams, and the Prediction of future Events; conſequently, there could be no Crime in Daniel's applying himſelf to this Kind of Knowledge, ſince, whatever Excellency he had this Way, the Scripture takes care to aſcribe it to the peculiar Gift of God.

His uſing Names different from the Greek Hiſtorians.

DANIEL indeed liv'd in great Proſperity, and in the Capacity of a Prime Miniſter, under ſome of the Babylonian and Perſian Monarchs; and therefore, if, through Ignorance, he has miſtaken their Names, or recorded any Thing of them, that is not true, this we allow will have a ſuſpicious Aſpect upon the Authority of his Writings: But, when it is conſider'd, how common a Thing it was for the Princes of the Eaſt, upon one Occaſion or other, to multiply their Names, and, not only by Foreigners, but even by their own People, to be called ſometimes by one Name, and ſometimes by another; how uſual it was for them to continue the Titles of Honour, which were conferr'd in Conſideration of thoſe great Exploits, whereby the Dignity of their Family was originally rais'd, and to adopt them into the Number of their own; how cuſtomary it was, upon their Acceſſion to the Kingdom, for them to change their Names, and yet the firſt and private Name be ſtill retain'd by moſt other People, while the Imperial Name appear'd in publick Acts, and was us'd at home only: Whoever conſiders this, I ſay, will ceaſe his Wonder, when, amidſt ſuch a Variety of Appellations for one and the ſame Perſon, he finds this Hiſtorian making Uſe of one, and that of another, according as his Fancy, his Pronunciation, or the Cuſtom of the Country, where he liv'd, led him. Daniel, in all Probability, calls the ſame Perſon Darius Medus, whom the Greek Hiſtorians call Cyaxares the Second: But, when it is obſerv'd, that theſe Hiſtorians agree with Daniel, as to the main Points of his Narration, viz. (z) that Babylon was taken by an Army of Medes and Perſians, whereof the Medes, being the ſuperior, were, at that Time, nam'd firſt; that Cyaxares, King of Media, aſſiſted at the Siege, and was treated by Cyrus as his Chief; that, after a Day of Riot and Revelling, the City was taken in the Night-time, by diverting the Courſe of the River Euphrates, and the King of Babylon ſlain in his Palace; that Cyaxares, being old, and naturally unactive, choſe rather to live at Ecbatana, the Capital of Media, while Cyrus attended the Affairs of the Government of Babylon; and that Cyrus, upon his Death, ſucceeded to the whole Empire: If we obſerve, I ſay, the exact Agreement between theſe Hiſtorians, as to the chief Matters of Fact, we may eaſily diſpenſe with ſome ſmall Difference in Point of Names; eſpecially conſidering, that the Authors liv'd at no leſs a Diſtance than Babylon is from Greece, and that the Greeks conſequently might make uſe of the Name, which he went by in Media, as beſt known to them, which the Babylonians, after he had taken their City, chang'd into Darius Medus, or the Victorious Mede, and which Daniel, being a Captive in the Place, might, in Conformity, call him.

And technical Terms.

It (a) may happen indeed, that there is now and then a Word or two, in the Book of Daniel, which may ſeem to have ſome Analogy to the Greek Tongue, and, with ſome little Variation, may be deriv'd from it; but then it is to be obſerv'd, that the Words of this Kind are, for the moſt Part, technical Terms, ſuch as might ſlip into any Language, without being perceiv'd, and ſuch as a Writer might properly enough uſe, without underſtanding any more of the Tongue, from whence they are borrow'd. Architects and Mechanicks, we know, uſe to this Day ſeveral Greek and Arabick Terms of Art in their reſpective Profeſſions; and yet they do not pretend to underſtand the Language from whence they came: And why might not Daniel, ſpeaking in Terms of Art, (as he certainly does when he † names the muſical Inſtruments (very probably of the Grecian Make) which were us'd at the Conſecration of Nebuchadnezzar's Golden Image; why might not he, I ſay, make uſe of Words of a foreign

(a) Biſhop Chandler's Vindication of the Defence of Chriſtianity.

† Our learned Biſhop Chandler is fully of Opinion, that the Names of the Inſtruments, mention'd in Dan. iii. 5, are not Greek, but Eaſtern Derivations, and that from thence they did paſs to the Greeks, who, with a little Alteration, adapted them to their Pronunciation, or Termination of Words. For, (as he argues) "That their Names "were at firſt given them in the Country, where the Inſtruments themſelves were invented, can hardly be doubted: "If therefore ſuch Inſtruments, as are here ſpecify'd, were us'd in the Eaſt; if their Names be prov'd to be barbarous; and if an Eaſtern Root can be aſſign'd for their Derivation, which no Greek Theme will ſuit ſo well," (all which he endeavours to prove in ſeveral Inſtances) then may we be allow'd to infer, that the Names of theſe Inſtruments (whatever Affinity they may ſeem to have to the Greek Language) were originally Oriental; which Opinion is confirm'd by the Teſtimony of Strabo, lib. x. who aſſures us, that the Names of muſical Inſtruments, ſuch as Nablia, Sambuca, and Barbitos, were deriv'd from barbarous Languages, by which the Greeks denote the Eaſtern Tongues. foreign Extract, and, at the ſame Time, be ſuppos'd a Stranger to the other Parts of the Language? This I think is the common Privilege of moſt Writers: Nor is the Mixture of ſome Greek Terms in the Chaldee Language ſo difficult a Matter to account for, if we will but allow, what Grotius, upon the Place, obſerves, viz, “That, before Daniel's Age, many “Colonies both of the Ionians, and “Æolians, having ſettled themſelves in “Aſia Minor, (which lies contiguous to “ſome Provinces of the Eaſtern Kingdoms) might, that Way, communicate the Names of what they invented, “or improv'd, even as far as Babylon itſelf.”

His being omitted in the Verſion of the Septuagint.

The Tranſlation of the Septuagint has been held in ſuch Eſteem, that, to have any Part of Scripture omitted in it, would give a juſt Suſpicion, as if it had not been extant, or not known at the Time, when thoſe learned Men undertook the Work: But this is ſo far from being true in the Caſe of Daniel, that we find the Septuagint Verſion of him read publickly in our Saviour's Time; that we find Juſtin Martyr (b), and Clemens Romanus (c) (who both wrote before Theodotian's Verſion was made) citing Paſſages out of it; that we find St Jerom (d) giving us ſeveral various Readings, different from thoſe in Theodotian, and ſometimes from thoſe of Aquila and Symmachus, out of it; and, at the ſame Time, telling us, why this Tranſlation of Daniel was repudiated, and that of Theodotian ſubſtituted in its Room by the Doctors of the Church.

It was Origen indeed, who firſt brought it into Diſcredit, by comparing it with that of Theodotian from the Original, in his Hexapla, which ſhew'd its Imperfections a little too plainly; but then its Degradation proves, that, before this happen'd to it, it was all along us'd in the Chriſtian Church.

In the Catalogue of Prophets in Eccleſiaſticus.

The Omiſſion of Daniel's Name, in the Enumeration of the Prophets, which we meet with in Eccleſiaſticus (e), is of no great Moment, becauſe we find no Mention made of Job, or Ezra, and yet they had both Books, that went under his Name, as well as he. The Truth is, the Hiſtory of the Book itſelf may give us ſome Grounds to think, that Daniel's Character might poſſibly have been in it at firſt, tho', upon ſome Occaſion or other, it afterwards came to be dropped. Jeſus the Grandfather (as we read in the Prologue) wrote it in ſeveral Volumes, and left it behind him unfiniſh'd: The Original fell into ſuch Hands, as carry'd it into Egypt, where Jeſus the Grandſon met with it, and having compil'd it all orderly into one Volume, upon Account of the Pains which he had taken with it, he join'd his own Name with that of his Grandfather, in the Title-page: (f) But it far'd with this, as it does with other Books, to loſe in the Tranſlation, and to ſuffer by Copyiſts; inſomuch, that whoever will be at the Trouble to compare the Greek Editions with one another, and with the various Tranſlations, will diſcover Words, Parts of Sentences, and whole Periods to be ſo frequently omitted, alter'd, contracted, explain'd, or enlarg'd, as to abate his Wonder, that the Mention of any Perſon (tho' never ſo conſiderable) ſhould be omitted in a Book, that is deliver'd to us ſo variouſly and imperfectly. But there may be another Reaſon aſſign'd for this Omiſſion: Moſt Part of the Old Teſtament was written in Hebrew, which was the common Language of Judea, and in it did Jeſus the Son of Sirach write this Book of Eccleſiaſticus. Now, as a great Part of the Books of Ezra and Daniel was written in Chaldee, which was a Tongue not ſo well known in Judea, it may reaſonably be ſuppos'd, that the Author's Ignorance of that Tongue might be the true Occaſion, why he omitted theſe two great Men, and all Account of their Writings, in his Catalogue of the Prophets.

In the Chaldee Paraphraſe.

There are ſundry Reaſons likewiſe to be given, why we have no Chaldee Paraphraſe upon Daniel, as well as the reſt of the Prophets: For, beſides that a good Part of Daniel is in the Chaldee Tongue, and, upon that Account, might leſs need one; it is a general Complaint among the Jews themſelves, that a great many of their antient Targums have been loſt, and an acknowledg'd Caſe, that ſome of their ſacred Writers (ſuch as Ezra and Nehemiah for Inſtance, Men famous in the Jewiſh Story, and the latter of them highly celebrated by the Son of Sirach) never had any. The Truth is, the frequent Calamities, which befel the Jewiſh Nation, and diſpers'd them into other Countries, made them negligent of their Books; left them no Leiſure to tranſcribe long Paraphraſts; and when, by mixing among other People, they had loſt the Knowledge of the Language, left them no Ability to do it: So that, amidſt this Ignorance and Confuſion, it is no Wonder, if many valuable Copies were loſt, ſome of which † have ſince come to Light; but there is Reaſon to apprehend, that the Targum upon Daniel never will. For ſo much does this Prophet ſpeak of the Meſſiah, deſcribe the Signs, and define the Time of his Coming ſo preciſely, that the Jews, perceiving the Advantage, which their Adverſaries the Chriſtians might make of it, were under ſtrong Temptations, either to omit, or ſuppreſs the Paraphraſe of a Prophet, ſo diametrically oppoſite to them. And, accordingly, we have a Story from (g) one of their Rabbins, that ſavours not a little of ſome ſuch Practice, viz. "That " when Jonathan had finiſh'd his Targum on Job, Proverbs, and the Pſalms, " and was going on to Daniel, he was " reſtrain'd by a Voice, which bad him " give over there, leſt the Sons of Men " ſhould learn from Daniel the Time of " the Meſſias."

However this be, (h) ſince Daniel is ſo far from being paſs'd by in any diſhonourable Manner, that even Jonathan himſelf, in his Targum on the other Prophets, expreſſes a great Regard to him, by applying Predictions, found only in his Book, to Texts in other Prophets, that he was then interpreting; ſince, in doing of this, he follows Daniel in his Ideas, Phraſes, and Words, and explains Paſſages in other Prophets by ſuch, as were plainer and fuller, in his Opinion, in him; it certainly follows, that (however his Paraphraſe be loſt) Daniel was in his Eſteem a Prophet of equal, if not ſuperior Credit to the Prophets, he was then commenting upon.

Books forg'd under his Name.

Whether the Jews were, more than other Nations, addicted to the publiſhing of ſpurious Tracts, under the Names of their great Authors, and particularly under Daniel's Name, it concerns us not to enquire; ſince the very Suppoſition implies thus much, that with the Jewiſh Church, at that Time, the Writings of Daniel were held in high Eſteem, (for, in ſuch a Caſe, who would chuſe an inglorious Father?) when theſe baſe Pieces came out in his Name. The having Impoſtures father'd on him therefore is ſo far from being any Prejudice to Daniel's genuine Writings, that it rather redounds to the Confirmation of their Authority, ſince what was ſpurious did no ſooner appear in the Light, but it was deſpis'd, rejected, and condemn'd. The Prayer of the three Children was not read in all the Copies of the Septuagint; the Story of Suſanna, in ſome Manuſcripts, ſtood apart from the Book of Daniel, in others after it; and as for the Fable of Bel and the Dragon, it was not intended by its firſt Inventor to paſs under the Name of Daniel, but of one Habakkuk, the Son of Jeſus, of the Tribe of Levi, till Theodotian, in his Greek Edition of the Bible, thought proper to change its Title.

The Truth is, the Jewiſh Church always look'd upon theſe Pieces as ſpurious, and therefore allow'd them much the ſame Place in their Scriptures, that the Apocryphal Books have in our Engliſh Bibles; but the genuine Book of Daniel they held always in the greateſt Veneration, eſteeming the Author of it as one of the chief of their Prophets, until Maimonides, a learned Jew of the XIIth Century, in order to bar all Proofs, that might be drawn from him in Favour of Chriſtianity, thought fit to degrade him from his prophetick Character, and place him in the Number of † Hagiographal Writers only.

The Clearneſs of his Prophecies.

Hard is the Fate of a Prophet, when the very Clearneſs, as well as Obſcurity of his Writings, muſt be imputed as an Objection againſt his Authority; but certainly we muſt allow, that it is as eaſy for an All-knowing God to foretel all Circumſtances of an Event, or to reveal the whole Series of Events, in their proper Connection and Succeſſion, as to declare one ſingle Occurrence. Such Knowledge and ſuch Wiſdom are eſſential Attributes of God: Nor can there be any Abſurdity in his imparting his Knowledge of future Events, with more or leſs Reſerve, to one Man than another; only one would think, that the freer ſuch Communications were, and the more conſpicuous the Revelation, the more excellent ſhould the Prophet, whom God pleas'd to honour in this Manner, be accounted. So unreaſonable are the Prejudices of thoſe, who make the Clearneſs of Prophecies an Argument againſt them, and endeavour to exclude Daniel, from the Number of Prophets, for a Reaſon, that beſt entitled him to that Character!

Their Obſcurity.

But what ſhall we ſay (i), to his "dark and abſtruſe Way of Writing in "other Places; his figurative and para-"bolical, his enigmatical and emblema-"tical Stile, his uncouth Images and Sym-"bols, entirely unlike the Writings of the "other Prophets, but vaſtly agreeable to "that Turn, which the Jews took up, "when they came to be form'd in the "Schools of the Greeks?" All the Greek Authors, that we are acquainted with, are Strangers to this Manner of Writing: They abound indeed in Figures and Allegories; but the ſymbolical and emblematical Form was purely Oriental, and what other Prophets, as well as Daniel, as Occaſion requires, purſue.

For doth not Iſaiah foretel the Deſtruction of the Egyptians under the Image of God's (k) ſtriking with a great and ſtrong Sword the Leviathan, (or Crocodile) and ſlaying the great Dragon, that is in the Sea? Does not Jeremiah (l) ſpeak of the Aſſyrians under the Name of a Dove, becauſe (m) Semiramis had made that Bird the Symbol of her Nation? Does not Ezekiel propheſy of Pharaoh under the Figure of (n) a great Dragon, that lives in the Midſt of the Rivers; of the King of Babylon under the Emblem of a (o) large Eagle with great Wings; and of the Aſſyrian, under the Similitude of (p) a tall Cedar in Lebanon, exalted above all Trees, and reaching the Clouds with its Top, &c. the very ſame Figure (q) whereby the Kingdom of Nebuchadnezzar was repreſented? It is the Genius of the Eaſtern People to be delighted with Fiction and Imagery, and (as Sir John Chardin in his Deſcription of Perſepolis tells us) nothing

† It is much to be queſtion'd, whether ſuch a Diſtinction, as hagiographal Books, was known in our Saviour's Time. All the Partition, that we read of, is, the Law, and the Prophets, and the reſt of the Books, [Proleg. to Ecclus.] which in Luke (xxiv. 44.) are called the Pſalms; and according to Philo (de Vit. Cont.) are Hymns, and other Books, conducing to the Promotion of Piety and Knowledge. This threefold Diſtribution of the Books of Scripture is taken from the Nature and Subjects of the Books themſelves, and not from any ſuppos'd Degrees of Sacredneſs between them: And, if the Word Cethubim, or Hagiographa, was then, or rather in the next Century, made uſe of, it was apply'd only as a general Name for the poetical and moral Books of Scripture, to which Claſs neither Daniel, nor nor any Hiſtorical Book, was reducible. thing is more common among their Authors, than to call Countries by the Names of their Emblems, which are, as it were, the Arms of that Nation; and, in forming theſe Emblems, to make uſe, not only of natural Animals, but of ſuch as are chimerical and fabulous likewiſe, Beaſts with Wings, and Birds with four Feet and long Ears.

Their ſymbolical Turns are not valid Objections.

“(s) Among the Figures, upon the Walls and Pillars of an antient Temple, in this * once famous Metropolis of Perſia, ſays he, there are ſome very monſtrous for Figure and Size. A wing'd Lion with a Crown on his Head; a wing'd Lion flying on the Back of a Bull; the Body of a Horſe with Wings on his Back; and a Man's Head cover'd with an high Bonnet crown'd, &c. In Images and Hieroglyphicks, continues he, here one may ſee the Wars of Princes, and Countries, and their Succeſſes, expreſs'd. The Beaſts repreſent the People, or Land in War; their running at each other, their Engagement; and the Crown on the Head of one of them, or his taking the other by the Hair of the Head, and ſtabbing him, points out his Victory.”

Now, ſince this Method of deſcribing Things by Images was ſo cuſtomary in the Age and Place where Daniel was captive, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that he conform'd himſelf to it, and that the fictitious Animals, which he makes mention of, were no improper Emblems of the ſeveral Empires whereof he writes. The Ram for Inſtance, was the Royal Enſign of the Perſians, (t) as Ammianus Marcellinus obſerves; their Goat, ſince their King Carinus, was the Arms of Macedon, and therefore how aptly does Daniel ſee a Goat with a notable Horn, (for an Horn (u) is always an Emblem of Power and Dominion) to which he gives Wings, becauſe of the Quickneſs of his Succeſs, to (x) run againſt a Ram with unequal Horns, and caſt him to the Ground, when he foretels, what the Mede and Perſian Empire ſhould do, and ſuffer from the Macedonian Greeks? Upon the Breaking of the great Horn, on Alexander's dying in the Height of his Triumphs and Proſperity, how properly do (y) four others come up towards the four Winds of Heaven, to denote the Diviſion † of his Empire among four Kings, whereof Ptolemy had Egypt, and the adjoining Countries, to the South; Antigonus had Aſia, to the North; Seleucus had Syria, to the Eaſt; and Antipater, Greece and Macedonia, to the Weſt.

(a) 2 Maccab. v. 24, &c.

[*] Many of the Heathen Writers give us this Account of him, viz. that he would frequently get out of the Palace, and ramble about the Streets of Antioch, with two or three Perſons only accompanying him; that, in his Rambles, he would drink with Strangers, and Foreigners, and even with the meaneſt and vileſt of them; that, when he heard of any young Company met together to make merry, he would intrude himſelf among them, and revel away the Time with them, in Cups, and Songs, and other Frolicks, without any Regard to common Decency, or his own Royal Character; that, in theſe Frolicks, he would often go out in the Streets, and there ſcatter his Money by Handfuls, for the Rabble to ſcramble for; that, at other Times, he would go about with a Crown of Roſes upon his Head, and, in a Roman Gown, would walk the Streets alone, carrying a Parcel of Stones in his Lap, to throw at thoſe that ſhould follow after; that he was much addicted to Drunkenneſs and Laſciviouſneſs; was frequently found in the Company of Pathics, and common Proſtitutes, on whom he would gratify his Luſt publickly, and in the Sight of the People; and that, having for his Catamites two vile Perſons, called Timarchus and Heraclides, who were Brothers, he made the former of them Governor of Babylon, and the other his Treaſurer in that Province. The ſhort is, his Freaks, Follies, and Vices were ſo many, that Men were in a Doubt whether he were a Madman, or a Fool, tho' the former of theſe was generally thought his trueſt Character; and therefore inſtead of Epiphanes, the illuſtrious, they commonly called him Epimanes, the Madman. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 175.

[*] Biſhop Lloyd hath given us the following Liſt of the ten Kingdoms which aroſe out of the Diſſolution of the Roman Empire, and the Time of their Riſe. 1. Hunns erected their Kingdom in that Part of Pannonia, and Dacia, which from them was called Hungary, about A. D. 356. 2. Oſtrogoths ſettled themſelves in the Countries that reach from Rhetia to Mæſia, even as far as Thrace, about 377, and afterwards came into Italy under Alaricus in 410. 3. Wiſigoths ſettled in the South Parts of France, and in Catalonia, about 378. 4. Franks ſeiz'd upon Part of Germany, and Gaul, A. D. 420. 5. Vandals ſettled in Spain, and afterwards ſet up their Kingdom in Africa, A. D. 407. 6. Suevians and Alans ſeiz'd the weſtern Parts of Spain, A. D. 407, and invaded Italy, 457. 7. Burgundians came out of Germany into that Part of Gaul, called from them Burgundy, 407. 8. Rugians and Thoringians ſettled in Italy under Doacer, about 476. 9. Saxons made themſelves Maſters of Great-Britain, about the ſame Time, 476. And 10. Longobards ſettled firſt in Germany, A. D. 383, and afterwards ſucceeded the Heruli and Thuringi in Hungary. Lowth's Commentary on Dan. vii. 24.

Way of Writing, becauſe all the Objection, which he makes to theſe Prophecies of Daniel, concerning the four Empires, is, that they were too plain and perſpicuous, and more like hiſtorical Narratives of Facts already done, than prophetical Predictions of Things to come. But, however this Enemy of Chriſtianity might urge the Plainneſs of the Prophet's Predictions, in order to invalidate the Authority of his Book, it muſt not be deny'd, but that God, in his great Wiſdom, has ſo order'd the Matter, (for the Exerciſe of our Faith and Induſtry) and ſo fram'd the prophetick Stile, that there ſhould be ſtill ſome Shade, and Remains of Obſcurity, abiding upon the Face of almoſt every Prophecy, even after the Time of its Completion: And therefore, inſtead of being ſurpris'd at the great Variety of Computations, which Chronologers, and other learned Men, have put upon the (b) ſeventy Weeks mention'd in Daniel, we may much rather wonder, how, at this Diſtance of Time, they have been able to come to any tolerable Exactneſs.

The Words of the Prophecy are theſe: —— Seventy Weeks are determined upon thy People, and upon thy holy City, to finiſh the Tranſgreſſion, and to make an End of Sins, and to make Reconciliation for Iniquity, and to bring in everlaſting Righteouſneſs, and to anoint the Moſt Holy. Know therefore and underſtand, that from the going forth of the Commandment to reſtore, and to build Jeruſalem, unto the Meſſiah the Prince ‡, ſhall be ſeven Weeks, and threeſcore and two Weeks; and the Street ſhall be built again, and the Wall, even in troublous Times; and, after threeſcore and two Weeks, ſhall Meſſiah be cut off, but not for himſelf: And the People of the Prince that ſhall come, ſhall deſtroy the City, and the Sanctuary, and the End thereof ſhall be with a Flood; and, at the End of the War, Deſolations are determined: And he ſhall confirm the Covenant with many, for a Week; and, in the Midſt of the Week, he ſhall cauſe the Sacrifice and the Oblation to ceaſe; and, for the Overſpreading of Abominations, he ſhall make it deſolate, even until the Conſummation, and that determined ſhall be poured upon the Deſolate.

Now, to ſet theſe Words in a right Light, we muſt conſider, 1ſt, That the main Deſign and Intendment of them is, to foretel the Coming of the Meſſiah, his aboliſhing the Jewiſh, and ſetting up a new and more perfect Religion; which is ſo manifeſt to every common Reader, that later Jews (to avoid the Force of this one Prophecy) have even adventur'd to exclude the whole Book of Daniel from the Number of inſpir'd Writers, and to pronounce a Curſe upon any, that ſhall pretend to compute the Time of the Meſſiah's Coming. 2dly, It is agreed by moſt Interpreters, that the ſeventy Weeks here ſpoken of (according to the prophetick Stile) are to be taken for Weeks of Years, but, upon his going among the Greeks, he chang'd it to Porphyry, which is much of the ſame Signification; for Malchus in the Phœnician Language (which was then ſpoken at Tyre) ſignifies a King, as πορφύρεος, in the Greek, denotes one that wore Purple, which none but Kings, and Royal Perſons, were then permitted to do. He was a bitter Enemy to the Chriſtian Religion; and therefore wrote a large Volume againſt it, containing fifteen Books, whereof the twelfth was wholly levelled againſt the Prophecies of Daniel: But, becauſe the Predictions of this Prophet, concerning the ſeveral Empires, were acknowledg'd, on all Hands, to have been fulfilled, he did not go about to diſprove it; on the contrary, he endeavour'd to maintain, by the Teſtimony of the beſt Greek Hiſtorians then extant, that they were fulfilled ſo exactly, and ſo minutely, that it was impoſſible for them to be the Predictions of the Daniel, who belong'd to the Babyloniſh Captivity, and muſt therefore be the ſpurious Compoſition of ſome later Author. But this Argument St Jerom, in his Comment upon Daniel, fully turns upon him. It is much to be lamented however, that not only this whole Work of Porphyry is loſt, but that alſo the Books of Euſebius, Apollonarius, and Methodius, which were wrote in Anſwer to this Heathen Adverſary, (to the great Damage both of divine and human Knowledge) have all undergone the ſame Fate. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 164.

Years, every one of which contain'd ſeven Years, and ſo the ſeventy Weeks will amount to 490 Years, at the Expiration of which Term, the Matters contain'd in this Prophecy were to have their Accompliſhment: But then the Queſtion is, at what Point of Time theſe ſeventy Weeks, or, what is all one, the 490 Years, either began or expir'd? For, if we can but find out one of theſe Periods, there will be leſs Difficulty in ſtating the other. Now, 3dly, It ſeems pretty plain, that the ſeveral Events, ſpecify'd in the Beginning of this Prophecy, viz. To finiſh or reſtrain Tranſgreſſions, 2. To make an End of Sin, 3. To make Expiation, or Reconciliation for Iniquity, 4. To bring in everlaſting Righteouſneſs, 5. To ſeal up, or compleat, and fulfil Viſion and Prophecy, and 6. To anoint, or conſecrate the Moſt Holy, were all accompliſh'd in the great Work of our Salvation, by the Death and Paſſion, and by the Doctrine and Reſurrection of our Saviour Chriſt. For, being born without original, and having liv'd without actual Sin, he truly was the moſt Holy of all, that ever bore our Nature, and, being thereby fully fitted for this great Work, he was anointed with the Holy Ghoſt, and with Power, to be our Prieſt, our Prophet, and our King.

As our Prieſt, he offer'd himſelf a Sacrifice upon the Croſs, and thereby made Atonement for our Sins, which is making an End of them, by taking away their Guilt; and, in ſo doing, working Reconciliation for us with God. As our Prophet, he gave us his Goſpel, a Law of everlaſting Righteouſneſs, and the only Revelation we are to expect: And as our King, he ſent his Holy Spirit into our Hearts, to guide and influence us according to this Law; whereby he has taken an effectual Method to reſtrain, and extinguiſh in us all Manner of Tranſgreſſion; and, in doing all this, he has ſealed up, i. e. fulfill'd, and thoroughly finiſh'd all, that by Viſions and Prophecies had been before reveal'd concerning him.

Since (c) therefore all theſe Events were brought to paſs, and accompliſh'd at the Time of Chriſt's Death, this muſt determine us, where to fix the End of the Weeks, wherein theſe Events were to be accompliſh'd: And if the End of theſe Weeks is to be fix'd at the Death of Chriſt, then, 4thly, This will determine us, where to place the Beginning of them, viz. 490 Years before, † which is the very Year and Month †, wherein Ezra had his Commiſſion from Artaxerxes Longimanus, King of Perſia, for his returning to Jeruſalem, and there to reſtore the Church and State of the Jews.

(c) Prideaux's Connection Anno 409.

† Moſt learned Men agree, that the Death of Chriſt happen'd in the Year of the Julian Period 4746, and in the Jewiſh Month Niſan; and therefore, if we reckon 490 Years backward, this will lead us to the Month Niſan, and in the Year of the Julian Period 4256; which, according to Ptolemy's Canon, was the ſeventh Year of Artaxerxes's Reign, in which the Scripture tells us (Ezra vii. 7.) that this Commiſſion was granted. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 578.

† Others are of Opinion, that the Commiſſion here intended was not that which was given to Ezra, but that which Nehemiah had from Artaxerxes, in the twentieth Year of his Reign, at which Period they place the Commencement of theſe ſeventy Weeks; which, being reduc'd to 490 Lunar Years, bring us down to the Time, when our Saviour Chriſt was put to Death. There are ſome Variations indeed concerning the Caleulation of theſe Years. Chronologers differ among themſelves a little; but the greateſt Difference does not exceed nine or ten Years; and yet even this, Petavius, who has treated of the Subject, in his twelfth Book de Doctrinâ Temporum, has endeavour'd to accommodate, by ſhewing, that the Words of the Prophecy of Daniel, concerning the Going forth of the Command to reſtore and rebuild Jeruſalem, ought to be underſtood of the compleat Execution of that Order, which was perform'd by Nehemiah only; and that the twentieth Year of Artaxerxes, mention'd in Nehemiah i. 1. ought to be explain'd, not of the twentieth Year of Artaxerxes alone, but of the twentieth, from the Time, that his Father made him his Aſſociate in the Throne, which was ten Years before his Death: Which ten Years being deducted from the Number of Years, that elaps'd from the Decree of Artaxerxes in Favour of Nehemiah, to the Death of Jeſus Chriſt, deliver the Chronologers out of all their Perplexities, and diſpel all the Difficulties, that the few ſupernumerary Years occaſion'd. Calmet's Diſſer. ſur les ſeptante Semaines, &c. What the learn'd Biſhop Lloyd's Manner of computing theſe Weeks is,

The only Objection againſt this Computation is,——That the Words of the Prophecy ſeem to denote a real Building of the City, ſince it makes mention of its Streets and Walls; whereas that Work was executed upon the Decree by Cyrus, ſeveral Years before Ezra was in Commiſſion. But this Objection will appear of little Force, if once it be conſider'd, that figurative Expreſſions are, in a Manner, neceſſary in Prophecies, and that nothing is more common in Scripture, than by Jeruſalem, in particular, to mean the whole Political and Eccleſiaſtical State of the Jews.

There is another Difficulty obſervable in this Prophecy, which deſerves our Attention, and that is, the Diviſion of the ſeventy Weeks into three diſtinct Periods, i. e. into ſeven Weeks, ſixty-two Weeks, and one Week, to each of which a different Event is aſſign'd. In the ſeven Weeks, or 49 Years, from the Going-forth of the Commandment, the Streets and Walls of Jeruſalem, i. e. the Reſtoration and Eſtabliſhment of the Church and State of the Jews, is to be accompliſh'd. In the ſixty-two Weeks, or 434 Years more, the Meſſiah is to come, and make his Appearance in the World; and in one Week, or 7 Years after this, he is to confirm a Covenant with many, and cauſe the Sacrifice and Oblation to ceaſe: All which were literally fulfilled. For, in the Space of 49 Years, which anſwers to ſeven Weeks, the Reformation and Eſtabliſhment of the Jewiſh Church and State was carry'd on, and compleated, firſt by Ezra, in Virtue of a Decree granted in the ſeventh Year of Artaxerxes, and afterwards by Nehemiah, in Virtue of another, granted him by the ſame Prince, in the twentieth Year of his Reign. From that Time, in the Space of 434 Years, which anſwers to ſixty-two Weeks, our bleſſed Saviour appear'd in the World as the Meſſiah; and for ſeven Years after that, (which anſwers to the one Week in the Prophecy) firſt, by his Forerunner John the Baptiſt, for the Space of three Years and an half more, he confirm'd the Covenant of the Goſpel with as many of the Jews, as were converted, and embrac'd theſe Laws of everlaſting Righteouſneſs, which he publiſh'd; and, at length, by the Sacrifice of his moſt precious Blood, made all other Victims and Oblations (which were but Types and Emblems of his) for ever ceaſe, and be aboliſh'd. As to the other Part of the Prophecy, it relates ſo evidently to the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, that it needs no Explanation. Whoever has read Joſephus cannot but obſerve, that, by the Deſtruction of the City and Sanctuary, by the People of the Prince that was to come, who with their Armies, and deſolating Abominations, ſhould invade Judea as with a Flood, and, by a terrible and conſuming War, bring utter Ruin and Deſtruction upon it, and upon all the People of the Jews that ſhould dwell therein, can be meant nothing, but Titus, at the Head of the Roman Army, executing the Wrath of God for the Murther of his Son, our Saviour, upon that devoted City and People, in ſuch a terrible and tragical Manner, as their Hiſtorian has related.

Ezekiel's Chariot.

EZEKIEL indeed, according to the Sentiment of ſome Rabbins, was a Prophet of more Obſcurity, than Daniel, and, eſpecially, in the Deſcription of the Chariot, (as they call the firſt Chapter) ſo very intricate and abſtruſe, that they would not permit it to be read by any, until they were arriv'd at the Age of thirty. The Deſign of the Prophet in that Chapter is, to repreſent the great and glorious Appearance of God, coming to give him Inſtructions in the Management of his prophetick Office; and to this Purpoſe he makes uſe of Images, foreign indeed to our Manner of Writing, but what are all ſignificant, and full of Majeſty. ſeats himſelf on a radiant Throne, ſupported by Cherubims, mov'd by Wheels of an uncommon Make, cover'd with the Canopy of Heaven, and encircled with the Rainbow: and, tho', in the Deſcription of the Cherubims and Wheels, there may be Something not ſo agreeable to our Way of Thinking, yet we are not to ſuppoſe, but that, in the whole, it was adapted to the Age, wherein the Prophet wrote, and in each Part perhaps did include an excellent Moral. Angels, of what Rank or Denomination ſoever, are all miniſtering Spirits, and the Inſtruments of God's Providence in the Government of the World; and therefore are repreſented here as ſupporting his Throne, and, in Alluſion (d) very likely to the Triumphal Chariots of Eaſtern Princes, which are drawn by ſeveral Sorts of Beaſts, they are ſaid (e) every one to have four Faces. Their Wings denote their Readineſs and Alacrity; their Eyes, their Sagacity and Vigilance; their Hands, their Prudence and Dexterity; their Feet, their Steadineſs and Reſolution in performing the Divine Commands; and (f) the Noiſe of their Wings, when they went, expreſs'd the Terribleneſs of the Judgments, which they were to execute upon Jeruſalem, and all the Jewiſh Nation.

AND, in like Manner, (g) the Make and Faſhion of the Wheels, which theſe Cherubims actuate, ſhews, that all the Ways of Providence are uniform, and ſubſervient to each other; as (h) their going perpetually forward intimates, that Providence does nothing in vain, but always accompliſhes its Deſigns. (i) The Largeneſs of the Rings, or Circumference of the Wheels, denotes the vaſt Compaſs of Providence, (k) which reacheth from one End to another mightily (l). Their being full of Eyes implies, that the Motions of Providence are directed by unerring Wiſdom; and (m) their moving, when the Cherubs mov'd, ſeems to demonſtrate, with what Readineſs and Alacrity all the Inſtruments of Providence do concur in carrying on his great Deſigns. Thus full of Inſtruction is every little Symbol in this Deſcription! And therefore it is doing Injuſtice to the Character of the Prophet, to find Fault with his Images, becauſe they agree not with the preſent Mode, or to cenſure his Writings, before we underſtand them.

And his Gog and Magog explain'd.

HIS Prophecy (n) concerning Gog and Magog is perhaps deſervedly thought one of the moſt difficult Paſſages, that occur in the Old Teſtament; and, accordingly, the Conjectures about it have been various. It is generally agreed however, that the Words ‖ Gog and Magog are not real, but fictitious Names; and therefore their Wars with the People of God ſome have apply'd to the Cruelties of Antiochus Epiphanes againſt the Jews; others, to the Perſecutions of the Gentiles againſt the Chriſtians; ſome, to the Irruption of the Goths, and other barbarous Nations into the Roman Empire; others, to the Ravages, which the Turks made in Aſia, and ſome Parts of Europe; and others again, to thoſe (as is propheſy'd elſewhere) Oppreſſions, which, in the latter Days, Antichriſt ſhall bring upon the true Profeſſors of our moſt holy Religion.

‖ Magog was the Son of Japhet, Gen. x. 2. from whom the Scythians were generally ſuppos'd to be deriv'd; a People well known in the Eaſt for their frequent Irruptions, and Devaſtations therein made, and who, for their Rapine and Violence, Cruelties and Barbarities of all Kinds, for ſome Time, paſs'd into a Proverb; and therefore, whether we ſuppoſe Cambyſes or Antiochus (as we ſhall ſee hereafter) to be the Gog in Ezekiel, the Prophet's calling him by the Name of a wild Scythian can be no Objection, becauſe ſcarce ever were any two Men more cruel, more ſavage, and brutal in their Paſſions, than they; inſomuch, that we may truly ſay, that, as the Scythians were the Terror of all the Eaſt, ſo Cambyſes and Antiochus were the Horror and Abomination of Mankind. Calmet's Comment. ſur Gog & Magog.

(o) The main Current of Interpreters will have the Gog in Ezekiel to be Antiochus; but then there are ſome Exceptions to this Opinion, that may be gather'd from Ezekiel himſelf. For, whereas the Gog in Ezekiel (p) was to fall upon the Mountains of Iſrael; (q) was to be buried in the Eaſt of the Mediterranean Sea; was to have an Army deſtroy'd, (r) by their turning their Swords upon one another; and (s) the Iſraelites were to gather the Spoils, and burn their Arms for ſeveral Years: Whoever looks into the Hiſtory of Antiochus, will ſee, that he dy'd at a little Town, called Taba, in the Confines of Perſia and Babylonia; that, upon his Death, his Army ſuffer'd no Defeat, neither did the Jews reap any Advantage by it, becauſe his Son Antiochus Eupater continu'd to oppreſs and harraſs them with Wars, as much as ever.

But if Antiochus was not the Gog in Ezekiel, the Queſtion is, Who was? And to reſolve this Queſtion, we may obſerve, that (be the Perſon who he will) the Prophet ſpeaks of him as a powerful Prince, who ſhould come from the North, (t) with a numerous Army, (u) made up of different Nations, exaſperated againſt the Jews, and with full Intent (x) to plunder and ravage their Country; but that he ſhould be diſappointed in his Deſign, and (y) his Army miraculouſly deſtroy'd.

We may obſerve farther, that this Event was to happen, after the Return from the Captivity; becauſe the Prophet mentions it, as a Thing future: (z) Thou ſhalt come into a Land, (ſpeaking of Gog) that is brought back from the Sword, and againſt a People, who have lately returned from amidſt the Nations, where they had been diſperſed; which can be meant of none but the Jews; but (a) that it could not happen after the Time of the Maccabees, becauſe the Jewiſh Hiſtory is, from thence, ſo very well known, that a Tranſaction of this Nature could not well eſcape us; and therefore we may conclude, that it was between the Return from the Captivity, and the firſt Appearing of the Maccabees, (a very obſcure Interval as to the Jewiſh Affairs) that what the Prophet relates of Gog, and his Adventures, came to paſs; and if ſo, we can ſee no Prince or Potentate, to whom the Characters, which the inſpir'd Writers give of him, can ſo properly belong, as to Cambyſes, the Son of Cyrus.

According to the Accounts of all Hiſtory, he was cruel and barbarous, exceſſively impious, and inſatiably covetous. His Indignation againſt the Jews he expreſs'd (b) by a Revocation of a Grant, which his Father gave for the Rebuilding of their City and Temple. He led a large Army into Egypt, compos'd of all the different Nations, (c) that Ezekiel mentions, who were overwhelm'd (a great many of them at leaſt) by the driven Sands of the Deſerts. In his Return from Egypt, (d) he dy'd at Ecbatana in Paleſtine, at the Foot of Mount Carmel, which faces the Mediterranean Sea, of a Wound, which he receiv'd by his Sword's falling accidentally out of the Scabbard; ſo that a great many Lines of the Picture, which the Prophet draws of Gog, meet in Cambyſes, tho' it muſt be acknowledg'd that all do not.

(e) What bids fair for this Opinion however is, the Order and Series of Events, which Ezekiel ſeems to have obſerv'd in his Prophecies: For, having firſt foretold the Taking of Jeruſalem, the Captivity of Babylon, and the Deſolation of Tyre, Egypt, and ſome other Countries neighbouring upon Judea; he proceeds, in the next Place, to the Diſſolution of the Chaldean Monarchy, and the Return of the Jews from their Captivity: But, before they are well ſettled in their native Country, Gog, and his numerous Army, are introduc'd duc'd to trouble their Repoſe, and threaten their Ruin; but that God interpoſes to rid them of this fierce Enemy, who is ſaid to have fallen in the Mountains of Iſrael, he, and all his Army. It muſt be own'd indeed, that the Writers of the Life of Cambyſes make mention of no Intention in this Prince to fall foul upon the Jews, nor do they ſay any Thing of the Deſtruction of his Army, enſuant upon his Death; but upon the Suppoſition, that the Prophecy relates to him, God, who knew the evil Diſpoſition of that Prince's Heart towards the Jews, (which no profane Author could penetrate) has given us this Part of his Hiſtory: (f) Thus ſaith the Lord, it ſhall alſo come to paſs, that at the ſame Time, thou ſhalt think an evil Thought, and ſhalt ſay, I will go up to the Land of unwalled Villages; I will go to them, that are at Reſt, that dwell ſafely, all of them dwelling without Walls, and having neither Bars nor Gates, to take a Spoil, and to take a Prey, to turn my Hand upon the deſolate Places that are now inhabited, and upon the People, that are now gathered out of the Nations. What became of his Army after he was dead, we cannot tell. Herodotus, who gives us the largeſt Account of him, immediately after his Deceaſe, paſſes to the Hiſtory of the Magian, who uſurp'd his Throne: And therefore we may ſuppoſe, (g) that as they conſiſted of ſo many different Nations, and follow'd him only by Compulſion; when once their Head was gone, they crumbled into Parties, quarrelled, and (as (h) the Prophet had foretold) turn'd their Arms upon one another; which was no more, than what (i) the Philiſtines did in the Time of Saul, and (k) the Midianites, when Gibeon judg'd Iſrael.

Some ſeeming Inconſiſtencies reconciled.

We have been ſo large in our Anſwers to ſome of the laſt Objections, that we have leſs Room left for the Reconciliation of ſome ſeeming Inconſiſtencies, that are alledg'd in this Period of Hiſtory: But a little will ſuffice for this.

For, 1. Whereas the Number of the People, returning from the Captivity, is much larger in the general Sum than it is in the Particulars; it is to be remember'd, that not only thoſe of Judah and Benjamin, but ſeveral alſo of the other Tribes, took the Benefit of the Decree, which Cyrus granted in Favour of the Jews, to return again into their own Land. That they did ſo is plain from the Tenor of the Decree itſelf, which extends (l) to all the People of the God of Iſrael, whereof (as Joſephus informs us) Zerubbabel ſent a Copy into Media, to the reſt of the Ten Tribes, who (together with the reſt of the Fathers of Judah and Benjamin) are ſuppos'd to be thoſe, (m) whoſe Spirit God had raiſed up to go: And therefore the Difference between the groſs and the particular Sums ariſes from hence,—— (n) That, in the latter, the Tribes of Judah, Benjamin, and Levi, only are reckon'd by their Families; whereas, in the former, all thoſe of the other Tribes, that accompany'd them in their Return to Jeruſalem, are added.

This accounts for the Difference between the general and particular Sums in Ezra: And then why the Particulars in Ezra differ from the Particulars in Nehemiah, the Matter (according to a very competent (o) Judge) is to be conceiv'd and apprehended thus,——“That Nehemiah found the Liſt and Catalogue of “thoſe, that came up in the firſt of Cyrus, “as it was then taken, and that he called “over the Names of the Families, as “they lay in Order there; that he obſerv'd “the Order of the old Liſt, in calling “them over, and liſting them, but took “the real Number of them, as they were “at the Time, when he number'd “them;

“them; that ſome Families were now more in Number, than they were, when the firſt Liſt was made, and ſome fewer; and ſome, that were in that Liſt, were not to be found now; for ſome had more of the ſame Stock come up from Babylon, ſince the firſt Numbering, and others, who had come up at firſt, and were then number'd, were now gone back again.”

2. WHEREAS it is ſaid of the fourſcore Iſraelites, that they were (p) carrying their Offerings to the Houſe of the Lord, when the Houſe of the Lord at Jeruſalem had, for ſome Time before, been deſtroy'd by the Babylonians; (q) why may we not ſuppoſe, that the Place, where the Temple ſtood, (even after its Deſtruction) was held in ſuch Veneration, that the People, who were left in the Country, after the general Captivity, choſe to offer their Sacrifices and Oblations there, as long as they remain'd in the Land; and that, having no Prieſts at Jeruſalem, they might go to Mizpah (where theſe Servants of the Lord had, very probably, put themſelves under the Governor's Protection) to fetch one from thence, in order to aſſiſt them in their religious Offices?

(r) SAMARIA indeed, and the other Parts, from whence theſe devout Perſons came, lay to the North, and Mizpah to the South of Jeruſalem, a little too far diſtant, for them to go for a Prieſt; and therefore others have imagin'd, that, after the Deſtruction of the Temple, Gedaliah, by the Advice of the Prophet Jeremiah, and the Prieſts, that were with him, had eſtabliſh'd a Tabernacle, and built an Altar at Mizpah, where the People, for the preſent, might reſort to pay their Devotions, and preſent their Oblations, until, by ſome happy Turn of Affairs, their Temple might come to be built again; and that this Tabernacle and Altar might, with Propriety enough, be called the Houſe of the Lord.

WE can hardly believe indeed, that, after the Temple was gone, the People were to live without any Place of religious Worſhip; and therefore, conſidering that Mizpah was all along eſteemed a Place of more than ordinary Sanctity; that, after the Return of the Ark, there (s) Samuel gathered together all Iſrael before the Lord; that there he built an Altar, and (t) offered a Sacrifice; and that in the Time of the Maccabees, when the Jews were in the ſame Caſe as now, without a Temple, and without an Altar, they here (u) aſſembled themſelves together; for Mizpah (as the Author of that Hiſtory tells us) was the Place where they prayed aforetime in Iſrael; we cannot but think, that there is ſomething of Reality in the Suppoſition, and that theſe eighty pious Mourners were going to Mizpah, and not to Jeruſalem, (x) when the bloody and perfidious Iſhmael circumvented them.

3. ONCE more: Whereas it is ſaid, (y) that the Prieſts, and Levites, and Elders of the Fathers, who had ſeen the firſt Temple, wept, when the Foundation of the ſecond was laid, tho' it is manifeſt, that the latter Temple was (z) 40 Cubits larger than the former; it muſt be remember'd that the Reaſon of their weeping was, not ſo much becauſe it was like to prove far inferior to that of Solomon as to its outward Structure, but becauſe it was to want thoſe extraordinary Marks of the Divine Favour, wherewith the other Temple was honour'd. The ſecond Temple was built upon the ſame Foundations with the firſt; and therefore the different Meaſures, that we find of them in the Books of Kings and Ezra, are to be underſtood in Reſpect of the different Diſtances, between which the ſaid Meaſures were taken.

The twenty Cubits Breadth, which is ſaid of Solomon's Temple, was from the Inſide of the Wall on the one Side, to the Inſide of the Wall on the other; but the ſixty Cubits Breadth of that to be built by Zerubbabel, was the Breadth of the whole Building, from the Inſide of the outer Wall of it on the one Side, to the Inſide of the outer Wall on the other. So that the Difference of the ſaid twenty Cubits Breadth, and of the ſaid ſixty Cubits Breadth, is no more than this; ——That the one is meant of the Temple ſtrictly ſo called; the other of the Temple and its appertaining Buildings. Both the Temples then, without all Doubt, were of the ſame Dimenſions; but then here was the Difference, the ſad Difference, which drew Tears from the Eyes of the Elders, viz. that, in all Appearance, there were little or no Hopes, that the poor Beginnings of the latter Temple would ever be raiſ'd to the Grandeur and Magnificence of the former, ſince the one had been built by the wiſeſt and richeſt King, and conſtantly adorn'd by ſome one or other of his Poſterity; the other now begun by a ſmall Company of Exiles, juſt return'd from their Captivity; the one, in a Time of profound Peace, and the greateſt Opulence; the other in a Time of common Calamity and Diſtreſs; the one finiſh'd with the moſt coſtly Stones and Timber, wrought with exquiſite Art, and overlaid with vaſt Quantities of Gold; the other to be raiſ'd out of no better Materials, than what could be dug from the ruinous Foundation of the old one. But the Occaſion of their Grief was not only this, that the Materials and Ornaments of the ſecond Temple (a) were even as nothing, in Compariſon of the firſt; but that the Ark of the Covenant †, and the Mercy-ſeat †, which was upon it, the Holy Fire † upon the Altar, the

† This was a ſmall Cheſt, or Coffer, three Feet nine Inches in Length, two Feet three Inches in Breadth, and two Feet three Inches in Height, Exod. xxv. 10, 22. In it were put the two Tables of the Law, the broken ones, as well as the whole ones, (ſay the Rabbins) and nothing elſe was put therein, when it was brought into Solomon's Temple, 1 Kings viii. 9. but, in Proceſs of Time, Aaron's Rod, the Pot of Manna, and the original Volume of the Law, written by Moſes's own Hand, came to be likewiſe put in it, Heb. ix. 4. The Jews have a Tradition, which Epiphanius (in Vitâ Jerem. Prophetæ) takes notice of, that Jeremiah, foreſeeing the approaching Ruin of the Temple, carry'd the Ark of the Covenant into a Cave, and by his Prayers prevailed that it might be ſunk, and ſwallow'd up in the Rock, ſo that it might never more be ſeen; and this, tho' a Fiction, is deſign'd to inform us, that, in the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, this ſacred Piece of Furniture was loſt. The Jews indeed, upon the Building of the ſecond Temple, made an Ark, of the ſame Shape and Dimenſions with the firſt, and put it in the ſame Place; but it had none of its Honours and Prerogatives; no Tables of the Law, no Aaron's Rod, no Pot of Manna in it, no Appearance of the Divine Glory over it, no Oracles given from it; the only Uſe that was made of it, was, to be a Repreſentative of the former, on the great Day of Expiation, and to be a Repoſitory of the Holy Scriptures, i. e. of the original Copy of that Collection which was made of them, after the Captivity, by Ezra, and the Men of the great Synagogue. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 535.

† This was the Cover of the Ark of the Covenant. It was made of ſolid Gold, and at the two Ends of it, were fix'd two Cherubims of the ſame Metal, which, by their Wings extended forwards, ſeem'd to form a Throne for the Majeſty of God, who, in Scripture, is repreſented to us as ſitting between the Cherubims, and the Ark itſelf was, as it were, his Footſtool. The Hebrew Word Caphoreth, by being tranſlated Propitiatory, ſeems to imply, that from thence the Lord heard the Vows and Prayers of his People, and pardon'd them their Sins; and by its being, at other Times, tranſlated Oracle, ſeems farther to imply, that from thence he manifeſted his Will and Pleaſure, and gave Reſponſes to Moſes. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

† This Fire came down from Heaven, firſt upon the Altar in the Tabernacle, at the Conſecration of Aaron, and his Sons, to the Prieſthood, Levit. ix. 24. and, afterwards it deſcended a-new upon the Altar in the Temple of Solomon, at its Conſecration, 2 Chron. vii. 1. and there it was conſtantly fed and maintain'd by the Prieſts, Day and Night, in the ſame Manner, as it had been in the Tabernacle. The Jews have a Tradition, that Jeremiah, foreſeeing the Deſtruction of the Temple, took this Fire, and hid it in a Pit, but that, at the Rebuilding of the Temple, being brought again from thence, it reviv'd upon the Altar; but this is all a Fiction: For the Generality of them allow, that, at the Deſtruction of the Temple, it was extinguiſh'd, and, in the Time of the ſecond Temple, nothing was made uſe of, for all their Burnt-Offerings, but common Fire only. Prideaux's Connection.

the Urim and Thummim †, the Spirit of Prophecy †, the Shechinah †, or Divine Preſence, the five great Things, for which the former Temple was ſo renown'd, were loſt and gone, and never to be recover'd to this other.

THIS was a juſt Matter of Lamentation to thoſe, that had ſeen theſe ſingular Tokens of the Divine Favour in the former Temple, and a Diſcouragement of their Proceeding with the Building of the preſent; and therefore the Prophet Haggai was ſent to inform them, that all theſe Wants and Defects ſhould be abundantly repair'd by the Coming of the Meſſiah, the true Shechinah of the Divine Majeſty, in the Time of the ſecond Temple: (b) I will ſhake all Nations, and the Deſire of all Nations ſhall come, and I will fill this Houſe with Glory; the Glory of this latter Houſe ſhall be greater than of the former, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts.

† Whether the Urim and Thummim lay in the High-Prieſt's Breaſt-plate itſelf, or only in the Clearneſs and Perfection of thoſe Oracular Anſwers, which he receiv'd from God, when he went to conſult him upon any important Matter, ſo it was, that having put on all his pontifical Robes, and preſented himſelf in the Sanctuary, before the Holy of Holies, he knew, by one Means or other, moſt probably by an audible Voice from the Mercy-Seat, (which was within behind the Veil) what the Divine Pleaſure was concerning the Affair, wherein he came to conſult him. This was a ſingular Privilege vouchſafed to the Jews, but it does not appear from the ſacred Hiſtory, that there are any Footſteps of conſulting the Lord in this Manner after the Building of Solomon's Temple to the Time of its Deſtruction; and, after its Deſtruction, all are agreed, that this was never reſtor'd; ſo that there ſeems to be ſome Reaſon for that Maxim among the Jews, viz. that the holy Spirit ſpake to the Children of Iſrael, during the Tabernacle, by Urim and Thummim; under the firſt Temple, by the Prophets; and under the ſecond by Bath-col, or a Voice ſent from Heaven, such as was heard at the Baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt, and at his Transfiguration. Patrick's Commentary, and Calmet's Dictionary.

† This, it muſt be own'd, was not only wholly withdrawn from the Jewiſh Church, in the Time of the ſecond Temple. The Prophets Haggai, Zachariah, and Malachi liv'd in this Time, and propheſy'd; but after their Death, (which the Rabbins ſay happen'd in one Year) the prophetick Spirit wholly ceas'd from among the Jews. Prideaux's Connection.

† The Shechinah was a ſenſible Token of God's Preſence among the Jews, which conſiſted of a viſible Cloud, reſting over the Mercy-Seat, or Cover of the Ark of the Covenant, juſt above the two Cherubims, that overſhadow'd it, Lev. xvi. 2. It there firſt appear'd, when Moſes conſecrated the Tabernacle, and afterwards, at the Conſecration of the Temple by Solomon, was tranſlated thither; (Vide Page 449.) and there continu'd, in the ſame viſible Manner, while the Ark was in its proper Place, either in the Tabernacle, or Temple, (but not while it was in Movement, as it often was during the Time of the Tabernacle) 'till the Babylonians deſtroy'd the Temple, after which it never appear'd more. Prideaux's Connection.

DISSERTATION I.

Of the Pride and Puniſhment of NEBUCHADNEZZAR.

The Occaſion of his Pride.

WHOEVER looks back upon the Actions of Nebuchadnezzar, will eaſily perceive, that he was a great and ſucceſsful Warrior; that, during (c) his Father's Life-time, and while he commanded the Army as General under him, he drove the Egyptians (the only Nation that pretended, at this Time, to rival the Babyloniſh Monarchy) out of Syria and Paleſtine, took Jeruſalem, and carry'd away the People Captive; and that, upon his own Acceſſion to the Throne, he overcame the Phœnicians and Tyrians, over-ran all Egypt, and made it tributary, and return'd home in Triumph loaded with rich Spoils. The Scripture however does not impute the Occaſion of his Pride to the Number of his Conqueſts, or the Extent of his Dominions, but to the State and Magnificence of his Royal City, in which (as it were at one View) he ſaw all the Fruits of his martial Toil, all the Spoils of his many Victories, and all the Revenues of his vaſt Empire compriz'd, and diſplay'd in their utmoſt Splendor. For while he was walking upon his Palace, at Babylon, very probably in his Hanging-Gardens, and in the uppermoſt Terraſs of them, from whence he might have a full Proſpect of the whole City, (d) Is not this Great Babylon, (ſaid he to himſelf) which I have built for the Houſe of the Kingdom, by the Might of my Power, and for the Honour of my Majeſty?

BABYLON was one of the moſt antient Cities of the World. It was founded by Nimrod, not long after the Building of the famous Tower of Babel, and was enlarg'd and beautify'd by Semiramis; but Nebuchadnezzar was the Perſon, who put the finiſhing Hand to it, to make it one of the great Wonders of the World: And therefore it may not be amiſs to take a ſhort Survey of the Works, that are generally aſcrib'd to him, in order to ſee what Grounds he might have for this arrogant Vaunt.

A Deſcription of the City and Walls of Babylon.

1. The whole City, which ſtood on a large Flat, conſiſted properly of two Parts, which were divided by the River Euphrates. That Part of it, which was on the Eaſt Side of the River, was the old City; the other, on the Weſt Side, was added by Nebuchadnezzar, and the whole was a Square of an hundred and twenty Furlongs, or fifteen Miles every Way, which made the whole Circumference of it to be an hundred and eighty Furlongs, or exactly threeſcore Miles. Its Walls, which were in Thickneſs 87 Feet †, in Height 350 Feet, and in Compaſs 480 Furlongs, were all built of large Bricks, cemented together with Bitumen, a glutinous Slime, which, iſſuing out of the Earth in that Country, binds ſtronger and firmer than Lime, and, in a ſhort Time, grows harder than the very Brick and Stone, which it cements.

The

† Some Authors indeed will have them to have been no more than 50 Cubits; but then they ſpeak of them only as they were, after the Time of Darius Hyſtaſpes: For the Babylonians having revolted from him, and, in Confidence of their ſtrong Walls, ſtood out againſt him in a long Siege; after he had taken the Place, (in order to prevent their Rebellion for the future) he took away their Gates, and beat down their Walls to the Height abovemention'd, and beyond this they were never after rais'd. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 570.

A. M. 3417, &c. Ant. Chriſ. 587, &c.

THE City was encompaſs'd, without the Walls, with a vaſt Ditch, filled with Water, and lin'd with Bricks on both Sides, after the Manner of a Counterſcarp; and, as the Earth, which was dug out of it, made the Bricks, wherewith the Walls were built, we may judge of the Depth and Largeneſs of the Ditch, from the vaſt Height and Thickneſs of the Walls. In the whole Compaſs of the Wall, there were an hundred Gates, i. e. five and twenty on each of the four Sides, all made of ſolid Braſs; and, between every two of theſe Gates, at proper Diſtances were three Towers. i. e. At the four Corners of this great Square, there were four Towers [†] between each of theſe Corners, and the next Gate on either Side three Towers; and every one of theſe Towers was ten Feet higher than the Walls.

ANSWERING to every one of theſe Gates, there was a Street, which led from Gate to Gate; ſo that there were fifty in all, each fifteen Miles long; whereof 25 going one Way, and 25 another, they croſs'd each other at right Angles, and ſo cut the whole City out into 676 Squares, each of which was four Furlongs and an half on every Side, i. e. two Miles and a Quarter in Compaſs; and round theſe, on every Side towards the Streets, ſtood the Houſes, all built three or four Stories high with Fronts adorn'd with all Manner of Embelliſhments, and with Yards and Gardens thrown backwards. Beſides theſe, there were four other Streets, built only on one Side, becauſe they had the Wall on the other, which went round the four Sides of the City, and were all of them two hundred Feet broad, tho' the other Streets were but an hundred and fifty.

From Jer. xl. 7. to xlv. all Daniel, and from Ezra i. to v.

QUITE croſs the City ran a Branch of the River Euphrates, which enter'd in on the North, and went out on the South Side; and over it, in the very Middle of the City, was a Bridge of a Furlong in Length, and thirty Feet in Breadth, built with wonderful Art, to ſupply the Defect of a Foundation in the Bottom of the River, which was all ſandy. By this Bridge a Communication was kept up between the two Parts of the City; and, at the two Extremities of it, ſtood two Palaces, the old one on the Eaſt, and new one on the Weſt Side of the River. The former of theſe took up four of the Squares abovemention'd, the other, nine; and the Temple of Belus, which ſtood near the old Palace, took up another.

Of the Temple of Belus.

2. THE Temple of Belus, which was one of the moſt wonderful Works in the World, was a Square of a Furlong on each Side, i. e. half a Mile in the whole Compaſs; and conſiſted of eight Towers (or what ſeem'd like Towers) built one above another. Herodotus tells us, that the Way to go up it was by Stairs, on the Outſide round it; from whence it ſeems moſt likely, that the whole Aſcent to it was by the Benching-in, drawn in a ſloping Line, from the Bottom to the Top eight Times round it, and that this made the Appearance of eight Towers one above another. The eight Towers (as they are called) being like ſo many Stories, were each of them [†] ſeventy-five Feet high, and in them were many great Rooms, with arch'd

---

[†] This is to be underſtood only of thoſe Parts of the Walls, where there was need of Towers; for ſome Parts of them, lying againſt Moraſſes always full of Water, where they could not be approach'd by any Enemy, had no need of any Towers at all for their Defence, and therefore in them there were none built: For, whereas the whole Number of them amounted to no more than two hundred and fifty, had the ſame uniform Order been obſerv'd in their Diſpoſition all round, there muſt have been many more. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 570.

[†] Some, following the Miſtake of the Latin Verſion of Herodotus, wherein the loweſt of theſe Towers is ſaid to be a Furlong thick, and a Furlong high, will have each of theſe Towers to be a Furlong high, which, amounting to a Mile in the Whole, is enough to ſhock any one's Belief. But the Greek of Herodotus, which is the authentick Text of that Hiſtorian, ſays no ſuch Thing, but only that it was a Furlong long, and a Furlong broad, without mentioning any Thing of its Height at all. And therefore Strabo, in his Deſcription of it, calling it a Pyramid, becauſe of its decreaſing and benching-in at every Tower, ſays of the whole, that it was a Furlong high, and a Furlong arch'd Roofs, ſupported with Pillars, which after that the Place was conſecrated to an idolatrous Uſe, were all made Parts of the Temple: But the moſt ſacred Part of all, and where the chiefeſt Devotions were perform'd, was the uppermoſt Story, over which (on the Top of the Tower) was an Obſervatory, by the Benefit of which the Babylonians advanc'd their Knowledge in Aſtronomy beyond * all other Nations.

THIS Tower, and the ſeveral Rooms in it, were all that was called the Temple of Belus, until Nebuchadnezzar enlarg'd it with vaſt Buildings, which were erected in a Square of two Furlongs on every Side, or a Mile in Circumference. On the Outſide of theſe was a Wall incloſing the whole, in which were ſeveral Gates leading to the Temple, all made of ſolid Braſs, very probably from the brazen Sea, the brazen Pillars, and the other brazen Veſſels, which, (e) from the Temple of Jeruſalem, were carry'd to Babylon.

THIS Temple ſtood till the Time of Xerxes: But he, on his Return from the Grecian Expedition, having firſt plunder'd it of its immenſe Riches, among which were ſeveral Images or Statues of maſſy Gold, demoliſh'd the whole of it, and laid it all in Ruins. Alexander, upon his Return to Babylon from his Indian Expedition, propos'd to have rebuilt it, and, to that Purpoſe, ſet ten thouſand Men on work to clear away the Rubbiſh: But his Death, in a ſhort Time after, put an End to all further Proceedings in that Deſign, and (as modern Travellers aſſure us) the Knowledge of the very Place, where it once ſtood, is at this Time loſt.

The Palaces and Hanging-Gardens.

3. NEAR to this Temple, on the Eaſt Side of the River, as we ſaid, ſtood the old Palace of the Kings of Babylon, four Miles in Circumference; and exactly over-againſt it, on the other Side of the River, was the new Palace, built by Nebuchadnezzar, eight Miles in Compaſs, and ſurrounded with three Walls one within another. But the moſt wonderful Things belonging to it were the Hanging-Gardens, which Nebuchadnezzar made in Complaiſance to his Wife Amylis, Daughter of Aſtyages, King of Media: For ſhe, retaining a ſtrong Inclination for the Mountains and Foreſts of her own Country, deſir'd to have ſomething like it in Babylon, and therefore, to gratify her, he erected this monſtrous Work of Vanity.

THESE Gardens contain'd a Space of four hundred Feet ſquare, and were carry'd up aloft into the Air, in the Manner of ſeveral large Terraſſes, one above another, until the higheſt of them came up to the Height of the Walls of the City, that is to ſay, was three hundred and fifty Feet high. The Aſcent was from Terraſs to Terraſs, by Stairs ten Feet wide, and the whole Pile was ſuſtain'd by vaſt Arches built upon Arches, one above another, and ſtrengthen'd by a Wall, ſurrounding it on every Side, of two and twenty Feet in Thickneſs.

a Furlong on every Side, which, without any farther Addition, makes it exceed the greateſt of the Pyramids of Egypt, I mean for its Height. For, whereas the Height of the talleſt Pyramid was no more than 481 Feet, that of the Temple of Belus was 600, i. e. higher by 119 Feet, which is one quarter of the whole. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 570.

* The Babylonians made great Boaſts of the Antiquity of their Knowledge in this Kind of Learning. They reckon'd four hundred ſeventy-three thouſand Years, from the Obſervations of their firſt Aſtrologers, to the Arrival of Alexander the Great: But Ariſtotle, who was curious in enquiring into the Truth of what was related of theſe Obſervations, deſir'd of Caliſthenes, his Scholar, who accompany'd Alexander to Babylon, to ſend him the moſt certain and exact Account, that he could gather of this Matter; and, accordingly, he ſent him Aſtronomical Obſervations, that had been made for one Thouſand nine Hundred and three Years, which came within an Hundred and fifteen Years of the Flood, or fifteen after the Tower of Babel was built, but fell infinitely ſhort of their other monſtrous Computation, tho' this of Caliſthenes ſeems to be a little enlarg'd; becauſe, according to our Chronology, we reckon no more than eighteen Hundred Years from Nimrod, and the Tower of Babel, to the Reign of Alexander at Babylon. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Babylon.

On the Top of the Arches, were firſt laid large flat Stones, ſixteen Feet long, and four broad; over them was a Layer or Reed, mix'd with a great Quantity of Bitumen; over this were two Rows of Brick, cloſely cemented together by Plaiſter; over theſe were laid thick Sheets of Lead, and all this to keep the Moiſture of the Mould from draining away; and then, laſtly, upon this Lead, was laid ſuch a large Quantity of Earth heap'd together, as afforded Depth enough for the largeſt Trees to take root in it. For, in this Garden there was every Thing that could either delight the Eye, or gratify the Curioſity, beautiful and large Trees, Flowers, Plants, and Shrubs; and, to keep every Thing verdant and gay, in the upper Terraſs, there was an Aqueduct, or Engine, which drew up Water out of the River, into a Kind of a Reſervoir above, and from thence water'd the whole Garden.

The Banks of the River.

4. The River indeed, at a certain Seaſon of the Year, viz. in the Months of June, July, and Auguſt, by the Sun's melting the Snow in the Mountains of Armenia, us'd to overflow its Banks, (in the ſame Manner, as the Nile in Egypt does) to the great Damage of the City and Country of Babylon; and therefore, to prevent this Inconvenience for the future, Nebuchadnezzar had two artificial Canals cut, on the Eaſt Side of the Euphrates, in order to carry off the ſuperfluous Water into the Tygris. One of theſe Canals diſcharg'd itſelf near Seleucia, and the other over-againſt Apamia: And, for the farther Security of the Country, from the Head of theſe Canals, down to the City, and ſome Way lower, he made vaſt Banks of Brick and Bitumen; but the moſt wonderful Part of the Work was within the City.

From Jer. xl. 7. to xlv. all Daniel, and from Ezra i. to v.

There, on each Side of the Euphrates, he built, from the very Bottom of the Channel, a great Wall, of the ſame Thickneſs with the Walls of the City, i. e. eighty-ſeven Feet thick, and of an hundred and ſixty Furlongs (which are † twenty Miles of our Meaſure) in Length; and over-againſt every Street, that croſs'd the River, he made, on each Side a brazen Gate in the Wall, and Stairs leading down to the River, from whence the Inhabitants us'd to paſs by Boat from one Part of the City to the other.

And the artificial Lake.

5. It was neceſſary however, that, while this Work was carrying on, the Stream ſhould be diverted ſome other Way; and therefore, to this Purpoſe, he had a vaſt artificial Lake, made to the Weſt of Babylon, which, according to the loweſt Computation, was forty Miles ſquare, and an hundred and ſixty in Compaſs; and, being of a proportionable Depth, was able to contain all the Water, until the Work was finiſh'd. When this was done, the River was return'd to its former Channel; but the Lake, and the Canal, which led to it, was ſtill preſerv'd, becauſe they were found of Uſe, not only to prevent the Danger of all Overflowings of the River, but to keep Water likewiſe all the Year round, as in a common Reſervatory, which might be let out upon proper Occaſions, by Sluices, for the Improvement and Fertilizing of the Ground.

The Nature of Nebuchadnezzar's Crime, and the Fitneſs of its Puniſhment.

'These are ſome of the vaſt Works, † which the Generality of Hiſtorians aſcribe to Nebuchadnezzar, and, upon the View and Contemplation of which, he grew ſo arrogant and elated, as to think himſelf equal, if not ſuperior to God: For, Is not this great Babylon, which I have built for the Honour of my Majeſty? ſays he

† And therefore this Work muſt have begun two Miles and an half above the City, and continu'd two Miles and an half below it, becauſe the City throughout was no more than fifteen Miles. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 570.

† Beroſus, Megaſthenes, and Abydenus attribute all theſe Works to Nebuchadnezzar; but Herodotus tells us, that the Bridge, the River-banks, and the Lake were the Work of Nitocris, his Daughter-in-Law, who might poſſibly finiſh what he, at his Death, left incomplete, and, upon that Account, receive from this Hiſtorian the Honour of the Whole.

he of himſelf; (f) and, Who is God but Nebuchadnezzar? ſay his Sycophants concerning him. The Truth is, if we will credit the Account, in the Book of Judith, relating to this Prince, he was in his Temper a profeſs'd Atheiſt: The Senſe of his Succeſs in Life, and of the wonderful Works which he had atchiev'd, both in a civil and military Capacity, had ſo intoxicated his Reaſon, as to make him become Fool enough, to ſay in his Heart, there was no other God, but himſelf; for this is the avow'd Purpoſe of his ſending his Armies under the General Holofernes (g) That all Nations ſhould worſhip him only, and that all Tongues and Tribes ſhould call upon him as God.

FIT therefore it was, that ſuch impious Pride ſhould be abas'd, and that he, who ſet himſelf above the Rank of Men, upon a Level with God, nay, in an Elevation ſuperior to God, ſhould be made ſenſible of his dependent State, and taught Humility, and Self-annihilation, by being degraded to the Condition of a Brute. He had ſaid in his Heart, (for of him is that Prophecy in Iſaiah) (h) I will aſcend into Heaven, I will exalt my Throne above the Stars of God;——I will aſcend above the Heights of the Clouds, I will be like the Moſt High——But how art thou fallen from Heaven, O Lucifer, Son of the Morning? How art thou cut down to the Ground, who didſt weaken the Nations?——They, that ſee thee, ſhall narrowly look upon thee, and conſider thee, ſaying, Is this the Man, that made the Earth to tremble, that did ſhake all Kingdoms, that made the World as a Wilderneſs, and deſtroy'd the Cities thereof? And well they might, when they ſaw (i) him dwelling with the Beaſts of the Field, eating Graſs, like Oxen, and wet with the Dew of Heaven, with his Hair grown like Eagles Feathers, and his Nails like the Claws of Birds. But then the Queſtion is, what the proper Senſe of theſe Words is? Or, (what is the ſame Thing) of what Kind this Divine Infliction upon the King of Babylon was?

From Jer. xl. 7. to xlv. all Daniel, and from Ezra i. to v.

Different Opinions concerning it.

ORIGEN (k), who was for reſolving every Thing, that he could not comprehend in Scripture, into Allegory, was of Opinion, that, under the Name of Nebuchadnezzar, Daniel intended to give us a Repreſentation of the Fall of Lucifer, being probably led to think ſo by the above-cited Paſſage in the Prophet Iſaiah. But the Account of the Puniſhment, which befel this Prince, is ſo often inculcated in the ſame Chapter; foretold in the Dream, explain'd by the Prophet; repeated by the Voice from Heaven; and all this publiſh'd in a ſolemn Declaration by the King himſelf after the Recovery of his Senſes, that there is no Manner of Grounds to think of any Figure, or Allegory, in this Piece of Hiſtory.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR's real Metamorphoſis into an Ox, both as to his outward and inward Form, is a Notion too groſs for any but the Vulgar, who may be taken perhaps with ſuch Fictions of the Poets; and what we have no Need to recur to (thereby to multiply Miracles to no Purpoſe) from any Words in the Text, which will fairly admit of another Interpretation.

THE Metempſychoſis of an Ox's Soul into Nebuchadnezzar's Body, thereby to communicate the ſame Motions, Taſte, and Inclinations, that are obſervable in that Animal, is a Notion unknown to all Antiquity; for, according to the Doctrine of Pythagoras, ſuch a Tranſmigration was never made, until the Body was actually dead; beſides the manifeſt Incongruity of ſuppoſing two Souls, a rational and a brutal, animating the ſame Prince, or the Prince's Soul departed from him, and become the Subſtitute to a Brute.

A FASCINATION, both in the Eyes of Nebuchadnezzar's Subjects, and in his own Fancy and Imagination, which might make them both believe, that he was really chang'd into an Ox, and had the Figure of one, is a Notion every whit as liable to Exception. For, beſides that it is difficult to conceive, how a Deception of this Kind could abide upon a whole Nation for the Space of ſeven Years, the Scripture takes notice of no evil Spirit in this whole Tranſaction, but imputes all to the ſole Power of God, who can humble the Proud, and chaſtiſe the Wicked, as he pleaſes.

The true and generally receiv'd Opinion.

THE moſt general therefore, and moſt probable Opinion is——That Nebuchadnezzar, by the Judgment of God, was puniſh'd with Madneſs, which ſo diſorder'd his Imagination, that he fancy'd himſelf a Beaſt, and was prompted to act like one.

THERE is a Diſtemper (not a very common one indeed, but what has befallen ſeveral) which Naturaliſts and Phyſicians call Lycanthropy *, when, by the Power of a deprav'd Imagination, and a diſtemper'd Brain, a Man really thinks, that he is a Wolf, an Ox, a Dog, or the like, and accordingly, in his Inclinations Motions, and Behaviour, cannot forbear imitating the particular Creature, which he fancies himſelf to be. In this Manner Nebuchadnezzar, imagining that he was become an Ox, walk'd upon all four, fed upon Graſs, went naked, low'd with his Voice, and butted (as he thought) with his Horns; and, in ſhort, did all the Actions, as far as he was able, that a real Ox is known to do. (l) Hereupon his Subjects, perceiving this Change in him, took him, and bound him, (as Madmen are wont to be treated) but at laſt, he, eſcaping out of their Hands, fled to the Fields, where he herded with the Cattle, expos'd to the Dew of Heaven, and the other Inclemencies of the Weather; where his neglected Body became horrid and dreadful to behold; where his Hair, and his Nails, in Proceſs of Time, grew in the hideous Manner, that the Prophet had deſcrib'd them; and where his Heart, i. e. his Apprehenſion, Appetite, and Inclinations, by the Continuance of his Diſtemper, became quite brutal, and of the ſame Caſt with the Beaſts that graze.

How he might continue ſeven Years in this Condition.

THE Maſters of the Medicks, who have treated of this Kind of Madneſs, have made it their Obſervation, that the Perſons infected with it are generally ſo exceſſive ſtrong, that no Bands or Chains can hold them. They can live a long while without eating or drinking, and endure Wet and Cold without any great Inconvenience to themſelves; and therefore Nebuchadnezzar, tho' bred up in the Pleaſures and Delicacies of the Court, might, by the Strength of his Diſtemper, be enabled to do what otherwiſe he would not; to live in the Fields for ſeven Years together, naked and expos'd to the Injuries of the Weather, without any Thing to nouriſh him, except either the Graſs on the Ground, or the wild Fruits on the Hedges: But then, whether he retain'd the Uſe of his Reaſon whilſt he continu'd in this diſaſterous State, is a Queſtion, that is not ſo eaſily determin'd.

Whether he had his Reaſon in the mean while.

THE Scripture indeed, at firſt Sight, ſeems to intimate, that he had no Senſe of his Miſery, nor made any Reflection upon himſelf, or upon what he was doing, until God was pleas'd to remove his afflicting Hand: For theſe are his own Words, (m) At the End of my Days, I Nebuchadnezzar lift up mine Eyes unto Heaven, and my Underſtanding returned unto me; which ſeem to imply, that, all along before this, his his Reaſon was in a Kind of Deliquium, and without any Conſciouſneſs of what he was about. But then it may be aſk'd, Wherein would his Puniſhment and Humiliation conſiſt, if the Man was inſenſible; if he knew nothing of the Matter; nay, if he took Pleaſure (as moſt Madmen do) in the Diſorder of Imagination?

To be miſerable, and not to know it, by ſome may be thought the very Height of Miſery; but the Perſon in Horace, who frequented the empty Theatre every Day, and delighted himſelf with the Reveries of his own Fancy, with Plays and Shows, which no Body ſaw but himſelf, was not ſo well pleas'd with his Friends, when they had recover'd him to his Senſes.

——Pol me occidiſtis; Amici,
Non ſervaſtis, ait, cui ſic extorta voluptas,
Et demptus per vim mentis gratiſſimus error. HOR. Ep. lib. ii.

To anſwer the Ends of Providence therefore, in afflicting in this Manner this haughty and aſſuming Prince, which was to mortify his Pride, and bring him to a State of Humiliation, and Acknowledgment of God's ſuperior Hand, we may ſuppoſe, that, at certain Intervals at leaſt, he had a Senſe and Perception of his Miſery; that he ſaw the Condition to which he was degraded; but, being carry'd away with his brutal Appetite, found it not in his Power to extricate himſelf. St Paul, in his Deſcription of a Man given up to his Luſts, (whereof Nebuchadnezzar, in his preſent Condition, is no improper Emblem) has theſe remarkable Words: (n) I know that in me (i. e. in my Fleſh) dwelleth no good Thing; for to will is preſent with me, but how to perform that which is good, I find not; for the Good that I would, I do not, but the Evil that I would not, that I do. For, though I delight in the Law of God after the Inner Man, yet I ſee another Law in my Members, warring againſt the Law in my Mind, and bringing me into Captivity to the Law of Sin, that is in my Members. O wretched Man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the Body of this Death! And, in like Manner, if we ſuppoſe this King of Babylon in ſuch a perpetual Struggle and Conflict with himſelf; ſeeing his Error, but not able to avoid it; ſenſible of his Diſgrace, but not capable to redreſs it; committing the Things, which his Soul abhorred; and deteſting himſelf for what he found himſelf neceſſitated to do, till God ſhould think fit to reſtore his Underſtanding, by allaying the Ferment of his Blood and Humours, correcting his Appetite, and ranging his Ideas into their proper Order: If we ſuppoſe this, I ſay, we have before us the Image of a Creature compleatly miſerable; Reaſons for his Humiliation, during his Affliction, innumerable *; a Fountain to ſupply his Gratitude, upon the Removal of it, inexhauſtible; and, from his Example, this Lecture of Admonition, to all ſucceeding Generations: (o) Thus ſaith the Lord, let not the wiſe Man glory in his Wiſdom; neither let the mighty Man glory in his Might. Let not the rich Man glory in his Riches; but let him that

* What Nebuchadnezzar ſays of himſelf, with Regard to this Duty, is very remarkable, ——— I bleſſed the Moſt High, and praiſed and honoured him, that liveth for ever, whoſe Dominion is an everlaſting Dominion, and his Kingdom is from Generation to Generation. All the Inhabitants of the Earth are reputed as nothing, for he doth according to his Will, in the Army of Heaven, and among the Inhabitants of the Earth; and none can ſtay his Hand, or ſay unto him, What doſt thou? I therefore now praiſe, and extol, and honour the King of Heaven, all whoſe Works are Truth, and his Ways Judgment, and thoſe, that walk in Pride, he is able to abaſe, Dan. iv. 34, &c. Which is enough, one would imagine, to make us think charitably of the Converſion, and final End of this Prince, and with St Auſtin, to conclude, that whatever happen'd to him, by Way of Puniſhment, was deſign'd by Providence for his Soul's Health: Hoc enim erat in occulto Judicio, & Miſericordiâ Dei, ut huic Regi eo modo conſuleret ad Salutem. Epiſt. iii.

From the Death of CYRUS, to that of NEHEMIAH.

The HISTORY.

A. M. 3417, &c. Ant. Chriſ. 587, &c.

Cambyſes (or Ahaſuerus) ſucceeds Cyrus, and, upon the Samaritans Application, puts a Stop to the Building of Jeruſalem.

From Ezra iv. 7. to the End; all Eſth. Neh. and Part of Hagg. Zech. and Malachi.

CYRUS dy'd, when he was ſeventy Years old, after he had reign'd, from his firſt being made Commander of the Perſian and Median Armies, thirty Years; from his taking of Babylon, nine Years; and from his becoming ſole Monarch of the Eaſt, ſeven Years; and was ſucceeded by his Son Cambyſes, whom the Scripture calls Ahaſuerus.

As ſoon as he was well ſettled in the Throne, the Samaritans (inſtead of applying themſelves ſecretly to the Miniſters and Officers of his Court) preſented their Petition (a) to him openly, deſiring that the Rebuilding of Jeruſalem might be ſtopp'd; and tho' they did not prevail with him to revoke his Father's Decree, yet, by the ſeveral Diſcouragements, which he put upon it, he, in a great Meaſure, defeated its main Deſign, ſo that the Work went on very heavily in his Reign. But his Reign was not long: It was but ſeven Years and five Months, before he came to an untimely End, and was ſucceeded, for a ſhort Time, by the Magian, * who * pretended to be his Brother Smerdis, and whom (a) Ezra iv. 6.

* The Word Magian, or Mige-guſh, in the old Perſian Language, ſignifies a Perſon, that had his Ears cut off, and was a Name of Contempt given to the whole Sect, upon Account of a certain Impoſtor among them, who had the Misfortune to loſe his Ears, and yet had the Confidence to uſurp the Crown of Cyrus; but, before this Incident, they went under another Name, and were held in great Reputation among the Perſians. They were indeed their chief Profeſſors of Philoſophy, and, in Matters of Religion, made theſe the great Articles of their Faith: —— " That there were two Principles, or Gods, the one the Cauſe of all the Good, and the other the Cauſe of all the Evil in the World; but in this they were divided; that ſome of them held both theſe Principles to have been from all Eternity, whereas others maintain'd, that the good Principle only was eternal, and the evil one created, in the like Manner as we believe, that the Devil is a Creature, who is fallen from his original Purity and Perfection. Theſe two Principles, they believed, were in continual Oppoſition to each other, which was to continue to the End of the World; but then, the Good Principle having overcome the Evil, they ſhould each of them have a diſtinct World to himſelf; the Good reigning over all good Beings, and the Evil over all the Wicked. They imagin'd farther, that Darkneſs was the trueſt Symbol of the evil, as Light was of the good God; and therefore they always worſhipp'd him before Fire, as being the Cauſe of Light, and before the Sun more eſpecially, becauſe they accounted it the moſt perfect Light. They paid divine Honours, in ſhort, to Light, to the Sun, to the Fire in their Temples, and to Fire in their Houſes; but they always hated Darkneſs, becauſe they thought it a Repreſentation of the evil God, whom they ever had in the utmoſt Deteſtation." Such were the Magi among the ancient Perſians, and ſuch are the Guebres, or Worſhippers of Fire, among the preſent Perſians and Indians. Prideaux's Connection, and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

* The Manner, in which this Magian came to uſurp the Perſian Throne, is thus related by moſt Hiſtorians: —— Cambyſes had a Brother, the only Son of Cyrus beſides himſelf, and born of the ſame Mother. His Name (according to whom the Hiſtory of Ezra † calls Artaxerxes. To him the Samaritans, in like Manner, addreſs'd themſelves, and, in a Memorial, repreſented, "That † the Jews were rebuilding their City and Temple at Jeruſalem, which might be a Matter of pernicious Conſequence to his Empire; that theſe Jews had always been a rebellious People, as he would find, if he conſulted the Records of his Anceſtors; that therefore there was Reaſon to ſuſpect, that, in caſe they were permitted to go on, when once they had finiſh'd the Work, they would withdraw their Obedience, or refuſe to pay Tribute †; and that, by their Example, very probably, all Syria and Paleſtine would be tempted to revolt; ſo that, in a ſhort Time, his Majeſty would be excluded from having any Benefit from his Territories, on that Side of the River Euphrates."

From Ezra iv. 7. to the End; all Eſth. Neh. and Part of Hagg. Zech. and Malachi.

Upon conſulting the Records, which the Samaritans referr'd the King to, it plainly appear'd, that the Jews had defended themſelves with great Valour, and had been ſubdu'd by Nebuchadnezzar, not without much Difficulty; whereupon he iſſued out an Edict, wherein he prohibited the Jews to proceed any farther in their Building, and order'd his Officers in Samaria to put it in Execution. They immediately went up to Jeruſalem with an armed Force, and, having purſu'd the King's Orders with the utmoſt Rigour, put a full Stop to any farther Proceeding in the Work, until the ſecond Year of † Darius Hyſtaſpes.

DARIUS,

to Xenophon) was Tanaoxares, but Herodotus calls him Smerdis, and Juſtin, Margis. He accompany'd him in his Wars for ſome Time; but, upon a Pique of Jealouſy, the King ſent him back into Perſia, and there caus'd him to be murther'd privately. The King, when he went upon the Egyptian Expedition, had left the ſupreme Government of his Affairs in the Hands of Patizithes, one of the chief of the Magians, (for the King was addicted to that Sect of Religion) who had a Brother, that did very much reſemble Smerdis, the Son of Cyrus, and was, for that Reaſon perhaps, called by the ſame Name. Patizithes, hearing of the young Prince's Death, and ſuppoſing that this and ſome other Extravagancies of Cambyſes had made him odious to his Subjects, plac'd this Brother of his on the Throne, pretending that he was the true Smerdis, the Son of Cyrus, and ſo ſent Heralds thro' the Empire to proclaim him King. It was the Cuſtom of the Eaſtern Princes, in thoſe Days, to live retir'd in their Palaces, and there tranſact all their Affairs by the Intercourſe of their Eunuchs, without admitting any elſe, unleſs thoſe of the higheſt Confidence, to have Acceſs to them. This Conduct the pretended Smerdis exactly obſerv'd: But Otanes, a Perſian Nobleman, having a Daughter, (whoſe Name was Phedyma) who had been one of Cambyſes's Wives, and was now kept by Smerdis in the ſame Quality, and being deſirous to know, whether he was the real Son of Cyrus or no, ſent her Inſtructions, that, the firſt Night ſhe lay with him, ſhe ſhould feel whether he had any Ears, (becauſe Cyrus, for ſome Crime or other, had cut off this Magian's Ears) and ſhe acquainting her Father that he had none, he immediately took ſix others of the Perſian Quality with him, (among whom Darius was one) and, entering the Palace, ſlew both the Uſurper, and his Brother, who had been the Contriver of the whole Plot. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 522.

† That Cambyſes was the Ahaſuerus, (as we ſaid before) and the falſe Smerdis the Artaxerxes, who obſtructed the Work of the Temple, is plain from hence, ——— That they are ſaid in Scripture (Ezra iv. 5, &c.) to be the Kings of Perſia, that reign'd between the Time of Cyrus, and the Time of that Darius, by whoſe Decree the Temple was finiſh'd: But as that Darius was Darius the Son of Hyſtaſpes, between whom and Cyrus there reign'd none in Perſia, but Cambyſes and Smerdis, it muſt follow from hence, that none but Cambyſes and Smerdis could be the Ahaſuerus and Artaxerxes, who are ſaid in Ezra to have put a Stop to this Work. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 522.

† After the Return from the Captivity, the People in general came to be called Jews, becauſe, tho' there were many Iſraelites among them, yet they chiefly conſiſted of the Tribes of Judah and Benjamin; and tho' the Edict of Cyrus gave all Permiſſion to return, when they pleas'd, yet the ſacred Writers take notice only of thoſe, who return'd in a Body. Patrick's Commentary on Ezra.

† For this there are three Expreſſions in the Text, Toll, Tribute, and Cuſtom. By the firſt of theſe, Grotius underſtands that, which every Head paid to the King, which we call Poll-Money: By the ſecond, the Exciſe, (as we now ſpeak) that was upon Commodities and Merchandize; and by the laſt, the Land-Tax. But Watſius (in his Miſcel. Part ii.) is of Opinion, that the firſt Word rather ſignifies that Part, which every Man paid out of his Eſtate, according as it was valu'd; the ſecond, that, which was paid for every Head; and the third, that which was paid upon the Highways, by every Traveller, that went about the Country with any Kind of Merchandize. Patrick's Commentary.

† There are ſome who take the Darius here mention'd, not to be Darius the IId, who was the Son of Hyſtaſpes, but the Darius, who is commonly called Nothus; but then they are preſs'd with this Difficulty, which may well be

Their Tampering with Tatnaih the Governor of Paleſtine.

From Ezra iv. 7. to the End; all Eſth. Neh. and Part of Hagg. Zech. and Malachi.

DARIUS, upon the Death of the pretended Smerdis, was, * by a Stratagem, choſen King of Perſia; and tho' the Edict, which prohibited the Building of the Temple, expir'd with the Uſurper, yet had the Prophets, Zechariah † and Haggai, much ado to prevail with the People to re-aſſume the Work. They were fearful of the Intereſt, which the Samaritans were preſum'd to have at Court; and accordingly found, that no ſooner had they provided themſelves with Stone and Timber, and other Materials, in order to proceed in the Building, but theſe implacable Enemies betook themſelves to their old Practices, and endeavour'd to poſſeſs Tatnai (whom Darius had made chief Governor over the Provinces of Syria and Paleſtine) with a Notion, that what the Jews were doing was without Authority, and would prove prejudicial to the King.

TATNAI, upon this Information, came to Jeruſalem, and having called the Governor, called inſurmountable. For, from the firſt Year of Cyrus, who gave Orders for the Building of the Temple, to the ſixth Year of Darius Nothus, in which they ſuppoſe that it was finiſh'd, there were, at leaſt, an hundred and thirteen Years; according to ſome, an hundred and ſeventeen; and, according to others, an hundred and forty-two. But now, if, all this Time, Zerubbabel was in the Government of Judea, and Joſhua in the High Prieſthood, ſo long an Authority in Church or State was never heard of in any Age before. Nor muſt it be forgotten, what the Prophet Haggai (Chap. ii. 3.) ſuppoſes, viz. That ſome, then alive, remember'd the Glory of the firſt Temple, and compar'd it with the Glory of the ſecond; which, upon the Suppoſition, that this was in the ſixth Year of Darius Nothus, will make them at leaſt an hundred and fourſcore Years old, a Thing almoſt incredible. And therefore the moſt probable Opinion is, that the Darius, here meant, was Darius Hyſtaſpes, whoſe ſecond Year was the eighteenth after the firſt of Cyrus, as Huetius reckons. Patrick's Commentary.

* The ſeven Princes, who had ſlain the Uſurper Smerdis, and his Brother, conſulting together about the Settling of Government, came at length to this Reſolution, that the Monarchy ſhould continue in the ſame Manner, that it had been eſtabliſh'd by Cyrus; and that, to determine which of them ſhould aſcend the Throne, they ſhould all meet at a certain Place, the next Morning, againſt the Riſing of the Sun, and that he, whoſe Horſe firſt neighed, ſhould be appointed King. For, as the Sun was the great Deity of all the Perſians, they ſeem'd, by this Method, to refer their Election to it: But Darius's Groom, being inform'd of this, tied a Mare, on the Night before the Election, to the Place where, the next Morning, they were to meet, and brought his Maſter's Horſe to cover her. As ſoon therefore, as the Princes met together at the Time appointed, Darius's Horſe remember'd the Place, ran immediately thither, neighing and prancing all along; whereupon the reſt, diſmounting, ſaluted him as their King, and accordingly plac'd him on the Throne. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 521.

† Zechariah was the Son of Barachiah, and Grandſon of Iddo, but the Time and Place of his Birth are unknown. Some will have him to be born at Babylon, during the Captivity; but others think, that he was born at Jeruſalem, before the Tribes of Judah and Benjamin were carry'd away. 'Tis certain however, that he return'd from Babylon with Zerubbabel, and very probably, that he began to propheſy in the ſecond Year of Darius, the Son of Hyſtaſpes. The Number, Excellency, and Preciſeneſs of his Prophecies made him be ſtiled The Sun among the Leſſer Prophets, and, as he began his Predictions about two Months after Haggai, with him he encourag'd the Jews to go on in the Rebuilding their Temple, and gave them Aſſurance of the Divine Protection. But theſe Prophecies were inconſiderable in Compariſon of thoſe, which foretel the Coming of the Meſſias in the plaineſt Terms; the cruel War, which Antiochus Epiphanes wag'd with the Jews, and God's ſevere Judgments againſt this Tyrant; the Jewiſh War with the Romans and the Siege of Babylon by Darius; the Diſſolution of the Old Covenant, and the Subſtitution of a New one under Chriſt; the glorious State of the Chriſtian Church, and the Converſion of the Gentiles; the Perſecutions, which the Chriſtians ſhould endure, and the ſevere Puniſhment of their Perſecutors; and other ſuch like Events, contain'd in the ninth and following Chapters of his Prophecies. Some Criticks however are of Opinion, that the Stile of this Prophet is a little interrupted, and without Connection, and that the 9th, 10th, and 11th Chapters, which go under his Name, were originally written by Jeremiah, becauſe in Matthew, (Chap xxvii. 9, 10.) under the Name of Jeremiah, we find Zechariah xi. 12. quoted; and, as the aforeſaid Chapters make but one continu'd Diſcourſe, they conclude from thence, that all three belong'd to Jeremiah. But it is much more natural to ſuppoſe, that the Name of Jeremiah, by ſome unlucky Miſtake, has ſlipt into the Text of St Matthew, inſtead of that of Zechariah. Contemporary with him was the Prophet Haggai, who, in all Probability, was born at Babylon, and return'd with Zerubbabel to Jeruſalem. They both, with united Zeal, encourag'd the People to go on with the Work of the Temple, which, by the Envy of the Samaritans, who were their Enemies, and the ill Offices of ſome at the Court of Cyrus, and Cambyſes, whom they influenc'd, was diſcontinu'd for ſome Time: But, upon the Acceſſion of Darius to the Throne, Haggai, in particular, by reproaching the People with their Indolence and Inſenſibility, by telling them, that they were careful enough to lodge themſelves very commodiouſly, while the Houſe of the Lord lay bury'd in its own Ruins, and by putting them in Mind, that the Calamities of Drought and Famine, wherewith God had afflicted them ſince their Return, were owing to their Neglect in repairing the Temple, prevailed with them to ſet about the Work in good earneſt; ſo that, by Virtue of theſe Reproofs, as well as ſome Encouragements, which God occaſionally authoriz'd him to give them, they brought the whole to a Concluſion in a ſhort Time. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Words, and Univerſal Hiſtory, lib. ii. c. 1.

Governor and Elders of the Jews together, * he underſtood from them, that they had a Decree from Cyrus, which impower'd and authoriz'd them in what they did: Whereupon the Governor wrote to Court, acquainting the King with the true State of the Caſe, and deſiring that Search might be made into the publick Records, whether the Jews really had any ſuch Decree from Cyrus, and, upon the whole, that he would be pleas'd to ſignify his Will, what he would have him do in this Affair.

Darius's Decree in Favour of the Jews, and their finiſhing the Temple thereupon.

DARIUS, (a) who, the better to fortify his Title to the Crown, had marry'd two of the Daughters of Cyrus, thought himſelf concern'd to do every Thing, that might tend to the Honour of that great Prince, and therefore confirm'd the Decree, which he had granted to the Jews, with a freſh one of his own, wherein he gave them an Aſſignment upon his Revenues in ſeveral Provinces for whatever Money they wanted to enable them to go on with the Work, and to provide them Sacrifices for the Service of the Temple, that the Prieſts, in their daily Offices, might * put up their Prayers for the Proſperity of the King, and the Royal Family: And wherein he order'd that the Man ſhould be hang'd, and his Houſe pulled down † for Timber to make him a Gallows, whoever ſhould pretend to put any Let or Obſtruction to this his Injunction.

UPON the Publication of this Decree, and the great Care that was taken to have it fully put in Execution, the Work of the Temple went on ſo very ſucceſsfully, that, in the ſixth Year of Darius, (according to the Jewiſh Account) and on the third Day of the twelfth Month, (which is called Adar, and anſwers in Part to our February and March) the Whole of it was finiſh'd, and its Dedication celebrated by the Prieſts and Levites, and

* The Plea, which Joſephus makes Zerubbabel the Governor, and Joſhua the High-Prieſt, make upon this Occaſion, is to this Effect, ——— " That they were the Servants of the great God, to whoſe Honour this Temple was built; " and to his Service dedicated by the greateſt, the happieſt, and the wiſeſt Prince, that ever ſat on that Throne; " that it ſtood for many Ages, till, by Reaſon of the Wickedneſs of their Foreſathers, the City, by God's Permiſ- " ſion, was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, the King of Chaldea, the Temple pillag'd, and laid in Aſhes, and the People " carry'd away Captives into Babylon; that, when Cyrus came to be poſſeſs'd of the Throne of Perſia and Babylon, " he order'd, by his Royal Proclamation, the Rebuilding of the Temple, and the Reſtoring of all the ſacred Veſſels " that had been taken away by Nebuchadnezzar, which accordingly were tranſported to Jeruſalem, and laid up again " in the Temple; that, by the Command of the ſame King, Abaſſar was ſent to ſee the Work expedited, and, ac- " cordingly, was preſent at the laying of the Foundation; but that, ever ſince that Time, by one Artifice or other, " their Enemies had ſound Means to obſtruct and retard it; and that, ſor the Truth of theſe Allegations, they deſir'd " that Darius might be wrote to, that, by conſulting publick Records, it might be known, whether or no theſe Facts " were according to this their Repreſentation." Jewiſh Hiſt. lib. xi. c. 4.

* Though the Jews were not allow'd to deſire the Heathen to pray to their Deities for their Proſperity, becauſe they were forbidden to acknowledge any other God, but one; yet the Heathen, if they thought fit, might worſhip their God, nor did the Jews deny them that Privilege, or reſuſe the Offerings, which they brought for that Purpoſe, until, in the Time of their Wars with the Romans, the Faction of the Zealots grew to be predominant: For then (as Joſephus tells us, lib. ii. c. 7.) " One Eleazar, the Son of Ananias, the High-Prieſt, a deſperate, daring young Man, " and a military Officer then in Command, preſs'd ſome of his Friends among the Prieſts, to receive no Offering, " or Sacrifice, but from the Jews only; by which Means it came to paſs, that the very Offerings of Cæſar, which " were us'd conſtantly to be made for the Welfare of the Roman People, came to be rejected; and this prov'd the " very Ground and Foundation of the War with that Nation. The High-Prieſt, however, and the Men of the beſt " Quality declar'd themſelves extremely diſſatisfy'd with the Novelty of this Prohibition, and, with great Importuni- " ties, deſir'd the Continuance of ſo pious a Cuſtom, as offering up Prayers for Princes and Governors." But all is in vain; tho' this Place in Ezra, Chap. vi. 10, one would think, ſets the Duty in a clear Light. Le Clerc's Commentary on Ezra.

† The moſt obvious Senſe of the Words in the Text (Chap. vi. 11.) ſeems to be this; but Lud. de Dieu obſerves, that in the Words, which we there render being ſet up, there is no proper Conſtruction, and therefore he would rather have them tranſlated according to the Septuagint, And ſtanding, let him be beat upon it, i. e. whipped, as we ſay, at a Poſt, for that was a Puniſhment among the Perſians, and other Nations. But if a greater Puniſhment than this ſhould here be intended, then he makes the firſt Words refer to the Timber, and the latter to the Man in this Manner, And from above, let it fall upon him; i. e. the Stake, being lifted up, ſhall be ſtruck into his Body, and come out at his Fundament, which was a cruel Puniſhment among the Eaſtern People, and continues ſtill in Uſe to this Day. Patrick's Commentary.

and all the Congregation of Iſrael, with great Joy and Solemnity. By the next Month, which was the Month Niſan, the firſt in the Jewiſh Year, the Temple was made fit for every Part of Divine Service; and therefore, on the fourteenth Day of that Month, the Paſſover was obſerv'd in it, according to the Law of God, and, by all the Jews that had return'd from the Captivity, ſolemniz'd with great Joy and Gladneſs of Heart, becauſe the Lord had made them joyful, (as it is expreſs'd in the Book of Ezra) and turned the Heart of the King of Aſſyria † unto them, to ſtrengthen their Hands in the Houſe of God, the God of Iſrael.

The Samaritans compelled to pay the Tribute-Money to the Temple.

BY the Decree of Cyrus, which was thus confirm'd by that of Darius, the Tribute of Samaria had been aſſign'd for the Reparation of the Temple; but now, that the Body of the Temple was finiſh'd, (tho' the Out-works remain'd ſtill untouch'd) the Samaritans pretended, that the End of this Aſſignment was ceas'd, and thereupon refuſ'd to pay the Tribute any longer. But the Jews, upon ſending Zerubbabel their Governor, with two other principal Men, to Shuſhan, or Suſa, (which was then the Reſidence of the Perſian Monarchs) in order to complain of this unjuſt Detention of the Royal Bounty, met with a proper Redreſs; and return'd with the King's Order * to his Officers of Samaria, requiring them to take an effectual Care, that, purſuant to his Edict, the Samaritans paid their Tribute to the Temple, and gave the Jews, for the future, no Cauſe to complain of their Refuſal herein: Which put a full End to all Conteſt about that Matter, and was the laſt good Office, we find recorded in Scripture, that Darius did the Jews. For, in the ſix and thirtieth Year of his Reign, * he dy'd, and was ſucceeded by Xerxes, the † eldeſt of his Sons by Atoſſa, Daughter to Cyrus, the great Founder of the Perſian Monarchy.

† Darius is called the King of Aſſyria, as now reigning over all the Kingdoms, which were formerly under the Power of the Aſſyrians; and from hence Archbiſhop Uſher infers, that Babylon (which, in the Beginning of his Reign, had revolted) muſt neceſſarily have been reduc'd by Darius before this Time, otherwiſe he thinks he could not have here been ſtiled King of Aſſyria, whereof Babylon was then the Metropolis. Patrick's Commentary, and Prideaux's Connection, Anno 515.

" King Darius, to Tangar and Sambaba, Maſters of our Horſe at Samaria, and to Sadrack, Bobelon, and the reſt of their Fellow Subjects there, ſendeth greeting.

" Whereas I am given to underſtand by Zerubbabel, Ananias, and Mardocheus, on the Part of the Jews, that you " ſtand accus'd of interrupting and diſcouraging the Rebuilding of the Temple, and of refuſing to bear your Part " in the Charge of the Sacrifices, which, by my Order and Command, you ought to have done: This is to will and " require you, upon Sight of this Letter, forthwith to ſupply them, out of my Treaſury at Samaria, with whatſo- " ever they ſhall want for the Uſe of their Sacrifices and Worſhip, to the End that they may offer up daily Prayers, " and Oblations, both for myſelf, and all my People. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. xi. c. 4.

* The Character, which our celebrated Connector of the Old and New Teſtament has given us of this Darius, is, ——— That he was a Prince of great Wiſdom, Clemency, and Juſtice, and has the Honour to be recorded in Holy Writ, for a Favourer of God's People, and a Reſtorer of his Temple at Jeruſalem, and a Promoter of his Worſhip therein. For all this, God was pleas'd to make him his Inſtrument; and, with Reſpect to this, I doubt not, it was, that he bleſs'd him with a numerous Iſſue, a long Reign, and great Proſperity. For, though he was not ſo very fortunate in his Wars againſt the Scythians and Grecians; yet, every where elſe, he had full Succeſs in all his Undertakings, and not only reſtor'd, and fully ſettled the Empire of Cyrus, after it had been much ſhaken by Cambyſes, and the Magian, but alſo added many large and rich Provinces to it, eſpecially thoſe of India, Thrace, Macedon, and the Iſles of the Ionian Sea. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 486.

† Darius had three Sons by his firſt Wife, the Daughter of Gobrias, all born before his Advancement to the Throne, and four others by Atoſſa, the Daughter of Cyrus, who were all born after it. Of the former, Artabaſanes was the eldeſt; of the latter, Xerxes: And, as Darius advanc'd in Years, between theſe two was the Competition for the Succeſſion. Artabaſanes urg'd, that, as he was the eldeſt Son, according to the Cuſtom and Uſage of all Nations, he ought to be preferr'd before any that was younger. But Xerxes reply'd to this, that he was the Son of Darius by Atoſſa, the Daughter of Cyrus, who was the firſt Founder of the Perſian Empire; for which Reaſon he held it juſt and reaſonable, that the Crown of Cyrus ſhould rather come to a Deſcendant of Cyrus, than to one that was not; and to this he added, that, tho' Artabaſanes was the eldeſt Son of Darius, yet he was not the eldeſt Son from the King her Huſband in the third Year of his Reign, Eſther i. 3. nor he that Ahaſuerus, that divorc'd her. Joſeph Scaliger is likewiſe of Opinion, that Xerxes was the Ahaſuerus, and Hameſtris his Queen, the Eſther of the Holy Scriptures: But, whatever ſeeming Similitude there may be in the Names, (and this is the whole Foundation of his Conjecture) 'tis plain from Herodotus, that Xerxes had a Son by Hameſtris, who was marriageable in the ſeventh Year of his Reign, and therefore it is impoſſible that he ſhould be Eſther's, becauſe Eſther was not marry'd to Ahaſuerus until the ſeventh Year of his Reign, (Eſther ii. 16.) and, conſidering that the Choice of Virgins was made for him in the fourth of his Reign, and a whole Year employ'd in their Purifications, the ſooneſt that ſhe could have a Son by him, muſt be in the ſixth, and therefore we may conclude, (with Joſephus, the Septuagint, and the Apocryphal Additions to the Book of Eſther) that the Ahaſuerus in Scripture was Artaxerxes Longimanus, and Eſther an Hebrew Virgin, as ſhe is all along repreſented. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 465.

† The Occaſion of this great Feſtival is, very likely, intimated to us in the Phraſe, When the King Ahaſuerus ſat on the Throne of his Kingdom, Chap. i. 2. i. e. enjoying Peace and Tranquillity, through his large Dominions; for the Hiſtory of his Acceſſion to the Throne is this: ——— Xerxes, his Father, was privately murther'd by Artabanus, Captain of his Guard. He coming to him (who was then but the third Son) made him believe, that Darius, his eldeſt Brother, had done it, to make his Way to the Throne, and had a Deſign likewiſe to cut him off, to ſecure himſelf in it. This Ahaſuerus believing, went immediately to his Brother's Apartment, and, by the Aſſiſtance of the wicked Artabanus and his Guards, ſlew him, thinking all the while, that he acted but in his own Defence. Artabanus's Drift was to ſeize on the Throne himſelf; but, for the preſent, he took Ahaſuerus, and plac'd him thereon, with a Deſign to pull him down, as ſoon as Matters were ripe for his own Aſcent: But when Ahaſuerus underſtood this from Magabyzus, who had marry'd one of his Siſters, he took care to counterplot Artabanus, and to cut him and his whole Party off, before his Treaſon was come to Maturity; and for this, and ſome other Succeſſes againſt his Brother Hyſtaſpes, which ſettled him in a peaceable Poſſeſſion of the whole Perſian Empire, very probably it was, that a feſtival Seaſon of above an Hundred and fourſcore Days Continuance was appointed, which, even to this Day, (according to ſome Travellers) is no uncommon Thing in thoſe Parts of the World. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 465, and Patrick's Commentary on Eſther, Chap. i.

† Cyrus, and the reſt of the Perſian Kings, after the Conqueſt of the Medes, (whoſe Country lay remote) ſettled their Royal Seat at Shuſhan, that they might not be too far from Babylon, and made it the Capital of Perſia. It ſtood upon the River Ulai, and was a Place of ſuch Renown, that Strabo calls it Πόλιν ἀξιολογωτάτην, a City moſt worthy to be prais'd. The whole Country about it was wonderfully fruitful, producing an hundred, and ſometimes two hundred Fold, as the ſame Author informs us, lib. xv. Pliny, indeed ſuppoſes, that Darius Hyſtaſpes was the firſt Founder of it, but he only enlarg'd and beautify'd it with a moſt magnificent Palace, which Ariſtotle (in his Book, de Mundo) calls Θαυμαστὸν Βασίλειον οἶκον, a wonderful Royal Palace, ſhining with Gold, Amber, and Ivory. Nor is it altogether foreign to this Purpoſe, what our learned Lightfoot (de Templo, chap. iii.) tells us, viz. That the outward Gate of the Eaſtern Wall of the Temple was called the Gate of Shuſhan, and had the Figure of that City carv'd on it, in Acknowledgement of the Decree, which this Darius granted in that Place, in order to permit, and encourage the Jews to rebuild their Temple at Jeruſalem. Patrick's Commentary on Eſther, chap. i. and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Shuſhan.

† It has been a great Enquiry among the Learned, who this Vaſhti was. Others ſuppoſe, that ſhe was the own Siſter of Ahaſuerus, becauſe the Perſians, in thoſe Days, made no Scruple of theſe Kind of Marriages; though there is much more Reaſon to think, that, before her Marriage, there had been ſuch a Collection of Virgins, made for the Uſe of the King, as was before Eſther's, (this is imply'd in Chap. ii. 19.) and that, having the good Fortune then of obtaining the Preference in the King's Eſteem, ſhe was created Queen; but being perhaps a Woman of no high Deſcent, her Family Extraction, for that Reaſon, might be concealed. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Name.

otherwiſe he would not have thought it decent for the Queen, nor ſafe for himſelf, to have her Beauty (which was very great) expos'd in this unuſual Manner; eſpecially, if there be any Thing in what the Jewiſh Targum ſeems to ſuggeſt, viz. That he commanded her to be brought quite naked, that her comely Proportion might be ſeen, as well as her Face. Patrick's Commentary on Eſther, chap. i.

† The Words in our Tranſlation, are, the wiſe Men, who knew the Times, Chap. i. 13. And from hence ſome have obſerv'd, that, as the Perſian Kings did nothing without their Magi, who were great Pretenders to Aſtrology, Men of this Sort were called, to know whether it was a proper Time to ſet about the Thing, which the King might have then in his Mind. For ſuch was the Superſtition of the Eaſtern People, that (as the Satyriſt remarks)

The Explication however, which Vitringa gives us of the original Words, Jodehe habitim, is far from being improper, viz. That they were Men well vers'd in antient Hiſtories, and in the Laws and Cuſtoms of their Country, and were therefore able to give the King Counſel in extraordinary and perplex'd Caſes, as this certainly was. Patrick's and Le Clerc's Commentary on Eſther i.

(e) Eſther ii. 19.

† But perhaps he might have been an Officer of an higher Rank, becauſe it was an Order inſtituted by Cyrus, (as Xenophon, in his Cyropæd. Lib. viii, informs us) that all Perſons whatever, who had any Employment at Court, ſhould attend at the Palace-Gate, (where there was, doubtleſs, a proper Waiting-Room for their Reception) that they might be in Readineſs, whenever they were wanted, or called for: And that this Cuſtom was afterwards continu'd, we may learn from Herodotus, lib. iii. c. 120. Le Clerc's Commentary on Eſther, Chap. ii.

† This Woman was born in Babylon, and therefore, in Analogy to that Language, they gave her the Name of Hadaſſah, which, in Chaldee, ſignifies a Myrtle; but her Perſian Name was Eſther, which ſome (a little incongruouſly) derive from 'Αστὴρ, a Star, and others from Satar. which ſignifies hidden, becauſe ſhe was concealed in Mordecai's Houſe; or rather, becauſe her Nation was concealed, and ſhe not known, until Mordecai's Merit and Services to the Crown came to be rewarded. Patrick's Commentary.

† The Reaſon is aſſign'd in the following Verſe, for their being kept ſo long in this Courſe, viz, that for ſix Months they might be anointed with the Oil of Myrrh, which, beſides the Fragrancy of its Smell, was good to make the Skin ſoft and ſmooth, and clear it from all Manner of Scurf; and for ſix more, with ſweet Odours, which, in theſe hot Countries, were neceſſary to take away all ill Scents, and (as ſome think) to make the Body more vigorous. But, beſides this, there might be ſomething of State in making thoſe Vaſſals (for ſuch they were accounted) wait, before they were admitted to the Honour of the King's Bed; and ſomething of Precaution too, in keeping them ſecluſe for ſo long a Time, that the King might be ſatisfy'd, that he was not impos'd upon by a Child begotten by any other Man. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations on Eſther ii. 12.

and ſo prepar'd herſelf for the King's Bed, the King was ſo highly delighted with her, that, intending to make her † more than a Concubine, he continu'd her in his own Palace, and, in a ſhort Time, ſet the Royal Diadem upon her Head, and made her Queen in the Room of Vaſhti. The Nuptials were celebrated with great Magnificence. A ſplendid Entertainment was made, which, in Honour to the new Queen, was called Eſther's Feaſt, (for that was the Perſian Name which had lately been given her) and the King, upon this joyful Occaſion, not only gave † rich Preſents to the Queen, and Largeſſes to the Gueſts, but granted Pardons likewiſe to his Subjects, and a Relaxation of Tribute for ſome Time to all the Provinces of his Dominions.

Haman's Indignation againſt Mordecai, and the King's Decree againſt the Jews.

AT Eſther's firſt going to Court, Mordecai had given her a ſtrict Caution, not to diſcover that ſhe was a Jew, leſt the King ſhould deſpiſe her for being a Captive, which ſhe carefully obſerv'd; and he, for the ſame Reaſon, conceal'd his Relation to her, contenting himſelf with the little Employment, he had at Court, until a more favourable Opportunity ſhould preſent itſelf. In the mean Time, he had the good Fortune to diſcover a Conſpiracy, which † two of the King's Chamberlains were forming againſt his Life. This he communicated to the Queen, and the Queen acquainted the King with it in Mordecai's Name, ſo that the Conſpirators were ſeiz'd, convicted, and executed: But, though the whole Affair was recorded in the Perſian Annals, yet Mordecai, for the preſent, was no more thought on, until his Merit and great Services came to be remember'd, upon this Occaſion.

HAMAN, an Amalekite, of the Poſterity of Agag, King of Amalek, in the Time of Saul, was become the King's chief Favourite, and all the Servants at Court were order'd to ſhew him great Reſpect and Reverence; which every one readily did, except Mordecai, who, upon his paſſing to and fro, took no Manner of Notice of him, * This ſo exaſperated the proud Amalekite, that, being inform'd that Mordecai was a Jew, he was reſolv'd, in Revenge of the Affront, not to deſtroy him only, but his whole Nation with him: But, becauſe there might be ſome Danger in ſo bold an Undertaking, he called together his Diviners, to find out what Day would be moſt lucky for his putting his Deſign in Execution.

† According to this Account of Things, this Perſian Monarch ſeems to have had but one Wife, at leaſt, but one in chief Favour and Eſteem with him, though it is certain, he could not fail of having an infinite Number of ſecondary Wives, or Concubines. This was the Name of every one, that was taken from among the Virgins, (who had a ſeparate Houſe for themſelves) and conducted to the King's Bed; where having paſs'd a Night, ſhe return'd no more to the Virgin's Apartments, but was, the next Morning, receiv'd into the Houſe of the Concubines, and there treated in the State and Port of one of the King's Wives; for ſuch they were accounted. No Man was permitted to marry them, as long as the King liv'd; and, upon his Demiſe, they generally fell to his Succeſſor. Of theſe Darius Nothus is reckon'd to have had no leſs than three hundred and ſixty. Pool's Annotations.

† The Manner of the Perſian King was, to give his Queens, at their Marriage, ſuch a City to buy them Cloathes; another for their Hair; another, for their Necklaces; and ſo on for the reſt of their Expences. And, as it was cuſtomary for him, (according to the Teſtimony of Herodotus) upon his Acceſſion to the Throne, to remit the Tribute that was due to him from all the Cities: ſo he might, upon this Occaſion, out of his abundant Joy, make a Releaſe to the Provinces, and forgive them ſome of the Duties and Impoſts, that they were bound to pay him. Patrick's Commentary.

† Theſe were two great Men, who perhaps kept the Door of the King's Bed-chamber, and, being either incens'd at the Divorce of Vaſhti, (whoſe Creatures they were) or at the Advancement of Eſther, who, in all Probability, would raiſe her Kinſman Mordecai to a Superiority over them, took Diſguſt thereat, and ſo reſolv'd to revenge themſelves on the King for it. Prideaux's Connection, and Patrick's Commentary.

* Joſephus tells us, that Haman, taking Notice of this Singularity in Mordecai, aſk'd him, What Countryman he was? And, finding him to be a Jew, broke out into a violent Exclamation at the Inſolence of ſuch a Scoundrel, that, when all the Natives of the free-born Perſians made no Difficulty of doing him that Honour, this Slave of a Jew ſhould preſume to affront him; and, in this Rage, he took up a deſperate Reſolution, not only to be reveng'd of Mordecai, but to deſtroy the whole Race of Jews likewiſe: Well remembering, that his Anceſtors, the Amalekites, had been formerly beaten out of their Land, and utterly exterminated by the Jews. The Way of Divination, then in Uſe among the Eaſtern People, was by caſting Lots; and therefore, having try'd, in this Manner, firſt each Month, and then each Day in every Month, they came at laſt to a Determination, that † the thirteenth Day of the twelfth Month, which is called Adar, would be moſt fortunate for his Deſign. Whereupon he went to the King, and, having inſinuated to him, "That there were a certain People, diſpers'd all over his Empire, who called themſelves Jews, and who, having Laws and Ordinances of their own, deſpis'd all his Edicts and Injunctions; that their Principles, in ſhort, tended to the Diſturbance of the good Order of his Government, and the Breach of all Uniformity; that, upon theſe Accounts, it was not conſiſtent with the Rules of Policy to allow them any farther Toleration; and therefore he propos'd, that they ſhould be deſtroy'd, and extirpated all out of the Empire of Perſia; and, leſt the Loſs of ſo many Subjects ſhould be thought a Diminution of the King's Revenue, he propos'd to make up the Defect out of his own private Fortune." The King was eaſy enough to be wrought upon by this Court-Minion; who, having obtain'd his royal Conſent, order'd the Secretaries of State * to form a Decree purſuant hereunto, which when it was ſign'd, he ſent † by Poſts to all Lieutenants, and Governors of Provinces, with ſtrict Charge to deſtroy, and cauſe to be killed, all the Jews, of whatever Sex or Condition, both young and old, that † It was in the firſt Month in the Year, when Haman began to caſt Lots, and the Time, for the Execution of the Jews, was, by theſe Lots, delay'd until the laſt Month in the Year; which plainly ſhews, That, tho' the Lot be caſt into the Lap, yet the whole Diſpoſing thereof is from the Lord, Prov. xvi. 33. For hereby almoſt a whole Year interven'd between the Deſign and its Execution, which gave Time for Mordecai to acquaint Queen Eſther with it, and for her to intercede with the King for the revoking or ſuſpending the Decree, and thereby diſappointing the Conſpiracy: For we can hardly think, (what Le Clerc ſuggeſts) that Haman gave the Jews all this Time, that they might make their Eſcape out of the Kingdom, and not ſtay to be ſlain, which poſſibly might bring an Odium upon himſelf, when it came to be known by whoſe Inſtigation this Maſſacre was committed. Patrick and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

* The Decree itſelf (according to Joſephus) was to this Effect:——

"The great King Artaxerxes, to the hundred and ſeven and twenty Governors of the Provinces, between India and Ethiopia, greeting.

"Whereas it hath pleas'd God to give me the Command of ſo many Nations, and a Dominion over the reſt of the World, as large as I myſelf deſire, I being reſolv'd to do nothing, that may be tyrannical or grievous towards my People, and to bear a gentle and eaſy Hand over them, with an Eye more eſpecially to the Preſervation of their Peace and Liberties, and to ſettle them in a State of Tranquillity and Happineſs, not to be ſhaken: All this I have taken into mature Deliberation; and, being given to underſtand by my truſty and well-beloved Friend and Counſellor, Haman, a Perſon of a tried Faith, Prudence, and Juſtice, and whom I eſteem above all others, that there is a Mixture of a Sort of inhuman People among my Subjects, that take upon them to govern by their own Laws, and to preſcribe Ways to themſelves, in Contempt of publick Order and Government; Men deprav'd both in their Cuſtoms, and in their Manners, and Enemies not only to Monarchy, but to the Methods of our Royal Adminiſtration: This is therefore to will and require, that, upon Notice given you, by Haman (who is to me as a Father) of the Perſons intended by this my Proclamation, you put all the ſaid Perſons, Men, Women, and Children, to the Sword, without any Commiſeration or Favour, in a ſtrict Purſuance of my Decree. And it is my further Command, that you put this in Execution upon the thirteenth Day of the twelfth Month of the preſent Year, to make but one Day's Work of the Deſtruction of all mine, and your Enemies, in order to a future Peace, and Security of all our Lives after." Jewiſh Antiq. lib. xi. c. 6.

† The firſt Inſtitution of Poſts is generally aſcrib'd to the Perſians; for the Kings of Perſia (as Diodorus Siculus, lib. xix, obſerves) that they might have Intelligence of what paſs'd in all the Provinces of their vaſt Dominions, plac'd Centinels on Eminences, at convenient Diſtances where Towers were built, and theſe Centinels gave notice of publick Occurrences to one another, with a very loud and ſhrill Voice, by which Means, News was tranſmitted from one Extremity of the Kingdom to the other, with great Expedition. But as this could be practis'd only in the Caſe of general News, which might be communicated to the whole Nation; Cyrus (as Xenophon relates, Cyropæd. lib. viii.) ſet up Couriers, Places for Poſt-Horſes on all High-Roads, and Offices, where they might deliver that were any where within their Juriſdiction, on the thirteenth of Adar following.

THE Publication of this horrid Decree occaſion'd an univerſal Grief and Lamentation, wherever the Jews inhabited; and, in the City of † Shuſhan, (which was not well pleas'd with it) Mordecai in particular having put on Sackcloth, and cover'd his Head with Aſhes, went along the Streets, † bemoaning his and his Countrymen's hard Fate, even until he came to the Palace-Gate; which when the Queen underſtood, and ſent to enquire the Cauſe, he return'd her a Copy of the King's Decree, whereby ſhe might plainly perceive, what Miſchief was intended againſt all the Nation, unleſs by a timely Interceſſion with the King ſhe would endeavour * to prevent it.

ESTHER, at firſt, excus'd herſelf from engaging in this Affair, becauſe an Ordinance was paſs'd, inhibiting any Perſon, whether Man or Woman, upon Pain of Death, from approaching the King's Preſence without a ſpecial Order. But when he return'd her in Anſwer, "That the Decree extended to the whole "Jewiſh Nation, without any Exception; "that, if it came to Execution, ſhe muſt "expect deliver their Packets to one another. This, ſays our Author, they did Night and Day; ſo that no Rain or hard Weather being to ſtop them, in the Judgment of many, they went faſter than Cranes could fly. The like is ſaid by Herodotus, lib. viii. And he acquaints us farther, that Xerxes, in his famous Expedition againſt Greece, planted Poſts from the Ægean Sea to Shuſhan, at certain Diſtances, as far as a Horſe could ride with Speed, that thereby he might ſend notice to his capital City, of whatever might happen in his Army. The Greeks borrow'd the Uſe of Poſts from the Perſians; and, in Imitation of them, called them ἄγγαροι. Among the Romans, Auguſtus was the Perſon, who ſet up publick Poſts, who at firſt were Running-Footmen, but were afterwards chang'd into Poſt-Chariots, and Horſes, for the greater Expedition. Adrian improv'd upon this; and, having reduc'd the Poſts to great Regularity, diſcharg'd the People from the Obligation they were under before, of furniſhing Horſes and Chariots. With the Empire, the Uſe of Poſts declin'd. About the Year 807, Charlemaigne endeavour'd to reſtore them. but his Deſign was not proſecuted by his Succeſſors. In France, Lewis XI. ſet up Poſts at two Leagues Diſtance through the Kingdom. In Germany, Count Taxis ſet them up, and had, for his Recompence, in 1616, a Grant of the Office of Poſt-maſter-General, to himſelf, and his Heirs for ever. Above eight hundred Years ago, Couriers were ſet up in the Ottoman Empire; and, at this Time, there are ſome among the Chineſe; but their Appointment is only to carry Orders from the King, and the Governors of Provinces, and, in a Word, for publick Affairs and thoſe of the greateſt Conſequence. Calmet's Dictionary under the Word.

† Not only the Jews, but a great many others in Shuſhan, might be concern'd at this horrid Decree, either becauſe they were related to them, or engag'd with them in worldly Concerns, or perhaps out of mere Humanity and Compaſſion to ſo vaſt a Number of innocent People, now appointed as Sheep for the Slaughter. They might apprehend likewiſe, that, upon the Execution of the Decree, ſome Sedition or Tumult might enſue; that, in ſo great a Slaughter, it was hard to tell, who would eſcape, without being killed or plunder'd, becauſe thoſe, who were employ'd in this bloody Work, would be more mindful to enrich themſelves, than to obſerve their Orders. Pool's Annotations, and Patrick's and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

† The latter Targum, upon the Book of Eſther, gives us this Account of Mordecai's Behaviour upon this ſad Occaſion, viz. That, in the Midſt of the Streets, he made his Complaint, ſaying, What an heavy Decree is this, which the King and Haman have paſs'd, not againſt a Part of us, but againſt us all, to root us out of the Earth! Whereupon, all the Jews flock'd about him, and, having caus'd the Book of the Law to be brought to the Gate of Shuſhan, he, being cover'd with Sackcloth, read therein theſe Words out of Deut. iv. 30, 31. When thou art in Tribulation, and all theſe Things are come upon thee, in the latter Days, if thou turn to the Lord thy God, and ſhalt be obedient to his Voice, (for the Lord thy God is a merciful God) he will not forſake thee, nor deſtroy thee, nor forget the Covenant of thy Fathers which he ſware unto them: After which he exhorted them to Faſting, Humiliation, and Repentance, according to the Example of the Ninevites. Patrick's Commentary.

* Ever ſince the Reign of Dejoces, King of Media, Herodotus, lib. i, informs us, that, for the Preſervation of Royal Majeſty, it was enacted, "That no one ſhould be admitted into the King's Preſence, but that, if he "had any Buſineſs with him, he ſhould tranſact it by the Intercourſe of his Miniſters." The Cuſtom paſs'd from the Medes to the Perſians, and therefore we find it in the ſame Hiſtorian, lib. iii. that, after the ſeven Perſian Princes had killed the Magian, who had uſurp'd the Throne, they came to this Agreement, that whoever ſhould be elected King, ſhould allow the others to have at all Times a ready Acceſs to his Preſence, (which is an Implication, that they had it not before) whenever they ſhould deſire it, except only when he was accompanying with any of his Wives. This therefore was the ancient Law of the Country, and not procur'd by Haman, as ſome imagine; tho' it cannot be deny'd, but that the Reaſon of the Law at firſt might be, not only the Preſervation of the Majeſty and Safety of the King's Perſon, but a Contrivance likewiſe of the great Officers of State, that they might engroſs the King to themſelves, by allowing Admittance to none, but whom they ſhould think proper to introduce. Pool's Annotations, and Le Clerc's Commentary.

Esther the Queen being gloriously adorned after she had called upon God who is the beholder & saviour of all things she took two Maids with her. And as she was speaking before the great King Artaxerxes she fell down for faintneſs. Eſther Chap. 4. Verſ. 2, & 5.

"expect to eſcape no more than the reſt; "that God very probably rais'd her to "her preſent Greatneſs, on Purpoſe that "ſhe might ſave and protect his People; "but that if ſhe neglected to do this, "and their Deliverance ſhould come "ſome other Way, then ſhould ſhe, "and her Father's Houſe, by the righteous and juſt Judgment of God, moſt "certainly periſh:" Which ſo rouz'd her drooping Courage, that ſhe ſent him Word again, that he and all the Jews in Shuſhan ſhould † faſt for her three Days, (as ſhe herſelf intended to do) and offer up their humble Supplications to God, that he would proſper her in ſo hazardous an Undertaking, and then ſhe would not fail to addreſs the King, tho' it were at the utmoſt Peril of her Life.

THE People faſted, as ſhe had enjoin'd them; and, on the third Day, ſhe dreſs'd herſelf in her royal Apparel, and † went toward the Room, where the King was ſitting upon his Throne in the inner Part of the Palace. Upon the firſt Sight of her, he held out his golden Sceptre, (a Token, that he pardon'd her Preſumption, and ſpar'd her Life) and then aſk'd her, what the Requeſt was, that ſhe had to make to him. At the Extenſion of this Favour, ſhe approach'd nearer, and having touch'd † the End of his Sceptre, only deſir'd, that he and Haman would come to a Banquet, which ſhe had prepar'd for him. Haman, who happen'd then to be abſent, was called to attend the King; and when the King and he were at the Banquet, he aſk'd her again concerning her Petition, promiſing that he would grant it her, even were it to extend to Half his Kingdom: But † her Requeſt again was no more, than that he and Haman would favour her again, the next Day, with their Company at the like Entertainment, and that then ſhe would not fail to diſcloſe her Requeſt.

† This is not to be underſtood, as if the People were to take no Manner of Suſtenance for three Days, becauſe few or none could undergo that, but only, either that they ſhould abſtain from all Delicacies, and content themſelves with coarſe Fare, as Joſephus expounds it, or that they ſhould make no ſet Meals of Dinner or Supper in their Families, but eat and drink no more than would ſuffice to ſuſtain Nature, and ſupport them in Prayer to God for a Bleſſing upon her Undertaking. Patrick's and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

† But firſt, ſays the latter Targum, ſhe made a ſolemn Prayer to God, with many Tears, as ſoon as ſhe was dreſs'd, ſaying, Thou art the great God, the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, the God of my Father Benjamin; as thou didſt deliver Hananiah, Miſhael, and Azariah out of the fiery Furnace, and Daniel from the Lion's Den, ſo deliver me now out of the Hand of the King, and give me Grace and Favour in his Eyes, &c.

† A Sceptre was the Enſign of the higheſt and moſt abſolute Authority; and therefore ſome have obſerv'd, that when Mordecai was advanc'd to the greateſt Dignity next the King, having the Royal Robes on, and other Enſigns of Royal Dignity, no Mention is made of any Sceptre, for that was proper and peculiar to the King; and the Queen's touching, or (as ſome ſay) kiſſing it, was a Token of her Subjection, and Thankfulneſs for his Favour. But Joſephus has mightily improv'd upon the Story; for he tells us, "That as the Queen, with her two "Handmaids, approach'd the Room where the King was, leaning gently upon one, and the other bearing up her "Train, her Face being cover'd with ſuch a Bluſh, as expreſſed a graceful Majeſty, but at the ſame Time ſome doubtful Apprehenſions upon her approaching of the King, mounted on his Throne, and the ſparkling Glory of his "Robes, that were all over embroider'd with Gold, Pearl, and precious Stones, ſhe was taken, all on a ſudden, "with a Trembling at ſo ſurpriſing a Sight; and, upon fancying that the King look'd upon her as if he were "uneaſy, and out of Humour, ſhe fell into the Arms of one of her Maids in a direct Swoon. This Accident, "ſays he, by the Intervention of God's holy Will and Providence, put the King into a Fright, for Fear ſhe "might not come to herſelf again; ſo that, making what Haſte he could from his Throne, he took her up "in his Arms, and, with the kindeſt Words that could be, gave her this Comfort: ——— That no Advantage ſhould be made of the Law to her Prejudice, though ſhe came without calling, becauſe the Decree "extended only to Subjects, whereas he look'd upon her as his Companion and Partner in the Empire." Jewiſh Antiq. lib. xi. c. 6.

† Her Intention, in deſiring thus to entertain the King twice at her Banquet, before ſhe made known her Petition, was, that thereby ſhe might the more endear herſelf to him, and diſpoſe him the better to grant her Requeſt; for which Reaſon, ſhe thought it a Piece of no bad Policy to invite his firſt Favourite to come along with him. But, in the whole Matter, the ſingular Providence of God is not a little conſpicuous, which ſo diſpoſed her Mind, that the high Honour, which the King beſtowed upon Mordecai the next Day, might fall out in the mean Time, and ſo make way for her Petition, which would come in very ſeaſonably at the Banquet of Wine: For as then it was moſt likely for the King to be in a pleaſant Humour, ſo it was moſt uſual for the Perſians to enter upon Buſineſs of State, when they began to drink. Le Clerc's and Patrick's Commentary, and Prideaux's Connection, Anno 453.

Haman's freſh Indignation againſt Mordecai.

HAMAN [*] was not a little proud of the peculiar Honour which both the King and Queen had done him; but, upon his Return Home, ſeeing Mordecai ſitting at the Palace-Gate, and refuſing to ſhew him the leaſt Obeiſance, tho' [†] he reſtrain'd himſelf at preſent, yet ſo mov'd was he with Indignation againſt him, that when he came Home, and related to his Family the Favours which that Day he had receiv'd, he could not forbear complaining of the Affront and Diſreſpect which Mordecai had put upon him; inſomuch, that his Wife, and others that were preſent, advis'd him to have a Gibbet of [†] fifty Cubits high inſtantly erected, and, the very next Morning, to go to the King, and obtain a Grant of him to have that inſolent Fellow hang'd upon it.

He is forc'd to wait on him as a Lacquey.

THIS Project he lik'd very well, and therefore caus'd the Gibbet to be ſet up: But, when he came to Court in the Morning, he found that Things had taken quite another Turn. The King, that very Morning, happen'd to awake ſooner than ordinary, and being not able to compoſe himſelf to Sleep again, he called for [†] the Annals of his Reign, and order'd a Perſon, that was then in waiting, to read them to him. The Reader went on, until he came to the Paſſage, which made mention of Mordecai's Diſcovery of the Treaſon of the two Chamberlains; and when the King upon Enquiry was given to underſtand, that the Man, for ſo ſignal a Service, had receiv'd no Reward at all, he called unto Haman, (who was waiting for Admittance upon a quite different Intent) and aſk'd him, What it was he would adviſe him to do to the Man, on whom he deſign'd to confer ſome Marks of his Favour?

HAMAN, who never dream'd but that the Perſon he meant of was himſelf, was reſolv'd to lay it on thick, and therefore [*] Athenæus mentions it as a peculiar Honour, which no Grecian ever had before or after, that Artaxerxes vouchſafed to invite Timagoras the Cretan to dine even at the Table, where his Relations eat, and to ſend ſometimes a Part of what was ſerv'd up at his own; which ſome Perſians look'd upon as a Diminution of his Majeſty, and a Proſtitution of their Nation's Honour. In the Life of Artaxerxes, Plutarch tells us, that none but the King's Mother, and his real Wife, were permitted to ſit at his Table; and therefore he mentions it, as a Condeſcenſion in that Prince, that he ſometimes invited his Brothers: So that this particular Favour was a Matter that Haman had ſome Reaſon to value himſelf upon. Le Clerc's Commentary.

[†] It may ſeem a little ſtrange, that ſo proud a Man as Haman was, ſhould not be prompted immediately to avenge himſelf on Mordecai for his contemptuous Uſage of him, ſince he had enough about him, no doubt, who, upon the leaſt Intimation of his Pleaſure, would have done it; and ſince he, who had Intereſt enough with his Prince to procure a Decree for the Deſtruction of a whole Nation, might have eaſily obtain'd a Pardon for having killed one obſcure and infamous Member of it. But herein did the wiſe and powerful Providence of God appear, that it diſpos'd Haman's Heart, (contrary to his own Inclination and Intereſt) inſtead of employing his Power againſt his Enemy, to put Fetters, as it were, upon his own Hands. Pool's Annotations.

[†] That Men might at a great Diſtance ſee him, to the Increaſe of his Diſgrace, (as Haman might think) and that, ſtruck with the greater Terror by that Spectacle, they might not dare, for the future, to deſpiſe or offend him. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

[†] In theſe Diaries (which we now call Journals) wherein was ſet down what paſs'd every Day, the Manner of the Perſians was, to record the Names of thoſe who had done the King any ſignal Service. Accordingly Joſephus informs us, "That, upon the Secretary's reading theſe Journals, he took notice of ſuch a Perſon, who had great "Honours and Poſſeſſions given him, as a Reward for a glorious and remarkable Action; and of ſuch another, "who made his Fortune by the Bounties of his Prince, for his Fidelity: But that, when he came to the particular "Story of the Conſpiracy of the two Eunuchs againſt the Perſon of the King, and of the Diſcovery of this Treaſon "by Mordecai, the Secretary read it over, and was paſſing forward to the next, when the King ſtopp'd him, and "aſk'd if that Perſon had any Reward given him for his Service, &c." Which ſhews indeed a ſingular Providence of God, that the Secretary ſhould read in that very Part of the Book, wherein the Service of Mordecai was recorded. But the latter Targum (to make a thorough Miracle of it) tells us, that, when the Reader open'd the Book at the Place where Mention was made of Mordecai, he turn'd over the Leaves, and would have read in another, but that the Leaves flew back again to the ſame Place, where he open'd it at firſt, ſo that he was forc'd to read that Story to the King. Patrick's Commentary, and Jewiſh Antiq. lib. xi. c. 6.

fore he gave Advice, * that the Royal Robe ſhould be brought, which the King, on ſolemn Occaſions, was wont to wear; the Horſe, which was kept for his own Riding *, and the Crown, which was us'd to be ſet upon the Horſe's Head *, and that, with this Robe, the Perſon, whom the King thought proper to diſtinguiſh, ſhould be array'd, and the chief Man in the Kingdom appointed to lead his Horſe by the Reins, walking before him in the Quality of an Officer, and proclaiming, Thus ſhall it be done to the Man whom the King delights to honour. "Take then the "Horſe, and the Robe, ſays the King, "and do all that thou haſt mention'd to "Mordecai the Jew, who has not been "yet rewarded for the Diſcovery of the "Treaſon of the two Eunuchs, that in- "tended to have taken away my Life."

Is hang'd at laſt upon the ſame Gallows, that he intended for Mordecai.

NOTHING certainly could cut a proud Man more to the Heart, than to be employ'd in ſuch an Office; but the King's Command was poſitive, ſo that Haman was forc'd to do it, how much ſoever it might go againſt the Grain: And when the irkſome Ceremony was over, he return'd to his Houſe, lamenting the Diſappointment, and great Mortification he had met with, in being forc'd to pay ſo ſignal an Honour to his moſt hated Enemy. But while he was relating this to his Family, and they thereupon expreſſing ſome uneaſy Apprehenſions, as if this were a very bad Omen, one of the Queen's Chamberlains came to his Houſe to haſten him to the Banquet; and, having ſeen the Gallows, which had been ſet up the Night before, he fully inform'd himſelf of the Intent for which it was prepar'd.

* To form a Notion of that Height of Pride and Arrogance, to which Haman w[illegible]l thought all the Honours he ſpecified, were deſign'd for him) was arrived, we may obſerve, that, for any one to put on the Royal Robe, without the Privity and Conſent of the King, was, among the Perſians, accounted a capital Crime. To which Purpoſe Plutarch, in his Life of Artaxerxes, has related this Story: —— "That, one Day, when in hunting the King "happen'd to tear his Garment, and Tiribazus was telling him of it, the King aſk'd him what he ſhould do? Why "put on another, ſays Tiribazus, and give that to me. That I will, ſays the King, but then I enjoin you not to "wear it. Tiribazus however (who was a good Kind of a Man enough, but a little weak and ſilly) adventur'd to "put it on, with all its fine Ornaments; and, when ſome of the Nobles began to reſent it, as a Thing not lawful "for any Subject to do, I allow him, ſays the King laughing at the Figure he made, to wear the fine Trinkets as a "Woman, and the Robe as a Madman." Le Clerc's Commentary.

* There was a Cuſtom, not unlike this, among the Hebrews, (as appears from the Hiſtory of Solomon, 1 Kings i. 33. for the Perſon, that was to be declar'd Succeſſor to the Crown, on the Day of his Inauguration, to be mounted on the King's Horſe: And to the like Cuſtom among the Perſians, it is highly probable, that the Poet Statius, in his Deſcription of a young King ſucceeding to his Father's Throne, may allude:

Sicut Achæmenius ſolium genteſque paternas
Excepit ſi fortè puer, cui vivere patrem
Tutius, incertâ formidine gaudia librat,
An fidi proceres, an pugnet vulgus habenis,
Cui latus Euphratæ, cui Caſpia limina mandet,
Sumere nunc arcus, ipſumque onerare veretur
PATRIS EQUUM, viſuſque ſibi nec ſceptra capaci
Suſtentare manu, nec adhuc implere tiaram. Thebaid. lib. viii.

* Commentators are not agreed, whether this Crown was plac'd upon the King's Head, or his Horſe's. Thoſe who refer it to the King, will have it to be what we call a Turbant, made of fine white and purple Linnen, which it was Death for any one to put on his Head, without the King's expreſs Order; to which Purpoſe Arrian, (Alex. Exped. lib. vii.) tells us this Story —— "That, as Alexander was ſailing on the Euphrates, and his Turbant "happen'd to fall off among ſome Reeds, one of the Watermen immediately jump'd in, and ſwam to it; but, as "he could not bring it back in his Hand without wetting it, he put it upon his Head, and ſo return'd with it. "Whereupon moſt Hiſtorians, that have wrote of Alexander, (ſays he) tell us, that he gave him a Talent of Silver "for this Expreſſion of his Zeal to ſerve him, but, at the ſame Time, order'd his Head to be ſtruck off, for preſuming "to put on the Royal Diadem." Other Commentators are of Opinion, that this Keter, which we render Crown, being a Word of a large Signification, will equally denote that Ornament, which the Horſe, that the King rode, wore upon his Head: As it muſt be acknowledg'd, that this Application of the Thing agrees better with the Signification and Order of the Hebrew Words; with the following Verſes, wherein no Mention is made of the Keter, but only of the Robe, and the Horſe, to which this Crown belong'd; and with the Cuſtom of the Perſians, who us'd to put a certain Ornament (in Italian called Fiocco) upon the Head of that Horſe whereon the King was mounted. Le Clerc's and Patrick's Commentaries, and Pool's Annotations.

WHEN the King and Haman were ſet down to the Entertainment, the King aſk'd Eſther again, what her Requeſt was; renewing his Promiſe, that he would not fail to grant it her, even tho' it extended to the Half of his Kingdom: "But my Petition, O King, ſays ſhe, is only for my own Life, and the Life of my People, becauſe there is a Deſign laid againſt us, not to make us Bond-men and Bond-women, (for then I ſhould have been ſilent) but to ſlay and deſtroy us all. If therefore I have found Favour in thy Sight, O King, let my Life, and the Life of my People, be given at my Requeſt." At this the King aſking with ſome Commotion, who it was that durſt do any ſuch Thing? The Haman then preſent, ſhe told him, was the Contriver of all the Plot: Whereupon the King, riſing up from the Banquet in a Paſſion, † went into the Garden adjoining; and Haman, taking this Opportunity, † fell proſtrate on the Bed where the Queen was ſitting, to ſupplicate his Life; but the King, coming in the mean Time, and ſeeing him in this Poſture, What will he raviſh the Queen before my Eyes? cry'd out aloud: Whereupon thoſe that were in waiting, came, and cover'd his Face, as a Token of the King's Indignation againſt him; and when the Chamberlain, who had been to call him to the Banquet, acquainted the King of the Gallows, which he had prepar'd for Mordecai, who had ſav'd the King's Life, he gave immediate Orders, that * he ſhould be hang'd thereon, (which accordingly was done) and his whole Eſtate given to the Queen, whereof ſhe appointed Mordecai her Steward. At the ſame Time ſhe inform'd the King of her near Relation to Mordecai; ſo that he took him into his Royal Favour, advanc'd him to great Power, Riches, and Dignity in the Empire, and made him Keeper of his Signet, in the ſame Manner as Haman had been before.

And the Decree, which he procur'd againſt the Jews, is made ineffectual.

BUT tho' Haman was thus remov'd, yet the Decree, which he had procur'd, remained ſtill in full Fore; nor could it be repeal'd, becauſe the Laws of the Medes and Perſians were ſuch, that nothing written in the King's Name, and ſign'd with the Royal Signet, could be revers'd. All therefore that the King could do, (upon the Queen's ſecond Petition, to have the Decree cancelled) was, to grant the Jews (by another * Decree) ſuch a Power to defend themſelves againſt all, that ſhould aſſault them on the Day †, when the former Decree was to be executed, as might render it, in a great Meaſure, ineffectual.

† Partly, as diſdaining the Company of ſo audacious and ungrateful a Perſon; partly, to cool and allay his Spirit, boiling and ſtruggling with ſuch Variety of Paſſions; and, partly, to conſider within himſelf the Heinouſneſs of Haman's Crime, the Miſchief, which himſelf had like to have done by his own Raſhneſs, and what Puniſhment was fit to be inflicted on ſo vile a Miſcreant. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† It was a Cuſtom among the Perſians, as well as other Nations, to ſit, or rather to lie upon Beds, when they eat or drank; and therefore when Haman fell down, as a Supplicant at the Feet of Eſther, and (as the Manner was among the Greeks and Romans, and not improbably among the Perſians) embrac'd her Knees, the King might pretend, that he was offering Violence to the Queen's Chaſtity. Not that he believ'd, that this was his Intention, but, in his furious Paſſion, he turn'd every Thing to the worſt Senſe, and made uſe of it to aggravate his Crime. Patrick's Commentary.

* Joſephus indeed tells us, that he died on the Croſs: But others have obſerv'd, that Crucifixion was not a Perſian Puniſhment; and Salmaſius (in his Book de Cruce) ſhews, that it was the Manner of the Perſians, firſt to cut off the Heads of Malefactors, and then to hang them on a Gibbet. However this be, "I cannot paſs over the wonderful Harmony of Providence (ſays Joſephus) without a Remark upon the Almighty Power, and the admirable Juſtice and Wiſdom of God, not only in bringing Haman to his deſerv'd Puniſhment, but entrapping him in the very ſame Snare that he had laid for another, and turning a malicious Invention upon the Head of the Inventor"

- - - - - - - - - - Nec lex eſt juſtior ulla,
Quam necis artifices arte perire ſuâ. Antiq. lib. xi. c. 6.

* Joſephus has given us a true Copy, as he ſays, of this Decree, or (as he calls it) of the Letters, which Artaxerxes ſent to the Magiſtrates of all the Nations that lie between India and Ethiopia, under the Command of an hundred and ſeven and twenty Provinces:———— "Wherein he repreſents the Abuſe which Favourites are wont to make of their Power and Credit with their Prince, by inſulting their Inferiors, by flying in the Face of thoſe that rais'd them, and (to gratify their Reſentments) calumniating the Innocent, and putting honeſt Men in Danger of their Lives;

TO this Purpoſe, a freſh Edict was drawn up in the third Month, ſign'd by the King, and tranſmitted to the Provinces: So that, when the thirteenth Day of Adar came, by the Means of theſe different and diſcordant Decrees, a War was commenc'd between the Jews and their Enemies, through the whole Perſian Empire; but, as the Rulers of the ſeveral Provinces, and other Officers of the King, well underſtood what Power and Credit Eſther and Mordecai then had with him, they ſo favour'd the Jews every where, that on that Day they ſlew, in the whole Empire, ſeventy-five Thouſand Perſons, and in the City of Shuſhan, on that Day and the next, eight hundred more; among whom were † the ten Sons of Haman, whom by a ſpecial Order from the King, they hang'd, perhaps on the ſame Gallows, whereon their Father had hung before; And, in Memory of this their wonderful Deliverance, the Jews did then (and have ever ſince) on the fourteenth and fifteenth Day of the Month Adar, keep a great Feſtival, which they called † the Feaſt of Lots.

" Lives: Wherein he makes mention of the uncommon Favours and Honours, which he had beſtow'd upon " Haman, the Amalekite, who had notwithſtanding taken Meaſures to ſupplant him of his Kingdom, to deſtroy " Mordecai, the Preſerver of his Life, together with his deareſt Wiſe the Queen, and to extirpate the whole Nation " of Jews, who were good and peaceable Subjects, and Worſhippers of that God, to whom he was indebted for " the Poſſeſſion and Preſervation of his Empire: Wherein he acquaints them, that for theſe wicked and treaſonable " Practices, having caus'd him and his whole Family to be executed before the Gates of Suſa, his Royal Pleaſure, by " theſe Preſents, was, that they ſhould not only diſcharge the Jews from all the Pains and Penalties, to which " they are made liable by his Letters which Haman had ſent them; but that they ſhould likewiſe aid and aſſiſt " them, in vindicating themſelves upon thoſe, that ſpitefully and injuriouſly oppreſs'd them: And wherein he " tells them, that, whereas the Time appointed for the utter Deſtruction of theſe People was to have been on the " thirteenth Day of the Month Adar, his further Pleaſure was, that the ſame Month and Day ſhould be employ'd " in their Reſcue and Deliverance; and that if any Perſon, either by Diſobedience or Neglect, ſhould act in any " Thing contrary to the Tenor of this his Imperial Command, he ſhould be liable to military Execution by Fire " and Sword."

† It might be preſum'd, that ſome, out of Hatred to the Jews, might be inclinable to obey Haman's Decree: For though he himſelf was gone, yet it cannot be imagin'd, that all the Friends and Creatures, that he had made, periſh'd with him. He might have a great Party every where, and ſome of them ſo furiouſly enrag'd at his Fall, as (even at the Hazard of their own Lives) would not fail to ſhew their Indignation at thoſe, who were the Occaſion of it: And therefore this ſecond Decree, procur'd by Mordecai, gave them Authority, if any Attempt was made upon them, either in great Bodies, or ſmall Parties, not only to defend themſelves and repel them, but to make as great a Slaughter of them as they were able, and even to take Poſſeſſion of their Goods, as Haman had procur'd them Licence (Chap. iii. 13.) to ſeize the Goods of the Jews. Patrick's Commentary.

† 'Tis not unlikely, that many might be enrag'd at his Death, and his Sons, in particular, might ſet themſelves at the Head of thoſe, who were bold enough to attempt the Deſtruction of the Jews in Shuſhan, being reſolv'd to revenge their Father's Death, though in ſo doing they were ſure to meet their own. And this ſeems to ſuggeſt one Reaſon why Eſther was ſo ſollicitous to have their dead Bodies (for they where ſlain already) hung upon the Gallows, Chap. ix. 13. even becauſe they had ſhewn more Malice and Indignation againſt the Jews, and, on the Day when the cruel Edict came to take place, had made more deſperate Attacks upon them than any; though the Reaſon of the State, in this Severity, might be to expoſe the Family to the greater Infamy, and to deter other Counſellors from abuſing the King at any Time with falſe Repreſentations. For, tho' the Jews ſuffer'd none to hang on the Tree (as they called the Gallows) longer, than till the Evening of the Day, whereon they were executed; yet other Nations let them hang until they were conſum'd, (as appears from the Story of the Gibeonites, 2 Sam. xxi. 9, 10.) or devour'd by Crows, Vultures, or other ravenous Creatures, from whence that vulgar Saying among the Romans, paſcere in cruce corvos, had its Riſe. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† Pur, in the Perſian Language, ſignifies a Lot, and the Feaſt of Purim, or Lots (which had its Name from Haman's caſting Lots, in order to divine which Day would be moſt lucky to prefix for the Murther of all the Jews in the whole Perſian Dominions) is, to this very Day, celebrated by the Jews, with ſome peculiar Ceremonies, but moſt of them reduceable to theſe three Things, Reading, Reſting, and Feaſting. Before the Reading, which is perform'd in the Synagogue, and begins in the Evening, as ſoon as the Stars appear, they make uſe of three Forms of Prayer: In the firſt of theſe, they praiſe God for counting them worthy to attend this Divine Service; in the ſecond, they thank him for the miraculous Preſervation of their Anceſtors; and in the third, they bleſs his holy Name, for having continu'd their Lives to the Celebration of another Feſtival in Commemoration of it. Then they read over the whole Hiſtory of Haman from the Beginning to the End, but not out of any printed Book, (for that is not lawful) but out of an Hebrew Manuſcript, written on Parchment. There are five Places in the Text, wherein Lots. But proceed we now to ſome other Affairs.

Ezra, with ſome other Jews, goes to Jeruſalem with the King's Commiſſion.

IN the Beginning of the ſeventh Year of Ahaſuerus, Ezra, (a Prieſt deſcended from Seraiah, the High-Prieſt, who was ſlain by Nebuchadnezzar, when he burnt the Temple, and City of Jeruſalem) a Man of great Learning, and excellently † ſkilled in the Knowledge of the Scriptures, who had hitherto continu'd in Babylon, with others of the Captivity, that had not yet return'd, obtain'd Leave of the King to go to Jeruſalem, and to take as many of his own Nation with him, as were willing to accompany him thither.

ON the firſt Day of the firſt Month (which is called Niſan, and might fall about the Middle of our March) he ſet forward on his Journey from Babylon, † with an ample Commiſſion, and Authority to reſtore and ſettle the State, reform the Church of the Jews, and regulate and govern both, according to their own Laws.

wherein the Reader raiſes his Voice with all his Might: When he comes to the Place, that mentions the Names of the ten Sons of Haman, he repeats them very quick, to ſhew, that they were all deſtroy'd in a Moment; and every Time that the Name of Haman is pronounc'd, the Children, with great Fury, ſtrike againſt the Benches of the Synagogues, with the Mallets that they bring for that Purpoſe. After that the Reading is finiſh'd, they return Home and have a Supper, not of Fleſh, but of Spoon-Meat; and early next Morning they ariſe, and return to the Synagogue; where, after they have read that Paſſage in Exodus, which makes mention of the War of Amalek, they begin again to read the Book of Eſther, with the ſame Ceremonies as before; and ſo conclude the Service of the Day, with Curſes againſt Haman and his Wife Zereth, with Bleſſings upon Mordecai and Eſther, and with Praiſes to God, for having preſerv'd his People. Their Reſting on this Day is obſerv'd ſo religiouſly, that they will not ſo much as ſet, or ſow any Thing in their Gardens, with full Perſuaſion that it would not come up, if they did; and therefore they either play at Cheſs, and ſuch like Games, or ſpend the Time in Muſick and Dancing, until it be proper to begin their Feaſting, wherein they indulge themſelves to ſuch an immoderate Degree, that their Feaſt of Purim has, with great Juſtice, been called the Bacchanals of the Jews. They allow themſelves to drink Wine to Exceſs, nay, even to ſuch a Pitch, as not to be able to diſtinguiſh between the Bleſſing of Mordecai, and the Curſe of Haman, as themſelves ſpeak; and, amidſt the other Sports and Diverſions of the Day, they us'd formerly to erect a Gibbet, and burn upon it a Man made of Straw, whom they called Haman; but herein it was thought, that they might have a Deſign to inſult Chriſtians, upon the Death of our crucify'd Saviour, and therefore Theodoſius the IId (Anno Dom. 408.) forbad them to uſe this Ceremony, under the Penalty of forfeiting all their Privileges. We have only farther to remark concerning this Feſtival, that it is always kept for two Days together, and the Reaſon hereof is this: —— The Jews at Shuſhan had two Days allow'd them to revenge themſelves of their Enemies, Eſther ix. 13. but the reſt of the Jews in other Nations had but one. This cauſ'd, at firſt, ſome Difference in their Time of Feaſting; for the Jews, in all other Parts of the Kingdom, having done Execution on their Enemies on the thirteenth Day, kept their Rejoicing Feaſt on the fourteenth; but the Jews at Shuſhan, being engag'd in this Work, both on the thirteenth and fourteenth Days, kept their Feſtival for their Deliverance on the fifteenth. When Mordecai however had made a Record of this great Deliverance, he ſent Letters to all the Jews throughout the Dominions of Ahaſuerus, to eſtabliſh it as a ſtanding Ordinance among them, that they ſhould keep both the fourteenth and fifteenth of the Month Adar every Year, as the Days whereon the Jews reſted from their Enemies: And this is the Reaſon why the Feſtival continues for two Days, though the former of them is only kept with great Solemnity. Patrick's Commentary, Howell's Hiſtory, in the Notes, and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Purim.

† Both the Septuagint, Vulgate, and our Tranſlation, render the Words Sophen Mahir, a ready Scribe, Ezra vii. 6. as if, to have a quick Hand at writing out the Law were any great Perfection, or that any aged Man (as Ezra was) ſhould be renown'd for it. It was not then for writing, but for explaining the Things contain'd in the Scriptures, that Ezra was ſo famous. For, as Sepher ſignifies a Book, ſo Sopher denotes one ſkilled and learned in that Book; and, as there was no Book comparable to the Book of the Law, therefore Sepher became a Name of great Dignity, and ſignify'd one, that taught God's Law, and inſtructed the People out of it; in which Senſe we find the Word γραμματεῖς, or Scribes, us'd in the New Teſtament. For when our Saviour is ſaid to have taught the People, as one having Authority, and not as the Scribes, this plainly ſhews, that theſe Scribes were not Tranſcribers, but Teachers, and Expounders of the Law, tho' they did not do it with a proper Authority. Patrick's and Le Clerc's Commentaries.

† It can hardly be imagin'd, but that ſome more than ordinary Means were us'd to obtain ſo great a Favour from the King, as this Commiſſion was; and therefore we may ſuppoſe, that it was granted at the Sollicitation of Eſther, who was become the beſt belov'd of the King's Concubines, though not as yet advanc'd to the Dignity of Queen: For, being it was uſual for the Kings of Perſia, on ſome particular Days and Occaſions, to allow their Women to aſk what Boons they pleas'd; 'tis not unlikely, that, by the Direction of Mordecai, upon ſome ſuch Time and Occaſion as this, Eſther (though ſhe had not diſcover'd her Kindred and Nation) might make this the Matter of her Requeſt. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 459.

From Ezra iv. 7. to the End; all Eſth. Neh. and Part of Hagg. Zech. and Malachi.

When he came to the River Abava †, he there halted, until the reſt of his Company was come up; and then, having, in a ſolemn Faſt, † recommended himſelf, and all that were with him, to the Divine Protection, on the twelfth Day he ſet forward for Jeruſalem, where they all ſafely arriv'd on the firſt Day of the fifth Month, called Ab, i. e. about the Middle of our July, having ſpent four whole Months in their Journey from Babylon thither.

And makes a Reformation among the People, in Relation to their Marriages.

Upon his Arrival, Ezra deliver'd up to the Temple the Offerings, which had been made to it by the King, his Nobles, and the reſt of the People of Iſrael that ſtaid behind, which † amounted to a very large Sum; and having communicated his Commiſſion to the King's Lieutenants and Governors throughout all Syria and Paleſtine, he betook himſelf to the executing of the Contents of it.

He had not been long in his Government, before he found that many of the People had taken Wives of other Nations, contrary to the Law of God; and that ſeveral of the Prieſts and Levites, as well as other chief Men of Judah and Benjamin, had tranſgreſs'd in this Particular. And therefore after he had, * in Mourning, and Faſting, † and Prayer, deprecated God's Wrath for ſo ſad an Apoſtacy, he caus'd Proclamation to be made, for all the People of the Land, that had return'd from the Captivity, to meet together at Jeruſalem, under the Penalty of Excommunication and Confiſcation of their Goods; and when they met, he endeavour'd to make them ſenſible of their Sin, and engag'd them in a Promiſe, and Covenant before God, to depart from it, by putting away their ſtrange Wives, and the Children that were born of them, that the Seed of Iſrael might not be polluted by ſuch an undue Commixture: And, accordingly, Commiſſioners were appointed to inſpect this Affair, who, in three Months Time, made a proper Enquiry, and a thorough Reformation of this Enormity.

† This was a River of Aſſyria, and, very probably, that which ran along the Adiabene, where the River Diava, or Adiava, is known to be, and, upon which Ptolemy places the City of Abane, or Aavane. Here, ſome imagine, was the Country, which, in the ſecond Book of Kings, xvii. 24, is called Ava, from whence the King of Aſſyria tranſlated the People called Avites, into Paleſtine, and, in their Room, ſettled ſome of the captive Iſraelites. It was a common Thing for thoſe, that travelled from Babylon to Jeruſalem, in order to avoid the ſcorching Heat of the Deſert of Arabia, to ſhape their Courſe Northward at firſt, and then, turning to Weſtward, to paſs through Syria into Paleſtine; but Ezra had a farther Reaſon for his taking this Rout: For, as he intended to get together as many Iſraelites as he could, to carry along with him to Jeruſalem, he took his Courſe this Way, and made an Halt in the Country of Ava, or Abava, from whence he might ſend Emiſſaries into the Caſpian Mountains, to invite ſuch Jews as were there, to come and join him. Le Clerc's Commentary on Ezra viii. and Calmet's Dictionary under the Word Abava.

† This they had the greater Reaſon to do, becauſe they carry'd Things of conſiderable Value along with them; were apprehenſive of Enemies, that lay in wait for them; and were aſham'd to aſk any Guard of the King, who, being not much inſtructed in divine Matters, might poſſibly think, that what they ſaid of God's Favour towards them, and the Prophecies concerning their Reſtoration, were but vain Boaſts, in caſe they ſhould ſeem to diſtruſt his Power and Favour, (of whom they had ſpoken ſo magnificently) by making Application to the King for his Protection and Defence. Rather therefore than give any ſuch Umbrage, they were reſolv'd to commit themſelves entirely to God: But then it was neceſſary, that they ſhould beſeech that of him, which, without giving Offence, they could not requeſt of the King. Patrick's Commentary.

† According to the Account we have of them (Ezra viii. 26, 27.) there were ſix hundred and fifty Talents of Silver, which, at three hundred ſeventy-five Pounds to the Talent, make two hundred forty-three Thouſand, ſeven hundred and fifty Pounds. The Silver Veſſels weigh'd an hundred Talents, which came to thirty-ſeven Thouſand and five hundred Pounds. The Gold in Coin was an hundred Talents, which, at four Thouſand five hundred Pounds per Talent, made four hundred and fifty Thouſand Pounds: And, beſides all this, there were twenty Baſons of Gold of a Thouſand Drachms, and two Veſſels of fine Copper, as valuable as Gold. Howell's Hiſtory in the Notes.

* The Manner, in which Ezra is ſaid to have expreſs'd his Concern for the People's unlawful Marriages, is, by rending his Garment, and his Mantle, Chap. ix. 3. i. e. both his inner and upper Garment; which was a Token, not only of great Grief and Sorrow, but of his Apprehenſions likewiſe of the Divine Diſpleaſure; and by pulling off the Hair of his Head and Beard, which was ſtill an higher Sign of exceeding great Grief among other Nations, as well as the Jews; and therefore we find in Homer, that when Ulyſſes, and his Companions, bewailed the Death of Elpenor, Ἑζόμενοι δ' ἐνθαῦθα γόων, τίλλοντο τε χαίτας. Odyſſ. κ.

† The Prayer we have in Ezra ix. 6, &c. the Purport of which is this: —— "That he was confounded, "when he thought of the Greatneſs of their Sins, which were ready to overwhelm them, and of the Boldneſs and "Inſolence of them beyond Meaſure, even tho' they had ſeen the Divine Vengeance upon their Forefathers, in ſo "terrible a Manner, that they had not yet worn off the Marks of his Diſpleaſure. He had begun indeed to "ſhew Favour to ſome of them; but this ſo much the more aggravated their Wickedneſs, in that, ſo ſoon "after their Reſtoration, and Settlement in their native Country, they had return'd to their old Provocations, "notwithſtanding the many Admonitions in the Law, and the Prophets, to have nothing to do with the People "of Canaan, except it were to expel, and rout them out. What then can we expect, ſays he, but the utter "Deſtruction of the ſmall Remnant that is left of us, if, after all the Puniſhments, which God has inflicted on "us, Nehemiah is ſent as Governor, and with a Commiſſion to rebuild the Walls of Jeruſalem.

UPON the Death of Zerubbabel, the Adminiſtration, both of civil and eccleſiaſtical Affairs, devolv'd upon Ezra; but, in the twentieth Year of Ahaſuerus, † Nehemiah, a very religious and excellent Perſon among thoſe of the Captivity, and who was a great Favourite with that Prince, ſucceeded him in the Government of Judah and Jeruſalem. He had inform'd himſelf from ſome People, that were come from Jeruſalem, of the miſerable State and Condition of that City; that † its Walls were broken down, and its Gates burnt, ſo that its Inhabitants lay open, not only to the Incurſions and Inſults of their Enemies, but to the Reproach likewiſe and Contempt of their Neighbours. This mournful Relation affected the good Man to ſuch a Degree, that he apply'd himſelf in Faſting and (f) Prayer to God, and humbly beſought, that he would be pleas'd to favour the Deſign, which he had conceiv'd of aſking the King's Permiſſion to go to Jeruſalem.

BY his Office, he † was Cup-bearer to the King; and therefore, when it came † to his Turn to wait, the King, obſerving that his Countenance was not ſo chearful, as at other Times, and being told, that the diſtreſſed State of his Country, and

For, while we remain Monuments of his Mercy, and yet appear before him in our Abomi- " nations, we muſt be dumb, and have nothing to plead in Excuſe of our deteſtable Ingratitude" Patrick's Commentary.

† It may well be queſtion'd, whether this Nehemiah be the ſame that is mention'd in Ezra, (Chap. ii. 2. and Neh. vii. 7.) as one, that return'd from the Babyloniſh Captivity under Zerubbabel; ſince from the firſt Year of Cyrus, to the twentieth of Artaxerxes Longimanus, there are no leſs than ninety-two Years intervening; ſo that Nehemiah muſt, at this Time, have been a very old Man; upon the loweſt Computation, above an hundred, and, conſequently, utterly incapable of being the King's Cup-Bearer, of taking a Journey from Shuſhan to Jeruſalem, and of behaving there with all that Courage and Activity, that is recorded of him. Upon this Preſumption therefore, we may conclude, that this was a different Perſon, tho' of the ſame Name; and that Tarſhatha (the other Name, by which he is called, Ezra ii. 63. and Neh. vii. 65.) denotes the Title of his Office, and, both in the Perſian and Chaldean Tongues, was the general Name given to all the King's Deputies and Governors. Le Clerc's and Pool's Annotations on Neh. i.

† The Commiſſions which had hitherto been granted the Jews, were ſuppos'd to extend no farther than to the Rebuilding of the Temple, and their own private Houſes; and therefore the Walls and Gates of their City lay in the ſame ruinous Condition, in which the Chaldeans left them, after that Devaſtation. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

(f) Neh. i. 5.

† This was a Place of great Honour and Advantage in the Perſian Court, becauſe of the Privilege which it gave him, that was in it, of being daily in the King's Preſence, and the Opportunity which he had thereby, of gaining his Favour, for the obtaining of any Petition that he ſhould make to him. And that it was a Place of great Advantage, ſeems evident by Nehemiah's gaining thoſe immenſe Riches, which enabled him, for ſo many Years (Neh. v. 14, 19.) out of his own private Purſe only, to live in his Government, with all that Splendor and Expence (that will hereafter be related) without burthening the People at all for it. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 445.

† Commentators have generally obſerv'd, that it was almoſt four Months between his hearing of the diſconſolate Condition wherein Jeruſalem lay, and his requeſting Leave of the King to go thither. But (beſides that it might not come to his own Turn of waiting ſooner) there might be theſe farther Reaſons aſſign'd for this his long Silence and Delay. As, that he could not take ſo long and dangerous a Journey in the Winter; that he could no ſooner meet with a ſeaſonable Opportunity of ſpeaking with the King upon ſo critical an Affair; or (as others will have it) that he retir'd all this intermediate while, and ſpent it in Faſting and Prayer. Pool's Annotations, and Patrick's Commentary.

and of the City, where his Anceſtors were bury'd, were the only Cauſe of it, gave him, at his Requeſt, thro' the Interceſſion of the Queen, (who (g) was then ſitting with him) Leave to go to Jeruſalem, and a full Commiſſion (as his Governor of the Province of Judea) to repair the Walls, and to ſet up the Gates, and fortify the City again in the ſame Manner that it was, before it was diſmantled, and deſtroy'd by the Babylonians; but, upon this Condition it was, that he ſhould return to Court again, at ſuch a † determinate Time.

The King, at the ſame Time, wrote Letters to all the Governors beyond the Euphrates, to be aiding and aſſiſting to him in the Work. He ſent his Order to Aſaph, the Keeper of his Foreſts in thoſe Parts, to furniſh him with whatever Timber he ſhould want, not only for the Reparation of the Towers, and Gates of the City, but for the building of himſelf an Houſe likewiſe, as Governor of the Province, to live in; and (to do him ſtill more Honour) he ſent a Guard of Horſe, under the Command of ſome of the Captains of his Army, to conduct him ſafe to his Government.

With theſe Letters and Powers, Nehemiah arriv'd at Jeruſalem, and was kindly receiv'd by the People; but it was three Days, before he acquainted any one with the Occaſion of his Coming. On the third Day at Night, he, with ſome few Attendants, went privately round the City, to take a View of the Walls, which he found in a ruinous Condition; and, on the next, called together the chief of the People, and, * having reminded them of the deſolate Manner, in which the Walls of their City lay, and exhorted them to ſet about the Reparation of them, he produc'd his Commiſſion and Letters to that Purpoſe, which, when they were read, ſo gladden'd and reviv'd their drooping Spirits, that they joyfully and unanimouſly cry'd out, Let us riſe and build.

Which he carry'd on with great Succeſs, notwithſtanding Sanballat's Deſigns to defeat him.

In carrying on the Building, Nehemiah divided the People into ſeveral Companies, and aſſign'd to each of them the Quarter where they were to work, reſerving to himſelf the Reviewal and Direction of the whole. But they had not long proceeded in the Work, before Sanballat, an Officer of the Moabites, and Tobiah, a Man of Note among the Ammonites, two bitter Enemies to the Jewiſh Nation, began to ſcoff and ridicule their Undertaking. As the Work however advanc'd, they chang'd their Note, and, apprehending themſelves in Danger from the growing Greatneſs of the Jews, were reſolv'd to put a ſtop to their future Progreſs.

To this Purpoſe, they enter'd into a Confederacy with ſome neighbouring Nations, to come upon them by Surprize, demoliſh their Works, and put them all to the Sword; but the Governor having notice of this their Deſign, and ſending out Scouts

(g) Neh. ii. 6.

† How long this was, it is not certain. 'Tis ſaid indeed, that he was Governor in the Land of Judah for twelve Years, Chap. v. 14—xiii. 6. But conſidering what Haſte he made in diſpatching the Building of the Walls, which he finiſh'd in two and fifty Days, the Leave which he aſk'd might be but for a Year, or perhaps half ſo much; after which Time, it is likely, that he return'd to Shuſhan according to his Promiſe; but ſome Time after was ſent back again by the King, (who found his Preſence there ſerviceable, or perhaps neceſſary, for the better Regulation of that Province) to be his Governor for twelve Years. Patrick's Commentary.

* The Speech which Joſephus puts in the Mouth of the Governor, upon this Occaſion, is to this Effect:——
“ You cannot but ſee and underſtand, you Men of Judea, that we ourſelves are, at this Day, under the Power “ and Providence of the ſame Almighty and merciful God, that did ſo many Things for our Forefathers, Abra- “ ham, Iſaac, and Jacob, out of a gracious Regard to their Piety and Juſtice: And it is by the Favour of that “ God, that I have now obtain'd Leave from the King to enter upon the Rebuilding of your Wall, and the “ putting of an End to the Work of the Temple that is yet unfiniſh'd. But taking this for granted, that you “ live among a Sort of malicious and ſpiteful Neighbours, who would do all that is to be done in Nature, for
“ the croſſing of your Deſign, when they come once to ſee you heartily intent upon the Undertaking, I ſhall “ therefore recommend it to you, in the firſt Place, reſolutely and fearleſsly to caſt yourſelves upon God, who “ will moſt certainly defeat all the Practices of your Enemies; and, in the next Place, to ply your Buſineſs Day
“ and Night, without any Intermiſſion either of Care or of Labour, this being the proper Seaſon for it.” Jewiſh Antiq. lib. xi. c. 5.

Scouts daily to obſerve their Motions, plac'd a Guard well arm'd to defend and encourage the Workmen; and order'd that each Workman ſhould have his Arms nigh at Hand, in caſe they were attack'd; while himſelf went often in Perſon among them, by his Precept and Example encouraging them to truſt in the Lord, and, in his Speeches and Exhortations, putting them frequently in mind, that it was for their Wives, their Brethren, and Children (in caſe they were compelled to it) that they fought: So that, by theſe Means, they ſecur'd themſelves againſt all the Attempts and Deſigns of their Enemies, until the Work was brought to a Concluſion.

SANBALLAT, and the reſt of his Confederates, perceiving that their Plot was diſcover'd, and not daring to attack Nehemiah by open Force, had recourſe to Craft and Stratagem. To this Purpoſe, under Pretence of ending the Difference between them, in an amicable Manner, they ſent to invite him to a Conference, in a certain Village, in the Plain of Ono, which belong'd to the Tribe of Benjamin, intending there to do him a Miſchief; but Nehemiah, very probably ſuſpecting their wicked Deſign, return'd in Anſwer to the four Meſſages of the ſame Import, which they ſucceſſively ſent, "That the Work, "wherein he was engag'd, requir'd his "perſonal Attendance, and therefore he "could not come."

SANBALLAT, perceiving that Nehemiah was too cautious to be enſnar'd by a general Invitation, ſent, by his Servant, a Letter, wherein he inform'd him, that the current Report was, —"That "he was building the Walls of Jeruſalem "only to make it a Place of Strength, "to ſupport his intended Revolt; that, "to this Purpoſe, he had ſuborn'd falſe "Prophets to favour his Deſign, and "to encourage the People to chuſe him "King; and that therefore, to ſtop the "Courſe of theſe Rumours, (which in a "ſhort Time would come to the King's "Ears) he adviſ'd him to come to him, "that they might confer together, and "take ſuch Reſolutions, as were conveni"ent." But Nehemiah, knowing his own Innocence, eaſily ſaw thro' this ſhallow Contrivance, and return'd him for Anſwer, That all theſe Accuſations were falſe, and the Inventions only of his own naughty Heart; ſo that finding himſelf diſappointed here likewiſe, he betook himſelf to this laſt Expedient.

There was one Shemaiah, the Son of Delaiah the Prieſt, a great Friend to Nehemiah, whom Sanballat had brib'd to his Intereſt. This Man pretended to the Gift of Prophecy: And therefore, when Nehemiah came to his Houſe one Day, he foretold, that his Enemies would make an Attempt to murther him that very Night, and therefore adviſ'd him to go with him † into the inner Part of the Temple, and to ſecure themſelves by ſhutting the Doors. But, tho' Nehemiah did not apprehend the other's Deſign, (which he came to find out afterwards) yet, out of a Senſe of Honour and Religion, he declar'd poſitively, "That, come what would †, he would "not quit his Station, becauſe it would "badly

† By the Houſe of God, within the Temple (as it is in the Text, Neh. vi. 10.) Shemaiah certainly meant the Sanctuary; and to adviſe Nehemiah to retreat thither, he had a good Pretence, becauſe it was both a ſtrong and a ſacred Place, being defended by a Guard of Levites, and, by its Holineſs, privileg'd from all rude Approaches. But his real Deſign herein might be, not only to diſgrace Nehemiah, and diſhearten the People, when they ſaw their Governor's Cowardice, but to prepare the Way likewiſe for the Enemies aſſaulting and taking the City, when there was no Leader to oppoſe them; to give Countenance to the Calumny that had been ſpread abroad, of his affecting to be made King, becauſe he fled upon the Report of it; and perhaps, by the Aſſiſtance of ſome other Prieſts, that were his Confederates, either to deſtroy him, or to ſecure his Perſon, until the City was betray'd into the Enemies Hands. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† The Words of Nehemiah, upon this Occaſion, are very ſignificant, as well as magnanimous. Should ſuch a Man as I flee? "I, the chief Governor, upon whoſe Preſence, and Counſel, and Conduct, the very Life and "Being of the whole City and Nation does, in a great Meaſure, depend: I, who have profeſs'd ſuch Reſolution, "Courage, and Confidence in God; I, who have had ſuch eminent Experience of God's gracious and powerful "Aſſiſtances, of his calling me to this Employment, and carrying me through it, when the Danger was greater "than now; ſhall I diſhonour God and Religion, and betray the People and City of God by my Cowardice? "God forbid."

His Dedication of the Walls, and wiſe Orders for the Preſervation of the City.

From Ezra iv. 7. to the End; all Eſth. Neh. and Part of Hagg. Zech. and Malachi.

“ badly become a Man in his Character, “ to ſeek out for Refuge, when he ſaw “ Danger approaching”

These, and many more Difficulties, the good Governor had to contend with; but, by God's Aſſiſtance, he overcame them all, and, in the Space of two and fifty Days, having compleated the whole Work, he afterwards held † a Dedication of the Walls and Gates of Jeruſalem, with ſuch Solemnity and Magnificence, as a Work of that Nature requir'd.

To this Purpoſe he ſeparated the Prieſts, the Levites, and the Princes of the People, into two Companies, one of which walk'd to the right Hand, and the other to the left, on the Top of the Walls. The two Companies, which were to meet at the Temple, in their Proceſſion were attended with Muſick, both Vocal and Inſtrumental. When they came to the Temple, they there read the Law, offer'd Sacrifices, and made great Rejoicings; and, as the Feaſt of Tabernacles happen'd at the ſame Time, they fail'd not to celebrate it with great Solemnity.

When the Walls were finiſh'd, Nehemiah, to prevent any Treachery from his Enemies, either within or without the City, † gave the Charge of the Gates to his Brother Hanani, and to Hananiah, Marſhal of his Place †, two Men, in whom he could confide; commanding them not to ſuffer the Gates to be open'd till ſome Time after Sun-riſing, to ſee them ſafe barred at Night, and to ſet the Watch, which ſhould conſiſt of ſettled Houſe-Keepers, that were careful and diligent Men: And, for the ſtill farther Security of the City, obſerving that the † Number of its Inhabitants was too few, he order'd, that the principal Men of the Nation ſhould there fix their Habitations, and, at the ſame Time, caus'd the reſt to † caſt Lots, whereby a tenth Part of the whole People of Judah and Benjamin † became oblig'd to dwell at Jeruſalem, tho' thoſe who came voluntarily, were better receiv'd.

† Dedication is a religious Ceremony, whereby any Temple, Altar, and Veſſel thereunto belonging, is, by the Pronunciation of a certain Form of Bleſſing, conſecrated to the Service of God; and this Dedication, we may obſerve, extends not only to Things ſacred, but to Cities and their Walls, and ſometimes to private Houſes, Deut. xx. 5. As therefore Moſes in the Wilderneſs dedicated the Tabernacle, and Solomon the Temple, when he had finiſh'd it; ſo Nehemiah, having put Things in good Order, built the Walls, and ſet up the Gates, thought proper to dedicate the City, as a Place which God himſelf had choſen, and ſanctiſy'd by his Temple, and gracious Preſence; and, by this Dedication, to reſtore it to him again after it had been laid waſte, and profan'd by the Devaſtation of the Heathens. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† Nehemiah, very likely, was now returning to Shuſhan to give the King an Account of the State of Affairs in Judea; and therefore he took care to place ſuch Men in the City, as he knew would faithfully ſecure it in his Abſence. Hanani is ſaid to be his Brother; but he choſe his Officers, not out of partial Views to his own Kindred, but becauſe he knew that they would acquit themſelves in their Employment with a ſtrict Fidelity. Hanani had given Proof of his Zeal for God and his Country, in his taking a tedious Journey from Jeruſalem to Shuſhan, to inform Nehemiah of the ſad Eſtate of Jeruſalem, and to implore his helping Hand to relieve it, Chap. i. And the Reaſon why Nehemiah put ſuch Truſt and Confidence in Hananiah, was, becauſe he was a Man of Conſcience, and acted upon religious Principles, which would keep him from thoſe Temptations to Perfidiouſneſs, which he might probably meet with in his Abſence, and againſt which, a Man, deſtitute of the Fear of God, has no ſufficient Fence. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† So the Houſe, which was built for Nehemiah's Reſidence, might juſtly be called, becauſe he liv'd there in great Splendor, tho' wholly at his own Charge, and, as the King's Vice-roy, there gave Audience to the People, as a King is wont in his Palace. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† One Reaſon, why the Bulk of the Jews (who were originally Paſtors, and Lovers of Agriculture) might rather chuſe to live in the Country, than at Jeruſalem, was, becauſe it was more ſuited to their Genius, and Manner of Life: But at this Time their Enemies were ſo enrag'd to ſee the Walls built again, and ſo reſtleſs in their Deſigns to keep the City from riſing to its former Splendor, that it terriſy'd many from coming to dwell there, thinking themſelves more ſafe in the Country, where their Enemies had no Pretence to diſturb them. Le Clerc's and Patrick's Commentaries.

† Tho' the caſting of Lots be certainly forbidden, where the Thing is done out of a Spirit of Superſtition, or with a Deſign to tempt God; yet, on ſome Occaſions, it is enjoin'd by God himſelf; and the moſt holy Perſons both in the Old and New Teſtament, in particular Caſes, have practis'd it. The wiſe Man acknowledges the Uſefulneſs of this Cuſtom, when he tells us, that the Lot cauſed Contention to ceaſe, and parteth between the Mighty, Prov. xviii. 18. and therefore it was no bad Policy (as Things now ſtood) to take this Method of Deciſion, ſince the Lot

His Suppreſſion of Uſury, and generous Manner of living.

WHILE the Walls of the City were building, there happen'd a Kind of Mutiny among the common People, which might have been of fatal Conſequence, had it not been timely compos'd: For the Rich, taking the Advantage of the meaner Sort, had † exacted heavy Uſury of them, inſomuch, that they made them pay the Centeſima for all the Money, that was lent them, i. e. one per Cent. for every Month, which amounted to twelve per Cent. for the whole Year. This Oppreſſion reduc'd them ſo low, that they were forc'd to mortgage their Lands, Houſes, and Tenements, and even to ſell their Children into Servitude, to have † wherewith to buy Bread for the Support of themſelves, and their Families; which being a manifeſt Breach of the Law of God, (for (h) that forbids all the Race of Iſrael to take Uſury of any of their Brethren) Nehemiah, as ſoon as he was inform'd thereof, reſolv'd to remove ſo great an Iniquity. And, accordingly, having called a general Aſſembly of the People, wherein he ſet before them the Nature of the Offence, how great a Breach it was of the Divine Law, and how heavy an Oppreſſion upon their Brethren; what Handle it might give their Enemies to reproach them; and how much it might provoke the Wrath of God againſt them all; he caus'd it to be enacted by the general Suffrage of the whole Aſſembly, that every one ſhould return to his Brother whatever he had exacted of him upon Uſury, and ſhould likewiſe releaſe all the Lands, Houſes, and Tenements, that he had, at any Time, taken of him upon Mortgage; which Act preſently remov'd all Uneaſineſs, and pacify'd the Minds of the People.

THE Governor himſelf indeed was ſo far from countenancing any Manner of Oppreſſion, that he did not exact the daily Revenue of forty Shekels of Silver, and the conſtant Furniture of his Table with Proviſions; but remitted theſe, and all other Advantages of his Place, that might any Way be troubleſome and chargeable to the People. Nay, he not only refus'd the Allowance, which was due to him, as Governor, but, at his own Charge †, kept

Lot (which all allow'd was under the Divine Direction) falling upon ſuch a Perſon, rather than another, would be a great Means, no doubt, to make him remove more contentedly to the City. Patrick's Commentary, and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Lot.

† Theſe were the two Tribes, that antiently poſſeſſed Jeruſalem, which ſtood, partly in one Tribe, and partly in the other; for which Reaſon, in ſome Places of Scripture, Jeruſalem is reckon'd as belonging to the Children of Judah, Joſh. xv. 63. and Judg. xviij. and in others, to the Children of Benjamin, Judg. xxi. 28. but what Part of the City belong'd to the one, and what to the other, is not ſo well agreed among learned Men. Since theſe two Tribes, however, were the antient Inhabitants of the City, there was all the Reaſon in the World, why, in this Scarcity of Inmates, they, above any others, ſhould be oblig'd to come and dwell there. Patrick's Commentary.

† This Uſury was the more grievous, becauſe it was not only contrary to their Law, and demanded at a Time, when they were hard at Work, and their Enemies threatening to deſtroy them all; but (as ſome have obſerv'd) that the twentieth of Ahaſuerus (wherein this was done) began about the End of a ſabbatical Year, after the Law, which forbad every Creature to exact any Debt of his Neighbour, or his Brother, Deut. xv. 2. had been ſo frequently read. This rais'd the Cry of the Poor to a greater Height, having been forc'd to ſell their Children, and depriv'd now of all Power of redeeming them, becauſe their Lands were mortgag'd to theſe Oppreſſors. Patrick's Commentary.

† Not long before this, there had been a great Scarcity, for want of Rain, which God thought proper to with-hold, in Puniſhment for the People's taking more Care to build their own Houſes, than his, as we read, Hag. i. 9, &c. In which Time the Rich had no Compaſſion on their poor Brethren, but forc'd them to part with all they had for Bread; and now (what made them ſtill more miſerable) another Dearth was come upon them, which might eaſily happen, from the Multitude of People, that were employ'd in the Repair of the Walls; from the Building-Work, which hindered them from providing for their Families ſome other Way; and from the daily Dread, they had of their Enemies, which might keep them from going abroad to fetch in Proviſion, and the Country-People from bringing it in. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† From this great and daily Expence, it ſeems moſt probable, either that Nehemiah had large Remittances from the Perſian

But, before he did that, † Ezra the learned Scribe, at the Requeſt of the People, produc'd the Book of the Law, which he had now compleated, and, having divided the Company into ſeveral Parts, he (with thirteen Prieſts more) read from a wooden Pulpit †, and, as he went along, expounded it to them. This they all liſten'd to with a very devout Attention, ‡ and celebrated the enſuing Feaſt of Tabernacles with great Gladneſs of Heart; and, on a Day appointed for a ſolemn Faſt, confeſſing their own Sins, and deprecating the Judgments due to the Iniquity of their Fathers; acknowledging the Omnipotence of God in creating and preſerving all Things, and enumerating his gracious Mercies in their ſundry Deliverances from their Enemies and Perſecutors, they made a Covenant with him, that they would walk in this Law, which was given by Moſes; and, (to oblige themſelves to a more † ſtrict Performance of this Covenant) it was order'd to be engroſs'd, that the Princes, Prieſts, and Levites might ſet their † Hands and Seals to it; and thoſe who did

† This Ezra, without all Controverſy, was the ſame Ezra, who came from Babylon, in the ſeventh of Artaxerxes, with a full Commiſſion to Jeruſalem, to aſſiſt Zerubbabel in the Reformation of the whole State of the Jewiſh Church. After the Death of Zerubbabel, the whole Adminiſtration devolv'd upon him; but, as his Commiſſion laſted but for twelve Years, upon its Expiration, Nehemiah ſucceeded to the Government; and we hear no more of Ezra, until he is here called upon to read and expound the Law to the People; whether, (as ſome think) he return'd to Babylon, to give the People an Account of Affairs in the Province of Judea, or whether, in this intermediate Time, he employ'd himſelf (in ſome Retirement) in the great Work of preparing a new and current Edition of the Holy Scriptures, of which we ſhall give a full Account in our next Diſſertation. Patrick's Commentary, and Pool's Annotations.

† This Pulpit was to raiſe him up higher than the People, the better to be ſeen and heard by them; but we are not to think, that it was made in the Faſhion of ours, which will hold no more than one Perſon, for (as we may obſerve by the very next Words) it was made large and long enough to contain fourteen People at once. Patrick's Commentary on Neh. viii. 4.

‡ The Words in the Text, are, Since the Days of Joſhua the Son of Nun, unto that Day, had not the Children of Iſrael done ſo, and there was very great Gladneſs, Neh. viii. 17. But it can hardly be thought, that this Feſtival had never been obſerv'd ſince Joſhua's Time, becauſe we read in the foregoing Book of Ezra, that it was kept at their Return from Babylon; but the Meaning is, that the Joy, ſince that Time, had never been ſo great, as it was upon this Occaſion; for which the Jews themſelves aſſign this Reaſon, viz. That, in the Days of Joſhua, they rejoic'd, becauſe they had got Poſſeſſion of the Land of Canaan; and now they equally rejoic'd, becauſe they were reſtor'd, and quietly ſettled in it, after they had been long caſt out of it. Patrick's Commentary.

† The Obſervances, which they chiefly oblig'd themſelves to in this Covenant, were, 1ſt, Not to make Intermarriages with the Gentiles. 2dly, To obſerve the Sabbaths, and Sabbatical Years. 3dly, To pay their annual Tribute, for the Reparation and Service of the Temple. And 4thly, to pay their Tithes and Firſt-Fruits, for the Maintenance of the Prieſts and Levites: From which Particulars, thus nam'd in this Covenant, we may learn, what were the Laws of God, which hitherto they had been moſt neglective of, ſince their Return from the Captivity. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 444.

† It ſignify'd little indeed what ſuch untoward People promis'd; for what Regard would they have to their own Hand-Writing, who regarded not the Ten Commandments, written on Tables of Stone by the Finger of God? It was very did not ſet their Seals, of what Age, Sex, or Condition ſoever, did bind themſelves with an Oath punctually to obſerve it.

But, notwithſtanding all this Precaution, Nehemiah had not been long come from Jeruſalem, before the People relaps'd into their old Corruptions; which, in a great Meaſure, was owing to the Miſmanagement of † Eliaſhib, the High-Prieſt, who, being by Marriage ally'd to Tobiah, the Jews great Enemy had allow'd him an Apartment in the Temple, in the very Place where the Offerings, and other Things appertaining to the Prieſts and Levites, us'd to be repoſited. So that when Nehemiah return'd from the Perſian Court, with a new Commiſſion for the reforming of all Abuſe, both in Church and State, he was not a little ſurpris'd to find ſuch a groſs Profanation of the Temple, and that Chambers ſhould be provided in the Houſe of God for one, who was a declar'd Enemy to his Worſhip.

He therefore reſolv'd to put an End to this; but found himſelf under a Neceſſity of proceeding with Caution in the Affair, becauſe † Tobiah had inſinuated himſelf into the good Opinion of moſt of the People, and eſpecially thoſe of Note. The firſt Step therefore that he took towards this Reformation, was to convince them of their Error, by cauſing the Book of the Law to be read publickly, and in the Hearing of all the People; ſo that when the Reader came to that Place in Deuteronomy, wherein it is commanded, that (k) an Ammonite, or Moabite, † ſhould very uſeful however, that there ſhould be a publick Inſtrument to convince them of their Impiety, and that they might be publickly confounded, when they prov'd perfidious Deſerters, by ſhewing them, under their own Hands, their Engagements to future Fidelity. Patrick's Commentary.

† Some are apt to imagine, that this Eliaſhib was no more than a common Prieſt, becauſe he is ſaid to have had the Overſight of the Chambers of the Houſe of God, Neh. xiii. 4. which was an Office too mean (as they think) for the High-Prieſt. But we cannot ſee, why the Overſight of the Chambers of the Houſe of God may not import the whole Government of the Temple, which certainly belong'd to the High-Prieſt only; nor can we conceive, how any one, that was leſs than abſolute Governor of the whole Temple, could make ſo great an Innovation in it. He was aſſiſtant indeed in the Reparation of the Walls of the City; but, excepting this one Act, where do we read of his doing any Thing worthy of Memory, towards the reforming of what was amiſs, either in Church or State, in the Times either of Ezra or Nehemiah? And yet we cannot but preſume, that, had he join'd with them in ſo good a Work, ſome Mention would have been made of it in the Books written by them. Since therefore, inſtead of this, we find it recorded in Ezra, (Chap. x. 18.) that the Pontifical Houſe was, in his Time, grown very corrupt, and, not improbably, by his Connivance began to marry into heathen Families, (Neh. xiii. 28.) it ſeems moſt likely, that it was Eliaſhib, the High-Prieſt, who was the Author of this great Profanation of the Houſe of God; but as he might die before Nehemiah return'd from Babylon, for this Reaſon, we hear nothing of the Governor's reprehending him for it. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 428.

† By his making two Alliances with Families of great Note among the Jews: For Johanan his Son had marry'd the Daughter of Meſhullam, the Son of Berechiah, (Neh. vi. 18.—iii. 4.) who was one of the chief Managers of the Building of the Wall of Jeruſalem, under the Direction of the Governor; and he himſelf had marry'd the Daughter of Shechaniah, the Son of Arah, another greater Man among the Jews; by which Means he had form'd an Intereſt, and was look'd upon as a worthy Man, tho' (being an Ammonite) he could not but bear a national Hatred to all that were of the Race of Iſrael. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 428.

(k) Deut. xxiii. 3.

† They, who, by the Congregation of God, in this Place, do underſtand the publick Aſſemblies for Divine Worſhip, lie under a great Miſtake; for no Man of any Nation was forbidden to come and pray unto God in the Temple. Men of all Nations indeed, that were willing to become Proſelytes, were admitted into the Jewiſh Communion; and, if they ſubmitted to be circumcis'd, were allow'd to eat the Paſſover, and to enjoy all the Privileges that true Iſraelites did, except only in the Caſe of Marriage; and therefore this Phraſe of not entering into the Congregation of the Lord, muſt be underſtood to mean no more than a Prohibition of Marriage: For this (according to their Rabbins) was the Caſe of ſuch Prohibitions. None of the Houſe of Iſrael, of either Sex, were to enter into Marriage with any Gentiles, of what Nation ſoever, unleſs they were firſt converted to their Religion, and became intire Proſelytes to it; and, even in that Caſe, ſome were debarr'd from it for ever; others, only in Part; and others again only for a limited Time. Of the firſt Sort, were all of the ſeven Nations of the Canaanites, mention'd in Deut. vii. of the ſecond Sort, were the Moabites and the Ammonites, whoſe Males were excluded for ever, but not their Females; and of the third Sort, were the Edomites and Egyptians, with whom the Jews might not marry until the third Generation: But with all others, who were not of theſe three excepted Sorts, they might freely make Inter-marriages, whenever they became thorough Proſelytes to their Religion. At preſent however, becauſe, through the Confuſions which ſhould not come into the Congregation of God, even to the tenth Generation for ever; they, being ſenſible of their Tranſgreſſion in this Reſpect, ſeparated themſelves immediately from the mix'd Multitude, which gave Nehemiah an eaſy Opportunity of getting rid of Tobiah, who was an Ammonite; and therefore he order'd the People, while they were in this good Diſpoſition, to caſt his Furniture out of the ſacred Chambers, and † to have them cleans'd again, and reſtor'd to their former Uſe.

Orders the Repayment of Tithes.

AMONG other Corruptions, that grew up during the Governor's Abſence, there was one, of which (as he was a conſtant Frequenter of the publick Worſhip) he could not but take notice, and that was, the Neglect of carrying on the daily Service of the Houſe of God, in a proper and decent Manner. For the Tithes, which were to maintain the Miniſters of the Temple in their Offices and Stations, being either embezzelled by the High-Prieſt, or with-held by the Laity, for Want of them the Levites and Singers were driven from the Temple into the Country, to find a Subſiſtence ſome other Way: And therefore, to remedy this Abuſe, he forthwith ordered the People to bring in their Tithes of Corn, Wine, and Oil, into the Treaſury of the Temple; and having appointed proper Officers to receive and diſtribute them, he recalled the abſent Miniſters, and reſtored every Thing to its former Order.

A more ſtrict Obſervation of the Sabbath.

THE Neglect of the Service of God had introduced a Profanation of the Sabbath: For, during Nehemiah's Abſence, the Jews had not only done all Manner of ſervile Works on that Day, but had permitted Strangers, Tyrians, and others, to come, and ſell their Fiſh, and other Commodities publickly, in the Streets of Jeruſalem. Againſt theſe wicked and irregular Practices, Nehemiah remonſtrated to the chief Men of the City with ſome Warmth; and, to let them ſee that he was reſolv'd to make a thorough Reformation in this Matter, he gave a ſtrict Order, that, towards the Evening, before their Sabbath began, the City-Gates ſhould be ſhut, and not opened, until the Sabbath was over: And, to have this Order more duly executed, he appointed † ſome of his own Servants for the preſent to guard the Gates, that no Burthen might paſs through on the Sabbath-Day. So that when the Merchants and other Dealers came, and, finding the Gates ſhut againſt them, took up their Lodgings without the Walls in Hopes of ſelling to the Country People, (though they could not to the Citizens) the next Day he threatened to take them into Cuſtody, if they did not go about their Buſineſs; and, to this Purpoſe, appointed a Guard of Levites † to take up their which have ſince happen'd in all Nations, it is not to be known who is an Ammonite, who an Edomite, a Moabite, or an Egyptian, they hold this Prohibition to have been long out of Date, and that now, any Gentile, as ſoon as proſelyted to their Religion, may immediately be admitted to make Inter-marriages with them. Prideaux's Connection. Anno 428.

† The Method of purifying any Thing, or Perſon, that was legally unclean, is thus deſcrib'd: ——— For an unclean Perſon, they ſhall take of the Aſhes of the burnt Heifer of Purification for Sin, (i. e. of the Heifer that was ſacrific'd on the great Day of Expiation) and running Water ſhall be put thereto in a Veſſel, which being afterwards ſtrain'd off, and kept for this Purpoſe, a clean Perſon, i. e. the Prieſt (for to him the Work of purifying is appropriated, Lev. xiii.) ſhall ſprinkle upon the unclean Perſon; and on the ſeventh Day at Even, after having bathed himſelf, and waſhed his Clothes, he ſhall be deem'd clean; but it is very likely, that Things inanimate were immediately, upon their being ſprinkled with this Water of Separation, as it is called (Numb. xix. 9.) reputed clean. Patrick's Commentary.

† It ſeems as if Matters were come to that Paſs, that he could not truſt the common Porters of the Gates, and therefore appointed ſome of his own Domeſticks (who, he knew, would neither be careleſs nor corrupted) to ſee that the Gates were kept ſhut, and all Traffick prohibited. Patrick's Commentary.

† The Reaſon why he appointed the Levites to this Office of keeping the Gates on the Sabbath-Day, was, becauſe he not only thought, that, by Virtue of their Character, they would meet with more Deference and Reſpect, than his domeſtick Servants; but that, when he and his Servants were gone from Jeruſalem, he was reſolv'd to have this Watch continu'd, until this evil Cuſtom of admitting Dealers into the City on the Sabbath-Day was quite broken Patrick's Commentary.

their Station at the Gate, and to ſtop all Comers in, that might any Way profane the Sabbath.

And a Diſſolution of unlawful Marriages.

ANOTHER Reformation, and the laſt indeed that we find recorded of Nehemiah, was his Diſſolution of unlawful Marriages among the Jews. Their Law ſtrictly forbad them to make Inter-marriages with any foreign Nations, either by giving their Daughters to them for Wives, or by taking their Daughters to themſelves; but, ſince their Return from Captivity, People of all Conditions had paid ſo little Regard to this Command, that even the Pontifical Houſe (which of all others ought to have ſet a better Example) was become polluted with ſuch impure Mixtures; inſomuch, that Joiada, the High-Prieſt, had a Son, who marry'd the Daughter of Sanballat the Horonite, who, at that Time, very probably was Governor of Samaria.

THESE mix'd Marriages (beſides many other Damages, that accrued to the State) would, in a ſhort Time, (as he obſerved to them) quite corrupt their native Language †, becauſe he perceived, that the Children already began to ſmatter the Speech of their foreign Parent; and therefore he required them all, under the Penalties ‡ (which he inflicted upon ſome, that were obſtinate) to put away their Wives, and to have no more Communion of that Kind with any foreign Nation: In which he proceeded with ſuch Impartiality, that, when this Son of Joiada refuſed to quit his Wife, he ordered him immediately to depart the Country †; which accordingly he did, and, with ſeveral others, that were in the like Circumſtances, went, and ſettled under his Father-in-Law in Samaria.

THESE were ſome of the Reformations, which Nehemiah, as a wiſe and pious Governor, made in the Jewiſh Church and State. But, after his Death, it was not long, before the People relapſed into the ſame Enormities; for which Reaſon we find Malachi †, the laſt Prophet under † What the natural Language of the Jews at this Time was, whether the Hebrew, or Chaldee, is Matter of ſome Enquiry among the Learned. Thoſe, who ſuppoſe that it was Hebrew, produce the Book of Ezra, Nehemiah, and Eſther, beſides the Prophecies of Daniel, which, for the moſt Part, were written in Hebrew, and which, they ſuppoſe, the Authors of them would not have done, if Hebrew, at that Time, had not been the Vulgar Language. But to this it is reply'd, that theſe Jewiſh Authors might make uſe of the Hebrew Language in what they wrote, not only becauſe the Things, which they recorded, concern'd the Jewiſh Nation only, among whom there were learned Men enough to explain them; but chiefly, becauſe they were minded to conceal what they wrote from the Chaldeans, who, at that Time, were their Lords and Maſters, and, conſidering all Circumſtances, might not perhaps have been ſo well pleas'd with them, had they underſtood the Contents of their Writings. Since it appears then, ſay they, by ſeveral Words, occurring in the Books of Maccabees, the New Teſtament, and Joſephus, that the Language, which the Jews then ſpoke, was Chaldee; that this Language they learned in their Captivity, and, after their Return from it, never aſſum'd their antient Hebrew Tongue, ſo as to ſpeak it vulgarly, it hence muſt follow, that what is here called the Language of the Jews, and their native Tongue, was at that Time no other, than the Chaldee, for the antient Hebrew was only preſerv'd among the Learned. Le Clerc's Commentary.

‡ There are ſome Things in the Text, which, as they are made to proceed from Nehemiah's own Mouth, and appear in our Tranſlation, ſound a little oddly: ——— I contended with them, and curſed them, and ſmote certain of them, and plucked off their Hair, Chap. xiii. 25. But the Senſe of theſe Words is no more than this: ——— I contended with them, i. e. I expoſtulated the Matter with them. I curſed them, i. e. excommunicated them, in the doing of which, I denounc'd God's Judgments againſt them. I ſmote certain of them, i. e. order'd the Officers to beat ſome of the moſt notorious Offenders, either with Rods or with Scourges, according to Deut. xxv. 2. And I plucked off their Hair, i. e. I commanded them to be ſhaved, thereby to put them to Shame, and make them look like vile Slaves: For, as the Hair was eſteem'd a great Ornament among Eaſtern Nations, ſo Baldneſs was accounted a great Diſgrace; and, to inflict theſe ſeveral Puniſhments upon them, Nehemiah had a ſufficient Provocation, becauſe, in their marrying with Heathen Nations, they had acted contrary, not only to the expreſs Law of God, but to their own late ſolemn Covenant, and Promiſe, Ezra x. 19. Pool's Annotations.

† Joſephus relates the Matter, as if this Expulſion had been effected by the Power of the great Sanhedrim: But whether the Sanhedrim was at this Time in Being, or no, (as we have no clear Footſteps of it until the Time of Judas Maccabæus) there was no Occaſion for their interpoſing, ſince Nehemiah, no doubt, as Governor of the Province, had Authority enough to baniſh him out of Judea, as Bertram, de Repub. Jud. c. xiii. expounds the Phraſe, I chaſed him from me, Neh. xiii. 28.

† Whether the Word Malachi be the proper Name of a Man, or only a generical Name, to denote an Angel, a Meſſenger, the Law, and who (not long after Haggai and Zachariah) muſt have lived in the Time of Nehemiah, reproving the Prieſts for their Iniquity and ſcandalous Lives; and upbraiding the People with their Neglect of the Worſhip of God; with their Refuſal to pay their Tithes and Offerings; with their divorcing their own Wives, and marrying ſtrange Women; and with their Inhumanity and cruel Uſage of their indigent Brethren; the very ſame Enormities, which this good Governor laboured to reform.

HOW long after this Nehemiah lived at Jeruſalem, is uncertain: It is moſt likely however, that (notwithſtanding all the Revolutions * in the Perſian Court) he continued in his Government to the Time of his Death, but, when that happened, it is no where ſaid; only we may obſerve, that, at the Time when he ends his Book, he could not be much leſs than ſeventy Years old.

Meſſenger, a Prophet, or the like, has been a Matter of ſome Enquiry. From the Prophet Haggai, Chap. i. 13, and this other, whom we cite under the Name of Malachi, Chap. iii. 1. it appears, that, in theſe Times, the Name of Malach-Jehovah, or the Meſſenger of the Lord, was oſten given to Prophets; and under this Title the Septuagint have characteriz'd, and the Fathers of the Chriſtian Church have frequently quoted, this prophetick Writer. But the Author of the Lives of the Prophets, under the Name of Epiphanius Dorotheus, tells us, that this Writer was of the Tribe of Zebulun, a Native of Sapha, and that the Name of Malachi was given him, becauſe an Angel us'd viſibly to appear to the People, after the Prophet had ſpoken to them, to confirm what he had ſaid; though moſt of the antient Jews (as well as the Chaldee Paraphraſt) were of Opinion, that Malachi was no other than Ezra, under a borrow'd Name. However this be, it is agreed on all Hands, that he was the laſt of the Prophets of the Synagogue, and liv'd about four hundred Years before Chriſt; of whoſe Coming, and the Coming of his Fore-runner John the Baptiſt, and of whoſe Religion, and the Inſtitution of a Catholick and Univerſal Church in the Room of the Jewiſh, he ſpeaks in very full and expreſs Terms, Chap. iii. 1, &c. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

* Upon the Death of Artaxerxes, (in Scripture called Ahaſuerus) Xerxes, his only Son by his Queen, (for he had ſeveral by his Concubines. and among theſe, the moſt famous were Sogdianus, Ochus, and Arſites) ſucceeded in the Perſian Throne; but, by the Treachery of one of his Eunuchs, Sogdianus came upon him while he was drunk, and, after he had reign'd no more than five and forty Days, ſlew him, and ſeiz'd on the Kingdom. But his unjuſt Poſſeſſion did not hold long; for his Brother Ochus, being then Governor of Hyrcania, rais'd a conſiderable Army, and, having gain'd many of the Nobility and Governors of Provinces to his Intereſt, march'd againſt him, and, under a Pretence of a Treaty, having gotten him into his Power, threw him headlong into Aſhes, (a Puniſhment us'd among the Perſians for very enormous Criminals) ſo that, after he had reign'd only ſix Months and fifteen Days, he died a very miſerable Death, and was ſucceeded by Ochus; who, as ſoon as he was ſettled in the Kingdom, took the Name of Darius, (and is therefore by Hiſtorians called Darius Nothus) and, after he had ſlain his Brother Arſites, (who thought to have ſupplanted him, as he had done Sogdianus, and Sogdianus, Xerxes) and ſuppreſs'd ſeveral other Inſurrections againſt him, continu'd to ſway the Perſian Sceptre for nineteen Years; but whether he, or Nehemiah, his Governor of Judea, died firſt, we have no certain Account: All that we know, is, that the laſt Act of the Governor's Reformations, viz. his Diſſolution of ſtrange Marriages, was in the fifteenth Year of this Prince's Reign, and, conſequently, but four before his Death. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 425.

The OBJECTION.

“BUT how good, and wiſe, and pious Men ſoever the two Governors of the Jewiſh Church and Nation, Ezra and Nehemiah, might be; yet it cannot but be thought an Act of extreme Severity, if not a Violation of all Juſtice and Equity, for them to decree, (as we find they both did) that, upon the Diſſolution of all illegal Marriages, the poor Children (who were entirely innocent as to their Parents Tranſgreſſion) ſhould be turn'd a-drift, and ſent a-ſtarving: As indeed, the whole Matter of theſe Divorces ſeems to be abhorrent to the Apoſtle's Direction, (l) If any Brother hath a Wife, that believeth not, and ſhe be pleaſed to dwell with him, let him not put her away.

“NEHEMIAH, no doubt, was a zealous Reformer of the Vices of his Country-Men; but how theſe Vices came to ſprout up again ſo ſoon (as we find they did Chap. xiii.) and in the ſhort Time of his Abſence from Jeruſalem, which was but for (m) certain Days, we cannot conceive. And tho' he was confeſſedly a Man of a large and liberal Spirit, yet the Author of his Hiſtory ſeems to have tarniſhed his Character in this Reſpect, when he makes him ſo laviſh in his own Praiſe, ſo oſtentatious of his good Works, and, even in his very Generoſity, diſcovering a mercenary Temper, by his ſo frequently calling upon God (n) to think upon him for Good, according to all that he had done for his People. Nor has the Author of the Book of Ezra concerted his Matters much better, when he makes an Heathen Prince (as Artaxerxes was) write in a Stile more becoming the Sanhedrim, and, in the Preamble to his Commiſſion, compliment him with the Title of (o) the Scribe of the Law of the God of Heaven, as if that Idolater had any Knowledge of the God of Heaven, or any Perception that the Jews were the true Worſhippers of him.

“THE Truth of the Matter is, (p) theſe Books of Ezra and Nehemiah were never written at the Time of their pretended Date, nor by the Perſons, whoſe Names they bear. But by ſome ignorant Sadducee or other unacquainted with the Affairs he pretended to treat of, and badly vers'd in Points of Chronology. For, it is next to a Thing incredible, that either Ezra or Nehemiah ſhould be old enough to be acquainted with that Sanballat, whoſe Daughter Manaſſa (as he is called by Joſephus) marry'd, or that Sanballat himſelf ſhould extend his Life to the Days of Alexander the Great, according to the ſame Hiſtorian.

“NOR is the Authority of the Book of Eſther (q) clear of all Suſpicion, ſince, in all Hebrew Copies, we find nothing of the ſix laſt Chapters of it; no Mention made of its Contents in any exotick Writer; and ſo many unaccountable Abſurdities every where occurring in it, that we cannot but look upon it as a ſpurious Piece, that has in it the Air of a Romance, or a Kind of Tragi-Comedy, rather than real Hiſtory.

“FOR (to begin with the very Foundation of the whole Story) how abſurd is it to think, that Mordecai ſhould refuſe to pay all Manner of Obeiſance to Haman, who, at that Time, was the King's great Favourite, and firſt Miniſter of State; when to bow the Knee, “and

And how unreaſonable is it to imagine, that Ahaſuerus ſhould divorce his Queen, merely becauſe ſhe was a modeſt Woman, becauſe ſhe would not do a Thing unbecoming her Dignity, and contrary to the Laws of the Perſians *, (which allowed no Woman of Faſhion to appear in Publick) merely to gratify the mad Frolick of a drunken Huſband?

“ SAY what we will, we can never apologize for Eſther's turning Concubine, tho' it were to the greateſt Prince in the Univerſe, much leſs for her Kinſman's abetting her Unchaſtity, how much ſoever he might raiſe his Fortune by it. And tho' it ſounds a little ſtrange that the King ſhould forget to recompenſe a Man, who had been ſo ſignal an Inſtrument in preſerving his Life from a treaſonable Conſpiracy, as Mordecai had been; yet, all on a ſudden, (r) to confer ſuch vaſt Honours upon him, as would neceſſarily expoſe him to the Envy and Indignation of the whole Perſian Nobility, ſeems to be but an ill-judg'd Method of rewarding him.

Anſwer'd, by ſhewing the utter Illegality of marrying with Heathens.

THE Jewiſh Law againſt marrying with Heathens runs thus: —— (y) When the Lord thy God ſhall bring thee into the Land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it, and hath caſt out many Nations before thee, —— Thou ſhalt not make Marriages with them; thy Daughter thou ſhalt not give unto his Son, nor his Daughter ſhalt thou take to thy Son. And the Reaſon of the Law is aſſigned in the following Verſe: For they will turn away thy Sons from following me, that they may ſerve other Gods: For did not Solomon, (z) King of Iſrael, (as Nehemiah argues with the People) ſin by theſe Things? And if ſo great a one as he, who excelled all Mankind in Wiſdom, was not ſafe from the Seducement of theſe outlandiſh Women, how ſhall ye be able to preſerve yourſelves from their Enticements? And yet (as Moſes goes on in his Reaſoning) (a) Thou art an holy People unto the Lord thy God; and the Lord hath choſen thee to be a ſpecial People unto himſelf, above all the People that are upon the Face of the Earth.

HERE then is an expreſs Law, enforc'd with weighty Reaſons, againſt theſe Pagan Marriages: And therefore, ſince whatever is done contrary to Law, is ipſo facto null and void, theſe Marriages with idolatrous Women, which were ſtrictly forbidden by God, were (properly ſpeaking) no Marriages at all; and the Children which proceeded from them, were in no better Condition, than thoſe whom we call Baſtards. (b) No Interpoſition of Civil Authority was therefore needful to diſſolve theſe Marriages. The Infidelity of the Party eſpouſed was as much an Interdiction, as any the moſt proximate Degree of Conſanguinity, which, by the Laws of all civiliz'd Nations, is known to vacate the Marriage.

* To this Purpoſe Joſephus (lib. xi. c. 6.) informs us, that the Reaſon why Vaſhti refus'd to go to the King, when ſitting in publick Company, was, becauſe ſhe thought herſelf bound by the Laws of Perſia, which would not allow Wives to be ſeen by any beſides their Domeſticks: “ For moſt barbarous Nations (ſays Plutarch, in his Themiſtocles) are ſo very rigid, and troubleſome in their Jealouſy of their Women, that they keep not only their Wives, but their very Maid-Servants and Concubines ſhut up at Home, from ſeeing any but their own Family; and, when they travel, they carry them in cover'd Waggons, and lodge them under Tents ſhut up, and quite cloſ'd round.” Le Clerc's Commentary.

(r) Le Clerc's Commentary on Eſther vi. 10. (s) Ibid. on ver. 13. (t) Chap. ix. 5, 16. (u) Chap. iii. 9. (x) Neh. vi. 15. (y) Deut. vii. 1, 3, 4. (z) Neh. xiii. 26. (a) Deut. vii. 6.

But even ſuppoſe that the Civil Authority thought proper to interpoſe in this Matter, yet, wherein had the Jews any Reaſon to complain, if, in juſt Puniſhment for their wilful Breach of a known and poſitive Law, they were excluded from cohabiting with theſe illegal Wives? The Jews, I ſay, eſpecially, who, for every light and trivial Cauſe †, made no Scruple to give even their lawful Wives a Bill of Divorcement, and might therefore, with much leſs Difficulty, be ſuppoſed willing to repudiate thoſe, whom the Laws of their God (for Fear of their catching the Infection of Idolatry) had forbidden them to live with?

The Difference of the Caſe which St Paul puts.

St PAUL indeed is not for turning away an unbelieving Wife, in Caſe ſhe is willing to dwell with her Huſband; but then he ſuppoſes, that this Couple were marry'd, when they were both Heathens, and in a State of Infidelity, in which Caſe there was no Law, either Divine or Human, forbidding them to marry, (whereas, in theſe Jewiſh Marriages with Pagans, the Prohibition is ſtrict) and therefore, as there was no Sin in their coming together at firſt, and the Chriſtian Religion (whether it was the Man or the Woman that embrac'd it) made no Alteration in the Caſe, his Advice is, that they continue to dwell together, even tho' they be of different Perſuaſions in Matters of Religion, becauſe (as he farther adds this Reaſon) (c) The unbelieving Huſband is ſanctified by the Wife; and how knoweſt thou, O Man, but that, by thy peaceable Cohabitation with her, thou may'ſt convert, and ſave thy Wife?

Tho' therefore the Apoſtle is not for encouraging any Separation between Huſband and Wife upon Account of their Difference in Religion, when their Marriage was previous to either of their Converſions to Chriſtianity; yet (if we will make him conſiſtent with himſelf) we muſt allow, that he is utterly averſe to all mix'd Marriages with Infidels, when, in his following Epiſtle, he adviſes all Chriſtians, (d) not to be unequally yoked together with Unbelievers; for what Communion, ſays he, has Light with Darkneſs, or what Concord has Chriſt with Belial? &c. Whereby he gives us to think, that he eſteem'd all Marriage with Heathens illegal, and that had the Apoſtle, at that Time, been either of Ezra's or Nehemiah's Council, he would have given his Vote for their Diſſolution among the Jews.

In what Senſe Children do not ſuffer for their Parents Offences.

We own indeed, that it is a very gracious Declaration of God, Behold all Souls are mine, as the Soul of the Father, ſo alſo the Soul of the Son is mine; that Soul that ſinneth, it ſhall die; but then we are to conſider, that as Life ſignifies, in general, all that Happineſs, which attends God's Favour, ſo Death denotes all thoſe Puniſhments, which are the Effects of Divine Diſpleaſure; and, among theſe, the Miſeries of the next World are chiefly intended. Theſe indeed ſhall be allotted to

† The School of Shammah, who liv'd a little before our Saviour, taught, that a Man could not lawfully be divorc'd from his Wife, unleſs he had found her guilty of ſome Action, which was really infamous, and contrary to the Rules of Virtue. But the School of Hillel, who was Shammah's Diſciple, taught on the contrary, that the leaſt Reaſons (ſuch as, if ſhe did not dreſs his Meat well, if ſhe was not agreeable to him in Perſon, or Temper; or if he found any other Woman, that he lik'd better) were ſufficient to authorize a Man to put away his Wife. Selden's Uxor Hebraica, lib. iii. c. 18.

to Men, according to their own Demerits, without any Regard to the Faults of their Forefathers, which ſhall neither be laid to their Charge, nor made an Aggravation of their Guilt; but, as to temporal Evils and Calamities, it cannot well otherwiſe be, but that, in the very Courſe of Things, Children ſhould ſuffer for the Iniquities of their Parents.

Why the Children by mix'd Marriages might be juſtly put away.

THO' therefore it may ſeem a little hard, that the Children ſhould be included in their Mother's Divorce, yet the Laws of moſt Nations have determined this Point: —— That Children are to follow the Condition of their Mothers, be it what it will, and, conſequently, as they are unlawfully born, they muſt of courſe be alienated from the Family, at the ſame Time that the Mother is repudiated, and in Virtue of that very Law, which declares her Marriage to be null. So that it was no arbitrary Act in Ezra to abdicate the Children, as well as the Mothers; tho' (e) to prevent the Danger of their corrupting the other Children of the Family, (if they were allowed to ſtay) and of inſinuating themſelves ſo far into their Father's Affections, as to prevail with them in Time to re-call their ejected Wives, might be Motive enough to a prudent Ruler (conſidering the then Situation of Affairs) to put the Law rigidly in Execution. As this however was an Act of the Government, wherein Ezra, and other good Men, who fear'd the Lord, were concern'd, we may reaſonably preſume, that ſome Proviſion was made for the Maintenance, and perhaps the Education of theſe poor Children, in the Principles of the Jewiſh Religion, at the publick Charge.

And how the Walls of Jeruſalem might be built in fifty-two Days.

HOW long Nehemiah was in finiſhing the Walls of Jeruſalem, Interpreters are not agreed, becauſe ſome of them, ſuppoſing the Space of two and fifty Days, (f) mention'd in the Scripture, to be too ſhort for the perfecting of the whole, have begun their Computation from the Time that Nehemiah return'd his Anſwer to Sanballat's firſt Meſſage, and others, from the Time that the Stone-Wall was finiſh'd, and ſo allowing the whole fifty-two Days for the perfecting of the reſt. But, if we look into the Compaſs of Time, from Nehemiah's being at Shuſhan, to the Day of the Month when theſe Walls are ſaid to have been finiſh'd, we ſhall find, that no more, than fifty-two Days, could well be allow'd for the perfecting of the whole.

IT was (g) in the firſt Month, called by the Jews, Niſan, that Nehemiah was at Shuſhan, and obtain'd of the King Leave to go to Jeruſalem: And though we have no expreſs Account, what Time he ſpent in his Journey, and when he came to Jeruſalem; yet, if we may make a Conjecture from the Time, that Ezra expended in the ſame Journey, we can ſcarce ſuppoſe, that he arriv'd at Jeruſalem before the End of the fourth Month. Ezra ſet out on the firſt Day of the firſt Month. He made a (h) ſhort Stay indeed at the River Ahava; but it was the firſt Day of the fifth Month, before he reach'd Jeruſalem. Nehemiah could not poſſibly ſet out ſo ſoon in the Year, becauſe his Commiſſion (i) from the King, and Instructions to the neighbouring Governors, muſt have taken ſome Time in paſſing through the ſeveral Offices: And therefore we can ſcarce ſuppoſe, that he reach'd Jeruſalem, ſooner than the Time ſpecify'd; and from thence to the twenty-fifth Day of the ſixth Month, (including the three Days of Reſt, that he gave himſelf before he began) the Space will be much about fifty-two Days, wherein we ſuppoſe, that the whole Work was finiſh'd. (k) For, if Alexander the Great, (as Arrianus and Curtius relate) built the Walls of Alexandria which was ſeven Miles in Compaſs) in the Space of twenty Days; why ſhould it be thought a Thing incredible, that a vaſt Number, not of hir'd, but voluntary Men, full of Zeal for the Work themſelves, animated by the Example of their Rulers, and rang'd

The Author of the Book of Nehemiah not profuſe in his Praiſe.

How (l) long Nehemiah continu'd at the Perſian Court, after his Return from Jeruſalem, the ſacred Hiſtory no where informs us. It tells us indeed, that he came back again after certain Days; but ſince the Word Yamin, which we render Days, does equally ſignify Years, and, in many Places of the Hebrew Scriptures, is uſ'd in that Senſe, we cannot but wonder, how the Generality of Chronologers, as well as Commentators, came to overlook this Senſe of the Word, and, in ſo doing, to make Nehemiah's Stay at Shuſhan much ſhorter than it poſſibly could be. For, ſince he had been twelve Years in reforming what he found amiſs among the Jews, and Ezra had been doing the ſame for thirteen Years before him, they muſt, one would think, have brought their Reformation to ſuch a State and Stability, that a little Time could not have been ſufficient ſo totally to have unhing'd it: And therefore we may conclude, that his Abſence at Court, which gave Room for theſe Irregularities to grow to ſuch an Height, was not for certain Days, but for ſome Years Continuance; and conſequently, that the Author of this Part of his Life had no Intention, either to magnify his good Offices, or to relate any Thing incredible concerning him, ſince, tho' he acquaints us with ſundry Corruptions, that had ſprung up, yet he makes the Time of his Abſence (if we take his Words in their proper Senſe) long enough for that Purpoſe.

Tho' he might in ſome Things commend him.

That Nehemiah was the Writer of the Account of his own Government in Judea (for that is the Subject of his Book) moſt Interpreters are agreed: (m) And, as he appears in that Character, it cannot miſbecome him to give the World a Narrative how himſelf behav'd in that high Station; tho', in doing of this, he could not avoid the ſaying of ſomething in his own Commendation, unleſs he had been minded, out of his exceſſive Modeſty, to conceal from Poſterity (which it had been invidious to do) an excellent Example of his extraordinary Virtue, and Love of his Country.

St PAUL, no doubt, was a very modeſt Man: (n) He durſt not, as he tells, us, make himſelf of the Number, or compare himſelf with ſuch, as commended themſelves; and yet, in the very next Chapter, (that (o) he might ſtop the Mouths of falſe Apoſtles, and covetous People) we find him telling the Corinthians, that he preach'd the Goſpel to them freely, and without deſiring any Contributions of them for his neceſſary Support. (p) I robbed other Churches, ſays he, taking Wages of them, to do you Service, and when I was preſent with you, and wanted, I was chargeable to no Man:——For in all Things I have kept myſelf from being burthenſome to you, and ſo will I keep myſelf; as the Truth of Chriſt is in me, no Man ſhall ſtop me of this Boaſting in the Regions of Achaia; for what I do, that I will do, that I may cut off Occaſion from thoſe, that deſire Occaſion, that wherein they glory, they may be found even as me: And after all this, can any find Fault with Nehemiah, for telling his Reader, that (q) what was prepared for me daily, was an Ox, and ſix choice Sheep, Fowls in Proportion, and once in ten Days, Store of all Sorts of Wine; yet, for all this, required not I the Bread of the Governor, i. e. the Allowances, Allowances, which were made to the Governors appointed by the Kings of Perſia, to provide them a Table, becauſe the Bondage was heavy upon this People, and they not in a Condition, without much Difficulty, to maintain themſelves: Wherefore think upon me, O God, for Good, according to all that I have done for this People.

And expects a Reward from God well enough.

To ſerve God for nothing, or purely for his own Sake, is a Notion, that perhaps may comport with our glorify'd State, where our Service will be attended with Viſion; but, at preſent, it is too romantick, and what the Author of our Beings expects not from us. He, who made us, and ſet the Springs in our Nature, knows very well, that we are principally mov'd by Hopes and Fears, and for this Reaſon has propounded Rewards and Puniſhments to us; nor did we ever find it (till now) accounted a Flaw in the Character of the Worthies of old, or an Indication of their mercenary Spirits, that in all their good Works, or Sufferings, they (r) had a Reſpect to the Recompence of the Reward, which God, the righteous Judge, had promis'd to give unto his faithful Servants.

Why Ezra might be ſtiled the Scribe of the God of Heaven.

EZRA, no doubt, was at this Time a Man of great Eſteem among his Brethren, and no leſs favour'd in the Perſian Court; otherwiſe Artaxerxes would never have granted him a Commiſſion to reform and regulate the Affairs of the Jewiſh Church, fraught with ſuch ample Powers. Ever ſince that Time, the Jews have look'd upon him as another Moſes, who, (as Moſes was the Giver of the Law) reviv'd and reſtor'd it, after it had been in a Manner quite loſt and extinguiſh'd in the Babyloniſh Captivity. There is ſome Reaſon to believe therefore, that (s) this Scribe of the Law of the God of Heaven was the uſual Title, or Appellation of Honour, whereby Ezra was dignify'd and diſtinguiſh'd among his Countrymen; and that Artaxerxes might take it upon common Report, and ſo inſert it in his Commiſſion, as the Name, whereby he was generally ſtiled among the Jews, without ever giving himſelf Time to conſider what was the full Purport and Intendment of it.

BUT if even he did attend to this, yet, as the Heathens had different Kinds of Gods, Celeſtial, Terreſtrial, and Infernal, he might eaſily reconcile this to his own Principles, only by ſuppoſing, that this God of the Jews was one of the Celeſtial Order, and (tho' a Deity peculiar to them) might nevertheleſs be reverenc'd and worſhipp'd by him, in Conjunction with his other Gods.

BUT, after all, if we reflect a little on the Eaſe, and Indolence, and, in a Manner total Sequeſtration from all Buſineſs, wherein theſe great Monarchs of the Eaſt were us'd to indulge themſelves, we ſhall find Reaſon to believe, that Artaxerxes knew nothing of the Matter. If he be the ſame, who goes under the Name of Ahaſuerus in the Book of Eſther, he had been impos'd on by Haman to conſent to a bloody Decree againſt the Jews with ſo little Thought, and Conſideration of what he was about, that (t) he did not ſo much as remember the Perſon, at whoſe Inſtigation it was done: And yet, notwithſtanding the great Miſchief, which this Negligence of his might have brought upon him, we find him inſtantly ſinking into the like ſleepy and careleſs Temper. (u) Write ye for the Jews (ſays he, to Mordecai and Eſther) as it liketh you, in the King's Name, and ſeal it with the King's Ring, and whatever is thus wrote and ſealed, no Man may reverſe. And, by Parity of Reaſon, why may we not ſuppoſe, that, when Ezra apply'd to Court for his Commiſſion, the whole Form of drawing it up was referr'd to him, and ſuch other Jews, as he thought proper to take into his Council? For, Write ye, as it liketh you, in the King's Name, might, (in one Caſe as well as the other) be all that the King had to ſay to the Matter.

(r) Heb. xi. 26.
(s) Ezra vii. 12.
(t) Eſther vii. 5.
(u) Ibid. viii. 8.

And indeed, if we look into the Contents of the Commiſſion itſelf, we ſhall ſoon perceive, that it muſt have been drawn by ſomething more than a Heathen Hand. For, if Ezra himſelf had been to dictate the Words, how could he have expreſs'd the Tenor of his Commiſſion more fully than in theſe: (x) Foraſmuch as thou art ſent by the King, and his ſeven Counſellors, to enquire concerning Judah and Jeruſalem, according to the Law of thy God, which is in thine Hand? What Jewiſh King could have given more pious Inſtructions than theſe: (y) And thou Ezra, after the Wiſdom of thy God, ſet Magiſtrates and Judges, ſuch as know the Laws of thy God, and teach ye them, that know them not? And where can we find a livelier Senſe of God's ſupreme Authority, and of that Regard which is due from the greateſt Kings and Potentates to his Commands, more emphatically expreſs'd than here: Whatſoever is commanded by the God of Heaven, let it be diligently done for the Houſe of the God of Heaven? O Verba! (as Jacobus Capellus, in a Kind of Rapture, cries out) Literis aureis Regum Palatiis inſcribenda, atque adeò Stylo adamantino Fidelium omnium Animis inſculpenda: Words fit to be written upon the Palaces of Kings in Letters of Gold, and engraven on the Minds of all the Faithful with a Stile of Adamant!

The Author of the Book of Ezra.

(z) Who the Author of the ſix firſt Chapters of Ezra was, is a Matter of ſome Uncertainty, tho' it is generally agreed, that the ſame Hand, which compos'd the two Books of Chronicles, was concern'd in writing that Part of Ezra, becauſe the Chronicle concludes with the very ſame Words, wherewith the Hiſtory begins, which, in antient Authors, to connect the Thread of the Diſcourſe, (as Grotius obſerves) is no unuſual Thing. The Jewiſh Doctors indeed are chiefly of Opinion, that theſe Chronicles were written by Ezra: But this can hardly be, becauſe the Author (whoever he was) continues the (a) Genealogy of Zerubbabel to the twelfth Generation, which is lower than Ezra liv'd. Nor can Ezra be the Author of the ſix firſt Chapters of the Book which bears his Name, becauſe the Perſon, who wrote it, (b) is ſaid to have been at Jeruſalem in the Time of Darius Hyſtaſpes; whereas Ezra (c) did not go thither until the Reign of Artaxerxes. It is moſt likely therefore, that Ezra, upon his Coming to Jeruſalem, might meet with certain Annals, or Memoirs, kept of the ſeveral Tranſactions that had happen'd, ſince the Time of the People's Return from Captivity, and that, to theſe, (after he had made an Extract of ſuch as were true and authentick) he added a farther Continuation of the Hiſtory of his own Government. For, that the four laſt Chapters of the Book were of his own compoſing, is evident from this Teſtimony: (d) And, at Evening Sacrifice, I aroſe up from my Heavineſs, and having rent my Garment, and my Mantle, I fell upon my Knees, and ſpread out my Hands unto the Lord. Then follows the Prayer which he made, and immediately it is ſubjoin'd, (e) Now when Ezra had prayed, and when he had confeſſed, and caſt himſelf down before the Houſe of God: Which plainly ſhews that Ezra was the Author of that Part of the Book, which ſpeaks of himſelf in the firſt Perſon.

And, in like Manner, that Nehemiah was the Writer of what is reputed his, ſeems to be evident, (f) not only from his own Declaration in the Front of it, (which was the Practice of Herodotus, Thucydides, and other antient Hiſtorians in thoſe Days) but from the Teſtimony of the Jewiſh Church likewiſe, which all along receiv'd it into their Canon, and from the Approbation of the Seventy Interpreters, who, from the very firſt, gave it a Place in their Tranſlation under that Name.

of him in Nehemiah. Joſephus (g) tells us, "That he, being made Governor of Samaria, under the laſt Darius, marry'd his Daughter to one, whoſe Father had been High-Prieſt of the Jews, and that, when his Son-in-Law was thereupon driven out of Jeruſalem, he obtain'd Leave of Alexander to build a Temple on Mount Gerizim, like that at Jeruſalem, and to make him the Prieſt thereof." Now, to make this accord with what we read in Nehemiah, (h) the general Opinion is, that there were two Sanballats, the firſt, the Sanballat of the Holy Scriptures, and the other, the Sanballat of Joſephus; and that there were two Marriages contracted by two different Perſons, Sons of two different High-Prieſts of the Jews, with two different Women, who were each Daughters of two different Sanballats; the firſt, the Daughter of the Sanballat of the Scriptures, and the other, the Daughter of the Sanballat of Joſephus, and that he, who marry'd the firſt of them, was the Son of Joiada, but he who marry'd the ſecond of them, was the Son of Johanan, and Brother of Jaddua. But there is no Reaſon to have Recourſe to this perplex'd Solution, ſeeing that Joſephus has incurr'd a palpable Miſtake in Point of Chronology. For, (i) ſince this Marriage was conſummated while Joiada, the Son of Eliaſhib, was the High-Prieſt of the Jews even in the fifth Year of his Pontificate; (k) and ſince he enter'd upon that Office, in the eleventh Year of Darius Nothus, who reign'd in all nineteen Years, it muſt follow, that the Licence, which Sanballat obtain'd for the Building of a Temple at Samaria, was not from Alexander, but from this Darius, in the fifteenth Year of his Reign, and above eighty Years before the Darius Codomannus, whom Alexander vanquiſh'd, was known. There is no Occaſion therefore to ſuppoſe any more Sanballats than one, or to extend his Life to any immoderate Length; only we may perceive that Joſephus was under a Miſtake, in placing this Sanballat under the Reign of Codomannus, who ſhould have been plac'd under a former Darius, ſirnam'd Nothus, and, conſequently, that all he tells us of this Sanballat's attending Alexander in his Wars, and obtaining of him a Licence to build a Temple, is a mere Fiction founded on that Miſtake; becauſe, in Alexander's Time, the Samaritans, by murdering Andromachus, his Governor of Syria, had ſo incens'd that great Conqueror againſt them, that inſtead of granting them any Favours, (l) we find him making all the Havock of them that he could.

The Author of the Book of Eſther, unknown.

WHO the Author of the Book of Eſther was the Opinions of the Learned are various. Some aſcribe it to Ezra, others to Mordecai, others to Mordecai and Eſther in Conjunction, and others again, to the joint Labours of the great Synagogue, who, from the Time of Ezra, to Simon the Juſt, ſuperintended the Edition, and Canon of Scripture. Thoſe, who contend for Mordecai, have theſe Words to alledge in his Behalf: (m) And Mordecai wrote theſe Things, and ſent Letters unto all the Jews, that were in all the Provinces of King Ahaſuerus, and the Jews undertook to do, as Mordecai had written to them: (n) But the Thing is evident, that theſe Words relate, not to the Book itſelf, but to the circular Letters, which Mordecai ſent to the Jews, in all the Provinces of the Perſian Empire, ſignifying what a mighty Deliverance God had vouchſaf'd them, and, in Commemoration of it, inſtituting an annual Feſtival to be obſerv'd for ever.

Its Genuineneſs.

AND indeed the Inſtitution of this annual Feſtival, and its continu'd Obſervation, is a ſtanding Proof, that this Hiſtory of Eſther is real, and not fictitious; ſince we can hardly conceive, how a wiſe Nation ſhould at firſt appoint, and afterwards continue the Celebration of this ſolemn ſolemn Time of Feaſting and Rejoicing every Year, merely becauſe a certain Man among them had once the good Fortune to write an agreeable Fable or Romance; much leſs can we conceive, from what Motive, a whole Aſſembly of learned Doctors ſhould receive a Writing of no better Character into the Canon of their Scriptures, (or to make it of more univerſal Uſe) ſhould honour it with a Greek Tranſlation.

Objections againſt it anſwer'd.

IT muſt be own'd indeed, that no foreign Author has taken any Notice of this Piece of Hiſtory, but the Reaſon hereof is obvious, viz. (o) becauſe the Authors, who wrote of the Affairs of Perſia at this Time, enter'd no farther into them, than as they were coincident with the Affairs of Greece; and tho' the ſix laſt Chapters of this Hiſtory are not to be found in any Hebrew Copy, yet Origen is of Opinion, (p) that once they were extant, tho' now loſt, and that from it the Septuagint form'd their Tranſlation; tho' others (with more Probability) think, that (as the Hiſtory of this memorable Tranſaction might be recorded by divers Hands) there were once two Hebrew Copies of it, one in a larger, and the other in a leſs Volume, and that, as the leſs is what we have at preſent, from the larger has proceeded the Greek Copy, with its ſundry Additions.

Why Mordecai would not reverence Haman.

HAMAN, we read, was an Amalekite, one of that Nation (q), againſt which God pronounc'd a Curſe; and therefore, upon this Conſideration, Mordecai might think himſelf not oblig'd to pay him the Reverence which he expected, and, if the reſt of the Jews had the like Notion of him, this might be Reaſon ſufficient for his extending his Reſentment againſt the whole Nation. But there ſeems to be ſomething more in the Reverence which the People were commanded to pay him, than what is the Effect of civil Reſpect. The King of Perſia, we know, expected a Kind of Divine Adoration from all that approach'd his Preſence; (r) as we read of one Timagoras, upon whom the People of Athens paſs'd Sentence of Death, for his worſhipping of Darius, accounting the Honour of their whole City debas'd by this mean Submiſſion of one of their Citizens, tho', at that Time, Darius was one of the greateſt Monarchs upon Earth. And as the Kings of Perſia did arrogate this to themſelves, ſo they ſometimes imparted it to their chief Friends and Favourites, as it ſeems, at this Time, to have been the Caſe with Haman. For we can hardly conceive, why the King ſhould give a particular Command, (s) that all his Servants ſhould reverence him, if by this Reverence no more is intended, than that they ſhould ſhew him a Reſpect ſuitable to his Station: But now, if we ſuppoſe, that the Homage, expected from them, was ſuch as came near to Idolatry, (t) we need not wonder, that a Jew ſhould deny that Honour, or the outward Expreſſions of it to any Man, ſince the wiſe and ſober Grecians did poſitively refuſe to give it to the very Kings themſelves. And, that this was the Caſe before us, the Author of the apocryphal Additions to the Books of Eſther ſeems to imply, when he introduces Mordecai, as praying in theſe Words,—— (u) Thou knoweſt O Lord, that it is not Contumacy, nor Pride, nor Deſire of vain Glory, that make me not worſhip Haman; for I would willingly kiſs his Feet for the Safety of Iſrael. But I do it, that I may not prefer the Glory of a Man to the Glory of God, nor adore any one, but thee, my Lord, alone.

The Conduct of Ahaſuerus, Eſther, and Mordecai, in ſome Meaſure aſſoiled.

THO' we are far from pretending to apologize, either for the Injuſtice of Ahaſuerus in abdicating his Queen, or for the Conduct of Eſther in going to his Bed, yet a good deal of this might be reſolv'd into the Cuſtom of a Nation, where the King was abſolute, and his Subjects mere Vaſſals; where the Will of the Prince, I ſay, was a perfect Law, and a Plurality of Wives and Concubines reputed honourable. This however may be ſaid in Behalf of Ahaſuerus, that that he did not divorce his Wife, without firſt conſulting his Counſellors, and ſuch as were beſt acquainted with the Laws of their Country; and therefore, if there was any Iniquity in it, they were the Perſons chiefly to be blam'd, who repreſented the Queen's Diſobedience, as a Crime of ſuch a dangerous Nature, that it would have had a noxious Influence upon the whole Nation, had it not been ſeverely puniſh'd. And this may be ſaid in Excuſe for Eſther, that the Words, which we render (x) ſhe was brought, may equally ſignify ſhe was taken away, viz. by Violence; (y) for (as the Targum upon this Paſſage relates the Matter) "Mordecai, hearing of the King's "Edict for the Collection of all the beautiful Virgins in his Dominions, hid his "Couſin in a private Place, where the "Officers could not find her; but when "Eſther (whom all the Neighbourhood "knew to be a great Beauty) was miſſing, "an Order from the King to Mordecai "was procur'd, which, upon Pain of "Death, oblig'd him to produce her." However this be, 'tis certain, that the Perſons, whom the King took to his Bed in this Manner, were not reputed Harlots, but became his lawful Wives, tho' Wives of an inferior Degree; and therefore it is no great Wonder, that Eſther, in theſe Circumſtances, (tho' a very virtuous Woman) ſhould conſent; nor can we tell, but that Mordecai, and ſhe, might have a Diſpenſation from God, (as God, no doubt, can diſpenſe with his own Laws) ſuppoſing there were any Contrariety to the Divine Laws in this Tranſaction.

Why Ahaſuerus did not reward Mordecai at firſt.

TO account for the Humour of Princes and their Management of publick Affairs, is next to a Thing impoſſible. We ſee, even among us, that great Men are ſometimes unmindful of the higheſt Services, that are done them, and take no Care to reward them; eſpecially if the Perſon be in himſelf obſcure, and not ſupported by a proper Recommendation. And therefore we are not at all to wonder, if a Prince, that bury'd himſelf in Indolence, and made it a Part of his Grandeur to live unacquainted and unconcern'd with what paſs'd in his Dominions, (as this was the Cuſtom of moſt Eaſtern Kings) ſhould overlook the great Service, which Mordecai had done him, or if he order'd him a Reward, that, by the Artifice of thoſe at Court, who were no Well-wiſhers to the Jews, he might be diſappointed of it.

THERE ſeems however to have been a particular Direction of Providence, in having his Reward delay'd till this Time, when he and all his Nation were appointed to Deſtruction, when the Remembrance of his Services might be a Means to recommend them to the King's Mercy, and the Honours conferr'd on him a deep Mortification to his Adverſary. Theſe Honours indeed were very remarkable; but, by Haman's Manner of propoſing them, they ſeem to have been the uſual Marks of Diſtinction and Eſteem, that the Kings of Perſia conferr'd on thoſe, whom they were minded to make conſpicuous; and ſo far was Mordecai from being elated with them, that as ſoon as the Solemnity was over, we read, that (z) he return'd to his Duty, and Attendance at the King's Gate.

Why Haman's wiſe Men might predict his Ruin from Mordecai's being a Jew.

HE had declar'd himſelf a Jew, to ſatisfy the People at Court, that he could not, with a good Conſcience, comply with the King's Command relating to the Reverence, which was to be paid to Haman: And the Interpoſition of Providence in Behalf of the Jewiſh Nation, even during their Captivity, had been ſo viſible, that the wiſe Men about Haman might, from Experience, form a Conjecture, that if their God was become their Friend, (as by this ſtrange Turn of Affairs in Favour of Mordecai it looked as if he was) no Weapon forged againſt them would proſper; becauſe they had ſeen ſo many Plots, which would have cruſh'd any other Nation, turn to their Advancement, as well as their Enemies Deſtruction.

Deſtruction. The Advice (a) which Achior gave to Holofernes, is founded upon the known Experience of thoſe Times, and beſpeaks a Man well acquainted with the State of the Jews: Now therefore, my Lord and Governor, if there be any Error in this People, and they ſin againſt their God, let us conſider, that this will be their Ruin. —— But, if there be no Iniquity in their Nation, let my Lord now paſs by, leſt their Lord defend them, and their God be for them, and we become a Reproach before all the World. Conſidering then, that Mordecai was of the Seed of the Jews, a People, whom God had wonderfully rais'd from under great Oppreſſions, and that, at this Time, there was a deſperate Deſign, by Haman's Management, carrying on againſt them; Haman's wiſe Men might eaſily, and without the Spirit of Prophecy, divine, (b) that as Mordecai (whom they knew to be a Man of great Courage and Wiſdom) was now got into the King's Favour, it would not be long before he would find an Opportunity of applying to him (who was a Perſon of a mild Diſpoſition) for a Revocation of the bloody Decree which Haman, by impoſing upon his Credulity, had procur'd, and conſequently, of ruining Haman in the King's good Graces. For the known Inſtability of Court-Favours, and the little Quarter, that there is given to Rivals or Enemies, made it no hard Matter, from Mordecai's Advancement, to read Haman's Deſtiny.

That Haman might have all the Money that the Scripture mentions.

HAMAN indeed was outrageouſly bent againſt the Jews, and what he offer'd the King in Lieu of the Damage, which his Revenues might ſuſtain by the Deſtruction of ſo many of his Subjects, is a prodigious Sum for any private Man to be Owner of; but we read of ſeveral ſuch Perſons in Hiſtory, who, in thoſe antient Times, were Poſſeſſors of much greater. Pithius the Lydian, for Inſtance, (c) when Xerxes paſs'd into Greece, was poſſeſs'd of two Thouſand Talents of Silver, and four Millions of Daricks in Gold, which together amounted to near five Millions and an half of our Sterling Money: And (d) Marcus Craſſus, the Roman, after he had conſecrated the Tenth of what he had to Hercules, feaſted all the People of Rome at ten Thouſand Tables, and given a Donative of Corn to every Citizen, as much as would laſt him three Months, found the Remainder of his Eſtate to be ſeven Thouſand one hundred Roman Talents, which amount to above a Million and an half of our Money. This may ſeem a little ſtrange to us at preſent, but our Wonder will ceaſe, if we conſider, that, from the Time of David and Solomon, and for fifteen hundred Years afterwards, the Riches of this Kind were in much greater Plenty, than they are now. The prodigious Quantities of Gold and Silver, which Alexander found in the Treaſures of Darius; the vaſt Loads of them, which were often carry'd before the Roman Generals, when they return'd from conquer'd Provinces; and the exceſſive Sums, which certain of their Emperors expended in Donatives, Feaſts, Shows, and other Inſtances of Luxury, and Prodigality, are of this Proof ſufficient: (e) But, at length, the Mines of the ancient Ophir, which furniſh'd all this Plenty, being exhauſted, and, by the Burning of Cities, and Devaſtation of Countries, which follow'd upon the Eruptions of the Goths, Vandals, and Huns, and other barbarous Nations in the Weſt, and of the Saracens, Turks, and Tartars, in the Eaſt, a great Part of the Gold and Silver, which the World then abounded with, being waſted and deſtroy'd by this Means, the great Scarcity of both, which afterwards enſu'd, was occaſion'd; nor have the Mines of Mexico, Peru, and Braſil, been, as yet, able fully to repair it.

How the Jews came to ſlay ſo many.

The great Sum, which Haman would have given to gratify his Revenge againſt the Jewiſh Nation, was an additional Provocation vocation to them, no doubt, to ſlay every one, who came to annoy them; but then, it muſt be conſider'd, that in this they acted by virtue of an Edict, which authoriz'd them to ſtand upon their own Defence; that they were not the firſt Aggreſſors, but only oppos'd thoſe, that openly aſſaulted them, and were for putting any unjuſt Decree in Execution againſt them; and, as the Amalekites, who might be diſpers'd throughout the Perſian Dominions, were the known and inveterate Enemies of the Jews, and, following now the Fortune of Haman, might be forward enough to execute the Decree, which he had procur'd againſt them, it is therefore reaſonably preſum'd, that moſt of thoſe, whom the Jews, in their neceſſary Defence, both in Shuſhan, and in the Provinces, did deſtroy, were of that devoted Nation; and that, by this their Slaughter, the Prophecies againſt Amalek were accompliſh'd.

And the Wonderfulneſs of their Eſcape.

DISSER-

DISSERTATION II.

Of EZRA's Edition of the Holy Scriptures, and the Inſtitution of Synagogue-Worſhip.

Ezra's great Skill in the Holy Scriptures.

EZRA, no doubt, in his Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, was a great Man. The ſacred Hiſtory gives him this Character, that (g) he was a ready Scribe in the Law of Moſes, which the Lord God of Iſrael had given. The Jewiſh Doctors look upon him as the ſecond Founder of it; and are generally of Opinion, that he was the Prophet Malachi, (h) and had that Title given him, becauſe he was ſent, as God's Meſſenger, to revive their Religion, after it had been, in a Manner, quite extinguiſh'd. Nay, (i) many antient Fathers of the Chriſtian Church attribute more to him, in this Particular, than even the Jews themſelves; for they ſuppoſe, that, in the Babyloniſh Captivity, all the Scriptures were entirely loſt and deſtroy'd, but that Ezra, by Divine Revelation, renew'd, and recover'd them again. This, however, is carrying the Compliment too far, and leaving the Authority of the Holy Scriptures to ſtand upon a very precarious Bottom; ſince ſome may be apt to infer, that he, who is ſaid thus wonderfully to have reſtor'd them, might much more likely have forged the whole.

That he did not recover them by Divine Revelation.

WE readily acknowledge indeed, that in the Time of Joſiah, (through the two preceding Reigns of Manaſſeh and Ammon) Copies of the Law might be very ſcarce: But, by the pious Care of that good Prince, we are inform'd, that this Defect was ſoon remedied; that Copies were taken of the original Law, that was then found in the Temple; that Search was made in the Schools of the Prophets, and in all other Places where they could be found, for the other Parts of Holy Writ, and Tranſcripts form'd out of theſe likewiſe; ſo that, in a ſhort Time, all that were deſirous to know the Law of their God, either by writing them out themſelves, or procuring others to do it for them, were furniſh'd with Copies both of the Law and the Prophets. Within a few Years indeed, the City and Temple were deſtroy'd, and with them was the authentick Copy of the Laws, which was repoſited in the Temple, burnt and conſum'd; but before this Calamity befel the Jews, all the ſacred Writings then extant were got into private Hands, and carry'd away with them into Captivity.

THAT Daniel had a Copy of the Holy Scriptures with him in Babylon, is certain, becauſe (k) he not only quotes the Law, but makes mention likewiſe (l) of the Prophecies of the Prophet Jeremiah, which he could not have done, had he not had them by him. That, at the finiſhing of the Temple, (which was in the ſixth of Darius, and above fifty Years before Ezra came to Jeruſalem) Copies of the Law were in common Uſe, no one can doubt, who reads, how the Prieſts and Levites were ſettled in their reſpective Functions, (m) according as it is written in the Books of Moſes: And that, when the People called for the Scripture, to have have it read unto them, they did not requeſt of Ezra to get it anew dictated to him, but that he (n) would bring forth the Book of the Law of Moſes, which the Lord had commanded Iſrael; which plainly implies, that all the People well knew, that this Book was then extant, and needed not ſuch a Miraculous Expedient, as that of a Divine Revelation, for its Recovery.

But only publiſh'd a correct Edition of them.

But, if Ezra did not reſtore the Scripture in this Manner, the Queſtion is, what he did towards it? Now to this it may be anſwer'd, that, upon his Coming to Jeruſalem, (o) he got together as many Copies, as he could meet with, either in private Hands, or publick Repoſitories; that, by comparing theſe Copies one with another, he found out the true Reading, and ſo corrected all the Miſtakes, that had crept into them, either through the Negligence or Ignorance of Tranſcribers; that, having thus made the Copies perfect, he collected from them all the Books, of which the Holy Scriptures did then conſiſt (for ſome Books that appear'd later were admitted after this Time) diſpos'd them in their proper Order, and ſo far ſettled the Canon of Scripture; that, for the Illuſtration, Connection, and Completion of theſe Books, (eſpecially ſuch as were hiſtorical) he added ſome Paſſages, that were not in them before, and chang'd ſome Names, that were then grown obſolete, for ſuch as were more modern, and better underſtood, which, as he was a Prophet, he was authoriz'd to do; that, having thus made the Books, in all their Parts, perfect and intelligible, for the ſtill greater Eaſe and Convenience of the Vulgar, he caus'd the whole to be wrote out in the Chaldee Character, which (after the Babyloniſh Captivity) was in general Uſe among the People, ſo that the old Hebrew Letters were, from that Time, laid aſide among the Jews, and only retain'd by the Samaritans; and laſtly, that, to aſcertain the Reading of this introduc'd Character, he added the Vowel-Points, that are now found in our Hebrew Bibles: But whether this was of his Doing, or the Work of ſome later Hand, is a Matter of much Debate among the Learned.

From Ezra iv. 7. to the End; all Eſth. Neh. and Part of Hagg. Zech. and Malachi.

Whether he added the Vowel-Points. Arguments on both Sides.

Those, who maintain that Ezra (whom all held to be a Prophet) was the Author of theſe Points, and that they, conſequently, are of the ſame Authority with the Text itſelf, argue in this Manner:—— That, when the Hebrew Language ceas'd to be the Mother-Tongue of the Jews, (as all agree it did after the Babyloniſh Captivity) it thence became in a Manner impoſſible to teach it, without the Aſſiſtance of the Vowel-Points, and therefore, at leaſt, they muſt have begun in the Time of Ezra, and continu'd in Uſe ever after: That two ancient Books, called Bahir and Zohar, which are ſaid to have been written, the one a little before, and the other a little after the Time of our Saviour, make expreſs Mention of theſe Points in more Places than one: That, whereas it is ſaid, on the other Side, that the Maſorites of Tiberias (above five hundred Years after Chriſt) were the Inventors of theſe Points; this appears unlikely, becauſe the Schools, which the Jews once had in Judea, were at this Time all ſuppreſs'd, nor was there any Number of learned Men left in the Nation, of ſufficient Ability for ſuch a Work: And, laſtly, that if it be allow'd, that the preſent Points are not of the ſame Authority with the Letters themſelves, but only of a late and human Invention, this will weaken the Authority of the Scriptures, and leave the ſacred Text to an arbitrary and uncertain Reading, and Interpretation.

Those who maintain the contrary Opinion, viz. that theſe Vowel-Points are of a later Date, than Ezra, fortify themſelves with ſuch Arguments as theſe—— That the ſacred Books, which the Jews make uſe of in their Synagogue-Service, neither have, nor ever had any of theſe Points in them, which can only be imputed puted to this. —— That, when the Holy Scriptures began firſt to be publickly read in the Synagogues, (which was preſently after this Edition, which Ezra made of them) there were no ſuch Vowel-Points then in being: That, if we compare the Tranſlation of the Septuagint, the Chaldee Paraphraſes, or the Latin Verſion of St Jerom, with the preſent pointed Hebrew Bibles, we ſhall in ſeveral Places find, that they read the Text otherwiſe, than according to the preſent Punctuation; which is an Argument that theſe Points were either not in being, or not in any great Authority in thoſe Times: And laſtly, that, if we conſult Philo Judæus, or Joſephus, who are two of the oldeſt Authors of the Jews, or any of the antient Chriſtian Writers, for ſeveral Ages after Chriſt, we ſhall not find one Word mention'd of theſe Points, tho' they could not but have ſundry Occaſions to take notice of them, if either they had been in Uſe, or of ſuch great Credit and Authority with the Jews, as is pretended. And therefore (to anſwer the Arguments on the other Side) they alledge, that the Books of Bahir and Zohar are not near ſo antient as they are reputed; that, for above a Thouſand Years after their pretended Compoſure, the Jews themſelves knew nothing of them, nor were they once mention'd by any Author whatever, during that Interval; and therefore there is Reaſon to think, that a falſe Date of Antiquity was fraudulently put to them, to give them ſome Sanction, and to recommend them to the World with a better Credit.

THAT the Maſorites of Tiberias were certainly in being a long Time in Judea, and, in their Way of Learning, were not a little eminent; for St Jerom himſelf informs us, that he made uſe of them: That, tho' there may be ſome Difficulty in reading without Points; yet, ſince we find that the Samaritans, who underſtand Hebrew no better than the Jews, have no Points to this Day, yet can read the Hebrew Text, in the Samaritan Character, we need not doubt, but that Cuſtom, good Senſe, and the Coherence of the Diſcourſe, will ſupply Rules for the remedying of theſe Inconveniencies. And, laſtly, ſince there is no Language in the World, wherein there are not ſeveral equivocal Expreſſions, which may occaſion an Ambiguity in the Senſe; tho' Points in this Caſe may be of ſome Uſe, yet they cannot totally ſecure us from Error, becauſe Faults in tranſcribing or printing, and Variations in pointing, are unavoidable.

The Deciſion of the Controverſy.

TO accommodate the Matter then, as well as we can, between theſe contending Parties; tho' theſe Vowel-Points were never antiently eſteem'd any Part of the ſacred Scripture of the Old Teſtament, but only Additions of human Invention, for the more eaſy reading of the Text, becauſe they were never receiv'd by the Jews (to whom were committed the Oracles of God) into the Books, which were read in their Synagogues; yet we have good Reaſon to conclude, that upon the Hebrew's ceaſing to be a vulgar Language, (as it certainly did in the Time of Ezra) they muſt of Neceſſity have been introduc'd.

WHEN every Child learn'd the Hebrew Tongue from his Cradle, it was no hard Matter for thoſe, who thus underſtood it by rote, to learn to read it by the Letters only, without the Vowels; but, when it became a dead Language, the Caſe was alter'd: (p) For then, inſtead of underſtanding it firſt in order to read it, they were firſt to read it in order to underſtand it; and therefore, having not the previous Knowledge of the Language to direct them herein, they muſt neceſſarily have had ſome other Helps, in order to know with what Vowel each Syllable was to be pronounc'd; and, to give them this Help, the Vowel-Points ſeem certainly to have been invented; and therefore the Time of this Invention cannot be plac'd later, than the Time, when they became neceſſary, i. e.

i. e. when the Hebrew became a dead Language, and ſo was acquirable no other Way than by Study and Inſtruction.

FROM this Neceſſity of Inſtruction, and, probably, not long after Ezra's Edition of the Holy-Scripture, there ſprung up a Set of Men among the Jews, whoſe Profeſſion it was to write out Copies of the Hebrew Text, and to preſerve, and teach the true Reading of it. What they did of this Kind, is called by the Jews the Maſorah, i. e. the Tradition; becauſe they pretend to have the true Reading (as the Talmudiſts pretend to have the true Interpretation) of the Scriptures handed down to them from Generation to Generation. However, as their whole Buſineſs was to ſtudy the true Reading of the Hebrew Text, to preſerve it from being corrupted, and to teach it to others, it is highly probable, that they were the firſt Inventors of Vowel-Points, becauſe the whole Uſe of thoſe Points was to be ſubſervient to this Purpoſe.

BUT tho' theſe Points might be invented by the Hebrew Grammarians, whom we call Maſorites, much earlier than ſome will allow; yet, from their late Appearance in the World, it ſeems very probable, that, as at firſt they might invent them only for their private Uſe, ſo, for ſome Time, they might reſerve them to themſelves, and teach them only to their Scholars. For the Jews, we muſt know, had antiently two Sorts of Schools, thoſe of the Maſorites, and thoſe of the Rabbins: The former taught only the Hebrew Language, and to read the Scriptures in it; but the other taught their Pupils to underſtand the Word of God, and all the Interpretations of it. Theſe were the great Doctors of Divinity among them, to whom the Maſorites were as much inferior, as the Teachers of Grammar-Schools among us are to the Profeſſors of Divinity in our Univerſities.

AS long therefore as theſe Vowel-Points went no higher, than the Schools of the Maſorites, they were not much regarded among their learned Men; and this is the Reaſon, why we find no Mention made of them either in the Talmud, or in the Writings of ſome antient Fathers, from whom it might have been expected. But, after the Publication of the Talmud, the Jewiſh Doctors thought it adviſable, in order to preſerve the right Reading of the Text (as the Miſhna and Demara were ſuppos'd to preſerve its right Interpretation) to take this Punctuation of the Maſorites into their Divinity-Schools, and, having review'd, and corrected it with great Care, they added it to the Text, and ſo gave it all the venerable Aſpect, that it now bears.

BUT tho' theſe Vowel-Points were added to the Text by ſuch Perſons, as underſtood the Language perfectly, and, having ſince undergone the Review and Correction of many Ages, may be juſtly accounted a Work as compleat in its Kind, as can be done by Human Art; yet, ſince it was only done by Human Art, it is no authentick Part of the Scriptures: And therefore theſe Points are not ſo unalterably fix'd to the Text, but that a Change may be made in them, when the Nature of the Context, the Analogy of Grammar, or the Stile of the Language, ſhall give a ſufficient Reaſon for it; eſpecially conſidering, that, notwithſtanding their exact Fixation at firſt, they are ſtill liable to the Miſtakes of Tranſcribers and Printers, and, by Reaſon of their Number, the Smallneſs of their Figures, and their Poſition under the Letters, are more liable to ſuffer by them, than any other Sort of Writing whatever.

The Reſult of the Whole.

SO that, upon the Whole, it appears, that tho' theſe Vowel-Points were not affix'd to the Hebrew Text by Ezra himſelf; yet were they of early Date after his Edition of the Holy Scriptures: that, tho' they did not immediately appear in the World, nor are taken notice of by any Writer of Repute for many Ages after; yet this was occaſion'd by their being confin'd to the School of the Maſorites, who in all Probability were the firſt Inventors of them: And tho' being of human Invention only, they cannot be ſuppos'd of equal Authority with the Text itſelf; yet are they of excellent Uſe for the Preſervation vation of its right Reading, and for the Prevention of innumerable Perplexities, and Ambiguities, that would otherwiſe be incident to it.

The Origin of Synagogues.

The Learned are not a little divided concerning the Riſe and Antiquity of the Jewiſh Synagogues: For ſome contend, that they were in Uſe under the Tabernacle and firſt Temple, whilſt others aſſert, that they had no Being until the Times of the Captivity. The former, in Behalf of their Opinion, urge, (q) that, as in the Wilderneſs, the Court of the Tabernacle could not contain the hundredth Part of the Worſhippers of the God of Iſrael, and, as in the Promis'd Land, the Temple was too far diſtant, for devout Perſons of every Tribe to reſort to it every Sabbath-Day; there was a Neceſſity for other Places to be appointed for the Service of God, that the Senſe of Religion might not be extinguiſh'd and loſt. To this Purpoſe they obſerve, that the Levites were diſpers'd in ſeveral Cities, and the Prophets and Sons of the Prophets ſettled in their reſpective Colleges, that they might be ready at hand, upon all Occaſions, to expound the Law, and inſtruct the People in their Duty, whenever they met together for that Purpoſe. And therefore, we find the Shunamite's Huſband thus expoſtulating with his Wife, (r) wherefore wilt thou go to the Man of God to Day, ſeeing it is neither New-Moon, nor the Sabbath; which plainly implies, that, at ſuch ſtated Seaſons as theſe, the Cuſtom was to reſort to ſuch Teachers for Inſtruction: And, if this was the Cuſtom, there is no Queſtion to be made, but that proper Places were appointed for their Reception. It is an unworthy Imputation therefore to think, that ſo many Temples ſhould be built for Idol-Worſhip, and yet none ſhould have Zeal or Piety enough, to erect a Synagogue for the God of Heaven, or that the Phariſees ſhould ſet up theſe uſeful Inventions, and yet the Elders, and Prophets and Holy Men under the Old Teſtament ſhould want them.

These are the principal Arguments on that Side, but the Silence of Scripture ſeems to be a ſtrong Confutation of them: For, had theſe Places of religious Worſhip been in Uſe among the Jews in the Time we are now ſpeaking of, we cannot conceive, why there ſhould not as frequent a Mention have been made of them, in the Old Teſtament, as there is in the New. The common therefore, and indeed the moſt probable Opinion is, (s) that there were no ſuch Things as Synagogues built, before the Captivity of Babylon, and the Deſtruction of the Temple; that the Jews, ſeeing themſelves carry'd away into a ſtrange Country, where they had no Temple for Divine Service, came to a Reſolution of building ſuch Houſes, as were afterwards called Synagogues, there to be inſtructed in the Law, and to worſhip the God of their Fathers, in the beſt Manner they could, on every Sabbath-Day; and that, upon their Return, finding the great Conveniency of ſuch like Buildings, they erected the ſame in their own Country, as they had done before in the Land of their Captivity, and herein were follow'd by the Jews of the Diſperſion, in all Parts of the World wherein they liv'd.

After Ezra had ſet forth a correct Edition of the Law, the Prophets, and other ſacred Writings, that were extant in his Time, his next Care was to appoint proper Perſons, viz. the moſt learned of the Levites, and other Scribes, that were well ſkilled in theſe Writings, to read and expound them to his People. (t) This, no Doubt, they did at firſt in the ſame Manner, that himſelf had done, i. e. by gathering the People together in ſome wide Street, or open Place of the City, that was of the fitteſt Capacity to receive them. But, in the wet and Winter Seaſons of the Year, the Inconvenience of this came to be felt; ſo that, in Proceſs of of Time, they erected Houſes and Tabernacles, wherein to meet for this Purpoſe: And this was the true Cauſe and Original † of ſuch Edifices in Judea.

A Deſcription of them.

SYNAGOGUES were publick Edifices, ſituate either within, or without their City, and generally in an elevated Place. (u) They were uſually rais'd above any private Houſe, except when there was an Interdiction from the Civil Power) becauſe the Jews have a Notion, that it is a Diſhonour to God to have his Houſe inferior, nay, ſo much as equal to thoſe of Men, and in whatever City this happens, they threaten it with a ſpeedy Deſtruction. They are always roof'd, and cover'd over, and by this are diſtinguiſh'd from the Proſeuchæ, which were commonly in the Fields, and open to the Heavens. In the Midſt of them there is a Deſk, or Pulpit, made very probably in Imitation of that, which (as (x) we read) Ezra made uſe of, from whence the Book, or Roll of the Law, is read very ſolemnly, and from whence both he that expounds it, or he that preaches to the Congregation at any Time, always delivers himſelf. At the upper End of the Synagogue, and over-againſt the Door, which ever ſtands to the Weſt, there is a Cheſt, or Preſs, wherein the Book of the Law is kept, wrapt in a fine embroider'd Cloth, and (what is uncommon in our Churches) during the Time of Divine Service the Women are ſeparated from the Men, and ſeated in a Gallery incloſ'd with Lattices.

Where they were built.

EVERY Town, wherein there were ten Batelnim, i. e. ten Perſons of full Age and free Condition, always at Leiſure on Week-Days, as well as Sabbaths, to attend on Divine Service, was thought large enough to have a Synagogue built in it: Otherwiſe it was not; becauſe the Jewiſh Notion is, that leſs than ſuch a Number could not make a Congregation, and, without a Congregation, no Part of the Synagogue-Service could be perform'd. But as their Notion was farther, that any Perſon, Gentile as well as Jew, might be permitted to erect a Synagogue, becauſe the Holineſs of the Place (as they thought) conſiſted not ſo much in the Fabrick, as in its being ſet a-part and dedicated to holy Uſes; it thence came to paſs, that tho' there were but few at firſt, yet in Proceſs of Time they became ſo numerous, that, in our Saviour's Time, there was no Town in Judea, but what had one or more in it; that, in Tiberias a City of Galilee, there were no leſs than twelve, and (if we may credit the Jews) four Hundred and eighty in Jeruſalem. The Buildings were contriv'd much after the ſame Manner as our Pariſh Churches, had over their Doors or Entrance this Inſcription written, This is the Gate of the Lord, the Righteous ſhall enter into it. And upon the Walls within, were theſe, or ſuch like Sentences: Remember thy Creator. Keep thy Foot, when thou goeſt into the Houſe of the Lord. Silence is commendable in the Time of Prayer. And Prayers, without Attention, are like a Body without a Soul, &c.

† Mr Baſnage, in his Hiſtory of the Jews, is of Opinion, that the Origin of Synagogues was not until the Reign of the Aſmonæans, ſome few Ages before Chriſt, and he imputes it to this Occaſion: ——— The zealous Traditioniſts, who made long Commentaries upon the Law, thought it a Crime to keep the People (whoſe Applauſe they mightily deſir'd) in Ignorance of them, and inſtead of confining their Explications to Jeruſalem, where they found themſelves too much ſlighted and confin'd, they carry'd them into every City, where there were Oratories, and publick Places of Aſſembly. Before this, private Perſons made their Prayers to God in their Houſes, where they had a Place ſet a-part for that Holy Exerciſe. It was generally upon the Top of the Houſe (for their Houſes were flat-roof'd) that the Family and their Friends met together, to read ſome Portion of the Law on the Sabbath-Day; and, when there was any Prophet in the City, the devout People aſſembled at his Houſe. But after that the Doctors had added their Traditions and Commentaries to the Law, the Buſineſs of Interpreters became ſo much the more neceſſary, becauſe thoſe Traditions were not written; ſo that the Number of Interpreters and Interpretations increas'd daily. For this Reaſon convenient Places were made choice of, that the People might the better meet together to be inſtructed; and from hence, in all Probability, it is, that they derive their Synagogues. to a very large Bulk, which makes the Synagogue-Service very long and tedious. What they reckon the moſt ſolemn Part of their Prayers are thoſe, which they call Shemoneh Eſhreth, i. e. the † eighteen Prayers, which, according to them, were compos'd, and inſtituted by Ezra, and the great Synagogue; and therefore they enjoin all, that are at Age, of what Sex or Condition ſoever, either in private or publick, to repeat them three Times a Day, and, on every Synagogue-Day, they offer them up, with the greateſt Solemnity, in their publick Aſſemblies. Theſe Prayers however are but of the ſame Nature, that the Lord's Prayer is in our publick Service, i. e. the fundamental and principal Part; for, beſides theſe, they have ſome † Theſe Papers were originally no more than eighteen, but R. Gamaliel, a little before the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, added the nineteenth (which is the 12th in the ſubſequent Order) againſt Chriſtians, who are therein meant by the Names of Apoſtates and Hereticks; and that we may judge of the Merit of theſe Prayers, a very learned Hand has given us the following Tranſlation of them, in the ſame Order, as they are in the Jewiſh Liturgies.

I. Bleſſed be thou, O Lord, our God, the God of our Fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob, the great God, powerful and tremendous; the High God, bountifully diſpenſing Benefits; the Creator and Poſſeſſor of the Univerſe, who remembereſt the good Deeds of our Fathers, and in thy Love ſendeſt a Redeemer to thoſe, who are deſcended from them, for thy Name's Sake, O King, our Helper, our Saviour, and our Shield. Bleſſed art thou, our Lord, who art the Shield of Abraham.

II. Thou, O Lord, art powerful for ever. Thou raiſeſt the Dead to Life, and art mighty to ſave. Thou ſendeſt down the Dew, ſtilleſt the Winds, and makeſt the Rain to come down upon the Earth, and ſuſtaineſt with thy Beneficence all that live therein; and, of thy abundant Mercy, makeſt the Dead again to live. Thou helpeſt up thoſe that fall; thou cureſt the Sick; thou looſeſt them that are bound, and makeſt good thy Word of Truth to theſe, that ſleep in the Duſt. Who is to be compar'd to thee, O thou Lord of Might? And who is like unto thee, O our King, who killeſt, and makeſt alive, and makeſt Salvation to ſpring up, as the Herb out of the Field? Thou art faithful, to make the Dead riſe again to Life. Bleſſed art thou, O God, who raiſeſt the Dead to Life.

III. Thou art Holy, and thy Name is Holy, and thy Saints do praiſe thee every Day. Selah. For a great King and an holy one art thou, O God. Bleſſed art thou, O Lord, God moſt holy.

IV. Thou, of thy Mercy, giveſt Knowledge to Men, and teacheſt them Underſtanding; give graciouſly unto us Knowledge, Wiſdom, and Underſtanding. Bleſſed art thou, O Lord, who graciouſly giveſt Knowledge unto Men.

V. Bring us back, O our Father, to the Obſervance of thy Law, and make us to adhere to thy Precepts; and do thou, O our King, draw us near to thy Worſhip, and convert us unto thee by perfect Repentance in thy Preſence. Bleſſed art thou, O Lord, who vouchſafeſt to receive us by Repentance.

VI. Be thou merciful to us, O our Father, for we have ſinned; pardon us, O our King, for we have tranſgreſſed againſt thee, for thou art a God, good, and ready to pardon. Bleſſed art thou, O Lord moſt gracious, who multiplieſt thy Mercies in the Forgiveneſs of Sins.

VII. Look, we beſeech thee, upon our Afflictions: Be thou on our Side, in all our Contentions; and plead thou our Cauſe in all our Litigations; and make haſte to redeem us with a perfect Redemption, for thy Name's Sake: For thou art our God, our King, and a ſtrong Redeemer. Bleſſed art thou, O Lord, the Redeemer of Iſrael.

VIII. Heal us, O Lord, our God, and we ſhall be healed; ſave us, and we ſhall be ſaved; for thou art our Praiſe. Bring unto us ſound Health, and a perfect Remedy for all our Infirmities, for all our Griefs, and for all our Wounds; for thou art a God, who healeſt, and art merciful. Bleſſed art thou, O Lord, our God, who cureſt the Diſeaſes of thy People Iſrael.

IX. Bleſs us, O Lord, our God, in every Work of our Hands, and bleſs unto us the Seaſons of the Year, and give us the Dew, and the Rain to be a Bleſſing unto us upon the Face of all our Land, and ſatiate the World with thy Bleſſings, and ſend down Moiſture upon every Part of the Earth, that is habitable. Bleſſed art thou, O Lord, who giveſt thy Bleſſing to the Years.

X. Convocate us together by the Sound of the great Trumpet, to the Enjoyment of our Liberty; and lift up thy Enſigns to call together all of the Captivity, from the four Quarters of the Earth, to our own Land. Bleſſed art thou, O Lord, who gathereſt together the Exile of the People of Iſrael.

ſome Prayers going before, ſome following after, and others interſpers'd between them, which make the Liturgies very tedious, and juſtify our Saviour's finding Fault with their long Prayers.

2. In the Synagogue-Service there are three Things, that are read, the Shema, the Law, and the Prophets. The Shema conſiſts of three Portions of Scripture; the firſt is, from the Beginning of the 4th Verſe of the vith Chapter of Deuteronomy, to the End of the 9th Verſe: The ſecond, from the Beginning of the 13th Verſe of the xith Chapter of Deuteronomy, to the End of the 21ſt Verſe: And the third, from the Beginning of the 37th Verſe of the xvth Chapter of Numbers, to the End of the Chapter: And becauſe the firſt of theſe Portions, in the Hebrew Bible, begins with the Word Shema, i. e. Hear, therefore the Reading of the Whole is called the Reading of the Shema, which, next to their Saying of the Shemoneh Eſhreth, or the famous eighteen Prayers, is reckon'd the moſt ſolemn Part of their religious Service.

The five Books of the Law were divided, as ſome ſay, by Moſes himſelf, but not improbably by Ezra, into fifty-four Sections, becauſe, in their intercalated Years, (when a Month was added to the Year) there were fifty-four Sabbaths, and ſo a Section, being read every Sabbath-Day, compleated the Whole in the Space of a Year; but, when the Year was not thus intercalated, thoſe who had the Direction of the Synagogue-Worſhip, reduc'd the Sections to the Number of Sabbaths, by joining two ſhort ones ſeveral Times into one, becauſe they held themſelves oblig'd to have the whole Law from the Beginning of Geneſis to the End of Deuteronomy, read over in this Manner, every Year.

In the Perſecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, when the Reading of the Law was prohibited, in the Room of the fifty-four Sections of it, the Jews ſubſtituted fifty-four Sections of the Prophets, which were ever after continu'd; inſomuch that, when the Reading of the Law was again reſtor'd by the Maccabees, the Section, which was read every Sabbath out of the Law, ſerv'd for the firſt Leſſon, and the Section out of the Prophets for the ſecond; for that is the Meaning of (z) St Paul's ſtanding up to preach after the reading of the Law and the Prophets; i. e. after the reading of the firſt Leſſon out of the Law, and the ſecond Leſſon out of the Prophets.

From Ezra iv. 7. to the End; all Eſth. Neh. and Part of Hagg. Zech. and Malachi.

3. The Expoſition of the Law and the Prophets went along with the reading them: For, after that the Hebrew Language had ceas'd to be the Mother-Tongue of the Jews, and the Chaldee grew up into Uſe inſtead of it, the Cuſtom of the Synagogue was, that one ſhould firſt read a Paragraph of the Scriptures to the People in the Hebrew Tongue, and then another interpreted it in the Chaldee, which they better underſtood. And this ſeems to ſuggeſt the Reaſon, why theſe Sections of Scripture came to be divided into Verſes, viz. that, by this Means, the Reader might certainly know how much he was to read; and the Interpreter how much he was to interpret, at every Interval.

4. After that the Reading and Expounding were over, any Perſon of Learning and Knowledge in the Scriptures might addreſs himſelf to the People, upon what moral or divine Subject he thought proper; only we may obſerve, that this was a Compliment uſually paid to Strangers, and therefore, when St Paul and his Company came to Antioch in Piſidia, and went into the Place of Divine Worſhip on the Sabbath-Day, (a) after the Reading of the Law and the Prophets, the Rulers of the Synagogue ſent unto them, ſaying, Ye Men and Brethren, if ye have any Word of Exhortation for the People, ſay on.

The Officers belonging to them.

From what has been ſaid it appears, that the Miniſtration of the Synagogue-Service was not confin'd to the ſacerdotal Order; for the Prieſts were conſecrated only to the Service of the Temple, which was

was widely different from this, as conſiſting chiefly in the offering up of Sacrifices and Oblations; but to this in the Synagogue, any one, that by Learning was qualify'd for it, was admitted. Only, for the Preſervation of Order, there were in every Synagogue ſome fix'd Officers, whoſe Buſineſs it was to take care that all religious Duties were therein decently perform'd.

The firſt of this Kind, are thoſe whom the Scriptures of the New Teſtament call Ἀρχισυνάγωγοι, Rulers of the Synagogue: But how many of theſe belong'd to each Synagogue we cannot tell, only we may preſume, that there were more than one, becauſe they are mention'd in the (b) Plural Number in Reſpect of the ſame Synagogue. Next to them (and perhaps one of them) was the Miniſter of the Synagogue, whoſe Buſineſs it was to offer up to God the publick Prayers of the Congregation; and being for this Purpoſe delegated (as it were) by them to God, is therefore, in the Hebrew Language, called Sheliach Zibber, i. e. the Angel of the Church, or Congregation; from whence the Name of the Biſhops of the ſeven Churches mention'd in the Revelations, is manifeſtly borrow'd. Next to this Angel of the Church, were the Deacons, and inferior Miniſters of the Synagogue, called in Hebrew, Chazanim, or Overſeers, who, under the Rulers of the Synagogue, had the Charge and Overſight of all Things in it, and kept the Books of the Holy Scriptures, the Liturgies, and Utenſils which they brought forth, and carry'd away again, as there was Occaſion: And next to theſe Overſeers, was the Interpreter, whoſe Office it was to recite, in Chaldee, the Leſſons (as they were read in Hebrew) to the Congregation; and, becauſe a good deal of Skill in both Languages was requiſite for ſuch an Undertaking, whenever the Rulers of the Synagogue found a Perſon fit for this Purpoſe, they retain'd him by a Salary, and ſo made him a ſtanding Miniſter among them.

From Ezra iv. 7. to the End; all Eſth. Neh. and Part of Hagg. Zech. and Malachi.

Times of Worſhip.

We have nothing more to add concerning this Synagogue-Worſhip, but that the Times appointed for it were three Days a Week, beſides their Holidays, whether Faſts or Feſtivals, and thrice on every one of thoſe Days, i. e. in the Morning, in the Afternoon, and at Night: And that, when, at any of theſe Times, the Bleſſing was to be given, if there was a Prieſt preſent in the Congregation, he always did the Office; but if there was none there, the Sheliach Zibber, who read the Prayers, in a Form of Benediction made proper for him, diſmiſs'd the People.

Why the Jews were ſo prone before, and ſo averſe to Idolatry, after the Captivity.

Before we diſmiſs this Subject, there is one common Enquiry, which, by this Time, we may be able to ſatisfy, and that is, —— How it came to paſs, that the Jews were ſo prone to Idolatry before the Babyloniſh Captivity, and ſo ſtrongly bent againſt it (even to a Degree of Superſtition) after that Captivity was ended? Which can hardly be imputed to any other Cauſe, but that they had the Law and the Prophets every Week read unto them, after that Captivity, which they had not before. Before the Captivity, they had no Synagogues for publick Worſhip or Inſtruction, nor any Places to reſort to for theſe Purpoſes, but either the Temple at Jeruſalem, or the Cities of the Levites; and from hence great Ignorance grew among the People. God was little known among them, and his Laws in a Manner wholly forgotten: And therefore, as Occaſions offer'd, they were eaſily drawn into all the Superſtitions and idolatrous Practices of the Heathen Nations, that liv'd about them. But now, when, after the Babyloniſh Captivity, Synagogues were erected in every City, to which they conſtantly reſorted for publick Worſhip, and where, every Week, they had the Law at firſt, and, afterwards, both the Law and the Prophets read to them; and where, by Sermons and Exhortations, they were, at leaſt every Sabbath-Day, inſtructed in their Duty, and excited to the Performance of it; this kept them in a thorough Knowledge of God, and his Laws, as the Comminations in the Prophets (when once they came to be read among them) deterred them from tranſgreſſing againſt them; for (c) all Scripture (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) is given by Inſpiration of God, and is profitable for Doctrine, for Reproof, for Correction, for Inſtruction in Righteouſneſs, that the Man of God, or every Man, that reſolves to be godly, may be perfect, wiſe unto Salvation, and thoroughly furniſhed unto all good Works.

Our Saviour's Example againſt Separation.

ONE Thing we may obſerve farther:——That, ſince there was a publick Liturgy eſtabliſh'd in the Jewiſh Church, and Forms of Prayer, tho' very empty and jejune in Compariſon of thoſe, that are in Uſe among us; our bleſſed Saviour, when upon Earth, was contented to join with the Publick in theſe Forms, and to frequent the Synagogue (d) every Sabbath-Day. And this may inform us, that to break the Union of a Church, upon the Account of better Edification, or more extatick Prayers, is a Refinement, that the great Teacher of all Righteouſneſs knew nothing of. In the Courſe of his Preaching, he ſpar'd not to tell the Jews freely of all the Corruptions, that, in his Time, they had run into; and therefore, had it been contrary to the Will of God, to uſe ſet Forms of Prayer in his publick Service, or had it been diſpleaſing to him, to be addreſs'd in ſuch mean Forms, when much better might have been made, we may be ſure he would have told them both, and join'd with them in neither: But, ſince he never found fault with them for uſing ſet Forms, but, on the contrary, taught his own Diſciples a ſet Form to pray by; ſince he no where expreſs'd a Diſlike of the Forms then in Uſe, upon Account of their Meanneſs, but, on the contrary, teſtify'd his Approbation of them, by joining with them in their Synagogues; this ſhould convince our Separatiſts, one would think, that neither our uſing ſet Forms of Prayer in our publick Worſhip, nor the uſing of ſuch, as they think not ſufficiently edifying, can be Objections ſufficient to juſtify them in their Refuſal to join with us in them, becauſe, in both theſe Caſes, they have the Example of Chriſt directly againſt them.

THE Truth is, whether there be a Form or no Form, or whether the Form be elegantly or meanly compos'd; nothing of this availeth to the recommending of our Prayers unto God. It is the true and ſincere Devotion of the Heart alone, that can make them acceptable unto him: For it is this only, that gives Life and Vigour, and a true Acceptance to all our religious Addreſſes. Without this, how elegantly, how movingly ſoever the Prayer may be compos'd, and how fervently, how zealouſly ſoever it may ſeem to be pour'd out, yet all this is dead Matter, and of no Validity in the Preſence of our God. But, on the contrary, the very Heathens can tell us, that, be our Prayers and Oblations never ſo mean, they will be a Sacrifice of a ſweet-ſmelling Savour unto him, if we bring but along with us, to his Worſhip,

The Building of the Temple on Mount Gerizzim, and the Enmity between the Jews and Samaritans.

From 1 Macc. i.—vi. 7. 2 Macc. iii.—x. and from Joſ. Hiſt. lib. xi. c. 7. to lib. xii. c. 14.

MANASSEH, as Joſephus calls him, (for we have now left the Sacred Hiſtory, and have nothing but the Books of the Maccabees, Philo Judæus, and Joſephus, with ſome Fragments of the Greek and Latin Writers, to depend on) being expelled from Jeruſalem, with ſeveral others who would not ſubmit to Nehemiah's Order for their parting with their idolatrous Wives, went to Samaria, (as we ſaid before) and there put himſelf under the Protection of Sanballat, his Father-in-Law; who, applying to Darius Nothus, (the then King of Perſia) did ſo far inſinuate himſelf into his Favour, as to obtain a Grant for the building of a Temple on Mount Gerizzim, near Samaria, and for making Manaſſeh, his Son-in-Law, the High-Prieſt of it.

THESE Samaritans † were originally the Cutheans, and ſuch other of the Eaſtern Nations, as Eſarhaddon, after the Deportation of the Iſraelites, planted there; but after this Temple was built, and Samaria became a common Refuge for all refractory Jews, this Mixture of Inhabitants in a ſhort

† If we will believe their Chronicle, (which they tell us is of great Antiquity, tho' others, who have examin'd it, will not allow it to be as old as Conſtantine's Days) they give us an Account of their Origin, quite different to what we gather from ſacred Writ. They pretend to be deſcended from Joſeph by Ephraim, in a direct Line; and that, when Joſhua enter'd into the promis'd Land, he caus'd a Temple to be built upon Mount Gerizzim, and appointed one Buz, of the Seed of Aaron, to officiate as High-Prieſt, from whom they have an exact Genealogy, and uninterrupted Succeſſion ever ſince. They neither own Jeroboam's Schiſm, nor the Tranſmigration of the Ten Tribes, but give this Account of their leaving their Country, and returning to it again:——That, when the Kings of Jeruſalem and Syria had revolted againſt Bachtnezzar, (ſo they call Nebuchadnezzar) he came with an Army, and took Jeruſalem, and thence marching to the Schechemites (for that's the Name they give themſelves) order'd them to leave their Country in ſeven Days, upon Pain of military Execution, which they readily did: That, when he ſent Perſians to inhabit the Cities, which they had left, they could not live there, becauſe the Fruits, which ſeem'd fair to the Eye, were tainted with Poiſon, and ſo deſtroy'd them: That, upon Complaints of this, the King conſulted with ſome of the ancient Inhabitants of theſe Provinces, who inform'd him, that the only Remedy was, to ſend the Hebrews back again into their own Country, which when he conſented to, a Place was appointed for their general Rendezvous: That, when they came to this Place, a Diſpute aroſe between them, whether they ſhould go, and rebuild the Temple of Jeruſalem, or that of Gerizzim, and when Zerobabbel was for the former, and Sanballat for the latter, each pleading the Sanction of the Pentateuch, and each pretending that the Copy of his Opponent was corrupt, they reſolv'd to end the Controverſy by a Fiery Trial: That Zerobabbel's Copy, being thrown into the Fire, was immediately conſum'd, but then, Sanballat's endur'd the Flames three Times together, and receiv'd no manner of Harm; whereupon, the King honour'd the Shechemites with rich Preſents, and ſent Sanballat at the Head of the Ten Tribes, to take Poſſeſſion of Mount Gerizzim. But who ſees not, that this whole Hiſtory (full of Falſities and Abſurdities as it is) was only invented to wipe off the Shame and Diſgrace of the Samaritans, for being the Offſpring of Proſelytes, and a Medley of foreign Nations? Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, lib. ii. c. 1. and Univerſal Hiſtory, lib. ii. c. 1.

a ſhort Time produc'd a Change in Religion. For, whereas they had hitherto worſhipp'd the God of Iſrael, in Conjunction with the Gods of the Eaſt, from whence they came, when once the Jewiſh Worſhip came to be ſettled among them, and the Book of the Law of Moſes to be read publickly, they conform'd themſelves wholly to the Worſhip of the true God, and, in their Performance of this, were as exact as the Jews themſelves. The Jews however, looking on them as Apoſtates, hated them to ſuch a Degree, as to avoid all Manner of Converſe and Communication with them. This Hatred firſt began from the Malice which the Samaritans expreſs'd againſt them both in the rebuilding of their Temple, and in the repairing the Walls of their City. It was afterwards much increas'd by the Apoſtacy of Manaſſeh, and his ſetting up an Altar and Temple, in Oppoſition to thoſe at Jeruſalem; and it was all along kept up, on Account of ſome particular Tenets, wherein the two Nations were known to diſagree. For the Samaritans receiv'd no other Scriptures, than the five Books of Moſes; they rejected all Traditions, and adher'd only to the written Word itſelf; and they maintain'd, that Mount Gerizzim †, whereon their Temple was built, was the only proper Place for the Worſhip of God; and from this Variety of Cauſes did enſue all the Hatred and Virulence, which, in the Courſe of this Hiſtory, we ſhall have but too frequent Occaſion to take notice of.

Johanan, the High-Prieſt, kills his Brother Joſhua in the Temple, and is fin'd for it.

After the Death of Nehemiah, who was the laſt Governor, that the Kings of Perſia ſent to Jeruſalem, Judea, being added to the Præfecture of Syria, was from thenceforward ſubjected to the Rulers of that Province; and, under them, the Adminiſtration of all publick Affairs, both civil and eccleſiaſtical, was committed to the High-Prieſt, which made that Office much more coveted, than it us'd to be, and many Times tempted thoſe, who had no Right to it, to invade it.

Upon the Death of Darius Nothus, Artaxerxes, who, for his extraordinary Memory, is by the Greeks called Μνήμων, or The Remembrancer, ſucceeded his Father in the Throne of Perſia; and, towards † Joſephus, in his Jewiſh Antiquities, (lib. xiii. c. 6.) relates a Diſpute, which aroſe in Egypt, in the Reign of Ptolemy Philopater, between the Jews and Samaritans, concerning their Temples. The Samaritans maintain'd, that their Temple upon Mount Gerizzim was the only true Temple of the Lord; and the Jews, on the contrary, affirm'd, that theirs at Jeruſalem was the only true one. The Diſpute was brought before the King; Advocates on both Sides were nam'd; and it was agreed, that they, who did not make their Allegations good, ſhould be condemn'd to Death. Both Parties promis'd, that they would produce all their Teſtimonies from the Law only. Andronicus, Advocate for the Jews, ſpake firſt, and prov'd ſo very evidently from the Scriptures the Antiquity of the Temple of Jeruſalem, the Succeſſion of the High-prieſts, and the Value which the Aſiatick Princes always had for that holy Place, while, at the ſame Time, they never ſo much as thought of the Temple at Gerizzim, that the King and his Aſſeſſors declar'd he had carry'd his Cauſe, and order'd Sabbæus and Theodoſius, the Advocates for the Samaritans, to be put to Death. Whether there be any Reality in this Account of Joſephus, or no, 'tis certain, that the Samaritans, in behalf of Mount Gerizzim, have to plead, ——— That there Abraham, (Gen. xii. 6, 7. and xiii. 4.) and there Jacob (Gen. xxxiii. 20.) built Altars unto God, and, by their offering up Sacrifices thereon, conſecrated that Place above all others to his Worſhip; that, for this Reaſon, God himſelf appointed it (Deut. xxvii. 12.) to be the Hill of Bleſſing; and that, accordingly, Joſhua, on his Entrance upon the Land of Canaan, caus'd the Bleſſings of God, to ſuch as would obſerve his Laws, from hence to be pronounc'd; and, laſtly, that when he paſs'd the Jordan, he built here an Altar of the twelve Stones, which he took out of the River in his Paſſage, Deut. xxvii. 2.—7. according to what God had commanded him by Moſes. But herein the Samaritans are guilty of a great Prevarication; for they have chang'd the Words of the Text of Deuteronomy, and inſtead of Mount Ebal (as it is in the Original) have put Mount Gerizzim, the better to ſerve their Cauſe. The Truth of the Matter is, ſince Manaſſeh was reſolv'd to make a Schiſm in the Jewiſh Church, and Sanballat, to build a Temple for him, the Reaſons above-mention'd might be Inducement enough for them to make choice of that Place, rather than any other; but from thence to pretend to vie with the Temple at Jeruſalem, is highly arrogant; becauſe the Jews have authentick Teſtimonies, that the publick Exerciſe of the true Religion was ſettled among them, and ſolemniz'd at Jeruſalem, long before this Temple at Gerizzim was thought of. In ſhort, the religious Obſervances of the Jewiſh Worſhip did always attend the Ark of the Covenant, but the Ark was never once at Gerizzim, nor indeed was it fix'd in any ſettled Place, until David took it to his Palace at Jeruſalem, and Solomon had built a Temple for it in the ſame City. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 409, and Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word Gerizzim.

wards the latter End of his Reign, made Bagoſes Governor of Syria and Phœnicia, who took upon him to confer the Pontificate, even while Johanan, the High-Prieſt, (who had been ſeveral Years inveſted with it) was alive, upon the High-Prieſt's Brother Joſhua, and who, accordingly, came with this Grant to Jeruſalem, in order to take Poſſeſſion of the Office. (a) But, while the one endeavour'd by Force to get Poſſeſſion, and the other by Force to keep him from it, it ſo happen'd, that Johanan ſlew Joſhua in the inner Court of the Temple; which when Bagoſes heard, he came, in great Wrath, to Jeruſalem; went into the Temple, notwithſtanding the Remonſtrances that were made againſt it; and, having taken a thorough Cognizance of the Fact, impos'd a Mulct for the Puniſhment of it, and oblig'd the Prieſts to pay, out of the publick Treaſury, for every Lamb, that they offer'd in the daily Sacrifice *, the Sum of fifty Drachms, which is about one Pound, eleven Shillings, and three Pence of our Money.

Upon the Death of Artaxerxes Μνήμων, Darius Codomannus is made King of Perſia, and vanquiſh'd by Alexander the Great.

After the Death of Artaxerxes Μνήμων, Ochus ſucceeded his Father, but obtain'd the Crown * by very wicked and indirect Means. He reign'd however for one and twenty Years, after which, (b) he was poiſon'd by his Favourite Eunuch * Bagoas, who put the Crown upon the Head of Arſes, his youngeſt Son; but, in a ſhort Time, diſpatch'd him likewiſe, and made Codomannus (c) (one of the ſame Family, but at ſome Diſtance, and who, upon his Acceſſion, took the Name of Darius) King of Perſia.

In the third Year of the Reign of Ochus, about 356 Years before the Birth of Chriſt, Alexander the Great, who overthrew the Perſian Empire, was born at Pella in Macedonia. His Father Philip had been choſen

* This, if extended only to the ordinary Sacrifices, which were offer'd every Day, amounted to 365,000 Drachms for the whole Year, which is no more than one Thouſand one Hundred and forty Pounds, twelve Shillings, and Six-Pence of our Money: But, if it extended alſo to the extraordinary Sacrifices, which, on ſolemn Days, were added to the ordinary, it will come to about half as much more. For the ordinary Sacrifices, which were offer'd every Day, and therefore called the daily Sacrifices, were a Lamb in the Morning, and another in the Evening, which are called the Morning and Evening Sacrifices; and theſe, in the whole Year, came to ſeven Hundred and thirty. But, beſides theſe, there were added, on every Sabbath, two Lambs more, Numb. xxviii. 9, 10, on every New-Moon, ſeven, Numb. xxviii. 11. on each of the ſeven Days of the Paſchal Solemnity, ſeven, Numb. xxviii. 16,—24. beſides one more, on the ſecond Day, when the Wave-ſheaf was offer'd, Levit. xxiii. 12, on the Day of Pentecoſt, ſeven, Ver. 17, 18. on the Feaſt of Trumpets, ſeven, Numb. xxviii. 27. on the great Day of Expiation, ſeven, Chap. xxix. 8. on each of the ſeven Days of the Feaſt of Tabernacles, fourteen, Chap. xxix. 13. and on the eighth Day, ſeven, Numb. xxix. 36, ſo that, the additional Lambs being three Hundred ſeventy and one, theſe, if reckon'd to the other, make the whole Number, annually offer'd, at the Morning and Evening Sacrifices, to be eleven Hundred and one: And therefore, if the Mulct of fifty Drachms a Lamb were paid for them all, it would make the whole of it to amount to 55,050 Drachms, which comes to ſeventeen Hundred and twenty Pounds, ſix Shillings, and three-Pence of our Money. But even this Sum being too ſmall for a national Mulct, it ſeems moſt probable, that all the Lambs, which were offer'd in the Temple, in any Sacrifice, and upon any Account whatever, were taken into the Reckoning. We may obſerve however, that, whatever this Mulct was, the Payment of it laſted no longer, than ſeven Years; for, on the Death of Artaxerxes, the Changes and Revolutions, which then happen'd in the Empire, made a Change in the Government of Syria, and he, that ſucceeded Bagoſes in that Province, no farther exacted it. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 366.

* Artaxerxes, when he dy'd, left three Sons, Ariaſpes, Ochus, and Arſames; Ariaſpes was an eaſy, credulous Prince; and therefore Ochus ſo terrify'd him with Menaces, which he pretended came from his Father, that, for fear of being put to Death, he poiſon'd himſelf. Arſames he caus'd to be aſſaſſinated by Harpates; and this Loſs, added to the other, ſo overwhelm'd the old King with Grief, that he broke his Heart, and dy'd. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 359.

* This Eunuch, having poiſon'd both Ochus, and his Son Arſes, ſet the Crown upon Darius's Head; but, finding that he would not anſwer his Purpoſe in permitting to govern all in his Name (which was the Thing he aim'd at in his Advancement) he was reſolv'd to have remov'd him, in the ſame Manner as he had done his Predeceſſors; and, accordingly, had provided a poiſonous Potion for him. But Darius, being adviſ'd of the Deſign, when the Potion was brought to him, made him drink it all himſelf, and ſo got rid of the Traitor, by his own Artifice. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 335.

This exaſperated the Conqueror not a little; who, † in the Fluſh of his many Succeſſes, could bear no Contradiction, and therefore, as ſoon as he had done with Tyre *, he march'd directly againſt Jeruſalem.

JADDUA

* The Occaſion of his Death is ſaid to be this: ——— Pauſanias, a young noble Macedonian, and one of his Guards, having had his Body forc'd, and ſodomitically abus'd by Attalus, the Chief of the King's Confidents, had often complain'd to Philip of the Injury; but, finding no Redreſs, he turn'd his Revenge from the Author of the Injury, upon him, who refus'd to do him Juſtice for it, and ſlew him, as he was paſſing, in great State, to the Theatre, having the Images of the twelve Gods and Goddeſſes, and his own in the ſame pompous Habit, carry'd before him. Hereby he arrogated to himſelf the Honour of a God, but, being ſlain as ſoon as his Image enter'd the Theatre, he gave a ſignal Proof that he was no more than a mere mortal Man. Juſtin. lib. ix. Diodor. Sicul. lib. xvi.

* The City of Tyre is probably ſuppos'd to have been firſt built by a Colony of the Sidonians, and therefore the Prophet Iſaiah, Chap. xxiii. 12, calls it the Daughter of Zidon. It was at firſt ſituated on an high Hill on the Continent, whoſe Ruins are ſtill remaining under the Name of Palætyrus, or old Tyre; but, in Proceſs of Time, it was remov'd into an adjacent rocky Iſland, about half a Mile from the Main-Land, and became a Place of ſo great Trade and Wealth, that, according to the foremention'd Prophet, Her Merchants were Princes, and her Traffickers the honourable of the Earth, ver. 8. It had once been taken and deſtroy'd by Nebuchadnezzar, but when Alexander came before it, it had quite recover'd itſelf, and was fortify'd with a ſtrong Wall (drawn round it on the Brink of the Sea) of an hundred and fifty Feet in Height; ſo that he had no Way of approaching it, in order to make an Aſſault, but by carrying a Bank from the Continent through the Sea, to the Iſland on which the City ſtood, which in ſeven Months Time he accompliſh'd, and at length took the Place. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 333.

† No ſooner was he choſe General of all the Grecian Cities, confederated againſt the Perſian Empire, but he ſubdu'd the Tyrians, and Triballians in Thrace; and, upon his Return, took Thebes, that had revolted from the Confederacy, and raz'd it to the Ground. After this, ſetting out upon the Perſian Expedition, he vanquiſh'd Darius, near the Granicus; and, after the Action, took Sardis, Epheſus, Miletum, and Halicarnaſſus. The next Year he made himſelf Maſter of all Phrygia, Lycia, Pamphylia, Piſidia, Paphlagonia, and Cappadocia. The next Year he gave Darius a ſecond Defeat (and a terrible one it was) at Iſſus; took his Mother, Wife, two Daughters, and a young Son, Priſoners; ſeiz'd Damaſcus, and, in it, immenſe Riches; ſubdu'd, in ſhort, all Syria, Cœlo-Syria, and Phœnicia: For every Place yielded to him, none pretending to make any Reſiſtance, till he came to Tyre. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 333.

* As ſoon as he had taken the Town, he burnt it down to the Ground, and deſtroy'd and enſlav'd all the Inhabitants. Eight Thouſand he ſlew in the Sackage of the Town; and two Thouſand of thoſe, whom he took Priſoners, he caus'd to be crucify'd; a Piece of Cruelty this, highly unbecoming a generous Conqueror. But, to palliate the Matter, he gave out, that it was done by Way of juſt Revenge upon them, for their murdering their Maſters, and that, being originally but Slaves, Crucifixion was the proper Puniſhment for them. But this depended upon an old Story. Some Ages before, the Slaves of Tyre, having made a Conſpiracy againſt their Maſters, murther'd them all in

(e) JADDUA the High-Prieſt, who, at this Time, had the chief Government of the Jews, under the King of Perſia, was in dreadful Apprehenſions of what the Event might prove: But having no Protection to depend on but God's, he, and all Jeruſalem with him, made their Cries and Supplications to him, imploring his Mercy for their Deliverance from the approaching Storm; whereupon he was order'd in a Viſion of the Night, to go out, and meet Alexander (whenever he ſhould come) in his pontifical Robes, with the Prieſts attending him in their proper Habits, and all the People in white Garments.

JADDUA, next Day, with the Prieſts and People, habited in the Manner directed, went out of the City to a certain Eminence, which commanded the Proſpect of all the Country round, and there waited the Coming of Alexander. As ſoon as the High-Prieſt ſaw him at ſome Diſtance, he mov'd towards him in this ſolemn Pomp; which ſtruck the King with ſuch an Awe, that, as he drew near, he bowed down to him, and ſaluted him with a religious Veneration, to the great Surpriſe of all that attended him.

While every one ſtood amaz'd at this Behaviour, Parmenio, his firſt Favourite, took the Freedom to aſk him, how it came to paſs, that he, whom all Mankind ador'd, paid ſuch Adoration to the Jewiſh High-Prieſt? To which his Reply was, "That he did not pay that Adoration to "him, but to the God, whoſe High-Prieſt he was; that while he was at Dio "in Macedonia, and deliberating with "himſelf how to carry on the War with "Perſia, that very Perſon, and in that "very Habit, appear'd to him in a "Dream, encouraging him to paſs boldly "over into Aſia, and not to doubt of "Succeſs, becauſe God would be his "Guide in the Expedition, and give him "the Empire of the Perſians; and that "therefore, from hence he was aſſur'd, "that he made the preſent War under "the Conduct of that God, to whom, "in the Perſon of this High-Prieſt, he "paid Adoration:" And hereupon, turning to Jaddua again, he embrac'd him very kindly: And ſo, going into the City with him, offer'd Sacrifices to God in the Temple, where the High-Prieſt ſhew'd him the Prophecies of *Daniel, predicting the Overthrow of the Perſian Empire by a Grecian King, which he apply'd to himſelf, and thereby confirm'd his Opinion, that God had choſen him to execute this great Work.

When he left Jeruſalem, he offer'd to grant the People whatever Immunities the High-Prieſt ſhould deſire; but he requeſted no more, than a Toleration to live according to their own Laws and Religion, and an Exemption from the Payment of Tribute every ſeventh Year, becauſe, on the ſabbatical Year, the Jews were forbidden to till their Ground. in one Night, (except only Strato, whom his Slave ſecretly ſav'd) and, having marry'd their Miſtreſſes, continu'd Maſters of the Town, and from them the preſent Tyrians were deſcended. So that Alexander pretended, on this Occaſion, to revenge on them the Murther, that was committed by their Progenitors ſo many Ages before; though, in Reality, it was to gratify his Rage, for being ſo long detain'd before the Place, and there ſo valiantly reſiſted. Recovering however its Beauty and Riches again, it was inveſted with the Privileges of a Roman City, for its Fidelity, and, in the flouriſhing Times of Chriſtianity, was the Metropolitan See of the Province of Phœnicia: But now, that it is fallen into the Hands of the Turks, there is not the leaſt Similitude of that Glory, for which is was once renown'd. Its preſent Inhabitants are only a few poor Wretches, harbouring themſelves in Vaults, (for there is not one entire Houſe left) ſubſiſting chiefly upon fiſhing, and preſerv'd in this Place, as it were, by Providence, for a viſible Argument of God's having fulfilled his Word, concerning Tyre, viz. That it ſhould be as the Top of a Rock, a Place for Fiſhers to dry their Nets on, Ezek. xxvi. 14. Juſtin, lib. xviii. c. 3. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 333. and Maundrell's Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſalem.

But he excuſes himſelf to the Samaritans, and is highly incens'd againſt them for the Murther of Andromachus.

(f) No ſooner was he well got out of the City, but the Samaritans met him in great Pomp and Parade, deſiring of him, that he would likewiſe honour their City and Temple with his Preſence. "He "was then haſtening to Egypt, he told "them, but that, when he return'd, if "his Affairs would permit him, he would "not fail to comply with their Deſires:" And, when they requeſted of him an Immunity from all Taxes every ſeventh Year, becauſe they (as well as the Jews) did every ſeventh Year ſuffer their Land to lie fallow, he aſk'd them, if they were Jews, becauſe to them only he had granted that Privilege. Their Anſwer was, that they were Hebrews, but that the Phœnicians called them Sichemites: Whereupon, having no Leiſure to make any farther Enquiry into the Matter, he referr'd this likewiſe to his Return, when he promis'd to examine into their Pretenſions, and to do them Juſtice; but, before his Return, they had done enough to incenſe him againſt them.

On his going from theſe Parts into Egypt, he had made Andromachus, a ſpecial Favourite of his, Governor of Syria and Paleſtine; who (g) coming to Samaria, in order to ſettle ſome Affairs, was burnt to Death in his Houſe, which the People ſet on Fire, out of Rage and Diſcontent, very probably, that the Privileges, which were granted to their Enemies the Jews, were deny'd to them. This barbarous Action exaſperated Alexander not a little; inſomuch that, having caus'd thoſe, who had acted any Part in the Murther of the Governor to be put to Death, he drove all the reſt of the Inhabitants out of Samaria, planted therein a Colony of Macedonians, and gave the reſt of their Territories to the Jews.

* It is not well agreed among Hiſtorians, how this great Conqueror of the World died. Some of them are of Opinion, that he was poiſon'd by the Procurement of Antipater, whom he had left Governor of all his Dominions in his Abſence, and who, for his Male-Adminiſtration, had been lately diſmiſs'd; and therefore, fearing to be called to an Account, did, by the Hands of his Sons, who were about the Perſon of the King, and one of them his Cup-Bearer, execute this Treaſon upon his Maſter's Life, in order to ſave his own: But, in the Judgment of other Hiſtorians, he died by nothing but exceſſive Drinking; and thus they relate the Story: "One Day, after he had "been ſacrificing to the Gods for the many Victories which he had obtain'd, he made an Entertainment for his "Friends, wherein he drank very hard, and continu'd the Debauch till late at Night; when, returning from the "Feaſt, he and his Company were invited by a Phyſician of Theſſalia, to come, and drink a little more at his "Houſe. Alexander accepted of the Offer: And, as there were twenty in Company, he firſt drank to each of them "in their Order, and ſo pledg'd them again, and then called for the Herculean Cup. There was in Company one "Prodeas a Macedonian, but a terrible Drinker, and to him the King drank this Herculean, Brim-full, (which they "tell us held ſix of our Quarts) and, not long after, pledg'd him in the ſame; but immediately after the ſecond Cup "he dropp'd down upon the Place, and then fell into a violent Fever, of which he died, in the thirty-third Year of "his Age, after a Reign of twelve Years, ſix Years as King of Macedon, and ſix more as Monarch of Aſia." He was a Man of a bold enterpriſing Spirit, but fuller of Fire than Diſcretion. His Actions, though they were attended with Succeſs, were carry'd on with a furious and extravagant Raſhneſs; and the few Virtues that he had were obſcur'd with much greater Vices. Vain-Glory was the predominant Paſſion of his Soul; and the Fables of the antient Greek Heroes, the only Charts, by which he ſteer'd his Conduct. This was the Reaſon that he dragg'd Betis round the Walls of Gaza, in the ſame Manner as Achilles had us'd Hector; that he undertook that hazardous Expedition into India, as Hercules had done before him; that he made a drunken Proceſſion through Caramania, becauſe Bacchus is ſaid to have done the like in the ſame Place; and that he affected to be called the Son of Jupiter, becauſe moſt of the antient Heroes pretended, that they had for their Fathers one God or other. The Truth is, this young Conqueror, having the Iliads of Homer in great Admiration, always carry'd them with him, laid them under his Pillow when he ſlept, and read in them on all leiſure Opportunities; and therefore finding Achilles to be the great Hero in that Poem, he thought every Thing ſaid of him worthy of Imitation, and the readieſt Way to become an Hero himſelf, which was the main impulſive Cauſe of all his Undertakings: But, in Reality, were his Actions to be duly eſtimated, he could deſerve no other Character, than that of the great Cut-Throat of the Age in which he liv'd. The Folly of Mankind however, and the Error of Hiſtorians is ſuch, that they uſually make the Actions of War, Bloodſhed, and Conqueſt, the Subjects of their higheſt Encomiums, and thoſe their moſt celebrated Heroes, Darius *) the Grecian, or Macedonian Empire (for ſo it was now become) was divided among the chief Commanders of his Army, who ſoon fell to leagueing and fighting againſt each other, till after ſome Years, they were all deſtroy'd, except four, and theſe agreed to make a Partition of the Whole among themſelves, and ſo canton'd it into four Kingdoms, tho', all this while, Aridæus *, a Baſtard Brother of Alexander's, that took upon him the Name of Philip, and after him Alexander Ægus, his own Son by his Wife Roxana, bore both of them the Title of Kings.

Ptolemy Soter takes Poſſeſſion of Egypt, and ſubdues Paleſtine.

In this Diviſion, Ptolemy, the Son of Lagus, whom the Greeks call Soter, having taken poſſeſſion of Egypt, thought that the Provinces of Syria, Phœnicia, and Judea, would be an excellent Barrier for him; and therefore (h) he firſt of all attempted to bribe Laomedon, a Mitylenian Captain of Alexander's, (who, after the Death of Andromachus, very probably was made Governor of Syria, and the adjacent Countries) with a vaſt Sum of Money, to deliver them up into his Hands: But not being able to prevail this Way, he ſent Nicanor, one of his Captains, with an Army into Syria, whilſt himſelf, with a Fleet, invaded Phœnicia; and ſo, having vanquiſh'd Laomedon, and taken him Priſoner, he made himſelf Maſter of all theſe Provinces.

(i) The Jews however, for ſome Time, ſtood out againſt him, and, upon Account of the Oath they had taken to the depos'd Governor, refus'd to ſubmit to his Authority. Hereupon he march'd into Judea, and, having got poſſeſſion of moſt of the Country, laid Siege to Jeruſalem. The Place was ſtrong enough, both by Nature and Art, to have made a conſiderable Defence againſt him; but the Jews had then ſuch a ſuperſtitious Notion for the Obſervation of the Sabbath, that they thought it a Breach of their Law, even to defend themſelves on it: Which when Ptolemy underſtood, he made choice of that Day to ſtorm the Place, and in the Aſſault took it, becauſe there were none that would defend the Walls againſt him. At firſt he dealt hardly with the Inhabitants, and carry'd above an hundred Thouſand of them Captives into Egypt; but afterwards, conſidering how faithful they had been to their former Governors, he employ'd them in his Army and Garriſons, and granted them large Immunities and that moſt excel in theſe; whereas thoſe only are the true Heroes, who moſt benefit the World, by promoting the Peace and Welfare of Mankind. In a righteous Cauſe indeed, and the juſt Defence of a Man's Country, all Actions of Valour are juſt Reaſons of Praiſe; but, in all other Caſes, Victory and Conqueſt are no more than Murther and Rapine, and thoſe who thus oppreſs the World with the Slaughter of Men, the Deſolation of Countries, the Burning of Cities, and the other Calamities which attend War, are the Scourges of God, the Attilas of the Age in which they live, and the greateſt Plagues and Calamities that happen to it; and therefore, to make theſe the Subject of Praiſe and Panegyrick is to lay ill Examples before Princes, as if ſuch Oppreſſions of Mankind were the trueſt Ways to Honour and Glory. *Diod. * After the Battle of Arbela, wherein he was ſore diſcomfited, he made his Eſcape into Media, and, having got ſome few Forces together, thought to have tried his Fate in one Battle more; when Beſſus, his Governor of Bactria, and Nabazanes, another Perſian Nobleman, conſpir'd together, and having ſeiz'd the poor King, and made him their Priſoner, put him in Chains, and ſhut him up in a cloſe Cart, and ſo carry'd him with them towards Bactria, intending, if Alexander purſu'd them, to purchaſe their Peace by delivering him up into his Hands; but, if he did not, to kill him, and ſeize his Kingdom, and ſo renew the War. Alexander, having heard what theſe Traitors had done, made all the Haſte he could to reſcue Darius out of their Hands; but when, after ſeveral Days March, he came up with them, (becauſe Darius refus'd to mount on Horſeback, for his more ſpeedy Flight with them) they gave him ſeveral mortal Wounds, and left him dying in the Cart. He was dead before Alexander came; but when he ſaw his Corpſe, he could not forbear ſhedding Tears at ſo melancholy a Spectacle: And having caſt his Cloak over it, he order'd that it ſhould be wrapp'd up therein, and carry'd to his Mother Siſygambis, at Shuſhan, (where he had left her with the other captive Ladies) to be bury'd there with a Royal Funeral (for which himſelf allow'd the Expence) in the Sepulchres of the Kings of Perſia. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 330.

* Aridæus, with his Wife Euridice, was put to Death by Olympias, the Mother of Alexander the Great, after he had borne the Title of King for ſix Years, and ſeven Months; and Alexander Ægus, with his Mother Roxana, after a long Impriſonment in the Caſtle of Amphipolis, was, in like Manner, murder'd by Caſſander, to make way for himſelf to the Crown of Macedon.

Simon the Juſt made High Prieſt, and compleats the Canon of Scripture.

IN the fifth Year of this Ptolemy's Reign, Onias, the Jewiſh High-Prieſt, dy'd, and was ſucceeded by Simon his Son, who, from the Holineſs of his Life, and the great Righteouſneſs, which ſhone forth in all his Actions, was called Simon the Juſt. What Ezra (k), and the Men of the great Synagogue, who (as ſome ſay) aſſiſted him, did in this Work, we have taken ſufficient Notice of before. The Books of Ezra, Nehemiah, Eſther, and Malachi, as well as the two Chronicles of the Kings of Judah and Iſrael, could not poſſibly be inſerted by Ezra himſelf, becauſe ſome of theſe Books claim him for their Author, and in others, there are ſome Particulars, which refer to Times, as low as Alexander the Great, and therefore a later Time muſt be aſſign'd for their Reception into the Canon. And if ſo, there ſeems to be none ſo proper, as that, when the Men of the great Synagogue, who, under the Direction and Preſidency of Simon the Juſt, were employ'd in this Work, ceas'd to be.

[*] The Commendation, which the Author of Eccleſiaſticus gives us of this High-Prieſt, is thus expreſs'd: —— He, in his Life-time, repaired the Houſe again, and in his Days fortified the Temple. By him was built, from the Foundation, the double Height, the high Fortreſs of the Wall above the Temple. In his Days, the Ciſtern, to receive Water, being in Compaſs as the Sea, was covered with Plates of Braſs. He took care of the Temple that it ſhould not fall, and fortified the City againſt beſieging. How was he honoured amidſt the People, in his coming out of the Sanctuary? He was as the Morning-Star in the Midſt of a Cloud, and as the Moon at the Full, or the Sun ſhining upon the Temple of the moſt High, and as a Rainbow giving Light in the bright Clouds: —— When he put on the Robe of Honour, and was cloathed with the Perfection of Glory, and when he went up to the Holy Altar, he made the Garments of Holineſs honourable. Eccluſ. l. 1, 2, &c.

[†] This was a large Edifice in Alexandria, which ſtood in that Quarter of the City called Brachium, and was deſign'd for the Habitation of ſuch learned Men, as made it their Study to improve Philoſophy, and all uſeful Knowledge, like that of the Royal Society at London, and the Royal Academy of Sciences at Paris. This Building, which was not far diſtant from the Palace, was ſurrounded with a Portico, or Piazza, where the Philoſophers walk'd, and convers'd, and had in it a common Hall, where they us'd to eat together. The Members of this Society were under the Government of a Preſident, whoſe Office was of that Conſideration and Dignity, that, during the Reign of the Ptolemies, he was always conſtituted by thoſe Kings, and afterwards by the Roman Emperors. The Revenues, appointed for the Maintenance of this College, from the firſt Foundation of it, were large.. From it did proceed Men of very excellent Literature; and to it was owing, that Alexandria, for a great many Ages together, was the greateſt School of Learning in all thoſe Parts of the World; until, in the War, which the Alexandrians had with Aurelian, the Roman Emperor, all that Quarter of the City, where the Muſæum ſtood, was deſtroy'd, and, with it, this College of learned Men diſſolv'd. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 285.

[†] This Library was at firſt plac'd in the Muſæum; but, when it was filled with Books to the Number of four hundred Thouſand Volumes, there was another Library erected within the Serapeum (or the famous Temple, where the Image of Serapis was ſet up) which increas'd in Time to the Number of three hundred Thouſand Volumes, and theſe two, put together, made up the Number of ſeven hundred Thouſand Volumes in the whole, of which the Royal Libraries of the Ptolemean Kings at Alexandria are ſaid to conſiſt. Their Manner of collecting them was not ſo very honourable; for whatever Books were brought by any Foreigner into Egypt, theſe they ſeiz'd, and, ſending them to the Muſæum, (where they maintain'd People for that Purpoſe) they caus'd them to be tranſcrib'd, and then ſent the Copies to the Owners, but laid up the Originals in the Library. When Julius Cæſar waged War with the Alexandrians, it ſo happen'd, that the Library in the Brachium was burnt, and the four hundred Thouſand Volumes, that were laid up there, were all conſum'd. But that of the Serapeum ſtill remain'd, and ſoon grew to be larger,

This Eleazar failed not to do; and from the joint Labours of the LXX, or rather LXXII Tranſlators, that were employ'd in the Work, the Verſion has ever ſince gone under the Name of the Septuagint: But of this Piece of Hiſtory we have already had occaſion to ſay what we thought ſufficient, towards the Concluſion of our † Apparatus.

larger, and of more eminent Note, than the former; but at length, in the Year of our Lord 642, when the Saracens made themſelves Maſters of the City, they totally deſtroy'd it. For, when the General of the Army wrote to Omar, who was then the Caliph, or Emperor of the Saracens, to know his Pleaſure concerning it, his Anſwer was, "That, "if theſe Books contain'd what was agreeing with the Alcoran, there was no Need of them, becauſe the Alcoran "alone was ſufficient for all Truth; but, if they contain'd what was diſagreeing with it, they were not to be "endur'd:" And therefore he order'd, that, whatſoever the Contents of them were, they ſhould all be deſtroy'd. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 285.

* Joſephus has given us both Ptolemy's Letter to Eleazar, and Eleazar's Anſwer at large; but whether theſe Pieces are genuine, or no, is a Matter of ſome Diſpute among the Learned. They are too long however, to be here inſerted, but the Subſtance of the Letter is, ——— "That both Ptolemy, and his Father, had been extremely "kind to the Jews; his Father, in placing them in Offices of Truſt; and himſelf, in redeeming great Numbers "of them from Slavery, and employing ſeveral of them both in his Court and Camp; and that, as a farther "Teſtimony of his Kindneſs to them, he propos'd to make a Tranſlation of their Law into the Greek Language, "for which he deſir'd them to ſend a proper Number of ſuch Men as he knew were qualify'd for the Undertaking." In Anſwer to which, Eleazar acknowledges the Receipt of his moſt gracious Letter, and of the valuable Preſents, which he had ſent; and, in Return, promiſes, that the People ſhould not fail to pray to God daily for the Protection of his Perſon, and the Proſperity of his Royal Family, and that, purſuant to his Commands, he had ſent an authentick Copy of the Law, and ſix Men out of each Tribe to aſſiſt in the Tranſlation of it. Jewiſh Hiſt. lib. xii. c. 2.

† Thoſe, who would ſee more at large what are the Opinions of learned Men concerning the Septuagint, and the Account which Ariſtæas gives of the Manner in which it was done, may conſult the Criticks who have expreſsly handled this Matter, ſuch as Scaliger, Uſher, Walton, Fraſſen, Dupin, Valdal, Hody, Calmet, Whiſton, and Prideaux in his Connection, Anno 277.

* After the Death of his beloved Wife Arſinoë, Ptolemy did not long ſurvive her: For, being of a tender Conſtitution himſelf, and having farther weaken'd it by a luxurious Indulgence, he could not bear the Approach of Age, or the Grief of Mind, which he fell under upon this Occaſion; but, ſinking under theſe Burthens, he died, in the ſixty-third Year of his Life, after he had reign'd in Egypt 38 Years. As he was a learned Prince himſelf, and a great Patron of Learning, many of thoſe, who were eminent for any Part of Literature, reſorted to him from all Parts, and partook of his Favour and Bounty. Seven celebrated Poets of that Age are ſaid to live at his Court; four of which, viz. Theocritus, Callimachus, Lycophron, and Aratus, have their Works ſtill remaining; and, among theſe, the firſt of them has a whole Idyllium, and the ſecond, Part of two Hymns, written in his Praiſe. Manetho, the Egyptian Hiſtorian, dedicated his Hiſtory to him; and Zoilus, the ſnarling Critick, came alſo to his Court. But how great ſoever his Wit was, he could never recommend himſelf to King Ptolemy, who hated him for the Bitterneſs, and Ill-Nature of it: And, for the ſame Reaſon, having drawn on himſelf the Odium and Averſion of all Men, he at length died miſerably; for ſome ſay that he was ſton'd, others, that he was burnt to Death, and others again, that he was crucify'd by King Ptolemy, for a Crime that deſerv'd that Puniſhment. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 249.

(m) ONIAS had a Nephew by his Siſter's Side, whoſe Name was Joſeph, a young Man of great Reputation among the Jews, for Prudence, Juſtice, and Sanctity of Life. He, as ſoon as he heard of the Meſſage, which Athenion had brought, and of the People's great Conſternation thereupon, went immediately to his Uncle, and ſeverely upbraided him with his ill Management of the publick Intereſt, who, for the Lucre of a little Money, had expos'd the whole Nation to ſuch imminent Danger, which now there was no Way to avoid, (as he told him) but by his going immediately to the Egyptian Court, and, by a timely Application to the King there, endeavouring to pacify his Wrath.

The bare mentioning of a Journey to Alexandria * ſo terrify'd the High-Prieſt, that (upon his declaring, that he would quit his Station both in Church and State, rather than undertake it) Joſeph offer'd, with his Permiſſion, and the People's Approbation, to go in his Stead. In the mean Time, he took care to entertain Athenion at his own Houſe, as long as he continu'd in Jeruſalem, in a very ſplendid and magnificent Manner: When he departed, he preſented him with ſeveral very valuable Gifts; and ſo ſent him away, in a good Diſpoſition, to make as favourable a Repreſentation to the King, as the Caſe would bear, until himſelf ſhould come to the Egyptian Court, in order to give him a full Satisfaction.

ATHENION was ſo taken with this prudent Behaviour, and kind Entertainment of Joſeph, that, when he came to give the King a Report of his Embaſſy, he could not but mention his Name with Pleaſure; and when he told him of his Intentions to come and wait upon him himſelf, he ſet forth his Character with ſo much Advantage, that the King expreſs'd a Deſire to ſee him. In a ſhort Time, Joſeph ſet out for Alexandria; and, falling in, upon the Road, with ſeveral of the chief Nobility of Cœlo-Syria, and Phœnicia, whoſe Buſineſs at Court was to farm the royal Revenues of theſe Provinces, he join'd Company with them, and having learn'd from their Diſcourſe of what Value theſe Revenues were, he made uſe of that Intelligence afterwards, both to his own and the King's Advantage.

* This City, which was built by Alexander the Great, A. M. 3673, was, after his Death, made the Capital of Egypt by Ptolemy, and his Succeſſors, for almoſt three hundred Years. Dinocrates (who rebuilt the Temple of Diana at Epheſus, after it had been burnt by Eroſtratus) was the Architect, who drew the Plan of it, and had the chief Direction of the Work; but, to have it carry'd on with more Expedition, Alexander appointed Cleomenes, one of his Captains, to be the Surveyor of it, and, for this Reaſon, Juſtin, lib. xiii. c. 4, calls him the Founder of it. The happy Situation of this City, between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea, upon the River Nile, drew thither the Commerce of the Eaſt and Weſt, and made it, in a very little Time, one of the moſt flouriſhing Cities in the World. It has ſtill ſome ſmall Repute for Merchandize; but what has occaſion'd the Decay of its Trade, is the Diſcovery of the Paſſage to the Eaſt-Indies by the Cape of Good Hope, or on the South of Africk. Before this Diſcovery, the whole Spice-trade was carry'd into this Part of the World through this City; for the Spices were brought from the Eaſt-Indies, up the Red-Sea, to Egypt, and from thence were carry'd, by Land, on Camels, to Alexandria. When Egypt became a Province of the Roman Empire, this City continu'd the Metropolis of it; and when the Arabians took it, (which was about 640 Years after Chriſt) there were four Thouſand Palaces ſtill ſtanding in it, four Thouſand Bagnios, forty Thouſand Jews paying Tribute, four Hundred Squares, and twelve Thouſand Perſons, that ſold Herbs and Fruit. Here (as we ſaid) was the famous Serapeum, or Temple of Serapis, for Beauty of Workmanſhip, and Magnificence of Structure, inferior to nothing but the Roman Capitol. Here was the Muſæum, or College of Philoſophers; and here, that noble Library, which was erected by Ptolemy Philadelphus, but unhappily burnt in the War between Cæſar and Pompey. But, notwithſtanding all its former Splendor and Magnificence, this City is now become a poor Village, (by the Egyptians called Rachot) without any Thing remarkable in it, except its Ruins, and the Remains of its former Grandeur; only, without the City, Pompey's Pillar (the Shaft whereof is ſix Fathoms high, all of one Piece of curious Granite) is juſtly admir'd, as one of the fineſt Columns, that is any where to be ſeen. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word, and Wells's Geography of the New Teſtament.

WHEN they all arriv'd at Alexandria, the King was gone to Memphis *; ſo that Joſeph made haſte thither, and had the good Fortune to meet him, the Queen, and Athenion, all in the ſame Chariot, returning to Alexandria. The King, upon Athenion's ſignifying who he was, called him into the Chariot; and, having mention'd his Uncle's ill Uſage, in not paying him his Tribute, he was thereupon entertain'd with ſo handſome an Apology for that Neglect, which he chiefly imputed to his Uncle's old Age, and other Infirmities, that he not only ſatisfy'd the King, but gave him withal ſo good an Opinion of the Advocate, that, when they came to Alexandria, he order'd him to be lodg'd in the Palace, and entertain'd at his Expence.

He farms the Revenues of Syria, Phœnicia, Judea, and Samaria, and ſatisfies his Uncle's Arrears.

WHEN the Day of farming out the Revenues to the beſt Bidder was come, the Syrian and Phœnician Noblemen, with whom Joſeph had travelled to Alexandria, beat down their Price, and would give no more for all the Duties of Cœlo-Syria, Phœnicia, Judea, and Samaria, than eight Thouſand Talents: But Joſeph, having found fault with them for undervaluing the King's Revenues, offer'd to give twice as much, even excluſive of the Forfeitures, which us'd before to belong to the Farmers; and was thereupon admitted to be the King's Receiver-General of all theſe Provinces.

In ſome Places he met with Oppoſition, and very opprobrious Language; but having order'd the chief Ringleaders to be ſeiz'd, and exemplary Juſtice to be executed upon them, he thereby ſo terrify'd the reſt, that they readily paid him his Demands without any Moleſtation. Ptolemy Philopater endeavours to enter into the Temple, but is prohibited.

ON the Death of Ptolemy Euergetes, his Son Philopater (not without ſome Suſpicion of having poiſon'd his Father) ſucceeded to the Throne; and, in the fifth Year of his Reign, having, at Raphia, a Town not far from Gaza, defeated the Army of Antiochus the Great, he afterwards viſited the Cities, which, by this Victory, he had regain'd, among which Jeruſalem was one. Here he took a View of the Temple, gave valuable Donatives to it, and offer'd up many Sacrifices to the God of Iſrael; but, not being content with this View from the outer Court, (beyond which no Gentile was allow'd to paſs) he was for going into the Sanctuary, nay, even into the Holy of Holies itſelf, where no one but the High-Prieſt (and that only on the great Day of Expiation) was allow'd to enter. This made a great Uproar all over the City. The High-Prieſt inform'd him of the Sacredneſs

* This was a very famous City, and, till the Time of the Ptolemies, who remov'd to Alexandria, the Place of Reſidence for the antient Kings of Egypt. It was ſituated above the Parting of the River Nile, where the Delta begins. Towards the South of this City, ſtood the famous Pyramids, two of which were eſteem'd the Wonders of the World; and, in this City, was fed the Ox Apis, which Cambyſes ſlew in Contempt of the Egyptians worſhipping it as a God. The Kings of Egypt took great Pleaſure in adorning this City; and in all its Beauty it continu'd, till the Arabians made a Conqueſt of Egypt under the Caliph Omar. The General, who took it, built another City juſt by it, which was called Fuſtat, becauſe his Tent had been a long Time ſet up in that Place; and the Caliph's Fatamites, when they became Maſters of Egypt, added another to it, which is known to us at this Day by the Name of Grand Cairo. The Mameluck Sultans, of the Dynaſty of the Circaſſians, having afterwards built a ſtrong Fort on the Eaſtern Shore of the Nile, did, by Degrees, annex a City to it, which came to be called the New Cairo, as what the Fatamites had built was called the Old; but it muſt be obſerv'd, that the antient Memphis ſtood on the Weſtern Shore of the Nile, whereas whatever the Arabians have there built, from Time to Time, is on the Eaſtern Shore of that River. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

Sacredneſs of the Place, and of the Law of God, which forbad his Entrance. The Prieſts and Levites were gather'd together to hinder it. The People did earneſtly deprecate it; and great Lamentations were every where made, upon the Apprehenſion of the approaching Profanation of their holy Temple. But all to no Purpoſe: The King, the more he was oppos'd, the more reſolute he was to have his Will ſatisfy'd, and, accordingly, preſs'd into the inner Court; but as he was paſſing farther to go into the Temple, he was ſeiz'd with ſuch a ſudden Terror, and Conſternation of Mind, that he was carry'd out of the Place, in a Manner, half dead, and, in a ſhort Time, departed from Jeruſalem, highly incens'd againſt the whole Nation of the Jews, and venting many bitter Threatenings againſt them.

His Attempt to deſtroy all the Jews, but their wonderful Eſcape.

NOR was he forgetful to put his Threats in Execution. For, no ſooner was he return'd to Alexandria, but he publiſh'd a Decree, and caus'd it to be engraven on a Pillar erected at the Gate of his Palace, excluding every one, who would not ſacrifice to the God whom he worſhipp'd, from having any Acceſs to him; degrading the Jews from the Rights and Privileges, they had in the City; and ordering them all to come, and (p) be ſtigmatiz'd with the Mark of an Ivy Leaf, (the Badge of his God Bacchus) by an hot Iron impreſs'd upon them, and, as many as refus'd to come, commanding them to be put to Death.

NOR did his Rage end here: For, being determin'd to extirpate the whole Jewiſh Nation, as many at leaſt as were in his Dominions, he ſent out Orders, to his Officers, requiring them to bring all the Jews, who lived any where in Egypt, bound in Chains to Alexandria; and having ſhut them up in the Hippodrome, (a large Place, without the City, where the People us'd to aſſemble to ſee Horſe-Races, and other Shows) he propos'd, the next Day, to make a Spectacle of them, by having them deſtroy'd by his † Elephants. The Elephants, to make them more furious, were intoxicated with Wine, mingled with Frankincenſe: But the King, the Night before, having ſet up late at a drunken Carouſal, overſlept himſelf, ſo that the Show was put off till the Day following; and, the next Night, having done the ſame again, the Show, for the ſame Cauſe, was put off to the third Day. All this while the Jews, continuing ſhut up in the Hippodrome, ceas'd not, with lifted up Hands, and Voices, to pray unto God for their Deliverance, which, accordingly, he vouchſaf'd them. For, on the third Day, when the King was preſent, and the Elephants were let looſe, inſtead of falling upon the Jews, they turn'd all their Rage upon thoſe, that came to ſee the Show, and deſtroy'd great Numbers.

THIS wonderful Interpoſal of Providence, in the Protection of theſe poor People, together with ſome ſtrange Appearances, at the ſame Time ſeen in the Air, ſo terrify'd the King, and all the Spectators, that he order'd all the Jews to be ſet free; reſtor'd them to their former Privileges; revok'd every Decree, that had been made againſt them; and, among other Favours, indulg'd them with this Liberty, ——Even to put to Death all thoſe Jews, who, in Fear of Perſecution, had apoſtatiz'd from their Religion, which accordingly they put in rigorous Execution.

† In the Books of the Maccabees, we find frequent Mention made of Elephants, becauſe, after the Reign of Alexander the Great, theſe Animals were very much employ'd in the Armies, which the Kings of Syria and Egypt rais'd. They were naturally of a very quiet and gentle Diſpoſition, and never made uſe of their Strength, but when they were irritated, or compelled to it; and for this Reaſon, we find that the Elephants, which were in the Army of Antiochus Eupater, had the Blood of Grapes and Mulberries ſhewn them, thereby to animate them to the Combat, 1 Maccab. vi. 34. as thoſe, which here Ptolemy Philopater kept, were intoxicated with Incenſe dipped in Wine, to make them more mad and furious. When they are thus irritated and inflam'd, their Strength is prodigious, and nothing can ſtand before them. Every Creature, that comes in their Way, they trample under Foot, overthrow whole Squadrons, knock down Trees, and demoliſh Houſes. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

Paleſtine and Cœlo-Syria over-run by Antiochus the Great, but afterwards return'd to Ptolemy Epiphanes in Dower with his Daughter Cleopatra.

Upon the Death of * Ptolemy Philopater, his Son Ptolemy Epiphanes (a Child but of five Years old) ſucceeded him on the Throne: But Antiochus the Great, taking the Advantage of the young King's Inability to oppoſe him, march'd an Army into Cœlo-Syria and Paleſtine, and, in a very ſhort Time, made himſelf Maſter of them. The Egyptians however, under the Command of Scapas their General, endeavour'd to regain them, and had actually recover'd Jeruſalem into their Poſſeſſion; but, upon the Approach of Antiochus in Perſon, and the Defeat, which he gave them at Paneas, the Jews, who had been but badly us'd by Scapas, (a very covetous and rapacious Man) ſubmitted to him very chearfully; and, receiving him and his Army into the City, aſſiſted him in the Reduction of the Caſtle, where Scapas had left a Garriſon. In Acknowledgment of which Services, he, by a publick Edict, granted them many Favours, and, among the reſt, a Liberty to live according to their own Laws and Religion, and a Power to prohibit any Stranger to enter within the Sept of the Temple, alluding to the Attempt which Philopater had lately made that Way.

But Antiochus had greater Things in View, than the Subjection of a Province or two; and therefore, to have his Armies at Liberty to engage the Romans †, who, ſince the Defeat of Hannibal, in the ſecond Punick War, were become juſtly formidable, made a Peace with Ptolemy, and, giving him his Daughter Cleopatra in Marriage, with her he reſign'd the Provinces of Cœlo-Syria and Paleſtine, by Way of Dower.

By this Means Judea reverted to the Egyptian Crown, and Joſeph, the Nephew of Onias, the High-Prieſt, was re-inſtated in the Office of collecting the King's Revenues, in that and the neighbouring Provinces. But, as Ptolemy, in a ſhort Time, had a Son by Cleopatra, upon which Occaſion, it was neceſſary for Joſeph, among other great Officers of State, to congratulate the King and Queen, and to make them ſuch Preſents as were uſual, he, being now too old to take ſuch a Journey, and his other Sons refuſing to go, was oblig'd to ſend Hyrcanus, who was the youngeſt, but the beſt qualify'd for ſuch a Negotiation, to make his Compliment in his Stead. But the Hiſtory of the young Man's Birth is ſomewhat remarkable.

Drinking, Gaming, and Laſciviouſneſs were the whole Employments of his Life. Agathoclea his Concubine, and Agathocles her Brother, who was his Catamite, govern'd him abſolutely; and, when Arſinoë (who was both his Siſter and Wife) complain'd of the Neglect, which, by Means of theſe two Favourites, was put upon her, this ſo offended the King and his Catamite, that Orders were given to have her put to Death. With this Money he bought an hundred beautiful Boys for the King, and an hundred beautiful young Maids for the Queen, at the Price of a Talent a Head; and, when he preſented them, they carry'd each a Talent in their Hands, the Boys for the King, and the young Maids for the Queen; ſo that this Article alone coſt him four hundred Talents. The reſt he expended all in valuable Gifts to the Courtiers, and great Officers about the King, except what he kept for his own private Uſe.

Antiochus Epiphanes's Cruelty to the Jews, and Profanation, and plundering of the Temple.

While Antiochus was engag'd in War with Egypt, a falſe Rumour was ſpread in Paleſtine, that he was dead; and Jaſon, thinking this a fine Opportunity for him to recover his Station in Jeruſalem, as High-Prieſt, march'd thither with above a Thouſand Men; and having, by the Aſſiſtance of the Party, which he had there, taken the City, and driven Menelaus into the Caſtle, he acted all Manner of Cruelties upon his Fellow-Citizens, and put to death, without Mercy, all that he could light on, whom he took to be his Adverſaries.

Hereupon, Cognizance being taken of the Crime, and the wicked Murtherer convicted of it, Antiochus caus'd him, with Infamy, to be carry'd to the Place, where the Murther was committed, and there put to Death for it, in ſuch a Manner, as he deſerv'd. For Antiochus (as wicked a Tyrant as he was) had Sorrow and Regret upon him for the Death of ſo good a Man, and therefore, in the revenging it, he ſatisfy'd his own Reſentments, as well as thoſe of the People, who had petition'd him for it. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 172.

He took away the Altar of Incenſe, the Shew-Bread Table, the Candleſtick of ſeven Branches, and ſeveral other golden Veſſels, Utenſils, and Donatives of former Kings, to the Value of eight hundred Talents of Gold; and making the like Plunder in the City, her eturn'd to Antioch, (y) leaving behind him Philip a Phrygian, a Man of a cruel and barbarous Temper, to be Governor of Judea; Andronicus, another of the like Diſpoſition, to be Governor of Samaria; and Menelaus, who was worſe than all the reſt, to continue ſtill over them in the Office of High-Prieſt.

His maſſacreing the People, and compelling them to Idolatry.

Not long after this, (z) there were ſeen at Jeruſalem, for forty Days together, ſtrange Sights in the Air of Horſemen and Footmen, arm'd with Shields, Spears, and Swords, and in great Companies fighting againſt, and charging each other, as in Battle-Array; which foreboded thoſe Calamities of War and Deſolation, that ſoon after happen'd in that City and Nation. For Antiochus, ſtill breathing out Rage againſt the poor Jews, ſent Apollonius, one of his Generals, with an Army of two and twenty Thouſand Men, and an expreſs Order to kill all the Men that remain'd in Jeruſalem, and to ſell the Women and Children for Slaves. (a) On his firſt Arrival, Apollonius carry'd himſelf peaceably, concealing his Intent, and forbearing all Hoſtilities, till the Return of the Sabbath, when he put his bloody Commiſſion in Execution. (b) For, falling upon the City while the People were at their Devotion, he maſſacred many of the Inhabitants, plunder'd the Place, led away the Women and Children Captives, and forc'd the few that eſcap'd, to betake themſelves to Deſerts and Caves for Shelter. Nor was this all: For, in a ſhort Time after, Antiochus made a Decree, commanding all Nations to leave their ancient Rites and Uſages, and to conform to the Religion of the King; which (however expreſs'd in general Terms) was chiefly deſign'd againſt the Jews.

(c) The Officer, who was ſent to ſee this Decree put in Execution, was one Athenæus, a Man well vers'd in all the Ceremonies of the Grecian Idolatry, and therefore thought a proper Perſon to initiate the People into the Obſervance of them. On his coming to Jeruſalem (d) all Sacrifices to the God of Iſrael were ſuperſeded, and the Rites of the Jewiſh Religion ſuppreſs'd. The Temple itſelf was dedicated to Jupiter Olympius †, whoſe Image was ſet up on the Altar of Burnt-Offerings) and all the People, upon Pain of Death, were

† This Profanation of the Temple, and the erecting of this Idol in it, had long before been foretold by the Prophet Daniel, under the Name of Abomination of Deſolation, Chap. xi. 31. For this is the Deſcription, which he gives of the Reign of Antiochus, and the bitter Perſecutions which he rais'd: He ſhall return with Indignation againſt the holy Covenant, and have Intelligence with them that forſake it. Armies ſhall ſtand on his Side, and he ſhall pollute the Sanctuary of Strength, and ſhall take away the daily Sacrifice, and there place the Abomination (or abominable Thing) that maketh deſolate, or (as in the Margin) quite aſtoniſheth. Such, as do wickedly againſt the Covenant, ſhall be corrupt by Flatteries, but the People, that know their God, ſhall do great Exploits; and they, that have Underſtanding, ſhall inſtruct many; yet they ſhall fall by the Sword, by Famine, by Captivity, and by Spoil: —— And the King ſhall do according to his Will, and ſhall exalt and magnify himſelf, above every God. He ſhall ſpeak wonderful Things againſt the God of Gods, and ſhall proſper, till the Indignation be accompliſhed; for that, which is determined, ſhall be done, ver. 30, &c.

were oblig'd to ſacrifice to it. Thoſe, who met in Caves to keep the Sabbath, if they happen'd to be diſcover'd, were burnt. The Book of the Law was torn and caſt into the Fire; the Circumciſing of Infants was forbidden; and Women, accus'd of having circumcis'd their Children, were led about the Streets with thoſe Children hanging about their Necks, and then both caſt headlong over the ſteepeſt Part of the Walls.

NO leſs Severity was us'd to enforce upon the People the Heathen Worſhip, which the Decree enjoin'd, than there was to deter them from their own. In every City, Altars, Groves, and Chapels for Idols were ſet up, and Officers ſent to compel them, once every Month, to offer Victims to the Grecian Gods, and to eat of the Fleſh of Swine, and of other unclean Beaſts, that were, at that Time, ſacrific'd. In ſhort, no Manner of Cruelty was omitted to force the Jews to abandon their Religion, and turn Idolaters; but tho', in this terrible Perſecution, ſome of theſe wretched People yielded to Violence, many of them choſe rather to die, than to forſake the Law of their God.

The brave and heroick Death of Eleazar, and Solomona, and her ſeven Sons.

AMONG the latter Sort, (e) thoſe of the moſt memorable Note, were † Eleazar, a chief Doctor of the Law, and that Heroine Solomona, and her ſeven Sons. Eleazar was a very aged Man; yet when his Perſecutors would have compelled him to eat Swines-Fleſh (which they forc'd into his Mouth) he ſpit it out, and even when ſome, in Pity to his Age, would have given him Leave to elude the Sentence, by taking a Piece of any other Fleſh, and eating it, as Swines-Fleſh, he ſcorn'd to purchaſe his Life at ſo ſordid a Rate, deſiring them to diſpatch him, rather than ſuffer him to be guilty of Diſſimulation, and ſtain the Honour of his grey Hairs with ſo mean an Act. Nor were the ſeven Brothers and their Mother inferior to him in religious Courage and Magnanimity: For, when the King, pretending Pity to their Youth, and Reſpect to their Family, (which was noble) perſuaded them to renounce their Religion, and embrace that of the Gentiles, promiſing them great Rewards and Promotions, if they would comply; and when, finding that this would have no Effect, he order'd the great Variety of Torments, which he had provided, to be ſhewn them, thinking thereby to affright them with the ſad Proſpect of what they were to ſuffer; the Inſtruments of Death did no more terrify, than the Allurements of the Tyrant did perſuade them; but, inſpir'd with a truly holy Zeal, and celeſtial Bravery, "They unanimouſly declar'd their Obe-"dience to the Law of God, and the "Precepts, which he had deliver'd by "Moſes;

† Some Interpreters are of Opinion, that this was the ſame Eleazar, who, at the Head of the Seventy-two Interpreters, that were to tranſlate the ſacred Scriptures, was ſent into Egypt, and that he ſuffer'd at Jeruſalem, in the Preſence of the Governor, nam'd Fælix; but Ruffinus (in his Latin Paraphraſe on the Book of Joſephus, concerning the Maccabees) will needs have it, that not only Eleazar, but the Mother, and her ſeven Sons, viz. Maccabæus, Aber, Machir, Judas, Achas, Areth, and Jacob, for theſe are the Names, which he gives them) were all carry'd from Judea to Antioch, and there ſuffer'd Martyrdom. The Reaſon of the Thing however, as well as the Tenor of the Hiſtory, which is given us by the Author of the ſecond Book of Maccabees, Chap. vi. and vii. and by Joſephus in the above-mention'd Book, make it much more likely, that Jeruſalem, and not Antioch, was made the Scene of this Cruelty; eſpecially ſince, it being deſign'd for an Example of Terror to the Jews in Judea, it would have loſt its Force, had it been executed in any other Country. But wherever this happen'd, 'tis certain, that Eleazar deſerv'd all the Commendation, which the Fathers have given him: For, whether we conſider the Purity of his Sentiments, or the Sublimity of his Doctrine, or the Delicacy of his Conſcience, we muſt acknowledge, that there are few Saints in the Old Teſtament, that have given us a more exact Pattern of Charity, Sincerity, and Magnanimity. It becometh not our Age, ſaid he, in any wiſe to diſſemble, whereby many young Perſons might think, that Eleazar, being fourſcore Years old and ten, were now gone to a ſtrange Religion, and ſo they, through my Hypocriſy, and Deſire to live a little Time, and a Moment longer, ſhould be deceiv'd by me, and I get a Stain in my old Age, and make it abominable. For tho', for the preſent Time, I ſhould be delivered from the Puniſhment of Men, yet ſhould not I eſcape the Hand of the Almighty, neither alive, nor dead; wherefore now, manfully changing this Life, I will ſhew myſelf ſuch a one, as my Age requireth, 2 Maccab. vi. 24, &c. Calmet's Commentary, and Prideaux's Connection, Anno 167.

This is the main Purport of moſt of their Speeches ; but the Variety of their Tortures was almoſt innumerable, and, for the Horror of them, inexpreſſible. All this while their Mother ſtood by, beholding their Sufferings, and exhorting every one, as it came to his Turn, to behave gallantly. At length, when herſelf was only left, and the Soldiers were approaching to carry her to Execution, ſhe prevented their Rage, and all Attempts upon her Perſon, by throwing herſelf voluntarily into the Fire †. Thus ended this doleful, but glorious Day, with the Death of the victorious Solomona, who triumph'd in the ſharpeſt Agonies of her Sons, and her own Sufferings, and through a Sea of the moſt exquiſite Pains, waded to the Port of eternal Reſt!

Mattathias ſlays an apoſtate Jew, and the King's Commiſſioner, and then takes up Arms in Defence of his Religion.

While this Perſecution rag'd at Jeruſalem, (f) Mattathias, the Son of John, the Son of Simeon, the Son of Aſmonæus, (from whom the Family had the Name of Aſmonæans) a Prieſt of the Courſe of Joarib †, with his five Sons, John, Simon, Judas, Eleazar, and Jonathan, retir'd to Modin, a little Place in the Tribe of Dan, and there bemoan'd the hard Fate of their Religion and Country. But they had not been long in this Retreat, before Antiochus ſent one of his military Officers, nam'd Apelles, to put his Decree in Execution.

Apelles, having called the People together, and told them the Intent of his Coming, addreſs'd himſelf more particularly to Mattathias ; perſuading him to comply with the King's Commands, that, by his Example, he might influence others ; and promiſing him withal, that, in caſe he would do ſo, he ſhould be taken into the Number of the King's Friends, and promoted to great Honour and Riches. But to this Mattathias made Anſwer, with a loud Voice, and in the Audience of all the People, that no Conſideration whatever ſhould ever induce him, or any of his Family, to forſake the Law of their God ; that the Examples of thoſe, who had apoſtatiz'd, were no Rule to him, nor the Commands of the greateſt Monarch of any Validity, when they were ſent to oblige him to embrace Idolatry ; and with theſe Words, ſeeing a Jew of the Place preſenting himſelf at the Heathen Altar, in order to offer Sacrifice according to the King's Injunctions, he ran up to the Apoſtate, and, with a Zeal like that of Phineas, ſlew him with his own Hand ; and then turning upon the King's Commiſſioner, by the Aſſiſtance of his Sons, and thoſe that were with them, diſpatch'd him likewiſe, and all that attended him.

After this, Mattathias overturn'd the Altars, and pulled down the Idols that were were in the Place; and, having got together his own Family, and invited all that were zealous for the Law, to follow him, he retir'd into the Mountains, in order to make there the beſt Defence he could: But the Jews † had one Principle, which, in the Beginning of this their Reſiſtance, had like to have ruin'd them quite, and that was the ſcrupulous Obſervation of the Sabbath, even to ſuch a Degree, as not to defend themſelves on that Day; whereof their Enemies taking the Advantage, deſtroy'd great Numbers of them, without their making the leaſt Oppoſition. Mattathias however, and his Followers finding the Fatality of their Miſtake in this Particular, (g) made a Decree, which was confirm'd by the unanimous Conſent of all the Prieſts and Elders among them) that, whenever they were attack'd on the Sabbath-Day, it was lawful for them to fight for their Lives, and to defend themſelves in the beſt Manner they could, which afterwards became a general Rule in all their Wars.

† By the Law of Moſes, the Jews were commanded to do no Manner of Work on the Sabbath-Day; but this was a Precept, which would admit of ſome Exceptions, and what ſome People took in a more rigorous Senſe, than others. The Samaritans, for Inſtance, thought themſelves oblig'd to obſerve it to ſuch a Degree of Strictneſs, as not to ſtir out of their Places on that Day, becauſe the Law is literally ſo expreſs'd, Exod. xvi. 29, but the Jews were of Opinion, that they were permitted to make their Eſcape from Danger, or to walk ſuch a Compaſs of Ground, (which they called a Sabbath-Day's Journey) if it were for any neceſſary Occaſion, on that Day. In our Saviour's Time, it was allowable, they thought, to pull any Animal out of a Pit, or a Ditch, on that Day, Matth. xii. 11. but the Talmudical Doctors were for revoking that Permiſſion, and found fault with him for even healing the Sick and the Lame, on the Sabbath. Mattathias, and his Company, by ſundry Experiences, were convinc'd, that too ſcrupulous an Obſervance of the Sabbath had brought ſeveral Calamities upon their Nation; that Ptolemy, the Son of Lagus, the firſt King of Egypt of that Name, by aſſaulting Jeruſalem on the Sabbath-Day, (wherein the Jews would do nothing to defend themſelves) became Maſter of it without Oppoſition; and that (but juſt lately) a great Number of their Brethren had been paſſively ſlain, becauſe they would not ſo much as handle their Arms on that Day; and thereupon they came to a Reſolution to defend themſelves, whenever they were attack'd, be the Day what it would; but we do not find, that they came to any Deciſion, whether they themſelves were to attack the Enemy on the Sabbath. On the contrary, it ſeems, as if they had determined, that they were only permitted to repel Force by Force; and therefore we read, that, when Pompey beſieg'd the Temple, obſerving that the Jews did barely defend themſelves on the Seventh Day, he order'd his Men to offer no Hoſtilities, but only to raiſe the Batteries, plant their Engines, and make their Approaches on that Day, being well aſſured, that, in doing of this, he ſhould meet with no Moleſtation from them; and, by this Means, he carry'd the Place much ſooner, than he otherways would have done. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. xiv. c. 8. Jewiſh Wars, lib. i. c. 5. and Calmet's Commentary on 1 Maccab. ii. 41.

† When the Jewiſh Church came to be ſettled again in Judea, after the Return from the Babyloniſh Captivity, there were two Sorts of Men among the Members of it; the one, who contented themſelves with that only, which was written in the Law of Moſes, and theſe were called Zadikim, i. e. the Righteous; and the other, who, over and above the Law, added the Conſtitutions, and Traditions of the Elders, and, by Way of Super-erogation, devoted themſelves to many rigorous Obſervances; and theſe, being reckon'd in a Degree of Holineſs above the others, were called Chaſidim, i. e. the Pious. From the former of theſe were derived the Sects of the Samaritans, Sadducees, and Karaits, and from the latter the Phariſees, the Eſſenes, and Aſſidæans. Theſe Aſſidæans, or Chaſidæans rather, (as they ſhould be written) were a Kind of religious Society, whoſe chief and diſtinguiſhing Character was, to maintain the Honour of the Temple; and therefore they were not only content to pay the uſual Tribute for the Reparation of it, but charg'd themſelves with farther Expences upon that Account; for every Day (except that of the great Expiation) they ſacrific'd a Lamb, beſides thoſe of daily Oblation) which was called the Sin-Offering of the Aſſidæans. They practis'd greater Hardſhips and Mortifications, than the reſt, and their common Oath was by the Temple, for which our Saviour reproves the Phariſees, Matth. xxiii. 16, who had learned that Oath of them. Mattathias however, being join'd by Men of this Principle, who made it one of the main Points of their Piety to fight zealouſly for the Defence of the Temple, (which was then fallen into the Hands of the Heathen) was not a little ſtrengthen'd in his Party, and in ſome Meaſure able to take the Field. Scaliger, in Elench. * The Speech which Joſephus puts in the Mouth of old Mattathias upon this Occaſion, is widely different from what we find in 1 Maccab. ii. 49, &c. but not undeſerving of our Obſervation. "——— My dear Sons, ſays he, my Life is drawing to an End, but I am to charge you, upon my Bleſſing, before I leave you, that you ſtand firm to the Cauſe, that your Father has aſſerted before you, without any ſtaggering or ſhrinking. Remember what I have told you, and do as I have adviſ'd you. Do your utmoſt to ſupport the Rights, and Laws of your Country, and to reſtore the Order of a Nation, that wants but very little of being ſwallow'd up in Confuſion. Have nothing to do with thoſe, that, either for Fear, or for Intereſt, have betray'd it. Shew yourſelves to be Sons worthy of ſuch a Father; and, in Contempt of all Force and Extremity, carry your Lives in your Hands, and deliver them up with Comfort, if any Occaſion ſhould require it, in Defence of your Country; computing with yourſelves, that this is the Way to preſerve yourſelves in God's Favour, and that, in Conſideration of ſo unſhaken a Virtue, he will, in Time, reſtore you to the Liberty of your former Life and Manners. Our Bodies, 'tis true, are mortal; but great and generous Actions will make us immortal in our Memory; and that's the Glory I would have you aſpire to, that is to ſay, the Glory of making the Hiſtory of your Lives famous to After-Ages by your illuſtrious Actions." The reſt of his Speech agrees with what we find in the Book of the Maccabees, wherein he diſtributes to each Son the Office, that he knew him beſt qualify'd for, and then concludes, "Do but mind your Buſineſs, and depend upon it, that all Men of Honour and Piety will join with you." Jewiſh Antiq. lib. xii. c. 8.

† The Reaſon, why Judas had the Name of Maccabæus given him, according to the moſt general Opinion, is, that he had the initial Letters of Mi Camo-ka Baelim Jehovah, i. e. Who is like unto thee among the Gods, O Jehovah? Exod. xv. 11, for the Motto upon his Standard, which Letters, being put together, made the artificial Word Maccabi; that from hence all, that fought under that Standard, were called Maccabees, or Maccabæans; and that he, in a more eſpecial Manner, as being the Captain of them, had that Name by Way of Eminence. It cannot be deny'd indeed, but that Abbreviations of this and ſeveral other Kinds, were very frequent among the Jews, and that the Romans bore upon their Enſigns the Letters S. P. Q. R. Senatus Populuſque Rom a n; but ſtill it muſt be own'd, that Judas was called by this Name, 1 Maccab. ii. 4.—66, before ever he ſet up this Standard; and therefore others chuſe rather to derive it from the Hebrew Words Makke-baiah, i. e. a Conqueror in the Lord, which Explication both the double c, which occurs in the Word. Maccabee, and his Father's Account of Judas, viz. that he had been mighty and ſtrong even from his Youth, ſeem to favour. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 167, and Calmet's Commentary on 1 Maccab. ii. 4.

INRAG'D at theſe two Defeats, Antiochus ſent three eminent Commanders, Ptolemy-Macron, Nicanor, and Gorgias, to manage the War againſt the Jews; who, with an Army of forty Thouſand Foot, and ſeven Thouſand Horſe, together with a great Number of Auxiliaries from neighbouring Nations, and Renegado Jews, (m) came, and encamp'd at Emmaus *, not far from Jeruſalem. Judas, on the other Hand, march'd with his Men to Mizpeh †, where having implor'd God's merciful Aſſiſtance in this Time of Diſtreſs, and * encourag'd them in Words proper on ſuch an Occaſion, to fight for their Religion, Laws, and Liberties, with a Courage undaunted, and (as the Cauſe was God's) with a firm Aſſurance of Succeſs, he led them forth to the Engagement. But, having firſt caus'd Proclamation (n) to be made, that all ſuch as had that Year built Houſes, planted Vineyards, betroth'd Wives, or were, in any Degree, fearful, ſhould depart, his ſix Thouſand Men, which he had at firſt, were reduc'd to three Thouſand.

(o) WITH this Handful of Men however, he was reſolv'd to give the Enemy Battle: But hearing, that Gorgias was detach'd from them with five Thouſand Foot, and a Thouſand Horſe to ſurprize his Camp by Night, he countermin'd his Plot by another of the ſame Kind: For, quitting his own Camp, and marching towards the Enemy, he fell upon them, (while Gorgias, with the beſt of his Forces, was abſent) and put them into ſuch a Surprize and Confuſion, that they took to their Heels, and fled, leaving him Maſter of their Camp, and three Thouſand of their Men dead upon the Spot.

GORGIAS, coming to the Jewiſh Camp, found it empty; and concluding from thence, that Judas had fled into the Mountains for Fear, he purſu'd him thither; but, when he found him not, and was returning to his own Camp, he underſtood

* This was a Village lying to the Weſt of Jeruſalem, and between ſeven and eight Miles from it. It was honour'd with our Saviour's Preſence after his Reſurrection, and therein were hot Baths, (for Emmaus comes from the Hebrew Chamath, which ſignifies Baths of hot Water) that were very beneficial to thoſe that us'd them. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

† At this Time Jeruſalem was in the Hands of the Heathens, and the Sanctuary trodden under Foot; ſo that Judas could not aſſemble his Men there, to implore the Aſſiſtance of God in this Time of imminent Danger, and therefore he repair'd to Mizpeh, a Place where the People oftentimes us'd to aſſemble to Prayer, (Judg. xx. 1. 1 Kings xv. 22. 2 Chron. xvi. 6.) Here he and all his Army addreſs'd themſelves to God, in ſolemn Faſting and Prayer for his Aſſiſtance and Protection: And herein he acted the Part of a wiſe and religious Commander, as knowing, that the Battle was the Lord's, and that therefore it would be impious to begin any ſuch Enterprize, without firſt imploring the Divine Aid. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 166.

* The Speech which Judas makes to his Men upon this Occaſion, as we have it in Joſephus, is a very excellent one: —— "We ſhall never have, ſays he, my Fellow-Soldiers and Companions, ſuch an Opportunity again of ſhewing "our Bravery in the Defence of our Country, and the Contempt of all Dangers, as we have now before us; for, upon "the Iſſue of To-morrow's Combat depends, not only our Liberty, but all the Comforts and Advantages that attend "it; and, over and above the Bleſſing of ſuch a Freedom, our very Religion lies at Stake with it too, and we cannot "ſecure the one, but by preſerving the other. Bethink yourſelves well therefore, what it is you are to contend for, "and you will find it to be no leſs than the Sum and Subſtance of the greateſt Happineſs that you ever enjoy'd, that "is to ſay, in the peaceable Poſſeſſion of your antient Laws, Rites, and Diſcipline. Now whether you will rather "chuſe to periſh with Infamy, and to involve the miſerable Remainder of all your Countrymen in the ſame Ruin, or "to venture one generous Puſh for the Redemption of yourſelves and your Friends, that's the ſingle Queſtion. Death "is the ſame Thing to the Coward that it is to the valiant Man, and as certain to the one as the other; but there is "great Difference in Point of Honour, and everlaſting Fame, between a gallant Man, that falls in Vindication of his "Religion, Liberties, Laws, and Country, and a Scoundrel, that abandons all for Fear of loſing a Life which he "cannot ſave at laſt. Take theſe Things into your Thoughts, and make this Uſe of the Meditation. You have "nothing to truſt to but God's Providence, and your own concurring Reſolutions, and, at the worſt, while we contend for Victory, we can never fail of Glory." Jewiſh Antiquities, lib. xii. c. 11.

underſtood that it had been enter'd and burnt; that the main Army was broken and fled; and that Judas was ready, in the Plains, to give him a warm Reception. Hereupon he could no longer keep his Men together; for, ſeiz'd with a panick Fear, they flung down their Arms, and fled: When Judas, putting himſelf in Purſuit of them, ſlew great Numbers more, ſo that the whole amounted to nine Thouſand, and of thoſe, that eſcap'd from the Battle, moſt were ſore wounded and maim'd. Judas, (p) with his victorious Army, returning from the Chace, enter'd the Enemies Camp, where he found Plenty of rich Plunder; and ſo, proceeding in Triumph to Jeruſalem, celebrated the next Day (which was the Sabbath) with great Devotion, rejoicing, and praiſing God for this ſignal and merciful Deliverance.

JUDAS, after this, having Intelligence, that Timotheus (q), Governor of the Country beyond Jordan, and Bacchides, another Lieutenant in thoſe Parts, were drawing Forces together, in order to invade him, march'd directly againſt them; and, having overthrown them in a great Battle, ſlew above twenty Thouſand of their Men, enrich'd his Army with their Spoils, and, out of them, provided himſelf with Arms, and other Things neceſſary for the future carrying on of the War.

(r) LYSIAS, whom the King, when he went upon his Expedition into Perſia, had conſtituted chief Governor of all the Country from Euphrates to Egypt, being vex'd, and aſham'd at all theſe Defeats, put himſelf at the Head of an Army of ſixty Thouſand Foot, and five Thouſand Horſe; and, marching into Judea, with a full Intent to deſtroy the Country, and all its Inhabitants, he pitch'd his Camp at Bethzura †, a ſtrong Place lying to the South of Jeruſalem, near the Confines of Idumæa †. There Judas met him, with ten Thouſand Men only; and, having engag'd his numerous Army, and ſlain five Thouſand of them, the reſt he put to Flight, and ſent Lyſias back again with his baffled Forces to Antioch, but with a Purpoſe to come again, with a greater Strength another Year.

He purifies the Temple, and blocks up the Fort of Acra.

By this Retreat of his, Judas, having made himſelf Maſter of all Judea, thought it his Duty to purge the Houſe of the Lord, and to remove thoſe Profanations, which, for three Years laſt paſt, it had been forc'd to ſubmit to. To this Purpoſe, he appointed a certain Number of Prieſts to cleanſe the Sanctuary, to pull down the Altar, which the Heathens had ſet up, and to build another of (s) unhewn Stones, to conſecrate the Courts anew, and to make all Things again fit and commodious for the Service of God.

† Wherever the Name of Idumæa, or the Land of Edom, occurs in any of the Writings of the Old Teſtament, it is to be underſtood of that Idumæa, or Land of Edom, which lay between the Lake of Sodom and the Red-Sea, and was afterwards called Arabia Petræa. But the Inhabitants of this Country, being driven out by the Nabathæans, while the Jews were in the Babyloniſh Captivity, and their Land laid deſolate, they then took Poſſeſſion of as much of the Southern Part of it, as contain'd what had formerly been the whole Inheritance of the Tribe of Simeon, and half of the Tribe of Judah, where, at this Time, they dwelt, but had not as yet embrac'd the Jewiſh Religion. And this is the only Idumæa, and the Inhabitants of it the only Idumæans, or Edomites, which are any where ſpoken of after the Babyloniſh Captivity. After their coming into this Country, Hebron, which had formerly been the Metropolis of the Tribe of Judah, became the Capital of Idumæa, and, between that and Jeruſalem, lay Bethzura, a ſtrong Fortreſs, which the Author of the ſecond Book of Maccabees, Chap. xi. 5, places at no more than five Furlongs Diſtance from Jeruſalem; but this is a viſible Miſtake, for Euſebius makes it, at leaſt, twenty Miles diſtant from it. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 165.

Veſſels, and Utenſils, without which the Service of the Temple could not regularly be perform'd; but, out of the Spoils (t), which Judas had taken from the Enemy, he was able to have all theſe Things made anew, of the ſame Metal, and in the ſame Manner, as they were before; and, having thus put all Things in their proper Order, he had the Temple dedicated again, with as much Solemnity, as the preſent State of Affairs would permit, and, in Commemoration hereof, appointed a Feſtival † of eight Days Continuance (which began on the fifth of the Month Chiſleu, much about the twentieth of our November) to be annually obſerv'd.

But, tho' the Temple was recover'd, and reſtor'd to its former Uſe, yet Apollonius, at his taking Jeruſalem, had erected a Fortreſs on Mount Acra †, which commanding the Mountain of the Temple, and being ſtill in the Hands of the Enemy, gave them the Advantage of annoying all thoſe, who went up to the Temple to worſhip. To remedy this Inconvenience, Judas, at firſt, block'd up the Fortreſs; but finding, that he could not conveniently ſpare ſuch a Number of Men, as were neceſſary for that Purpoſe, (u) he caus'd the Mountain of the Temple to be fortify'd with ſtrong Walls, and high Towers, and plac'd therein a ſufficient Garriſon, both to defend it, and protect thoſe, who went up to worſhip.

When the neighbouring Nations came to underſtand that the Jews had recover'd the City and Temple of Jeruſalem, and again reſtor'd the Worſhip of God in that Place, (x) they were mov'd with ſuch Envy and Hatred againſt them, that they propos'd to join with Antiochus in the Extirpation of the whole Nation; and accordingly had put all to Death, whom they found ſojourning among them: But Judas, having firſt fortify'd Bethzura, to be a Barrier againſt the Idumæans, who, at this Time, were bitter Enemies to the Jews, made War againſt them, and all the other Nations that had confederated againſt him, in ſuch a Manner, and with ſuch Succeſs, as ſhall hereafter be related.

† This Feſtival is commemorated in the Goſpel, John ii. 23. and our bleſſed Saviour, we are told, came up to Jeruſalem on Purpoſe to bear a Part in the ſolemnizing of it. Some indeed are of Opinion, that it was another Dedication-Feaſt, which Chriſt thus honour'd with his Preſence; but, beſides that the Dedications both of Solomon's and Zerubbabel's Temples (tho' they were very ſolemnly celebrated at the firſt Erection of theſe Temples) had never any anniverſary Feaſt afterwards kept in Commemoration of them, the very Hiſtory of the Goſpel (which tells us, that it was kept in Winter) confines us to this Dedication of Judas only. That of Solomon was on the ſeventh Month, which fell about the Time of the autumnal Equinox; and that of Zerubbabel was on the twelfth Month, which fell in the Beginning of the Spring; but that of Judas Maccabæus was on the twenty-fifth Day of the ninth Month, which fell in the Middle of Winter. So that the Feaſt of the Dedication, which Chriſt was preſent at in Jeruſalem, was no other, than that, which was inſtituted by Judas, in Commemoration of his Dedication of the Temple anew, after that it had been cleans'd from idolatrous Pollutions; and from hence Grotius (in his Commentary on the Goſpel of St John Chap. x. 22.) very juſtly obſerves, that feſtival Days, in Memory of publick Bleſſings, may be piouſly inſtituted by Perſons in Authority, without a divine Command. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 166.

† The Word Acra, which is of Greek Original, ſignifies in general a Citadel, in which Senſe the Syrians and Chaldeans us'd it: But when Antiochus gave Orders for building of a Citadel on the North Side of the Temple, upon an Eminence, that commanded it, the Hill itſelf was called by the Name of Acra; which, according to Joſephus, lib. xii c. 7. and 14, was in the Form of a Semicircle. John Maccabæus took it out of the Hands of the Syrians, who there kept a Garriſon, and pulled down its Fortifications, and in their Room were afterwards built the Palace of Helena, and that of Agrippa, a Place where the publick Records were kept, and another, where the Magiſtrates of Jeruſalem aſſembled. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

with an Intent to plunder both it and the Temple: [But the Country round about, taking the Alarm, join'd with the Inhabitants, in Defence of the City and Temple, and, having beat him off, they oblig'd him to return to Ecbatana in Media, where, with Shame and Confuſion, having receiv'd News of the ill Succeſs of his Arms in Judea, and how the Jews had pulled down the Images and Altars that he had erected, recover'd their Temple at Jeruſalem, and reſtor'd that Place to its former Worſhip, he made all the Haſte Home he poſſibly could, threatening, as he went along, utterly to deſtroy the whole Nation, and make Jeruſalem the common Place of Sepulture to all the Jews. But, (z) while theſe proud Words were in his Mouth, the Judgments of God overtook him; for he was inſtantly ſeiz'd with a Pain in his Bowels, and a grievous Torment in his inward Parts, which no Remedy could aſſuage. Being reſolute however in his Revenge, he order'd his Charioteer to double his Speed; but, in the rapid Motion, the Chariot was overturn'd, and he thrown to the Ground with ſuch Violence, as ſorely bruis'd his whole Body, and maſh'd (as it were) his Limbs with the Fall; ſo that, being able to travel no farther, he was forc'd to put in at Tabæ, a little Town in the Confines of Perſia and Babylonia, where he ſuffer'd moſt exquiſite Torments both of Body and Mind. In his Body, a filthy Ulcer broke out in his privy Parts, wherein were bred an innumerable Quantity of Vermin, continually flowing from it, and ſuch a Stench proceeding from thence, as neither thoſe that attended him, nor even he himſelf, could well bear: And in this Condition he lay, languiſhing and rotting, till he dy'd. In his Mind, his Torments were no leſs, by Reaſon of the ſeveral Spectres, and Apparitions of evil Spirits, which he imagin'd were continually about him, reproaching and ſtinging his Conſcience with Accuſations of the evil Deeds, which he had been guilty of. Being made ſenſible at length by his Afflictions, that all his Sufferings were from the Hand of God, for his Plundering and Profanation of his Temple at Jeruſalem, and for his Hatred and Cruelties to his Servants, who worſhipped there, (a) he made an ample Acknowledgment of this before he dy'd, and many Vows and ſolemn Promiſes of a full Reparation, in caſe he recover'd. But his Repentance † came too late: And therefore, after having languiſh'd out a while in this miſerable Condition, and under theſe horrid Torments of Body and Mind, at length, being half conſum'd with the Rottenneſs of his Ulcer, he gave up the Ghoſt, and dy'd, after he had reign'd eleven Years.

The

Attempt of the King of Syria to plunder it. But the Manner in which he came to be diſappointed, is related quite differently in the ſecond Book of Maccabees. For therein we are told, that, when Antiochus, pretending that he would marry the Goddeſs of the Temple, (whoſe Name was Nanea) that thereby he might have the better Title to the Riches of it, by Way of Dowry, was let into the Temple to take Poſſeſſion of them, the Prieſts open'd a ſecret Door that was in the Ceiling, and from thence threw upon him and his Attendants ſuch a Shower of Stones, as quite overwhelm'd them, and ſo cut off their Heads, and caſt them out, 2 Maccab. i. 13, &c. but who the Goddeſs Nanea, who had this Temple at Elymais, was, the Conjectures of the Learned are various, ſince ſome will have her to be Venus, and others Cybele the Mother of the Gods, becauſe the Word in the Perſian Language ſignifies Mother, tho' the moſt common Opinion is, that ſhe was Diana, or the Moon, the ſame that Strabo calls Anais, or Anaitis: For, that ſhe was held to be a Virgin-Goddeſs, is plain, becauſe Antiochus pretended to eſpouſe her; and that ſhe was a chaſte Goddeſs, Plutarch (de Artaxerxe) ſeems to intimate, when he tells us, that Artaxerxes took the beautiful Aſpaſia (whom himſelf was in love with) from his Son Darius, and devoted her to a perpetual Virginity, in the Service of Anais, the Goddeſs of Ecbatana. Calmet's Commentary on 1 Maccab. vi. 1.

The OBJECTION.

"ANTIOCHUS EPIPHANES, we allow, was a very wicked Man, and a great Perſecutor of the Jewiſh Church and Nation; but it does not appear from any other Hiſtorian, (b) that he dy'd in the miſerable Manner, that is here related; that he had any Remorſe of Conſcience for having ſlain the Jews, and pillag'd the Temple; or was frighten'd, upon that Account, with Spectres, and Apparitions, before he dy'd. On the contrary, we find, even by the Confeſſion of Joſephus (c) himſelf, that he was a Man of a frank and generous Temper, and had therefore the Character (d) of the magnanimous and munificent; that he had conferr'd ſeveral Benefits (e) upon the Jews, as this Author of the Book of the Maccabees makes him ſpeak; that what Severities, he inflicted upon them, were with a good Intent (as Tacitus * reports) to cure them of their Superſtition, and to eſtabliſh an Uniformity of Religion throughout his Kingdom; and that, upon this Account therefore, there was no Reaſon for any Remorſe, or Recantation in him, or for any Judgment from God in the Singularity of his Death.

"It might be thought fit however, in a Book, deſign'd on Purpoſe to to aggrandize the Jewiſh Nation (as the Hiſtory of the Maccabees ſeems to be) to have every Thing turn upon the marvellous. For is it not unaccountable, that Judas Maccabæus, with ſuch an Handful of Men, as the Hiſtory gives him, ſhould rout and deſtroy ſuch Multitudes of veteran Troops, and that (f) without any Swords or Armour; and, in one Expedition, fight Battles, diſperſe Armies, relieve ſome Towns, take others by Storm, and all this (g) without the Loſs of one Man?

"Is it not very wonderful that the Jewiſh People (above all others) ſhould be forewarn'd of an approaching War, or any other national (h) Calamity, by Apparitions in the Air; or that at this Time (above all others) they ſhould have their Temple ſecur'd from all profane and ſacrilegious Hands by a Celeſtial Guard of Angels? Ptolemy Philopater might poſſibly be ſtruck with the Awfulneſs of the Place, and ſo retire; but the Adventure of (k) Heliodorus, and the Angel mounted on Horſeback to guard the ſacred Treaſures, while two others, on Foot, were cutting and ſcourging him without Mercy, ſeems to go beyond the Extravagance of a Romance, and makes the Conduct of the Elephants (l), in ſparing the poor Jews, and falling upon the Spectators, leſs ſurprizing."

Anſwer'd by ſhewing that Epiphanes is thus repreſented by Polybius,

Of what Weight and Authority both the Hiſtory of the Maccabees and that of the Jews by Joſephus ought to be accounted, we ſhall have occaſion to enquire in the two following Chapters, and need only here obſerve, that what the Maccabæan Hiſtory has recorded of Antiochus Epiphanes is, in a great Meaſure, confirm'd by the Teſtimony of Polybius, an exact Hiſtorian, who was contemporary with him, and could not therefore be at a Loſs for proper Inſtructions in what he wrote. Epiphanes (according to (m) him) was a Man of great Expence, and ſquander'd der'd away vaſt Sums in the Gratification of his Luſts and Amours, in the Gifts he beſtow'd upon his Favourites, and the Entertainments he made for the People: But then Athenæus (n) informs us, that all theſe Expences were made, partly out of the Gifts, which his Friends ſent him, partly out of the Prey, which he took from Ptolemy King of Egypt, when he was a Minor; but chiefly out of the Spoils of the many Temples, which he ſacrilegiouſly robbed.

(o) I WAS bountiful and beloved in my Power, and (p) I have done great Benefits, both publick and private, to the Jews. Theſe were the vain Boaſts of the dying Tyrant: But ſince the ſame Polybius (q) tells us, that his Diſtemper ſo far grew upon him, as to come to a conſtant Delirium or State of Madneſs, theſe Expreſſions, we may ſuppoſe, came from him, (r) when he was in that Condition. For we know no Inſtances of his Kindneſs, but many of his Cruelty to the People of God; and, as to his Bounty, (as he calls it) this is what he uſually committed in his drunken Frolicks, (s) in which he ſpent a great Part of his Revenues, and us'd often to go out into the Streets, and to ſcatter his Money, in Handfuls, among the Rabble. We may therefore reaſonably ſuppoſe, that ſuch a wild, crack-brain'd Creature as this, had ſeldom any ſerious Thought of eſtabliſhing an Uniformity in Religion, (tho' that Religion, by the bye, was impious) in his Dominions; but that, to juſtify the Depredations, that he made upon the Jews, and to revenge the Defeats, which they had ſo frequently given to his Armies, theſe were the true Reaſons of his Exaſperation againſt them; becauſe it is not conceivable, how he could have any ſober Senſe of Religion, who, to ſatisfy his greedy Avarice, was not afraid to rob the Temple of Diana.

THIS Robbing of Temples, in the Opinion of all ſober Heathens, was accounted a Crime of that heinous Nature, as juſtly deſerv'd the Vengeance of Heaven; and therefore Polybius (t), as well as the Author of the Maccabees, informs us, that Antiochus, before he dy'd, was ſcar'd with Viſions, and Apparitions of evil Spirits; but then he ſuppoſes, that it was the Goddeſs Diana, that thus haunted him for his attempting to pillage her Temple at Elymais; whereas he himſelf, in the Preſence of all his Friends, openly declares, that theſe Troubles were come upon him, becauſe (u) he had taken all the Veſſels of Gold and Silver, that were in Jeruſalem, and had deſtroy'd the Inhabitants of Judea without a Cauſe.

THE Sacrilege at Elymais was only intended, not executed: But that at Jeruſalem was committed, with horrid Impiety againſt God, and as horrid Cruelty againſt all thoſe, that ſerv'd him there. But even, if the former had been committed, it was only againſt a falſe Deity; whereas the latter was againſt the true God, the great and Almighty Creator of Heaven and Earth: And therefore we need leſs wonder, that the Marks of a Divine Infliction were ſo viſible in the Nature of his Diſeaſe. Appian (x) and Polybius (y), as well as Joſephus, and the Author of the Books of Maccabees, have inform'd us, that he dy'd with Ulcers, and putrifying Sores in his ſecret Parts; and, upon this Occaſion, we cannot forbear remarking, that moſt of the great Perſecutors of the Church of God have been ſmitten in the like Manner; that thus dy'd Herod, the great Perſecutor of Chriſt, and the Infants at Bethlehem; thus Galerius Maximianus, the Author of the tenth, and greateſt Perſecution againſt the Chriſtians; and thus Philip the ſecond, King of Spain, who was as infamous for the Cruelty of his Perſecutions, and the Numbers deſtroy'd by it, as any of the other three. relate concerning the Judgments of God upon Antiochus, that theſe heathen Authors (whoſe Credit is thought indubitable) do agree with them as to the Matter of Fact, tho' they differ from them, in aſſigning a wrong Cauſe for it.

That Judas Maccabæus might do all the gallant Actions recorded of him.

(a) IF you will walk in my Statutes, and keep my Commandments, and do them, ye ſhall chaſe your Enemies, and they ſhall fall before you: Five of you ſhall chaſe an Hundred, and an Hundred of you ſhall put ten Thouſand to Flight, and your Enemies ſhall fall before you by the Sword. This is the Promiſe which God made to the Children of Iſrael, upon their Entrance into the Land of Canaan; and, in Virtue of this Promiſe, we find that their Leader Joſhua was ſo very ſucceſsful, that, after he had reliev'd the City of Gibeon, deſtroy'd twelve Kings, and made himſelf Maſter of their Dominions, in one Campaign only, 'tis ſaid of him, that (b) he return'd, and ALL Iſrael with him, unto the Camp to Gilgal: And therefore we need leſs wonder, that the Jews, who at this Time were under the Conditions of God's Promiſe, nay, under a State of Perſecution upon the Account of their Religion, and were conſequently the proper Objects of his more immediate Care and Compaſſion, ſhould come off victorious, even tho' they were but poorly arm'd, and ſometimes without the Loſs of one Man, having the Lord of Hoſts on their Side, both to inject Terror into their Enemies, and to cover their Heads in the Day of Battle: But, even without this Suppoſition of a Divine Interpoſal, might there not be ſome remarkable Difference in the Soldiers, and Generals themſelves?

JUDAS Maccabæus, an excellent Commander, bold and enterpriſing, with a ſmall Body of Men, but all determin'd to conquer or die, attacks one of no Capacity, with a much larger Army indeed, but made up chiefly of raw Men, and Forces levy'd in Haſte. He attacks him, I ſay, and defeats him; and are not Miracles of this Kind very common? Do not both antient and modern Hiſtory furniſh us with Victories, in great Abundance, of this Sort, and much more ſurprizing than any obtain'd by the Maccabees? (c) The Contempt of a weak Enemy, whoſe Forces are ſo diſproportionate to the numerous Army, which comes againſt them, is one of the greateſt Errors, as well as Dangers, that can happen in War; becauſe, in this Caſe, People are leſs upon their Guard, not thinking the Enemy capable of daring to undertake any Thing againſt them, until they are ſurpriz'd in their Security; and an Army ſurpriz'd in their Camp, we know, is an Army half conquered.

THO' therefore the Jews, under the Command of the gallant Judas, were always feweſt in Number, yet, conſidering the Boldneſs of their Undertakings, and the Prudence of their Conduct, their Skill in the military Art *, and the Providence of God, which attended, and proſper'd their Arms, the Wonder is not much, that they were, in a Manner, always ſuperior to their Enemies.

Aërial Apparitions not uncommon, and ſometimes real.

THERE ſhall be Signs in the Sun, and in the Moon, and in the Stars, i. e. in the Heavens, where they move, and upon the Earth Diſtreſs of Nations, with Perplexity: Theſe were the Preſages, which our Saviour foretold; and accordingly Joſephus (d) informs us, that, before the laſt Siege of Jeruſalem, there were ſeen in the Air, a little before Sun-Set, for ſome Days together, Chariots, and armed Men, paſſing along the Clouds, round about the City; which I would hardly venture to report, ſays he, but that I can produce ſundry Eye-Witneſſes, that are ſtill alive to confirm the Truth of it. Several Accounts of this Kind we have in Livy and Suetonius: And tho' it muſt be own'd, that too great a Credulity in ſome Hiſtorians may poſſibly have enlarg'd, or multiply'd theſe Prodigies, yet we muſt not therefore imagine, that there never were any ſuch Things, becauſe very good Reaſons may be given why God ſhould exhibit them: And, as to the Phænomena's that (e) are now under Conſideration, they certainly have all the Marks of Credibility in them, that we can well deſire. For they are related by an Author, that was contemporary, or very near contemporary with them. They were ſeen, not tranſiently, and by a few weak ſuperſtitious People; but, for forty Days together, they appear'd to the View of a whole City, wherein were above an hundred Thouſand Inhabitants, moſt of ſound Intellects, and ſome of them of ſo little Superſtition, as to abandon the Laws and Cuſtoms of their Country for Fear of Perſecution.

Why Ptolemy might be ſmitten by God upon his entering the Holy of Holies.

The Jews have a Tradition, founded upon what we read in the 2d Book of the Maccabees, (f), viz. that, ſome Time before the Babyloniſh Captivity, the Prophet Jeremiah receiv'd Inſtructions from God to hide the Ark of the Covenant in a Cave in Mount Nebo, which accordingly he did, and at the ſame Time declar'd, that the Place ſhould not be diſcover'd, until the People's Return from their Captivity; that, after the People's Return, in the Time of Nehemiah, this Ark was found out, and re-plac'd in the Sanctuary of the Temple; that when Pompey (g) enter'd the Sanctuary, he ſaw an Ark and Cherubims, like thoſe, which Moſes had made; and that, ſome Time after, the ſame Ark was carry'd before Veſpaſian, when, from the Jewiſh Wars, he return'd to Rome in Triumph.

Now, upon the Suppoſition, that there is any Truth in this Tradition, and the Ark of the Covenant was in Fact replac'd in the ſecond Temple, the Hiſtory of Uzzah will inform us of what ſacred Account, in the Eſteem of God, this Repoſitory of the Divine Covenant was, and how ſeverely God, in his Caſe, was pleas'd to avenge the leaſt Violation of it. For, if the Anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Uzzah, ſo that he ſmote him dead upon the Spot for his Raſhneſs in taking hold of the Ark, even becauſe he was no Prieſt, no Deſcendant of the Houſe of Aaron; why ſhould it be thought a ſtrange Thing, that God ſhould ſhew ſome Tokens of his Diſpleaſure againſt an Heathen Prince, intruding into the Place, which he had conſecrated for his own Preſence and Inhabitation? Or, if we ſuppoſe, that the Shekinah, or Preſence of God, was not reſident in the ſecond Temple; yet ſtill the Holy of Holies was reſerv'd for the Entrance of none, but the High-Prieſt; and therefore it is no more, than what might be expected, that he, who, in Contempt of the Divine Command, and the Remonſtrances of all about him, would intrude into it, ſhould meet with ſome ſevere Rebuke, that thereby he might be convinc'd of the Power of the God of Iſrael, and of the Divine Inſtitution of their Religion. And, tho' it be acknowledg'd, that Pompey met with no remarkable Judgment, in the Inſtant, when he was guilty of the like Profanation, yet (h) our learned Connector of the ſacred and profane Hiſtory has obſerv'd, that after this Act he never proſper'd; that this put an End to all his Succeſſes; inſomuch, that this, over the Jews, was the laſt of his Victories. So mindful has God all along been, not to ſuffer the Profaners of his Sanctuary to go unpuniſh'd!

That he really deſign'd to deſtroy all the Jews at Alexandria.

The intended Deſtruction of all the Egyptian Jews at Alexandria, in the barbarous Manner, wherein the Author of the ſecond Book of the Maccabees has related it, can hardly be thought an incredible dible Thing to thoſe, who have read in Philo (i) the like, if not worſe Cruelties, which the ſame People underwent in the ſame Town, in the Reign of Caligula, and under the Adminiſtration of Flaccus. —— That they were not only driven from their Habitations, plunder'd of their Goods, and coop'd up in a narrow Corner of the City in order to be ſtarv'd; but that, if any attempting to make their Eſcape were apprehended, they were either knock'd on the Head, torn Limb from Limb, or tortur'd to Death, and their dead Bodies dragg'd through the Streets; and, if any pretended to lament them, they were immediately ſeiz'd, whipp'd without Mercy, and having ſuffer'd all the Torments that Cruelty could invent, were condemn'd at laſt to be crucify'd: —— That, without any Regard to Sex or Condition, without any Reſpect to the Aged, or Compaſſion to the Young; not only whole Families were burnt together, but ſome, being ty'd to Stakes, had Fires of green Wood kindled round them, in order to prolong their Torments, and that the Spectators might have the horrid Pleaſure of ſeeing the poor Creatures ſuffocated in the Smoak. —— That, on the very Feſtival of the Emperor's Birth-Day, (which generally laſted for ſome Time) thirty-eight of their Council, Perſons of the moſt diſtinguiſh'd Note among them, were bound like Criminals, ſome with Cords, and ſome with Chains, and ſo dragg'd through the great Market-Place to the Theatre, and there whipp'd ſo unmercifully, that ſome of them did not long ſurvive it. —— Nay, that, at this Time more eſpecially, it was an uſual Thing with the People, when they came to the Theatre, firſt to entertain themſelves with Scourging, Racking, and Torturing the poor Jews at their Pleaſure, and then, to call for their Dancers, and Players, and other Diverſions in Uſe among the Romans: Whoever has read, I ſay, the Account of theſe Cruelties, as Philo has related them, need not much wonder to find an exaſperated Prince (as Ptolemy was) intending the total Deſtruction of a People, he imagin'd had offended him; when a bare Roman Prefect (as Flaccus was no more) without any Provocation, that we hear of, was not afraid to treat the ſame People in this unhuman Manner.

Why the Elephants might turn upon the Spectators.

But then, as to the former Caſe, if we will allow the Providence of God, and its Interpoſition in the Occurrences of this World, we need not want a Reaſon, why he ſhould turn the Elephants, which were deſign'd to deſtroy the Innocent, upon the Spectators, who could not be ſo; becauſe both his Juſtice and Mercy ſeem to plead for the Deliverance of thoſe, whoſe only Crime was their Profeſſion of his true Religion, and for the Puniſhment of ſuch, as came to glut their Eyes with the helliſh Pleaſure of ſeeing their Fellow-Creatures trampled to pieces. In this Senſe, there ſeems to be a neceſſary Call for a Divine Interpoſition; but, abſtracted from this Conſideration, the Wonder is not great, that Creatures intoxicated (as theſe Elephants are ſaid to have been) ſhould miſtake their Objects, and fall foul upon thoſe, that they were leaſt of all intended to deſtroy.

Angels appearing in Armour, a common Tradition.

There is ſomething, we confeſs, more wonderful, in the Appearances of Angels mounted, as it were, on Horſe-back (k), heading the Jewiſh Army (l), protecting the Jewiſh General, and (m) defending the ſacred Treaſures of the Temple; but as we eſteem theſe Books of the Maccabees no Part of Divine Writ, we leave the proper Defence of them to thoſe, who have receiv'd them as Canonical, and ſhall only add, (n) with the learned Huetius, upon this Subject, —— That, how improbable ſoever theſe Accounts may be thought by ſome, they are not deſtitute of Examples of the like Nature in ſeveral Heathen Hiſtories; that, in the Battle, which the Romans had with the Latins, at the Lake Regillus, Caſtor and Pollux were ſeen mounted on Horſe-back, in the Roman Roman Army, and, when the Victory was wavering, they reſtor'd the Fight, and gain'd the Field; and carry'd the News thereof to Rome, that very Evening; that, when the Romans invaded the Lucani and Brutii, Mars, the great Founder of their Nation, led their Forces to the Onſet, and aſſiſted them not a little in taking and deſtroying great Numbers of their Enemies; and (to name no more) that, at the Battle of Marathon, Pan appeared on the Side of the Athenians; made great Slaughter among the Enemy's Army; and injected ſuch a Terror into them all, as, from that Time, has obtain'd the Name of a Panick Fear.

Now, tho' there might be a good deal of Fiction in theſe Inſtances, yet, ſince we find ſome of the beſt Roman Hiſtorians relating them, and ſo grave an Author, as Tully (even (o) in ſome of his moſt ſerious Pieces) making mention of the firſt of theſe, as a Matter of juſt Credibility, we cannot but ſuppoſe, that the common Tradition, at this Time, was, that, to the victorious Army (eſpecially when it was much inferior in Numbers) ſome Celeſtial and ſuperior Beings were always aſſiſtant; and, conſequently, that the Author of the Book of the Maccabees, in this Reſpect, wrote nothing, but what, at that Time, was the common Senſe of Mankind; nothing indeed, but what the Senſe of the Royal Pſalmiſt in military Matters, authoriz'd him to write: For (p) let them be turned back, ſays he, and brought to Confuſion, that imagine Miſchief againſt me; let them be as the Duſt before the Wind, and the Angel of the Lord ſcattering them.

DISSER-

DISSERTATION III.

Of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim.

An Hiſtorical Account of the various Forms of the Jewiſh Adminiſtration.

BEFORE we proceed to examine into this great National Council among the Jews, (which we ſuppoſe might have its Riſe much about this Period of Time) it may not be improper to take a ſhort View of the ſundry Forms of Civil Adminiſtration, that were previous to it.

The Government of the Jewiſh Republick was originally Divine: For, (a) if we call a State, where the People govern, a Democracy; and that, where the Nobles govern, an Ariſtocracy; there is the ſame Reaſon why this ſhould be ſtiled a Theocracy; becauſe God was not only the Deity, they were bound to worſhip and adore, but the Sovereign likewiſe, to whom they were to pay all the Honours and Rights, that were due to ſupreme Majeſty. Their Republick however was not compleatly ſettled, until God had given them the Law from Mount Sinai, when the Noiſe and Thunderings, in which it was delivered, were ſo very terrible, that (b) the People requeſted of him, not to ſpeak any more to them of himſelf, but to make uſe of the Miniſtry of Moſes, as his Interpreter.

Thus Moſes, by the People's own Election, was appointed to the Adminiſtration of all publick Affairs; and, in this important Office, (as the Author of the Hebrews (c) teſtifies of him) acquitted himſelf with much Faithfulneſs: But, in a ſhort Time, he found, that he had undertaken a Work of too much Labour and Fatigue for any ſingle Perſon to ſuſtain, and therefore, in Purſuance to his Father-in-Law's Advice, he made choice of ſome of the moſt prudent and underſtanding Men in every Tribe, divided them into ſeveral Claſſes, and gave them Names, according to the Authority, wherewith he inveſted them, or the Number of the Perſons, over whom they were to preſide: (d) He made them Captains over Thouſands, and Captains over Hundreds, and Captains over Fifties, and Captains over Tens, and Officers among the Tribes.

But this Eſtabliſhment laſted not long, or at leaſt receiv'd ſome Change, or Addition to it. For, as ſoon as the Iſraelites were arriv'd at Kibroth-Hattaavah, or the Graves of Luſt, (as the Place is called) but three Days Journey from Mount Sinai, (e) God appointed a Body of Seventy Elders (to whom he communicated his Spirit) to aſſiſt Moſes in bearing the Burthen of the People; and from hence it is, that the Defenders of the Antiquity of the Sanhedrim date the firſt Inſtitution of that great Council. But, however this be, 'tis certain, that this Council continu'd among them all the while that they ſojourn'd in the Wilderneſs; and was indeed (f) an Inſtitution proper enough for a People in their Circumſtances, who, being all of one Community, could aſſemble together with Eaſe, and, having no great Matters in Poſſeſſion, could have but few Proceſſes, and, conſequently, might diſpenſe with a leſſer Number of Judges.

MOSES however, foreſeeing that this Inſtitution would not be ſufficient, when once the People were ſettled in the Land of Promiſe, (g) left it as an Injunction behind him, that, whoever had the Government of the Nation ſhould appoint Judges and Magiſtrates in every City, to determine the Controverſies, that came before them; but that, when any Thing of great Moment, or of difficult Diſcuſſion, ſhould happen, the contending Parties ſhould carry their Cauſe (h) to the Place, which the Lord had choſen, propoſe it to the Prieſts, and to the Judge, that ſhould be in their Days; and, upon Pain of Death, acquieſce in their Deciſion.

MOSES was ſucceeded by Joſhua: But his Time was ſpent in making a Conqueſt of the Land of Canaan, and, till he had done that, he could not put the Order, which his Predeceſſor had left him, in Execution. However, at his firſt Acceſſion to the Government, we find that (i) all the People promis'd the ſame Obedience to him, that they had paid to Moſes; and that, when himſelf grew old, (k) he called for the Elders of Iſrael, and for their Heads, and for their Judges, and for their Officers, i. e. all the Judges and Magiſtrates, which Moſes had enjoin'd him to eſtabliſh in the Country, for the Security of the State and Adminiſtration of Juſtice.

On this Footing Joſhua left the Civil Adminiſtration; and thus it ſtood, till the People revolted from the Service of God, and then all Things ran to Confuſion. In what Manner the State was govern'd, and Juſtice diſpens'd, during the long Succeſſion of Judges, 'tis difficult to determine: But, towards the Concluſion of that Form of Government, we find Samuel (l) going, from Year to Year, in a Circuit round the Country, to judge Iſrael, and, when himſelf grew impotent and unable to travel, (m) making his Sons Judges in his Stead; but their Male-adminiſtration occaſion'd an Alteration in the Government.

The Inſtitution of Regal Power diſſolv'd that Polity, which Moſes had ſettled: But, tho' he both foreknew, and foretold this Change in the Conſtitution, yet we no where find him giving any particular Directions, how Kings were to conduct themſelves in the Adminiſtration of the State, and the Diſpenſation of Juſtice; (n) whether it was, that God did not vouchſafe to communicate any freſh Diſcovery to him upon that Subject, or whether he might think, that the Rules, which he had already preſcrib'd, were not incompatible with the Authority and Government of Kings.

SAUL ſeems to have concern'd himſelf with nothing but military Affairs, leaving the Prieſts and Judges the ſame Juriſdiction, that they had before; but David, when he came into a peaceable Poſſeſſion of the Kingdom, (o) did himſelf (in Cauſes of great Conſequence at leaſt) adminiſter Juſtice to the People. The famous Deciſion between the two Mothers, (p) who both laid their Claim to the living Child, is a plain Proof, that, in perplex'd and intricate Caſes, Solomon himſelf did ſometimes the Office of a Judge; and when we read of this Prince, that he came to (q) Gibeon, with the Captains of Thouſands and of Hundreds, with the Judges, and the Chief of the Fathers, we may learn from hence, that Magiſtrates of the ſame Kind, that Moſes had ordain'd, were, at this Time, exiſting in the Kingdom of Iſrael.

By the Revolt of the ten Tribes from the Houſe of David to that of Jeroboam, the Civil Conſtitution of the Jews ſuffer'd very much; becauſe the avow'd Purpoſe of that Prince was to change the Religion, and reverſe the Orders, which Moſes had inſtituted: And therefore, from henceforward, we muſt look only into the Kingdom of Judah for the Succeſſion of the true Diſcipline, and Form of ancient Government of the Jews.

When Jehoſhaphat form'd the Deſign of introducing a Reformation both in Church and State, he purſu'd the Rule, which Moſes had given him; for (r) he ſet Judges in the Land, through all the fenced Cities, and, in Jeruſalem the Capital, erected two Tribunals; (s) one, compos'd of Prieſts and Levites, to hear Appeals from leſſer Courts, relating to religious Matters; and the other, compoſ'd of the chief of the Fathers of Iſrael, to hear ſuch as related to Civil. Nor is their Conjecture much amiſs, who ſuppoſe, that the Seventy Men, whom (t) Ezekiel ſaw, in a Viſion, burning Incenſe to Idols, and the five and twenty, who, (u) between the Porch and the Altar, were worſhipping the Sun in the Eaſt, are the rather mention'd, becauſe they were Men of Eminence, and, very probably, the Judges of Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Matters.

What Kind of Judicature prevailed in the Time of the Captivity, 'tis difficult to ſay. From the Story of Suſannah we may learn, that, in theſe Circumſtances, the Jews were allow'd their own Courts and Judges, even in Babylon itſelf; but of what Number, Order, or Authority theſe Judges were, none can tell. 'Tis plain however, that, upon the Reſtoration, Ezra return'd with full Power from Artaxerxes, (x) to ſet Magiſtrates and Judges in all the Land, who might puniſh Criminals according to their Demerit, either with Death, or Baniſhment, Impriſonment, or Confiſcation of Goods: And in this Condition the Jewiſh State continu'd, viz. in the Form of an Ariſtocracy, with the High-Prieſt at the Head of it, ſometimes under the King of Egypt, and ſometimes under the King of Syria, for a conſiderable Time after the Return from the Captivity.

The Perſecution, which Antiochus Epiphanes raiſed among the Jews, ruin'd all the OEconomy of their Government: But Mattathias, and his Sons, endeavour'd to reſtore (y) the decay'd State of the People (as it is called) as far as thoſe troubleſome Times would permit them. Judas Maccabæus, in a general Aſſembly, held at Maſpha, reviv'd the antient Order, and appointed Rulers (z) over the People, even Captains over Thouſands, over Hundreds, over Fifties, and over Tens: And, when Jonathan, his Brother and Succeſſor, took upon him both the ſovereign and ſacerdotal Authority, he, nevertheleſs, govern'd by the Advice of a Senate, not excluding the People from ſome Share in their Deliberations, as appears by the Letters, (a) which the Jews, at this Time, ſent to the Lacedemonians.

From 1 Macc. i. — vi. 7. 2 Macc. iii. — x. and from Joſ. Hiſt. lib. xi. c. 7. to lib. xii. c. 14.

ARISTOBULUS, who was the firſt of the Aſmonæan Race, that took upon him the Diadem, and Title of a King, continu'd the Senate in great Authority, but excluded the common People from having any Part in the Adminiſtration; as the Kings, who ſucceeded him, endeavour'd to confirm their own Power by curtailing that of the Senate, till Pompey came, and quite overturn'd the Jewiſh State, by ſubjecting it to the Empire, and making Judea a Roman Province.

From this ſhort Review of the Jewiſh Republick, we may perceive, that its Form of Government, at different Times, has been various; that Moſes (with the Concurrence of ſeventy chief Magiſtrates) as God's Vicegerent, govern'd the People in an abſolute Manner; that, under the Judges, the State had been ſometimes without any Ruler at all, independent ſometimes, and, at other Times, under the Juriſdiction of its Enemies; that the antient Kings of Judah vouchſaf'd to adminiſter Juſtice to their Subjects, but that, towards the Decline of the Kingdom, its Princes affected State, and a deſpotick Power; that, from the Captivity to the Time of the Aſmonæans, the Government, under the High-Prieſt, was partly ariſtocratical, and partly popular; and that the Aſmonæan Kings made it monarchical, till the Romans deſtroy'd it: And ſo we proceed to conſider, in which of theſe Periods the famous Council of the Jews, which is uſually called their Sanhedrim, might have its Riſe, with ſome other Particulars relating to its Authority and Proceedings.

Of the Origin of the Sanhedrim.

When Moſes, in conducting the Children of Iſrael through the Wilderneſs was teiz'd and wearied out (as we ſay) with the perpetual Complaints and Murmurings of that People, in the Impatience of his Soul, he addreſs'd himſelf to God in theſe Words: (b) Wherefore haſt thou afflicted thy Servant, that thou layeſt the Burthen of all this People upon me?——I am not able to bear all this People alone, becauſe it is too heavy for me, &c. Whereupon the Lord ſaid unto him, Gather unto me ſeventy Men of the Elders of Iſrael, whom thou knoweſt to be the Elders of the People, and Officers over them, and bring them unto the Tabernacle of the Congregation, that they may ſtand there with thee; and I will come down and talk with thee there; and I will take of the Spirit, which is upon thee, and will put it upon them, and they ſhall bear the Burthen with thee, that thou bear it not thyſelf alone. This Command Moſes took care to put in Execution: The Elders, accordingly, met at the Tabernacle of the Congregation; and, when the Spirit of the Lord reſted upon them, they propheſied, and did not ceaſe. Theſe Words (as we ſaid before) are held by the Generality of the Rabbins (as well as by ſome Chriſtian Writers) to be the true Origin of that great Sanhedrim, "which, from its firſt Inſtitution here under Moſes, ſubſiſted all along in the Jewiſh Nation, even to the Time of their utter Diſperſion under Veſpaſian, and had the Cognizance of all Matters of the greateſt Moment, both Civil and Eccleſiaſtical."

That it was only of temporary Duration.

But, for the better Underſtanding of the Senſe and Deſign of them, we may obſerve, 1ſt, That Moſes does not here ſpeak of the Difficulty, or Multiplicity of Buſineſs, that was laid upon him, but of the perverſe Temper of the People, always addicted to Mutiny and Sedition, which he himſelf alone was not able to withſtand. To eaſe himſelf of the Labour of judging the People in all Civil and Capital Cauſes, he had, by the Advice of his Father-in-Law, (c) appointed a certain Number of Judges; and it ſeems not unlikely, that ſome of theſe Seventy were of the Number of theſe Judges, becauſe they are called by God himſelf the Elders and Officers of the People. Moſes wanted no Aſſiſtance therefore in the Adminiſtration of Affairs of this Nature; but what he wanted, was a ſufficient Number of Perſons, of ſuch Power and Authority among the People, as might reſtrain them from ſeditious Practices, and awe them into Obedience; and for this Reaſon it was, that God, when he made choice of them, gave them the Spirit of Prophecy, as an evident Sign of his having appointed them Coadjutors to Moſes, in the Exerciſe of his ſupreme Authority, and as a Means to procure them the greater Reverence and Eſteem among the People.

2dly, We may obſerve farther, that it does not appear from the foregoing Paſſage, that this Aſſembly of ſeventy Perſons was to be perpetuated in the Jewiſh State, and, when any dy'd, others ſubſtituted in their Room: On the contrary, it rather ſeems to have been an occaſional Inſtitution, or preſent Expedient for the Relief of Moſes, that, by the Addition of other Rulers, (all endu'd with Gifts extraordinary, as well as he) the Murmurs and Complaints of the People might not fall all upon him, but be diverted (ſome of them at leaſt) upon others; and that, by the joint Influence of ſo many Perſons, all poſſeſſed with the Spirit of Government, they might either hinder or appeaſe them. And, as this was an Inſtitution only for that Purpoſe, there is no Reaſon to believe that it continu'd any longer than Moſes liv'd; becauſe, if we take a View of the Hiſtory of ſucceeding Ages, we ſhall find no Footſteps of it.

Was not in the Times of Joſhua, or the Judges.

After the Death of Moſes, we find Joſhua ruling the People with an abſolute Authority; ſettling the Portions of the ſeveral Tribes in the Land of Canaan; diſmiſſing thoſe, who had aſſiſted their Brethren in the Conqueſt of it; receiving all Appeals, redreſſing all Grievances, and acting, in ſhort, as the only Governor in the Nation, without one Word mention'd of any ſupreme Council to controul him. After

After the Death of Joſhua, God rais'd up Judges, Men of Courage and Wiſdom extraordinary, to deliver his People from the Oppreſſions of their Enemies, and to attend to the Adminiſtration of Juſtice among them; and yet we read of no Act, or Decree of this pretended Sanhedrim all this while, (d) which could no more have been omitted in the Account of theſe Times, had it been then exiſting, than the Mention of the Roman Senate is in any of their Hiſtorians.

(e) IN thoſe Days, as the ſacred Hiſtory informs us, there was no King in Iſrael, but every Man did what was right in his own Eyes; and (f) where then was this venerable Aſſembly, whoſe Authority (according to the Rabbins) was ſuperior to that of Princes, to interpoſe in this Time of Need? The Jews certainly could never have degenerated into ſuch a State of Licentiouſneſs, had there been a Court of ſeventy, or ſeventy-two Elders, choſen out of every Tribe, and inveſted with a ſupreme Authority to puniſh Criminals, and reform Abuſes; nor can we ſee, what Reaſon the Levite had to cut in Pieces the Body of his Concubine, abus'd by the Gibeonites, and to ſend it to the ſeveral Tribes, in Demand of Juſtice, if there had been ſuch a conſtant Tribunal, as this is repreſented, to reſort to.

Nor of the Kings.

THE Kings, who ſucceeded the Judges, acted in ſuch a Manner, as to make us believe, that there was no ſuch Thing, as a Sanhedrim, then in Being. (g) They diſplac'd High-Prieſts without Oppoſition; they wag'd War without adviſing with any; they made, and depos'd Judges, as they pleas'd; and, in ſhort, did every Thing, that other Princes are wont to do, without the Sanhedrim's ever interpoſing its Authority, that we read of, to ſtop the Courſe of their Extravagances, or curb their exorbitant Power. Some of theſe Kings, we know, were for extinguiſhing the true Worſhip of God, and eſtabliſhing Idolatry in its Stead: Here then was a proper Opportunity for this venerable Body to ſtep in, by condemning Idolatry in ſome publick Act of theirs, and oppoſing the Innovations of the Court. But of this we hear not one Word; neither do we find, that (h) the Prophets, who ſo ſeverely inveigh'd againſt the Wickedneſs of the People, even referr'd them to the Sanhedrim, or complain'd, that that Court was too remiſs or negligent in the Puniſhment of Crimes.

Nor in the Times of Ezra and Nehemiah.

IF ever Mention were to be made of this great Council, it would be, one would think, in the Books of Ezra and Nehemiah, which were written after the Babyloniſh Captivity, when there was no King in the Land, and, conſequently, a fit Opportunity for this Sanhedrim to appear; and yet, even here, we find ſeveral Matters of great Moment tranſacted, ſuch as the Reformation of the People's Manners, the Diſſolution of illegal Marriages, a Stop put to the Profanation of the Sabbath, and a Covenant of Obedience to God, made and ſign'd by the Deputies of the Prieſts, Levites, and common People; but not one Word of the great Sanhedrim all this while.

But of later Inſtitution.

IN ſhort, not only the ſacred Writers, but even Joſephus, Philo, Origen, Euſebius, and St Jerom, who were all well vers'd in the antient Government of the Jews, make no Manner of Mention of any ſuch Body of Men in the Times that we are now upon; and therefore we cannot but think, that this univerſal Silence, in Writers of all Kinds, is a very good Argument, that this ſupreme National Council did not then ſubſiſt. Its Name is confeſſedly of Greek Derivation; to which Purpoſe Livy (i) obſerves, that thoſe Senators, whom the Macedonians intruſted with the Adminiſtration of their Government, were called Synedri: And therefore it ſeems ſomewhat incongruous, to look into the firſt Centuries of the Jewiſh Church, for the Original of a Council, whoſe very Name is of later Extract.

But, in the Times of the Maccabees.

Before the Times of the Goſpel, wherein frequent Mention is made of this Council, we find it in ſo great Authority, as even to call Herod (k) (tho' then Governor of Galilee) upon his Trial for ſome Miſdemeanour: And therefore it is no improbable Conjecture, that, in the Time of the Maccabees, either Judas, or Jonathan, was the firſt Inſtitutor of it; and the Reaſon, they might have for this Inſtitution, might be, the Change, which they had made in the Nature of the Government, for which they wanted the Conſent of the People, or at leaſt of a Body, that repreſented them, that thereby they might act with more Authority: And, tho', as yet, they did not aſſume the Title of Kings, yet they thought it a Matter of Prudence to have their Reſolutions ratify'd by a Council.

The Maccabees, who, in all Probability, were the firſt Inſtitutors of this Council, would hardly exclude themſelves from it; and therefore, we may preſume, that the High-Prieſt was the ſettled Preſident, who, for that Reaſon, was called Naſi, or Prince of the Sanhedrim, and, in his Abſence had a Deputy, called Abbeth-din, or Father of the Houſe of Judgment, and a Sub-deputy, called Chacam, i. e. the Wiſe; but all the reſt had the common Name of Elders or Senators.

These Senators (which were uſually taken from other inferior Courts) were to be ſome Prieſts, and ſome Laymen, but all Perſons of untainted Birth, good Learning, and profound Knowledge in the Law, both written and traditional. All Eunuchs, Uſurers, Gameſters, thoſe that brought up Pigeons to decoy others to their Dove-Houſes, or made any Gain of their Fruits in the Sabbatical Year, all old Men, deform'd Perſons, and ſuch as had no Children, (becauſe they were ſuſpected of being cruel and hard-hearted) were excluded from this Council; and thoſe only, who were of mature Age, competent Fortunes, and comely Perſonages, were admitted to it.

The Room, in which this Council met, was a Rotunda, half of which was built without the Temple, and half within. The Naſi, or Prince of the Council, ſat upon a Throne elevated above the reſt, at the upper End of the Room, having his Deputy on his Right-Hand, and his Sub-deputy on his Left. The Senators were rang'd in order on each Side; and the Secretaries, who were to record the Matters, that came before them, were three; whereof one wrote the Sentences of thoſe that were abſolv'd, the other had the Condemnations under his Care, and the Third enter'd into their Books the ſeveral Pleadings of all contending Parties.

Its Authority.

The Vanity and ridiculous Pride of the Rabbins appear in nothing more, than in the exceſſive Power, which they give to this High-Court of Judicature. For, according to them, it not only decided ſuch Cauſes, as were brought before it, by Way of Appeal from other inferior Courts, but had under its Juriſdiction likewiſe † the King, the High-Prieſt, and Prophets. (l) The King, for Inſtance, if he offended againſt the Law; if he marry'd above eighteen Wives, if he kept too many Horſes, if he hoarded up too much Gold or Silver, the Sanhedrim had him ſtripp'd, and whipp'd in their Preſence. But Whipping, it ſeems, among the Jews (m), was not ſo ignominious a Thing, but that the

† This is directly the Opinion of Maimonides, (in Sanhed. Per. 2, 3.) but that learned Rabbi was ſtrangely prejudic'd in Favour of this great Council; and tho' Joſephus, is of the ſame Opinion, yet to allow ſuch an Extent of Juriſdiction to this Court, ſo as to inflict corporal Puniſhment upon the Perſons of their Kings, is contrary to the general Notions of Sovereignty, and the Laws of all Kingdoms and Nations; beſides that, the Holy Scriptures are abſolutely ſilent in this Particular, and nothing can be inferr'd from them, to countenance ſuch a coercive Power. Lewis's Hebrew Antiq. the King bore it, by Way of Penance, with great Patience, and himſelf made choice of the Perſon, that was to exerciſe this Diſcipline upon him. However this be, 'tis certain, that all private Controverſies of difficult Diſcuſſion, all Matters relating to Religion, and all important Affairs of State, were ſubmitted to the Determination of this auguſt Aſſembly, from whoſe Sentence no Appeal could be made, becauſe a Demurring to the Juriſdiction of their Court was puniſh'd by Death, i. e. while the Power of Life and Death was in their Hands; but how long this laſted, after that Judea became a Roman Province, has been a Matter of ſome Diſpute among the Learned.

Which, in ſome Caſes, extended to Life and Death.

JOSEPHUS (n) tells us expreſsly, that the Senate, and Emperors of Rome, took no ancient Rights from the Nations, whom they conquer'd; and, by the Words of Pilate concerning our Saviour Chriſt, (o) Take ye him, and judge him according to your Law, it ſeems, as tho' they ſtill retain'd their Power, tho, perhaps it might be under ſome Limitations.

UPON St Peter's (p) Speech before the Great Council, we find them ſo exaſperated againſt the Apoſtles, that they began to think of putting them all to Death, and might, very probably, have proceeded in their Deſign, had they not been diſſuaded from it by the wiſe Advice of Gamaliel. The Stoning of St Stephen was not the Effect of any haſty Judgment of ſome Zealots, but of the regular Proceedings of this Court. He (q) was brought before the Council, we read; falſe Witneſſes, accuſing him of Blaſphemy, were produc'd againſt him; in his own Defence, he made a long Diſcourſe; but his own Defence was not admitted, nor his Innocence acknowledg'd, and therefore they ſentenc'd him to be ſton'd (r) according to the Law.

St PAUL himſelf declares before this very Court, that, before his Converſion to Chriſtianity, (s) he perſecuted thoſe of that Way unto Death, and received Letters from the Eſtates of the Elders, or the Sanhedrim, to bring Chriſtians from Damaſcus to Jeruſalem in Bonds, in order to be puniſhed: Tertullus, who, in the Trial of this Apoſtle, was Council for the Sanhedrim, (t) tells Felix, the Governor of Judea, that, having apprehended the Criminal at the Bar, they thought to have proceeded againſt him according to their Law; but that the chief Captain, Lyſias, came upon them, and took him out of their Hands.

THE true Reaſon why Lyſias exerted his Power upon this Occaſion, and took him out of their Hands, was, becauſe they had accus'd him, not only of Blaſphemy, and Profanation of their Temple, but of Sedition likewiſe, which was a Crime falling more properly under the Cognizance of the civil Government, and for which, Paul was therefore brought before Felix, Feſtus, and Agrippa. (u) So that, from an Examination of theſe Particulars, wherein the Power of the Sanhedrim was concern'd, we may conclude, that, even after the Subjection of the Jewiſh State to the Roman Empire, this Sanhedrim had the Power of Life and Death in Crimes committed againſt their own Law; but that, in Matters of Sedition, and Crimes committed againſt the Civil Adminiſtration, the Roman Governors interpos'd their Authority, and, in Caſes of this Nature, took the Diſpenſation of Juſtice out of their Hands.

And Method of Proceeding.

(x) WHAT Formality was obſerv'd in bringing a Law-Suit before the Sanhedrim, Maimonides has in this Manner deſcrib'd: —— "The Buſineſs, ſays he, was firſt to be examin'd in the inferior Courts; but, if it could not be decided there, the Judges went to Jeruſalem to conſult the Judgment-Chamber, that ſat upon the Mount of the Temple. From this firſt Tribunal they proceeded to that, which

"which ſat at the Temple-Gate; and, if "the Matter was not determin'd there, "they came, at laſt, to the great Council-Chamber, which was held in one of the "Apartments belonging to the Temple; "and this laſt Council determin'd with "ſo much Juſtice, and Authority, that "there were no Diviſions ſeen, during all "the Time that the ſecond Temple laſted." And what Caution was taken, in paſſing the Sentence of Death upon Criminals, by the ſame Tribunal, the Jewiſh Doctors (if we will believe them) have thus inform'd us:—— "After the "Witneſſes were heard, and the Matter "in Queſtion decided, the Judge put off "the Sentence till next Morning. Hereupon the Sanhedrim went home, eat "but little, drank no Wine, and then "met again, two by two, in order to "weigh all the Particulars of the Trial. "The next Morning, he, that had given "his Opinion for condemning of the "Criminal, had Power to revoke it; but "he, who had once given it for abſolving "him, could not alter his Mind. As "ſoon as the Judge had pronounc'd Sentence, the Malefactor was conducted to "the Place of Execution, while an Herald, on Horſeback, proclaimed as he "he went along, Such an one is condemned "for ſuch a Crime; but, if any Body can "alledge any Thing in his Behalf, let him "ſpeak. If it happen'd that any one "came to the Gate of the Court, the "Door-Keeper made a Sign to the Herald "to bring back the Malefactor, while "two Judges were appointed to receive "what his Friend had to ſay in his Favour, and to conſider whether there "was any Thing material in it."

THESE Formalities are indeed related in the Miſhnah; but it is much to be queſtion'd, whether they were not invented ſince, on Purpoſe to recommend the Juſtice and Equity of the ancient Jewiſh Tribunals. For, beſides that no other Nation did ever yet obſerve ſuch favourable Proceedings, in Relation to thoſe that were found guilty, there is not the leaſt Mention of any Thing of this Kind in the ſacred Hiſtory; and in the Talmud itſelf we meet with Maxims, and Matter of Fact quite contrary to it. For (y) therein we are told, that, tho' a Priſoner declare upon Oath, at the Place of Execution, that he was innocent, and, in Confirmation of this, the falſe Witneſſes recanted; yet the Judges took no Notice of their Retraction, but only ſaid, Let the falſe Witneſs periſh; but a Judge cannot recal his Sentence, when once it is pronounced.

Inference from the Whole.

UPON the whole therefore we may obſerve, that what the Jewiſh Doctors tell us of the Origin, and Succeſſion, the Authority, and Proceedings of their Sanhedrim, is, in a great Meaſure fabulous; that the Council of ſeventy Men, which God inſtituted in he Wilderneſs, was deſign'd only to ſerve a particular Purpoſe, and was therefore of ſhort Continuance in the Jewiſh State; that, from the Time of Joſhua, till after the Return from the Babyloniſh Captivity, there are no Footſteps to be found, either in ſacred or profane Hiſtory, of ſuch an Aſſembly, as the Rabbins repreſent their Sanhedrim to have been; but that, in the Times of the Maccabees, we read of the Senate of the Nation, which, under the Aſmonæan Princes, grew into great Power, and, in the Days of our Saviour's Miniſtry, had Matters of the higheſt Conſequence committed to their Determination; till, in the final Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the Diſperſion of the Jewiſh Nation, the very Name and Authority of that Senate was entirely loſt.

The HISTORY.

Upon the Death of Epiphanes, Antiochus Eupater, a Minor, ſucceeds him, and is kept under the Tuition of Lyſias.

AFTER the Death of Antiochus Epiphanes (a), his Son Antiochus Eupater (a Minor of nine Years old) ſucceeded in the Throne of Syria. His Father, upon his Death-Bed, had conſtituted Philip, one of his chief Favourites, Regent of the Kingdom, during the Minority of his Son, and had deliver'd to him his Crown, his Signet, and other Enſigns of Royalty, giving him ſtrict Charge to educate him in ſuch a Manner, as would qualify him to reign well; but Philip, when he came to Antioch, found his Office uſurp'd by another. For Lyſias, who, in the King's Abſence, was left Governor in chief, hearing of the Death of Epiphanes, took Antiochus his Son, who was then under his Care, and, having plac'd him on the Throne, aſſum'd to himſelf the Tuition of his Perſon, and the Government of his Kingdom, without any Manner of Regard to the Will and Appointment, of the late King: And Philip, finding himſelf too weak at preſent to conteſt it with him, fled into Egypt, in Hopes of procuring ſome Aſſiſtance there, which would enable him, at one Time or other, to make good his Claim.

Jordan, into the Land of the Ammonites, wherein he defeated them in ſeveral Engagements; ſlew great Numbers of them; took Jabazah †, and its appendent Villages; and after his Return to Judea, when Timotheus, the Governor in thoſe Parts, pretended to follow him with a numerous Army, he fell upon him, and overthrew him with a great Slaughter, ſo that himſelf was forc'd to flee to Gazara, a City in the Tribe of Ephraim, where his Brother Chereas was Governor: But Judas, purſuing him thither, beſet the Place, took it in five Days, and there ſlew Chereas, Timotheus, and Apollophanes, another great Captain of the Syrian Forces.

In the mean Time, the heathen Nations about Galaad (e) had fallen upon the Jews, that dwelt in the Land of Tob, which lay on the Eaſt of Gilead; had ſlain to the Number of a Thouſand Men; taken their Goods for a Spoil; and carry'd away their Wives and Children into Captivity: Whereupon moſt of the other Jews, inhabiting thoſe Parts, betook themſelves to a ſtrong Fortreſs in Gilead, called Dathema, with a Reſolution to defend themſelves. This when the Heathens underſtood, they drew together, in a great Body under the Command of Timotheus, the Succeſſor, and (very probably) the Son of the late Timotheus, who was ſlain at Gazara, in order to beſiege them, while the Inhabitants of Tyre, Sidon, Ptolemais, and other Parts thereabout, were laying their Schemes to cut off all the Jews, that were in Galilee; ſo that Judas was ſent to, both from Gilead and Galilee, to come to the Succour and Aſſiſtance of his poor diſtreſſed Countrymen.

From 1 Macc. v. 1. 2 Macc. x. 11. and Joſ. lib. xii. c. 14. to the End of 1 and 2 Macc. and of Joſ. lib. xiii. c. 19.

(f) In this critical Juncture of Affairs he conſulted the Sanhedrim or general Council of the Nation; and, by their Advice, divided his Army into three Parts. With the firſt, which conſiſted of eight Thouſand Men, he, and Jonathan his Brother, march'd for the Relief of the Gileadites: With the ſecond, conſiſting of three Thouſand, Simon, another of his Brothers, was ſent into Galilee; and the reſt were left at Jeruſalem, under the Command of Joſeph, for the Defence of the Place, and the Country adjacent, but with a ſtrict Charge from Judas, not to enterprize any Thing againſt the Enemy, but to ſtand wholly upon the Defenſive, until he, and Simon, ſhould return again.

(g) JUDAS and Jonathan, paſſing the Jordan, and marching into Gilead, had Intelligence, that, at Baſſora, a Town of the Edomites, a great Number of Jews were impriſon'd, in order to be deſtroy'd, as ſoon as Dathema was taken: Whereupon, by haſty Marches, they came upon the City ſooner than was expected, and, having ſlain all the Males, taken their Spoils, and freed their Brethren, they ſet it on Fire, and ſo proceeded in their Way to Dathema. On the Morning, when they arriv'd, (for they march'd all Night) Timotheus, and his Men, had begun to ſtorm the Place; but Judas, coming upon them when they little expected ſo ſudden and violent an Aſſault, put them all to the Rout, and, in the Purſuit, ſlew eight Thouſand of them. He thence march'd his Army from Place to Place, where he underſtood that any Jews were oppreſſed, or impriſon'd; and having treated them in the ſame Manner, as he did Baſſora, ſlain all the Males, taken their Spoils, and ſet their Cities on Fire, he return'd to Jeruſalem.

While Judas and his Brother Jonathan were thus ſucceſsful in Gilead, the other Brother Simon was not idle in Galilee. For he defeated the Enemy (h) in ſeveral Encounters, drove them out of the Country, and purſu'd them with a great Slaughter to the very Gates of Ptolemais: And, being now ready to return, he took along with him all the Jews, Men, Women, Army thirty Thouſand Men, and (n) took him Priſoner; but, upon Condition, that he ſhould releaſe all the Jews, that were Captives in any Places under his Command, he gave him both his Life and his Liberty. Underſtanding however, that a great Part of the vanquiſh'd Army had fled to Carnion, a City in Arabia, he purſu'd them thither, and, having taken the Place, ſlew twenty-five Thouſand more of Timotheus's Forces, that had there taken Refuge.

In his Return to Jeruſalem, he took along with him all the Jews, that were in the Land of Gilead, for the ſame Reaſon, that Simon had carry'd them out of the Land of Galilee the Year before, viz. to inhabit and fortify the Cities of Judea, which were not ſufficiently peopled: (o) But, being in his Way to paſs through Ephron †, a ſtrong City, and well garriſon'd by Lyſias, the People refus'd to open their Gates; whereupon he aſſaulted the Place, and, having taken it by Storm, put all the Males (to the Number of twenty-five Thouſand Perſons) to the Sword, took their Spoils, and raz'd the City to the Ground. After this, re-paſſing Jordan, and returning to Jeruſalem, (p) he, and his Company, went up to the Temple to give God Thanks for the great Succeſs, wherewith he had been pleas'd to proſper this Expedition, and for his ſingular and wonderful Protection of them, in that, notwithſtanding all the hazardous Enterpriſes they had been engag'd in, they had not ſo much as loſt one Man.

This continu'd Series of Succeſs gave Judas (q) Encouragement to carry the War into the Southern Parts of Idumæa, where he took, and diſmantled Hebron the Metropolis thereof; and, thence paſſing into the Land of the Philiſtines, took Azotus, formerly called Aſhdod; pulled down their heathen Altars, burnt their carv'd Images, and ſpoiled the Place; and having done the like to all the other Cities of that Country, where he prevailed, he led his victorious Army, laden with the Spoils of their Enemies, back again to Judea.

The Fortreſs of Acra (r) ſtill held out for the King of Syria, and the Garriſon, conſiſting of Macedonians and Renegado Jews, was very troubleſome to ſuch, as reſorted to the Temple. Judas therefore thought it highly neceſſary to attempt the Reduction of the Place; and, having got Engines † and Machines for that Purpoſe, he ſoon ſtraiten'd the Garriſon. The Beſieg'd however found Means to acquaint King Antiochus with their Diſtreſs, who promis'd to relieve them and, for that End, gather'd an Army of an hundred and ten Thouſand Foot, twenty Thouſand Horſe, thirty-two Elephants with Caſtles on their Backs full of Archers, and three hundred arm'd Chariots of War. With all this Force Antiochus, marching to the Relief of the Fortreſs of Jeruſalem, paſs'd through Idumæa, where, in his Way, he laid Siege to Bethzura, which made a brave Defence; for the Inhabitants, by bold Sallies, ſo burnt and diſorder'd his Engines, that he ſpent much Time about it to no Purpoſe. Judas, all this while, preſs'd the Fortreſs of Acra with all his Might; but, fearing leſt the Bethzurians ſhould be forc'd to ſubmit to the ſuperior Strength of the Enemy, he left the Siege of it, and went to the Relief of them.

Demetrius Soter recovers the Kingdom of Syria, and puts Eupater to Death.

All this while Antiochus Eupater held the Crown of Syria by an unjuſt Title: For Demetrius, the Son of Seleucus Philopater, elder Brother to Antiochus Epiphanes, was the legal Heir thereof. He, in Exchange for his Uncle Antiochus, had been ſent an Hoſtage to Rome, the very Year that his Father dy'd; and Antiochus, returning at the very Nick of Time, was unanimouſly declar'd King in the Abſence and Minority of the rightful Heir. But Demetrius, being now in the twenty-third Year of his Age, when his Uncle dy'd, and his Son Eupater was appointed King in his Room, * thought it high Time to put in his Claim; and, accordingly, mov'd the Senate of Rome for their Aſſiſtance, in the Recovery of his Father's Kingdom; and, as an Inducement thereunto, he alledg'd, that, having been bred up in that City from his Childhood, he ſhould alway look on Rome, as his Country, the Senators, as his Fathers, and their Sons, as his Brothers. But the Senate, having more Regard to their own Intereſt, than the Right of Demetrius, and judging it more to their Advantage to have a Boy reign in Syria, (as Eupater then was) than a Man of mature Underſtanding, as they knew Demetrius to be) inſtead of aſſerting his Right, to whom it belong'd, they confirm'd Eupater in the Kingdom.

DEMETRIUS, being excluded from all Hopes of any Favour, or Aſſiſtance from the Senate, had nothing left to do, but to endeavour to make his Eſcape from Rome, and to riſque his Fortune in his own Country: This he did; (b) and, landing at Tripolis in Syria, made it believ'd, that he was ſent by the Roman Senate (which would ſupport his Pretenſions) to take Poſſeſſion of the Kingdom. Hereupon Eupater's Cauſe being in the general Opinion given up for loſt, every one deſerted from him to Demetrius; nay, the very Soldiers ſeiz'd on him, and the Regent Lyſias, with an Intent to deliver them up to this New-Comer, as ſoon as he arriv'd at Antioch; but he, refuſing to ſee them, order'd them both to be put to Death, and ſo, without any farther Oppoſition, became thoroughly ſettled in the whole Kingdom.

Alcimus the High-Prieſt's Perfidy and Cruelty.

He had not been long ſo ſettled, before Alcimus (who, on the Death of Menelaus, had by Antiochus Eupater been conſtituted High-Prieſt of the Jews, but was never acknowledg'd as ſuch, becauſe, in the Time of Perſecution, he had apoſtatiz'd) came, and implor'd his Protection againſt Judas Maccabæus, and his Party; accuſing them of being Enemies to the Kings of Syria, Fomenters of Sedition, and Murtherers, and Perſecutors of his moſt faithful Subjects. By this Repreſentation Demetrius was ſo exaſperated, that (c) he immediately order'd Bacchides, the Governor of Meſopotamia, to march with an Army into Judea; and, having confirm'd Alcimus in the Office of High-Prieſt, join'd him in the ſame Commiſſion for carrying on the War in Judea.

* What excited him the rather to do it at this Time, was the Murther of Cn. Octavius: For the Roman Senate, having ſent three Ambaſſadors into Syria, whereof Octavius was chief, to adminiſter the Affairs of the Nation, during the Minority of the King, theſe Ambaſſadors, finding that there were more Ships in the Navy, and more Elephants in the Army, than the Treaty made with Antiochus the Great, after the Battle of Mount Siphilus, allow'd of, caus'd the Ships to be burnt, and the Elephants to be ſlain, that exceeded the Number ſtipulated. This occaſion'd great Murmurings and Diſcontent among the People, and provok'd one Leptines to ſuch a Degree of Indignation, that he fell upon Octavius, as he was anointing himſelf in the Gymnaſium at Laodicea, and there ſlew him. Eupater and Lyſias did all they could to clear themſelves from having any Hand in this vile Act, and, to this Purpoſe, ſent Ambaſſadors to Rome to inform the Senate of their Innocence; but the Senate, after having heard what the Ambaſſadors had to ſay, gave them no Anſwer, expreſſing their Reſentment by their angry Silence: And therefore Demetrius thought this no improper Time to move the Senate, when he perceiv'd them thus out of Humour with Eupater, the Uſurper of his Kingdom. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 162.

NO ſooner were they arriv'd in Judea with a conſiderable Body of Troops, but the Scribes † and Doctors of the Law met together, and conſulted, what they were to do upon this Occaſion. Very deſirous they were to have an High-Prieſt again ſettled among them, and not at all ſuſpicious, that any of the Sons of Aaron would do them any Wrong; and therefore, upon Promiſe of ſafe Conduct, they waited upon them, in order to bring Matters to a peaceable Accommodation: But the perfidious Alcimus, having got them in his Power, caus'd ſixty of them to be ſeiz'd, and all put to Death, on one Day, which made the People more cautious of him for the future.

Judas expels him the Country, and quite deſtroys Nicanor and his Army, for which the Jews keep an annual Feſtival.

BACCHIDES however, returning to Antioch, put Alcimus in Poſſeſſion of the Country, and left him ſome Forces to ſupport him in it. With theſe the wicked High-Prieſt did much Miſchief, and committed many Murthers upon thoſe that were not for him: But, as ſoon as Judas (d) with his Men appear'd in the Field again, he left the Country for Fear, and return'd to the King with freſh Accuſations againſt him, and his Brothers, who, as long as they were permitted to live, (as he told him) would never ſuffer the King's Authority to take Place, nor any laſting Peace to be eſtabliſh'd in the Country. So that, upon this Repreſentation, Demetrius (e) ſent another Army againſt the Jews, under the Command of Nicanor, with ſtrict Orders to deſtroy Judas, diſperſe his Followers, and thoroughly eſtabliſh Alcimus in the High-Prieſt's Office.

NICANOR was not inſenſible of the Courage and Conduct of Judas; and therefore, loth to come to an Engagement with him, he endeavour'd to compoſe Matters by a Treaty, and accordingly enter'd into Articles of Peace with him: But the High-Prieſt, (f) not liking the Peace, becauſe his Intereſt (as he imagin'd) was not ſufficiently ſecur'd in it, went, the third Time, to the King, and ſo poſſeſs'd him againſt it, that he refus'd to ratify what was agreed, and ſent his poſitive Commands to Nicanor, to go on with the War, and not to ceaſe proſecuting it, until he had either ſlain Judas, or taken him Priſoner, and ſent him bound to Antioch. Upon theſe Inſtructions, Nicanor being oblig'd, tho' much againſt his Will, to alter his Conduct, march'd his Army up to Jeruſalem, and, deſigning, by Craft and Treachery, to get Judas into his Power, (g) invited him to a Conference, which the other, upon Preſumption of the depending Peace, readily comply'd with, and came to the Place appointed: But, when he found that an Ambuſh was laid for his Apprehenſion, he fled from his Preſence, and ſo began the War afreſh. This War was carry'd on with various Succeſſes for ſome Time, and with ſome particular Cruelties on Nicanor's Side †, but, at length, coming to a deciſive Battle near a Village called Bethoron, Nicanor was ſlain in the firſt Onſet, which the reſt of the Army perceiving, caſt away their Arms, and fled; ſo that, what with Judas's purſuing them, and the Country riſing upon them as they endeavour'd to eſcape, not one of the whole Army (which conſiſted of five and thirty

Him Nicanor was reſolv'd to cut off, the rather, becauſe he thought it would be an Act of high Diſpleaſure to the Jews; and therefore ſent a Party to ſeize him. Razis was, at this Time, at a Caſtle of his, which he had in the Country, where he defended himſelf againſt them for ſome Time with great Valour, but, at length, finding that he could hold out no longer, he fell upon his Sword. After the Purſuit was ended, the victorious Army, returning to the Field of Battle, took the Spoils of the Slain; and, having found Nicanor's Body among the Dead, they cut off his Head, and his Right-Hand, which he ſtretch'd out ſo proudly in his Threatenings againſt the Temple, and hang'd them up upon one of the Towers of Jeruſalem. A general Joy overſpread the whole City upon this Occaſion, and, in Commemoration of ſo great a Deliverance, it was ordain'd, that the thirteenth Day of their Month Adar, (which anſwers in Part to our February) the Day, whereon this Victory was obtain'd, ſhould be ever after obſerv'd as an anniverſary Day of ſolemn Thankſgiving; and ſo it is kept even to this preſent Time, under the Name of the Day of Nicanor.

To this Purpoſe he ſent Jaſon and Eupolemus, Men of Sufficiency for ſuch an Embaſſy, to Rome, who were kindly receiv'd by the Senate, and from them obtain'd a Decree, acknowledging the Jews for Friends, and Allies to the Romans, a League of mutual Defence between them, and a Letter to Demetrius, requiring him, upon the Peril of having War denounc'd againſt him, to deſiſt from giving the Jews any farther Moleſtation: But before the Return of theſe Embaſſadors Judas was dead.

(i) For Demetrius, having receiv'd an Account of the Defeat and Death of Nicanor, ſent Bacchides (with Alcimus) the ſecond Time, into Judea, at the Head of a very numerous Army, made up of the prime Forces, and Flower of his Militia. Judas, at their Coming, had no more than three Thouſand Men to oppoſe them; and theſe were ſo terrify'd with the Strength and Number of the Enemy, that they deſerted their General, all to eight hundred Men. However, with theſe few, he reſolv'd to try his Fortune; and when his Soldiers advis'd him to retreat, and wait for a Supply: "God forbid, ſays he, that "the Sun ſhould ever ſee me turn my "Back to my Enemies. If Providence "has ordain'd that we ſhould die, let us "die manfully, fighting for our Brethren; "and let us never ſtain the Honour of "our former valorous Deeds by an ignominious Flight:" And ſo animating them by his own Example, he charg'd, and broke the right Wing, where Bacchides commanded in Perſon, and purſu'd them as far as the Mountains of Azotus; but, having not Forces enough to keep the left Wing in Play, he was follow'd and encompaſs'd. The Action was very hot and obſtinate: The Jews ſold their Lives at a dear Rate: Their General did every valiant Thing, that Man could do; till, being overpower'd by Numbers, he was ſlain, and his Men, thus depriv'd of their heroic Leader, were forc'd to fly.

Thus fell the great Judas Maccabæus, the Reſtorer and Preſerver of the true Worſhip of God, and the Reliever and Protector of his diſtreſs'd Countrymen, while he liv'd. His two Brothers, Simon and Jonathan, took up his dead Body, and conveying it to the City of Modin, they there bury'd it, in the Sepulchre of his Anceſtors, with all the funeral Honour, that was due to the Memory of ſo brave a Man, and ſo excellent a Commander.

† Joſephus takes notice, that this was the very firſt Treaty, that ever the Jews made with the Romans, which is very probable from the Manner, in which the Author of the firſt Book of Maccabees prefaces his Account of it; for there it appears, that the Jews, till this Time, had very little Knowledge of the Roman State. Joſ. Antiq. lib. xii. c. 17. and 1 Maccab. viii. 1.

Jonathan ſucceeds his Brother, in the Command of the Jewiſh Forces, makes a brave Stand, and afterwards a Peace with Bacchides.

From 1 Macc. v. 1. 2 Macc. x. 11. and Joſ. lib. xii. c. 14. to the End of 1 and 2 Macc. and of Joſ. lib. xiii. c. 19.

AFTER the Death of Judas, Bacchides made himſelf Maſter of the Country, and us'd all the Friends and Adherents to the Maccabees, wherever he found them, with the utmoſt Barbarity; (k) ſo that Jonathan was, in a Manner, neceſſitated to take upon him the Command in the Room of his Brother Judas, and to become the Captain of all thoſe, who had preſerv'd their Integrity. To this Purpoſe, taking with him his Brother Simon, and thoſe that had reſorted to him, he retir'd into the Wilderneſs of Tekoa, and there encamp'd, with a Moraſs, on one Side, and the River Jordan on the other, ſo that they could not eaſily be come at. But Bacchides (l), marching after them, and, having made himſelf Maſter of the Paſs, that led to their Encampment, aſſaulted them in it on the Sabbath-Day, expecting to meet with no Reſiſtance. Jonathan however, reminding his Men of the Determination, that was made in this Caſe in the Time of his Father Mattathias, encourag'd them to diſpute it bravely; which accordingly they did, even till they had ſlain about a Thouſand of the Aſſailants: But then, finding that they ſhould be overpower'd with Numbers, they caſt themſelves into the River, and, by ſwimming over to the other Side, made their Eſcape.

BACCHIDES thought it not proper to purſue them any farther, but rather to go back to Jeruſalem; where, having fortify'd Mount Acra, and the neighbouring Towns, and put Garriſons in them, he took Hoſtages for the Fidelity of the Inhabitants, and ſo return'd to Syria †: But, before he departed, Alcimus, the great Troubler of Iſrael, and whom he had, not long before, ſettled in the High-Prieſthood, was ſmitten with a Palſy, whereof he ſuddenly dy'd; ſo that the Land had Reſt for two Years, and Jonathan an Opportunity of bringing his Affairs to ſome better Settlement in Judea.

(m) THE adverſe Party however was not long eaſy; but, at the End of two Years, prevailed with Bacchides to return with his Army into Judea, propoſing to ſeize Jonathan, and all his Abettors, as ſoon as he was arriv'd with his Forces to ſupport the Enterprize: But when Jonathan had Intelligence of this, he laid hold on fifty of the principal Conſpirators, and put them to Death, which quelled all the reſt. Being ſenſible however, that he could not ſtand againſt ſo great a Force, as Bacchides had brought againſt him, he retir'd to Bethbaſi, a Place ſtrongly ſituate in the Wilderneſs, and here he purpos'd to make a Stand againſt the Enemy.

BACCHIDES, as ſoon as he arriv'd in Judea, went after Jonathan; but, upon his Approach, Jonathan left Simon his Brother with one Part of the Forces to defend the Place, whilſt himſelf, with the other Part, took the Field to harraſs the Enemy abroad: In which Capacities they both acted ſo well, Jonathan, by cutting off ſeveral of their Parties, and now and then falling upon the Outſkirts of their Army employ'd in the Siege; and Simon, by making frequent Sallies upon them, and burning the Engines they had brought againſt the Place; that Bacchides, (n) growing weary of this Undertaking, and not a little enrag'd at thoſe, who were the Occaſion of his Return and Diſgrace, put ſeveral of them to Death. This Opportunity Jonathan laid hold on, and therefore ſent Meſſengers to him, to deſire an Accommodation, which Bacchides readily came into, ſo that a Peace was concluded. The Priſoners, whom he had in his Cuſtody, were all reſtor'd, and himſelf took an Oath, never to moleſt the Jews any more:

† It is moſt likely, that Demetrius had, by this Time, receiv'd the Letters, which were ſent to him by the Romans in Behalf of the Jews, and thereupon gave Bacchides Orders to ſurceaſe his Vexations of that People; and that, in Obedience to theſe Orders, Bacchides took occaſion, on the Death of Alcimus, to leave the Country. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 160.

more: Which accordingly he fulfilled; for, as ſoon as the Peace was ratify'd on both Sides, he went away, and never more return'd into the Country.

WHEN the Wars were thus happily ended, Jonathan retir'd to Michmaſh, a Town about nine Miles Diſtance to the North of Jeruſalem, where he govern'd the People according to Law; cut off all thoſe that had apoſtatiz'd from him; and, as far as in him lay, reform'd all Abuſes, both in Church and State; repairing the City of Jeruſalem; fortifying it on every Side; and cauſing the Wall, round the Mount of the Temple, which had been pulled down, to be re-built.

Balas (who took upon him the Name of Alexander) uſurps the Kingdom of Syria, and is join'd by Jonathan.

From 1 Macc. v. 1. 2 Macc. x. 11. and Joſ. lib. xii. c. 14. to the End of 1 and 2 Macc. and of Joſ. lib. xiii. c. 19.

AT this Time Alexander (for that was the Name which he aſſum'd) pretending to be the Son of Antiochus Epiphanes †, laid Claim to the Syrian Monarchy; and, being well ſupported by foreign Powers, ſeiz'd Ptolemais, a City of Paleſtine, and was making Preparations to drive Demetrius out of the Throne. On this Occaſion the two Rival Princes did both make their Court to Jonathan, as thinking him a good Ally: Demetrius (o) ſent him Letters conſtituting him his General in Judea with full Authority to raiſe Forces, and to provide them with Arms to come to his Aſſiſtance, and commanding, at the ſame Time, that Hoſtages, which were in the Fortreſs of Jeruſalem, ſhould be deliver'd to him; which accordingly was done. (p) Alexander, on the other Hand † having ſent him a purple Robe, and a Crown of Gold, as Enſigns of great Dignity, made him a Grant of the High-Prieſthood, and of the Honour to be called the King's Friend. Demetrius hearing of this, (q) and being reſolv'd to outbid Alexander, made him ſtill more advantageous Offers: But the Jews, remembering what a bitter Enemy he had been to all thoſe that had adher'd to the true Intereſt of their Country, and ſuſpecting that theſe Offers proceeded only from the Neceſſity of his Affairs, which would certainly be revok'd as ſoon as the Storm was blown over, reſolv'd rather to enter into League with Alexander: And therefore Jonathan †, accepting of his Grant of the High-Prieſt's Office, did, on the Feaſt of Tabernacles, which ſoon enſu'd, put † In the Reign of Antiochus Epiphanes, one Heraclides was his Treaſurer in the Province of Babylon, while his Brother Timarchus, another Favourite of the King's, was Governor of it; but, on the coming of Demetrius to the Crown, they were both found guilty of great Miſdemeanours, for which Timarchus was put to Death, but Heraclides made his Eſcape out of the Kingdom, and took up his Reſidence at Rhodes. While he was there, Demetrius, having given himſelf up entirely to Luxury and Sloth, ſo neglected the Affairs of Government, that his Subjects juſtly took a Diſguſt againſt him, and were ready to enter into any Conſpiracy to depoſe him; which Heraclides underſtanding, in Hopes of making a Revolution in Favour of himſelf, he contriv'd this Plot:——— In the Iſle of Rhodes there was a Youth, of a very mean and obſcure Condition, called Balas, but, in other Reſpects, every Way fit for his Purpoſe. Him he prevailed with to paſs for the Son of Antiochus Epiphanes; and, having thoroughly inſtructed him how to act his Part, he carry'd him to Rome, where, by his Craft and earneſt Sollicitations, he not only prevailed with the Senate to own him, but procur'd a Decree from them likewiſe, permitting him to recover the Kingdom of Syria out of the Hands of Demetrius, and promiſing their Aſſiſtance in doing it. By Virtue of this Decree he rais'd Forces, and, with them ſailing to Ptolemais in Paleſtine, ſeiz'd that City; and there, by the Name of Alexander, Son of Antiochus Epiphanes, took upon him to be King of Syria. Great Numbers, out of Diſaffection to Demetrius, flock'd to him; ſo that, at length, Demetrius being defeated and ſlain, Alexander obtain'd the full Poſſeſſion of the Syrian Empire. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 152.

put on the pontifical Robe, and officiated as High-Prieſt, after that the Place, from the Death of Alcimus, had been vacant ſeven Years.

In the mean Time, the two contending Kings, having drawn together all their Forces, committed the Determination of their Cauſe to a deciſive Battle, in which Demetrius † being defeated and ſlain, and Alexander, by this Victory, made Maſter of the whole Syrian Empire, (r) he ſent to Ptolemy, King of Egypt, demanding his Daughter Cleopatra in Marriage. To this Marriage (which was perform'd at Ptolemais) Jonathan the High-Prieſt was invited, and was receiv'd by both the Kings (for Ptolemy was likewiſe at the Nuptials) with great Favour, eſpecially by Ptolemy, who, to do him a particular Honour, caus'd him to be cloath'd in Purple, and to take Place, near himſelf, among the firſt Princes of his Kingdom; and, beſides making him General of all his Forces in Judea, gave him an Office † of great Credit and Renown in his Palace.

But Alexander himſelf did not long enjoy this proſperous State. Demetrius (s), the Son of the late Demetrius, reſolving to revenge his Father's Death, and recover his Kingdom, came from Crete, (where he and his Brother Antiochus had been conceal'd in the late Troubles) and, with an Army of Mercenaries, landed in Cilicia. of a different Family, was put into the Office by the Command of the King of Syria. Whether the Aſmonæans were of the Race of Jozadack, or not, 'tis no where ſaid, but 'tis certain, that they were of the Courſe of Joarib (1 Maccab. ii. 1.) which was the firſt Claſs of the Sons of Aaron; and therefore, upon the Failure of the former pontifical Family, they had the beſt Right to ſucceed. With this Right it was, that Jonathan took the Office; and in his Family it became ſettled, and continu'd for ſeveral Deſcents, until the Time of Herod, who, from an Office of Inheritance, chang'd it into that of arbitrary Will and Pleaſure. Whoever had the Power after him, put the High-Prieſts in or out, as they thought fit, till, at length, the Office was extinguiſh'd by the Deſtruction of the Temple by the Romans. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 253.

† In the firſt Onſet, Demetrius's left Wing put the oppoſite Wing of the Enemy to Flight; but, as he purſu'd them too far, (a Fault in War, which has loſt many Victories) by the Time that they came back, the right Wing, in which Demetrius fought in Perſon, was overborne, and he ſlain in the Rout: For, his Horſe having plung'd him into a Bog, they, who purſu'd him, ſhot at him there with their Arrows, till he died. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. c. 5. Juſtin, lib. xxxv. c. 1. Apion, de Syriacis, and Polybius, lib. iii.

† Apollonius was a common Name among the Syro-Macedonians and Greeks; and, in the Hiſtory of the Maccabees, we find ſo many mention'd of that Name, that, for the Prevention of Miſtakes, it may not be improper to give ſome Account of the ſeveral Perſons, who bore it. The firſt, that we meet with of that Name, is Apollonius, the Son of Thraſeas, 2 Maccab. iii. 5. who was Governor of Cœlo-Syria and Phœnicia, under Seleuchus Philopater, when Heliodorus came to Jeruſalem, to rob the Temple. He was chief Miniſter of State to Seleuchus; but, on the Acceſſion of his Brother Antiochus Epiphanes to the Crown, he left Syria and retir'd to Miletus. He had a Son of his own Name, that was bred up at Rome, and reſided with Demetrius, (the Son of Seleuchus Philopater) who was then an Hoſtage in that Place. When Demetrius recover'd the Crown of Syria, this Apollonius became his prime Favourite, and was made Governor of Cœlo-Syria and Phœnicia, the ſame Government which his Father held under Seleuchus Philopater; and this I take to be the ſame Apollonius, who, being continu'd in the ſame Government by Alexander, now revolted from him, to embrace the Intereſt of Demetrius, the Son of his old Maſter, and, to engage Jonathan to do the like, march'd his Forces againſt him. Another Apollonius is ſpoken of, 2 Maccab. iv. 21. as the chief Miniſter of Antiochus Epiphanes, who from him was ſent as Ambaſſador, firſt to Rome, and afterwards to Ptolemy Philomater, King of Egypt; and him I take to be the ſame, that, with a Detachment of two and twenty Thouſand Men, was ſent to deſtroy Jeruſalem, and build a Fortreſs on Mount Acra. There are, beſides theſe, two other Perſons, in the Hiſtory of the Maccabees mention'd under the Name of Apollonius. The former of theſe, being Governor of Samaria in the Time of Antiochus Epiphanes, 1 Maccab. iii. 10, was ſlain in Battle by Judas Maccabæus; and the latter (who is called the Son of Genneus, 2 Maccab. xii. 2.) being Governor of ſome Toparchy in Paleſtine, under Antiochus Eupater, did then ſignalize himſelf by being a great Enemy of the Jews. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 148.

Jonathan to quit Alexander's Party, and join with Demetrius (t), march'd an Army as far as Jamnia, and from thence ſent a Challenge to Jonathan to leave his Faſtneſſes on the Mountains, and come, and fight him on the Plains.

He vanquiſhes Apollonius*'s Army, and is again rewarded.*

PROVOK'D at this Meſſage, Jonathan march'd out with ten Thouſand Men. He firſt took Joppa, in the Sight of Apollonius and his Army, and then, joining Battle, not only vanquiſh'd him in the open Field, but purſu'd his broken Forces to Azotus. Here was a famous Temple of the God Dagon, unto which the Syrians fled for Shelter; but Jonathan, entering the Town, burnt it to the Ground, and ſet the Temple on Fire; ſo that the Number of thoſe, who were ſlain in Battle, and periſh'd by the Flames, amounted to no leſs than eight Thouſand Men. After this, having treated the neighbouring Towns, that belong'd to the Enemy, in the like Manner, he led his victorious Army back to Jeruſalem, loaded with Spoils; whither he had not been long come, before Alexander, hearing of his renown'd Actions in Favour of his Cauſe, (u) ſent him a * Buckle of Gold, ſuch as none, but the Royal Family, were allow'd to wear, and, at the ſame Time, made him a Preſent of the City of Ecron, and all the Territories thereunto belonging.

Alexander*'s Plot againſt his Father-in-Law,* Ptolemy Philometor, for which he is vanquiſh'd and ſlain.

(x) WHEN Apollonius, Governor of Cœlo-Syria, had declar'd for Demetrius, Alexander called in his Father-in-Law, Ptolemy Philometor, to his Aſſiſtance. He march'd into Paleſtine with a great Army; and as he paſs'd, in all the Cities (which, by Alexander's Orders, open'd their Gates to him) he left a good Number of his own Soldiers to ſtrengthen the Garriſons. But, whether or no this might give ſome Umbrage to Alexander, ſo it was, that Ptolemy diſcover'd a Deſign, which Ammonius, Alexander's great Favourite, had form'd, to have him cut off at his coming to Ptolemais; and upon his demanding Juſtice to be done to the Traitor, by Alexander's refuſing to give him up, he plainly perceiv'd, that the King was a Party to the Treaſon, and thence began to harbour an implacable Hatred againſt him.

From 1 Macc. v. 1. 2 Macc. x. 11. and Joſ. lib. xii. c. 14. to the End of 1 and 2 Macc. and of Joſ. lib. xiii. c. 19.

HE therefore march'd his Army to Antioch; and, having taken his Daughter from Alexander, gave her to his Rival Demetrius, (and with her) Aſſurance, to reſtore him to his Father's Throne. (y) The Antiochians, taking the Opportunity of Ptolemy's Approach to execute their Reſentments upon Ammonius, roſe in a Tumult, and ſlew him; and then, opening their Gates to Ptolemy, were all diſpos'd to make him their King; but he, modeſtly declining that Offer, recommended to them the Reſtoration of Demetrius, the true Heir: Whereupon Demetrius was receiv'd into the City, and plac'd on the Throne of his Anceſtors.

ALEXANDER, who was then in Cilicia, hearing of this, came with all his Forces towards Antioch, waſting the Country with Fire and Sword; but when Ptolemy, with his new Son-in-Law, met him, and gave him Battle, his Army was routed, and himſelf was forc'd to fly to Arabia, where Zabdiel, King of the Country, cut off his Head, and ſent it as a Preſent to Ptolemy, who was not a little pleas'd with the Sight of it. His Joys however did not laſt long; for, in five Days Time, he dy'd of the Wounds, he had receiv'd in Battle, leaving Demetrius in quiet Poſſeſſion of his Father's Kingdom, which he having recover'd by Virtue of this Victory, did thenceforward take upon him the Name of Nicanor, i. e. Conqueror.

Jonathan pacifies Demetrius, and helps him with his Forces to reduce Antioch, but is badly rewarded for it.

From 1 Macc. v. 1. 2 Macc. x. 11. and Joſ. lib. xii. c. 14. to the End of 1 and 2 Macc. and of Joſ. lib. xiii. c. 19.

During theſe Tranſactions, Jonathan (z) laid Siege to the Fortreſs at Jeruſalem; but ſome of the Garriſon, eſcaping by Night, came and acquainted Demetrius with it, who thereupon march'd from Antioch with an Army to relieve it. But, coming to Ptolemais he ſtopp'd there, and ſent for Jonathan to appear before him, and anſwer to ſuch Accuſations, as were preferr'd againſt him. Jonathan went thither, tho' he order'd the Siege ſtill to go on; and, when he came to Demetrius, by his rich Preſents and wiſe Management, he ſo mollify'd the King, and inſinuated himſelf into his good Graces, that he not only confirm'd him in the Poſſeſſion of what he had, but honour'd him likewiſe with many new Favours, and, upon the Payment of three hundred Talents, agreed to exempt from all Tolls, Taxes, and Tributes, all the Places, that were under his Government.

JONATHAN, upon his Return to Jeruſalem, preſs'd the Siege of the Fortreſs very cloſely; but finding little or no Succeſs therein, he ſent an Embaſſy (a) to Demetrius, deſiring him to withdraw the Garriſon, which he could not expel. This, and much more Demetrius promis'd to do for him, if he would but ſend him ſome Forces to reduce the Inhabitants of Antioch, who, incens'd by his Cruelty and Oppreſſion, had taken up Arms againſt him. Jonathan immediately diſpatch'd three Thouſand choice Men to his Aid, who, coming to Antioch, when the People had beſet the Palace with an Intent to murther the Tyrant, (as they called him) fell on with Fire and Sword, and having burnt a great Part of the City, and ſlain of the Inhabitants about an hundred Thouſand Perſons, oblig'd the reſt to have Recourſe to the King's Clemency, and pray for Peace. But all this Service availed nothing. Demetrius, (b) ſeeing this Storm overpaſt, forgot the Bargain, which he had made with Jonathan at Ptolemais; and (tho' he had receiv'd the three hundred Talents in Lieu of them) threatened him with military Execution, unleſs he ſent the Taxes and Tribute which were uſually paid by his Predeceſſors: And would certainly have done all that he had threatened, had not Tryphon found out another Employ for his Arms.

Tryphon overcomes Demetrius, and murthers Jonathan and his two Sons together, with the young King whom he had ſet up.

This Tryphon had formerly ſerv'd Alexander, as Governor of Antioch, but, in the preſent King's Reign, was laid aſide. Obſerving however, that the Cruelty and Tyranny, which was every where practis'd; the diſbanding the Syrian Soldiers, and retaining only Foreigners in Pay, together with many more Grievances, which the People labour'd under; had quite alienated their Hearts, and made them ready for a general Defection, he thought this no unfit Opportunity to put in Practice his long-concerted Scheme of advancing himſelf to the Crown of Syria.

To this Purpoſe he goes into Arabia (c); gets Antiochus, Son of the late Alexander, into his Hands; brings him into Syria; claims the Kingdom for him; and, to ſupport this Claim, all the Soldiers, whom Demetrius had diſbanded, and ſeveral others, whom his ill Conduct had made his Enemies, flock in great Numbers to the Pretender. With theſe Tryphon marches againſt Demetrius; vanquiſhes him in Battle; forces him into Seleucia; and, having taken Poſſeſſion of Antioch, places Antiochus upon the Throne, and gives him the Name of Theos, or the Divine.

The ill Return, which Demetrius made Jonathan, was, doubtleſs, the chief Reaſon for his declaring for this new King; (d) who, by the Advice of thoſe, that were about him, took care, not only to confirm him in the Office of High-Prieſt, and in all his other Places and Dignities, but to make likewiſe his Brother Simon Commander of all his Forces, from Tyre, to the Frontiers of Egypt. Defection from him, Demetrius ſent all the Troops that were left in Cælo-Syria, and Phœnicia, to chaſtize him for it: But he not only repuls'd them twice, but took Gaza likewiſe, and all the Country, as far as Damaſcus; while Simon (e), whom he left in Judea, penetrating into the Land of the Philiſtines, took Joppa, and plac'd a ſtrong Garriſon in it. Tryphon, who had no other Aim in getting young Antiochus into his Hands, than to ſerve his wicked Purpoſes, knew very well, that, as long as Jonathan continu'd in his Intereſt, it would be in vain for him to attempt the Crown; and (f) therefore, having prevailed with him to diſmiſs his Army, and to accompany him to Ptolemais (under Pretence of putting that Place into his Hands) with no more than a Thouſand Men, they were no ſooner enter'd, but the Garriſon, having ſhut the Gates upon them, ſeiz'd Jonathan, and put his Men to the Sword.

HAVING thus circumvented Jonathan, he took him along with him, and march'd his Army into Judea: But the Jews, by this Time, had choſen Simon, his Brother, for their Commander, and were ready to give him a warm Reception. Not finding himſelf therefore able to engage them, he ſent Simon this deceitful Meſſage, —— (g) "That he had ſeiz'd Jonathan, only "becauſe he ow'd an hundred Talents to "the King; but that, in caſe he would ſend "the Money, and Jonathan's two Sons, "to be Hoſtages for their Father's Fidelity, he would ſet him again at Liberty." Simon ſoon ſaw through this Deceit; but he comply'd with the Traytor's Demand, for fear it ſhould be ſaid, that he had not done all, that lay in his Power, to ſave his Brother's Life; and accordingly ſent the Money, and two young Men. But when the Villain had got them in his Power, he put both them and their Father to Death; and, thinking that he had now nothing to obſtruct his main Deſign, he caus'd Antiochus to be murther'd privately; and then, aſſuming the Crown, declar'd himſelf King of Syria in his Stead.

WHEN Simon heard of his Brother's Death, and that he was bury'd at Baſcama in the Land of Gilead, (h) he ſent and fetch'd his dead Body from thence; and, having bury'd it, with great funeral Solemnity, in his Father's Sepulchre at Modin, he erected over it a ſtately Monument †, all built of white Marble, and curiouſly wrought, and poliſh'd.

Simon, ſucceeding his Brother in the Command of the Jewiſh Forces, takes, and levels the Fortreſs of Acra.

(i) SIMON, as ſoon as he was admitted to the Government of the Land, ſent to Demetrius, who was then at Laodicea, a Crown of Gold, and Embaſſadors to treat with him about Terms of Peace and Alliance. The King granted to Simon a Confirmation of the High-Prieſthood and Principality, and to the People a Releaſe of all Taxes, Tolls, and Tributes, with an Oblivion of all paſt Acts of Hoſtility, on Condition that they would join with him againſt the Uſurper; in Virtue of which Treaty, Simon being made Sovereign Prince of the Land, and the Land freed from all foreign Yoke, the Jews, from this Time, inſtead of dating their Inſtruments and Contracts, by the Years of the Syrian Kings, (as hitherto they had done) dated them by the Years of Simon and his Succeſſors.

HAVING thus obtain'd the independent Sovereignty of the Land, (k) he took a Progreſs through it, to inſpect what was wanting for its Security; repairing the Fortifications, that were decay'd; making new Near to the Monument, Simon plac'd ſeven Pyramids, two for his Father and Mother, four for his four Brothers, and the ſeventh for himſelf, and then encompaſs'd the whole with a ſtately Portico, ſupported by marble Pillars, each of one entire Piece, and whereon were engrav'd Ships, and Arms, and other military Enſigns. Joſephus tells us, that this whole Fabrick was ſtanding entire in his Days, and look'd upon as a very curious and excellent Piece of Architecture, Antiq. lib. xiii. c. 11. and Euſebius mentions it as ſtill in Being in his Time, which was two hundred Years after the Time of Joſephus. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 144.

He had no Occaſion however to beſiege the Fortreſs of Jeruſalem, becauſe the Wall, which his Brother Jonathan had built againſt it, had ſo cut off all Communication with the City, that the Garriſon, being ſore diſtreſs'd for Want of Proviſions, and all other Neceſſaries, was forc'd to ſurrender the Place; and Simon, wiſely conſidering how much the City of Jeruſalem had been infeſted by that Citadel, pulled it down to the Ground, that it might no longer be a Retreat to Sedition and Faction; and (to prevent its being built at any Time) levelled the Hill, on which it was ſituated; ſo that now no Eminence was left, but the Mount of the Temple only.

Antiochus Sidetes depoſes his Brother Demetrius, but has his Army under Cendebeus defeated by Simon.

DEMETRIUS *, at this Time, was Priſoner in Parthia, and Cleopatra, his Queen had ſhut up herſelf and her Children in Seleucia †; but, fearing to fall into the Hands of the Traytor Tryphon, and being provok'd at her Huſband's marrying the Daughter of Mithridates, King of Parthia, (l) ſhe ſent to his Brother Antiochus, who ſtill continu'd in Crete, offering him the Crown, and herſelf in Marriage, if he would come, and join his Intereſt with her's againſt Tryphon. This Offer he readily accepted of; and, in the Beginning of the next Year, landed in Syria, with an Army of Mercenaries, which was ſoon augmented by a large Acceſſion of the Uſurper's Forces, which every Day deſerted from him: So that, not being able to keep the Field, he fled from Place to Place, till, at length coming to Apamea †, his own native City, he was there taken, and put to Death. This End being put to his Uſurpation, Antiochus became fully poſſeſs'd of his Father's Throne; and, being a Man much addicted to Hunting, he had, for that Reaſon, the Name of Sidetes, which, in the Syrian Language, ſignifies the Hunter.

Before Antiochus landed in Syria, (to gain Simon over to his Intereſt) he wrote him a Letter (m), wherein he made him many Grants, and promis'd him more; but, as ſoon as he was ſettled in the Kingdom, he forgot his Promiſes, and ſent an Embaſſador, demanding him to deliver up Joppa, and Gazara, and other Places, or elſe to pay him a thouſand Talents of Silver for them. (n) Theſe Conditions were thought too unreaſonable to be comply'd with; and therefore, when Antiochus ſent an Army, under the Command of Cendebeus, to enforce them, Simon, tho' very far advanc'd in Years, with a juvenile Courage, prepar'd to give him a warm Reception, and, with his two Sons, Judas and John, (who was afterwards called Hyrcanus) put his Army to Flight almoſt at

* The Reaſon of Demetrius's being in this Condition in this Place, by profane Hiſtorians is ſaid to be this:—— As the Parthians had, at this Time, over-run in a Manner all the Eaſt, and made themſelves Maſters of every Country from the River Indus, to the Euphrates, thoſe who were of the Macedonian Race in thoſe Parts, not bearing their Uſurpation and Inſolence, invited Demetrius by repeated Embaſſies to come to their Relief, promiſing him a general Revolt from the Parthians, and ſuch Aſſiſtance of Forces againſt them, as would enable him to ſuppreſs theſe Uſurpers, and recover to his Dominions all the Provinces of the Eaſt. Upon Confidence in theſe Promiſes, he undertook the Expedition; and found, as ſoon as he appear'd, that the Elymæans, the Perſians, and the Bactrians declar'd for him. By the Aſſiſtance of theſe Nations he overthrew the Parthians in ſeveral Conflicts; but, at laſt, under a Shew of a Treaty of Peace, being drawn into a Snare, he was made Priſoner, and all his Army cut to Pieces. The King, that reign'd in Parthia at this Time, was Mithridates, the Son of Priapatites, who, having thus gotten Demetrius into his Power, carry'd him round the revolted Provinces, that, by ſeeing the Prince, whom they confided in, reduc'd to this ignominious Condition, they might more eaſily be brought to ſubmit to their former Yoke: But, when he had done this, he allow'd him a Maintenance ſuitable to the State of a King, and gave him one of his Daughters, whoſe Name was Rhodaguna, in Marriage. Juſtin, lib. xli. c. 5. and 6. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. c. 9. and 12. and Oroſus, lib. v. c. 4.

Ptolemy*'s baſe and perfidious Murther of his Father-in-Law* Simon, and two of his Sons.

SIMON had a Son-in-Law nam'd Ptolemy, whom he had appointed Governor of the Plains of Jericho. (o) This Man, who was rich, and ambitious, had laid a Deſign (which he communicated to Antiochus) for the Uſurpation of the Government to himſelf; but this could not well be done without the Deſtruction of Simon, and his Family. As Simon therefore, and two of his Sons, Judas and Mattathias, were making a Progreſs through the Cities of Judah, when they came to Jericho, Ptolemy invited them to an Entertainment, which he had prepar'd for them in a Caſtle of his own Building: But, while they were drinking and making merry, he caus'd them, and all that attended them, to be aſſaſſinated; and, thinking thereupon to make himſelf Maſter of the whole Land, he ſent a Party to Gazara, where John Hyrcanus †, Simon's third Son, reſided, with a Deſign to ſlay him likewiſe. But Hyrcanus, having had Intelligence of what paſs'd at Jericho, was prepar'd to receive his intended Murtherers, and, having diſpatch'd them, haſten'd to Jeruſalem to ſecure the City, and the Mount of the Temple, againſt thoſe, whom the Traytor had ſent to take Poſſeſſion of both. After this Hyrcanus was declar'd High-Prieſt, and Prince of the Jews, in the Place of his Father Simon, who was greatly † lamented; but what finally became of this execrable Villain*, we have no Manner of Account in Hiſtory.

Hyrcanus*'s Son, being made General, is forc'd to ſurrender to* Antiochus, and attend him to the Parthian War, where he and his Army are cut to Pieces.

(p) ANTIOCHUS, having receiv'd from Ptolemy an Account of the Death of Simon, and his Sons, thought that he had now a fair Opportunity to reduce Judea again under the Syrian Empire; and therefore he immediately march'd a large Army thither; and, having over-run the Country, and

† Why this Captain was called Hyrcanus, ſome impute to the Victory, which he obtain'd over Hyrcanus, whom the Books of the Maccabees and Joſephus call Cendebeus, tho' others ſay, that he had this Name from a gallant Action againſt the Hyrcanians, perhaps in the Expedition, wherein he accompany'd Alexander Sidetes, beyond the Euphrates. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word.

† The Commendation, which the Author of the firſt Book of the Maccabees (Chap. xiv. 4, &c.) beſtows upon Simon, is worth our Obſervation; for therein he tells us, that he ſought the Good of the Nation, in every Thing, ſo that his Authority always pleaſed them well: That, during his Adminiſtration, whilſt Syria and other neighbouring Kingdoms were almoſt deſtroy'd by Wars, the Jews liv'd quietly, every Man under his own Vine and Fig-Tree, enjoying, without Fear, the Fruits of their Labours, and beholding with Pleaſure the flouriſhing State of their Country; their Trade increas'd by the Reduction of Joppa, and other maritime Places; their Territories enlarg'd; their Armies well diſciplin'd; their Towns and Fortreſſes well garriſon'd; their Religion and Liberties ſecur'd; their Land freed from Heathen Enemies, and Jewiſh Apoſtates; and their Friendſhip courted by all the Nations about them, even by the Romans and Lacedemonians. He obſerves farther, that this Simon was no leſs zealous for the Service of God, in exterminating Apoſtacy, Superſtition, Idolatry, and every Thing elſe, that was contrary to his Laws; that he was a great Protector of the true Iſraelites, and a Friend to the Poor; that he reſtor'd the Service of the Temple to its ancient Splendor, and repair'd the Number of the ſacred Veſſels: So that we need not wonder, if the Jewiſh Sanhedrim thought no Dignity or Honour, while he liv'd, and, when he was ſo baſely and barbarouſly cut off, no Grief and Lamentation too great, for a Man of his uncommon Merit. Univerſal Hiſtory, lib. ii. c. 11.

* Joſephus has ſomething peculiar in his Account of this vile Miſcreant, viz. that, after he had kill'd his Father-in-Law Simon, he ſeiz'd on his Wife, and two of her Children, and with them betook himſelf to a certain Caſtle not far from Jeruſalem, called Dagon; that, when Hyrcanus came to beſiege it, the Villain's Cuſtom was, to bring out his Mother and Brother, and to whip and torment them, in the Sight of all the People, with Menaces to caſt them headlong from the Battlements, unleſs Hyrcanus withdrew the Siege; that, when Hyrcanus, out of Tenderneſs to his Mother and Brothers, was thinking of raiſing the Siege, and ſuffering the Traytor to eſcape, his Mother called to him aloud from the Walls, not to regard her, or her Children's Sufferings, but to proceed in the Siege with Vigour, that ſo he might do himſelf, and his Family Right, in taking a juſt Vengeance upon that execrable Monſter; that, notwithſtanding this magnanimous Exhortation, he could not bear to ſee his Relations tortur'd, and therefore delay'd the Siege, until the Sabbatical Year came on, wherein the Jews were oblig'd to reſt; ſo that Ptolemy, by this Means, being deliver'd from the War, and the Siege, (after he had ſlain the Mother and Brothers of Hyrcanus) withdrew to Zeno, ſirnam'd Catyla, a Tyrant, who at that Time had uſurp'd to himſelf the Government of Philadelphia, Antiq. lib. xiii. c. 15. But our learned Uſher is of Opinion, that this whole Account of Joſephus is fabulous.

and driven Hyrcanus out of the Field, he ſhut him up and all his Forces within the Walls of Jeruſalem, and there beſieg'd him. The Siege was carry'd on vigorouſly; and the Defence of the Place was executed as gallantly: But Hyrcanus, being diſtreſs'd for Want of Proviſions for ſo vaſt a Number of People as was in the City, was forc'd to ſue for Peace, which was granted him upon theſe Terms, that the Beſieg'd ſhould deliver up their Arms; that Jeruſalem ſhould be diſmantled; that Tribute ſhould be paid to the King for Joppa, and the other Towns, which were held by the Jews out of Judea; and that, to buy off the Fortreſs of Jeruſalem from being re-built, (which Antiochus much inſiſted on) they ſhould pay him five hundred Talents *; three hundred down in Hand, and the other two in a reaſonable Time, for which they were to give Hoſtages.

THE Treaty being thus concluded, Hyrcanus invited the King and his Army into the City, where he gave them a ſplendid and moſt magnificent Reception, and afterwards, with ſome of his Forces, attended him to the Parthian War: For Antiochus, under Pretence of reſcuing his Brother Demetrius Nicanor from the Hands of Phraortes King of Parthia, who had long detain'd him as Priſoner, march'd againſt him with a powerful Army. In three pitch'd Battles he gain'd the Victory, and recover'd Babylonia, Media, and ſome other Provinces, that formerly belong'd to the Syrian Monarchy; and, as Hyrcanus had his Share in all theſe Actions, he return'd with the Glory of them at the End of the Year, but Antiochus (q), and his Army, who choſe to winter in the Eaſt, were all in one Night † deſtroy'd by the Inhabitants of the Country.

* Joſephus tells us, that Hyrcanus, to find Money for this, and other Occaſions of the Government, broke up the Sepulchre of David, and took from thence three Thouſand Talents, and that Herod the Great did afterwards the like, Antiq. lib. xvii. c. 16. and lib. xvi. c. 11. But both theſe Stories are highly improbable. David had now been dead near nine Hundred Years, and what is told of this Treaſure, ſuppoſes it to have been bury'd with him all this Time. It ſuppoſes, that as oft as the City of Jeruſalem, the Palace, and the Temple, during the Reigns of the Kings of Judah, had been plunder'd of all their Wealth and Treaſure by prevailing Enemies, this dead Stock ſtill remain'd ſafe from all Rifle or Violation, It ſuppoſes, that, as oft as theſe Kings were forc'd to take all the Treaſure, that was found in the Houſe of the Lord, as well as in their own, to relieve the Exigencies of the State, they never meddled with this that was uſeleſly bury'd with David in his Grave. It ſuppoſes, that, when one of the worſt of their Kings (2 Kings xv. 8, &c. and 2 Chron. xxviii. 21, &c.) plunder'd the Temple of its ſacred Veſſels, and cut them in Pieces, to melt them down into Money for his common Occaſions; and that, when one of the beſt of them (2 Kings xviii. 15, 16.) was forc'd to cut off the Gold, wherewith the Gates and Pillars of the Temple were overlaid, to bribe a deſtroying Enemy, this uſeleſs Treaſure ſtill continu'd untouch'd. Nay, it ſuppoſes, that, when Nebuchadnezzar deſtroy'd both the City and Temple of Jeruſalem, ſo that, for many Years they both lay in Rubbiſh, this Treaſure in David's Sepulchre lay, all the while, ſafe and ſecure under it; and that, when Antiochus Epiphanes, in like Manner deſtroy'd the City, and robb'd the Temple of all that he could find, this Treaſure ſtill eſcap'd his rapacious Hands, nor was ever moleſted, till Hyrcanus, at this Time, was forc'd to make bold with it: All which Suppoſitions ſeem highly improbable, and beyond Belief. There is this, however, to be ſaid in the Matter, that, as there certainly was a Bank, or Treaſury in the Temple, where Money was laid up for the Support of the Poor, for the Relief of Widows and Fatherleſs Children, and for the Maintenance of Divine Service; and where the great Men, and rich Men of the Nation, were us'd to depoſit their Wealth, for its better Security: It is not improbable, that upon the Account of the frequent Invaſions and Depredations, they were liable to, this Treaſure might be kept in ſome ſecret and ſubterraneous Place, unknown to all, but ſuch as were at the Head of Affairs; that Hyrcanus, being now under great Difficulty to raiſe Money, might borrow it out of this Bank, 'till better Times enabled him to repay it; and that Herod, when he plunder'd it quite, might trump up this plauſible Story, that it neither belong'd to Church, nor Poor, nor any private Perſon, but had been depoſited there by David, and his Succeſſors, as a proper Supply for the State in Times of Need. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 135. and Univerſal Hiſtory, lib. ii. c. 11.

In the mean Time Demetrius (r), whom Phraortes † had ſet at Liberty, was return'd to Syria, and, upon his Brother's Death, had recover'd his Kingdom; but ſtill perſiſting in his vicious Courſes, and tyrannical Way of Government, he had not been long re-inſtated, before his Subjects rebelled againſt him, and one Alexander Zabina, pretending to be the Son of Alexander Balas, laid claim to his Crown; and, by the Aſſiſtance of Ptolemy Phyſcon King of Egypt, (s) defeated him in a pitch'd Battle. Demetrius fled for Refuge to Ptolemais, where his Wife Cleopatra † then reſided; but ſhe order'd the Gates to be ſhut againſt him, ſo that he was forc'd to betake himſelf for Refuge to Tyre, where he fell into the Hands of his Enemies, who firſt made him Priſoner, and then put him to Death. Zabina, by this Means, aſcended the Throne of Syria †, but he did not ſit long there; for Phyſcon, expecting that he ſhould hold it in Homage from him, which the other was not inclinable to do, reſolv'd to pull him down, as faſt as he had ſet him up; and therefore, having marry'd his Daughter Tryphæna to Antiochus Gryphus, the Son of the late Demetrius, he aſſiſted him with an Army, which vanquiſh'd Zabina, and compelled him to ſhut himſelf up in Antioch: But the Antiochians, being inform'd that he intended to rob their Temple of Jupiter of a golden Statue (which was very maſſy) to enable him to carry on the War, thruſt him out from thence, ſo that, wandering from Place to Place, he fell, at laſt, into the Hands of thoſe, who carry'd him to Antiochus, by whoſe Direction he was put to Death.

to the Jewiſh Religion, ſo that thenceforward they were incorporated into the ſame Church and Nation, and, in Time, loſt the Name of Idumæans, or Edomites, and were all called Jews: He renew'd the Alliance with the Romans, and, by a Decree * from them, obtain'd greater Privileges and Advantages, than the Jews ever had before: And now, being much increas'd in Riches and Power, he ſent his two Sons, Ariſtobulus and Antigonus, to beſiege Samaria, who, on this Occaſion, gave good Proofs of their Valour and Conduct. The Place held out for a whole Year; but, being forc'd to ſurrender at laſt, by the Direction of Hyrcanus it was utterly demoliſh'd: For he caus'd not only the Houſes and Walls to be pulled down, and raz'd, but Trenches to be dug every Way croſs the Ground whereon it ſtood, and to be filled with Water, that it might never again be built.

His Indignation againſt the Pharisees, and upon what Occaſion.

AFTER the Taking of Samaria, the Remainder of his Life Hyrcanus enjoy'd in full Quiet from all foreign Wars; but, (u) towards the Concluſion of it, met with ſome Trouble from the Phariſees, a prevailing Sect among the Jews. They, by their Pretences to extraordinary Strictneſs in Religion, had gain'd to themſelves a great Reputation, and Intereſt among the common People; and, for this Reaſon, Hyrcanus endeavour'd to gain their Eſteem by all Manner of Favours. Having therefore, one Day, invited ſeveral of their leading Men to a ſplendid Entertainment, when the Banquet was over, he deſir'd them to tell him, "If, in the Conduct of "his Life, he had done any Thing con- "trary to Juſtice and Religion, according "to the Maxims receiv'd and taught "amongſt them." As ſoon as he had ended his Diſcourſe, all began to praiſe his Adminiſtration, and to give him all the Commendations due to a brave Man, and a juſt and worthy Governor.

WHEN the reſt had done their Encomiums, Eleazar, who had hitherto ſaid nothing, roſe up, and, directing his Diſcourſe to Hyrcanus, "Since you deſire, "(ſaid he) to have the Truth freely "told you, if you would ſhew yourſelf a "juſt Man, reſign the High-Prieſthood, "and content yourſelf with the civil "Government of the Nation." Hyrcanus then aſking him, for what Reaſon he gave him that Advice? Cities, and the Occaſion of their Name ſeems to have been taken from that Expreſſion in the Fourth Commandment, The Strangers which are within thy Gates; where the Word Ger, which we render Strangers, does every whit as properly ſignify Proſelytes. Now this Kind of Proſelytes was oblig'd only to renounce Idolatry, and to worſhip God according to the Law of Nature, which the Doctors of the Talmud reduc'd to ſeven Articles, called by them the Seven Precepts of the Sons of Noah. Whoever perform'd theſe were look'd upon as in a State of Acceptance with God; and allow'd, not only to live quietly in their Cities, but to reſort likewiſe to their Temple, there to offer up their Prayers; but then they were permitted to enter no farther, than into the outer Court, which was called the Court of the Gentiles. 2. The Proſelytes of Juſtice were ſo called, becauſe they took upon them to obſerve the whole Law, both Moral and Ceremonial, in the latter of which ſome of the Jews, and eſpecially the Phariſees, made Juſtification to conſiſt. The former Sort of Proſelytes had no Form of Initiation, but theſe were admitted by Baptiſm, Sacrifice, and Circumciſion; and, when they were thus admitted, they were receiv'd into the Jewiſh Church, and to all the Rights and Privileges of Church-memberſhip, in the ſame Manner, as if they had been natural Jews. "being therefore the Son of a ſtrange "Woman, you are incapable of that high "Office and Dignity."

This was an Allegation falſe in Fact, and therefore all the Company reſented it with a juſt Indignation; but Hyrcanus was ſo exaſperated at it, that he reſolv'd to be reveng'd in a very ſignal Manner. This Diſpoſition one Jonathan, an intimate Friend of his, but a zealous Sadducee, obſerving, took the Opportunity to endeavour to ſet him againſt the whole Sect of the Phariſees, (among whom Hyrcanus had been bred up) and to draw him over to That of the Sadducees. To this Purpoſe he ſuggeſted to him, —— "That this was "not the ſingle Act of Eleazar, but, moſt "certainly, a Thing concerted by the "whole Party; that Eleazar, in ſpeaking "it out, was no more, than the Mouth of "the reſt; and that, to ſatisfy himſelf in "theſe Particulars, he needed only refer "it to them, in what Manner the Calumniator deſerv'd to be puniſh'd." Hyrcanus follow'd his Advice: And therefore conſulting the chief Leaders of the Phariſees with Relation to the Penalty, which he might deſerve, who had thus ſlander'd the Prince, and High-Prieſt of his Nation; he receiv'd for Anſwer, —— "That, as "Calumny was no capital Crime, all the "Puniſhment, that it merited, could be "only Whipping †, or Impriſonment:" (x) Which fully convinc'd Hyrcanus, that what Jonathan had ſuggeſted was true, and, from that very Moment, he became a mortal Enemy to the whole Sect of the Phariſees. Their traditional Conſtitutions he forthwith abrogated; he enjoin'd a Penalty on all that ſhould obſerve them; and himſelf, for ever renouncing their Party, went over to That of the Sadducees. But, notwithſtanding this, he was an excellent Governor, and, from the Time of his Father's Death, having had the Adminiſtration of all Affairs, both in Church and State, for the Space of nine and twenty Years, at his Death, he left the High-Prieſthood and Sovereignty to Judas Ariſtobulus, who was the firſt, that (in a formal Manner) took upon him the Title of a King by putting a Diadem on his Head.

† This Puniſhment, among the Jews, was not to exceed forty Stripes, Deut. xxv. 3. and therefore the Whip, wherewith it was inflicted, was made with three Thongs, and, as each Blow gave three Stripes, they never inflicted upon any Criminal more than thirteen, becauſe thirteen of theſe Blows made thirty-nine Stripes, and to have added another Blow would have been a Tranſgreſſion of the Law, by inflicting two Stripes more, than what was preſcrib'd. Rather than do this therefore, the uſual Way was, to give one too few, and therefore St Paul tells us, 2 Cor. xi. 24. that, when he was whipp'd by the Jews, he received forty Stripes, ſave one. Prideaux's Connection, in the Notes, Anno 108.

The OBJECTION.

"IN the Aſmonæan Family there was indeed a Race of Heroes, great Warriors, and zealous Defenders of their Country's Laws and Liberties; and yet, if we look into their Conduct, (even in thoſe Books, that were wrote on purpoſe to aggrandize their Fame, rather than give us the real Hiſtory) we ſhall meet with ſeveral Paſſages, that will not bear Examination.

"JUDAS Maccabæus was certainly the principal Character among them; and yet, to ſay nothing of his prodigally throwing away both his own and his Soldiers Lives, by engaging the Enemy (contrary to the Perſuaſion of his Friends) with a Force no ways competent, (y) with no more than eight hundred againſt two and twenty Thouſand; we cannot but think, that the Cruelty, (z) which he exercis'd upon the Ephraimites, in putting all the Males to the Sword, razing their City, and riding in Triumph, as it were, over the dead Bodies of the ſlain, merely for refuſing to open their Gates to his Army, were Actions unbecoming the Spirit of a generous Conqueror.

"TO ſay nothing of thoſe prodigious Elephants (a), which, with ſtrong wooden Towers on their Backs, could carry thirty-two Men and their Arms, (a Paradox, which Bochart (b) himſelf looks upon as incredible) we cannot but think, that Eleazar's expoſing himſelf to certain Death by killing one of theſe Elephants, even tho' he could not but foreſee, that it would infallibly fall upon him, and cruſh him, was an Act of Fool-hardineſs, which the End he propos'd (c) of delivering his People, and getting himſelf a perpetual Name, could no more juſtify, than the Pretence (d) of not falling into the Hands of the Wicked, could acquit Razis (in ſtabbing himſelf, pulling out his Bowels, and caſting them among his Enemies) from the Imputation of Rage, Madneſs, and Self-Murther.

"REASONS of State, we allow, may ſway Princes in their Alliances, their Friendſhips and Negotiations; but, in the illuſtrious Houſe of the Aſmonæans, to find Jonathan (e) join'd in League with two known Impoſtors, againſt the rightful Heirs of the Crown of Syria; to find Hyrcanus deſtroying the famous City of Samaria, and laying the whole Place deſolate, merely becauſe it was the Seat of a contrary Sect; and, notwithſtanding this, to find him, (f) upon a ſlender Diſguſt, turning Sadducee, and adjoining himſelf to a Set of People, who had renounc'd all Belief of a Reſurrection and future State, ſhews, as if neither had had any great Senſe of Honour, Humanity, or Religion, but, in what they did, conſulted chiefly their Intereſt and Advantage, their Reſentment and Revenge."

Anſwer'd, by giving ſome Account of the ſeveral Books of the Maccabees.

Judas, were afterwards called Maccabees, as were likewiſe Eleazar, and the Mother, and her ſeven Sons, tho' they ſuffer'd likewiſe before Judas erected the Standard, which gave occaſion to the Name.

(g) As therefore thoſe Books, which give us the Hiſtory of Judas, and his Brethren, and their Wars againſt the Syrian Kings, in Defence of their Religion and Liberties, are called the firſt and ſecond Books of the Maccabees; ſo that, which gives us the Hiſtory of thoſe, who, in the like Cauſe, under Ptolemy Philopater, were expos'd to his Elephants at Alexandria, is called the third Book of the Maccabees; as that, which contains the Account of the Martyrdom of Eleazar, and of the ſeven Brothers, and their Mother, is called the fourth.

(h) According to the Order of Time indeed, and the Subject-Matter which they treat of, theſe Books are wrong plac'd; for the third ſhould be ſet firſt, the ſecond plac'd before the firſt, and the fourth immediately after it; ſo that (to reduce them to right Order) the firſt ſhould be put in the Place of the third, and the third in the Place of the firſt. Grotius indeed is of Opinion, that the third Book, tho' it treats of Matters antecedent to what is the Subject of the firſt and ſecond, was nevertheleſs wrote after them, even after the Book of Eccleſiaſticus, and upon that Account had the Name of the third Book given it; but the true Reaſon of its being poſtpon'd is, —— That, being of leſs Repute and Authority, than the two former, it has always been reckon'd after them, according to the Order of Dignity, tho' it be before them in the Order of Time.

The firſt of theſe Books (i) was originally written in the Chaldee † Language of the Jeruſalem Dialect, which was the only Language ſpoken in Judea after the Return from the Babyloniſh Captivity, and is a very accurate and excellent Hiſtory, coming neareſt to the Stile and Manner of the ſacred hiſtorical Writings of any extant. The ſecond is a Compilation of ſeveral Pieces; of two Epiſtles from the Jews at Jeruſalem to thoſe of Alexandria, (k) which ſeem to be ſpurious †; of a Preface preceding the Hiſtory; and of the Hiſtory itſelf, which is an Abridgment of a larger Work, compos'd by one Jaſon, an Helleniſt Jew of Cyrene; but the whole is, by no Means, equal to the Excellence and Accuracy of the firſt. From the Chaldee it was tranſlated into Greek by Theodotian, as ſome think, tho' others account that Verſion elder; and, from the Greek, both the Latin Tranſlation and our Engliſh did proceed. Prideaux's Connection. † The former of theſe Epiſtles calls the Feaſt of the Dedication, Σκηνοπηγία ἐν Κασιλεῦ, i. e. the Feaſt of making Tabernacles, or Booths in Ciſleu. Now, as the Month Ciſleu fell in the Middle of Winter, it can hardly be preſum'd, that the People could either lie abroad in theſe Booths, or find green Boughs enough, at this Time of the Year, wherewith to make them. This is an Incongruity enough to explode the former Epiſtle. And then, as to the ſecond, it is not only written in the Name of Judas Maccabæus, who was ſlain ſix and thirty Years before the Date, which it bears, but alſo contains ſuch fabulous and abſurd Stuff, as could never have been written by the great Council of the Jews, aſſembled at Jeruſalem for the whole Nation, as this pretends to be. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 166.

† This Book, tho' it is in moſt of the ancient Manuſcript Copies of the Greek Septuagint, and quoted by ſeveral Fathers, as an Holy and Divine Book, yet was it never inſerted in the Vulgar Latin Tranſlation of the Bible; and, as our firſt Engliſh Tranſlations were made from That, none of them have it among the Apocryphal Books, nor has it ever ſince been added, tho' it certainly deſerves a Place therein, much better than ſeveral other Pieces that are there. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 214.

Alexandrian Jew †, in the Greek Language, is ſet off with Enlargements, and Embelliſhments of the Author's own Invention; but, as to the main Ground-Work of it, or the Reality of ſuch a Perſecution, rais'd againſt the Jews at Alexandria, 'tis undoubtedly true; and, tho' its Stile be a little too Theatrical, its Sentiments, in many Places, are both beautiful and ſublime. The fourth †, which is generally allow'd to be the ſame with what is aſcrib'd to Joſephus, the Jewiſh Hiſtorian, under the Title of the governing Power of Reaſon, is deſign'd to enlarge and adorn the Hiſtory of old Eleazar, and of the ſeven Brothers, who, with their Mother, ſuffer'd Martyrdom under Antiochus, as it is related more ſuccinctly in the ſecond Book of (l) Maccabees.

The Author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews (m) has ſtamp'd ſome Authority upon theſe Books, by alluding to their Hiſtory, and the Puniſhment, which the Maccabees were made to undergo; but we muſt not therefore receive them as Canonical, becauſe, according to the Report of St Jerom, neither the Jewiſh, nor the Chriſtian Church ever look'd upon them in that Capacity. Maccabæorum Libros legit quidem Eccleſia, ſed eos inter Canonicas Scripturas non recipit: They read them as Books, which contain'd Leſſons of wholſome Inſtruction, and excellent Examples of worthy Patriots, and glorious Martyrs, ſuffering manfully in the Defence of their Religion and Liberty, (n) and not accepting Deliverance, that they might obtain a better Reſurrection.

The Character of Judas Maccabæus.

(o) In the whole Compaſs of Hiſtory, where can we find a Pattern, in all Reſpects, equal to Judas Maccabæus? Moſt of the Commanders, we read of, were carry'd away with their Ambition, Vanity, or Vain-Glory; and, while they valu'd themſelves upon the Subduction of others, had no Rule or Command over their own Paſſions: But, in this Jewiſh Leader, we find all the Characters of a great Hero; Courage and Intrepidity, guided by Counſel and Wiſdom, and without any Allay either of Raſhneſs or Pride. And what a profound Knowledge he had of the Laws of God, and the Principles of true Morality, every Speech, that he makes to his Men, when he is animating them to the Combat, and inſpiring them with a Contempt of the greateſt Dangers, is a ſufficient Indication.

Why he fought the Enemy with an inferior Force.

He dy'd indeed a little unfortunately, and, when his Army had forſook him, encounter'd his Enemies with an incompetent Strength; but, as he had all along fought under the Protection of God's good Providence, he had no more Reaſon to be diffident at this Time, than he had been formerly. In his firſt Engagement with the Syrians, when he was to encounter (p) forty Thouſand Horſe, and ſeven Thouſand Foot, he made Proclamation in the Camp, that all ſuch (q) as had betrothed Wives, or were building Houſes, or planting Vineyards, or were any ways afraid, might return Home, which could not but reduce his Army conſiderably; and yet we find him, with this Handful of Men, routing three Generals, that were ſent againſt

But, as it was never inſerted into the Vulgar Latin Verſion of the Bible, and as that Verſion was the only one in Uſe through the whole Weſtern Church, until the Reformation, it thence came to paſs, that in the firſt Tranſlations, which we have of the Bible in the Engliſh, the third Book of Maccabees has never yet been inſerted among other Apocryphal Tracts, tho' it certainly deſerves a Place there much better, than ſome Parts of the ſecond Book of the Maccabees. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 216.

againſt him at once; forcing and burning their Camp; defeating their Troops, and returning loaded with their Spoils. His Notion was, that God could ſave with a Few, as well as with a Multitude; and therefore he might look on the Deſertion of his Forces, as a providential Thing, to make the Victory more conſpicuous, and to magnify the Divine Interpoſition in his Deliverance.

(r) THE People, that are with thee, ſays the Lord to Gideon, are too many for me to give the Midianites into their Hands, leſt Iſrael vaunt themſelves againſt me, ſaying, Mine Hand hath ſaved me: Proclaim therefore in the Tents of the People, that whoſoever is fearful and afraid, let him return, and depart from Mount Gilead; which reduc'd the Jewiſh Army to ten Thouſand, and theſe again, by another Expedient, were reduc'd to three hundred; and yet even theſe, by the Aſſiſtance of the Lord of Hoſts, utterly ſubdu'd the vaſt Army of the Midianites. Upon this Preſumption then, that Judas thought his Army under the Care and Direction of the ſame Lord of Hoſts, there was no Diſcouragement in the Deſertion of his Forces, nor any falſe Reaſoning in his Speech: "If our Time be come, let us "die manfully for our Brethren; which, "in the preſent Juncture of our Affairs, "is the beſt Thing we can do: But if it "be not, God, we know, is able to give "us Victory, and to defend us. Theſe ſeem to be the Reaſons, that determin'd Judas in his Choice of engaging the Enemy, tho' ſuperior in Force: And if theſe Reaſons are built upon right Notions of God, and confirm'd by a long Experience of his Goodneſs, they will certainly clear him from all Imputation of Raſhneſs, or preſumptuous Tempting of God in this Action: An Action, for which St Ambroſe, in particular, has repreſented him, as a perfect Model of true Heroiſm: For (s) Habes hic, ſays he, fortitudinem bellicam, in quâ non mediocris honeſti & decori forma eſt, quod Mortem Servituti præferat, ac Turpitudini.

Why he might juſtly deſtroy the Ephraimites.

THE Meſſage, which Moſes ſent to the King of Edom, deliver'd in theſe Words, —— Let us paſs, I pray thee, through thy Country. We will not paſs through the Fields, or through the Vineyards, neither will we drink of the Water of thy Wells. We will go by the King's High-Way; we will not turn to the right Hand or the Left, until we have paſſed thy Borders: And Edom ſaid unto him, Thou ſhalt not paſs by me, leſt I come out againſt thee with the Sword. But hereupon a Queſtion has aroſe, whether the Edomites might lawfully, and according to the Rules of ſtrict Right, deny the Iſraelites a Paſſage through their Country.

(t) SELDEN is of Opinion, that Princes have always a Right to deny foreign Troops a Paſſage through their Country, not only to preſerve their Territories from being invaded, and their Subjects from being plunder'd; but to prevent their being corrupted likewiſe, by the Introduction of ſtrange Manners and Cuſtoms into their Kingdom. But (u) Grotius, on the other Hand, aſſerts, that this Refuſal of the Edomites was an Act contrary to the juſt Rights of human Society; that, after the Promiſe, which the Iſraelites had made, of marching through their Country quietly, and inoffenſively, they might very juſtly have fallen upon the Edomites, had they not been reſtrain'd by a Divine Prohibition; that, for this very Cauſe, the Greeks thought proper to make War upon the Kings of Myſia; and that the principal Reaſon, which the Powers of Chriſtendom gave for their carrying their Arms Arms againſt the Saracens, was, becauſe they hinder'd their Brethren, going in Pilgrimage to Jeruſalem, from paſſing thro' their Country.

HOWEVER the Sentiments of theſe two great Men may be, 'tis certain, that Gideon's Severity againſt the Inhabitants of Succoth, for denying his Army ſome neceſſary Refreſhments, when they were purſuing the Enemy, is juſtify'd upon the Preſumption, that ſuch a Refuſal was a Kind of Rebellion againſt the State; that thoſe, who expos'd their Lives for the publick Safety, had a Right to be maintain'd at the publick Expence; and that no Man might call any Thing his own, when a Demand of this Nature came upon him. And if Gideon, (x) who was ſent immediately by an Angel to deliver his Brethren, and, in all his Atchievements, was ſupported by the Spirit of God, thought it no Injuſtice to put the People of Succoth (y) to exquiſite Torture, for denying his Army what they wanted; why might not Judas give the People of Ephron up to military Execution, for being ſo cruel and inhuman, as to deny him a Paſſage through their City, when there was no Poſſibility of taking his Rout any other Way?

WHAT the particular Situation of this Ephron was, we can no where learn; but the Author of the Book of Maccabees ſeems to imply, that the Country all about it was impaſſable, i. e. was very probably ſo full of Water and Moraſſes, that the (z) Company, which Judas had along with him, muſt have been loſt, had they been oblig'd to turn either to the Right-Hand or to the Left. In their own Defence therefore, they were neceſſitated to make their Way through the Town; and if, in the Siege and Sackage of it, great Numbers of People were put to the Sword, this was properly the Effect of their own Folly and Obſtinacy, in refuſing not ſo much to do a Favour, as an Act of common Right, even when it was humbly requeſted by a General, at the Head of a victorious Army.

That an Elephant might bear Thirty-two Men on his Back,

THE Strength of the Behemoth (which by moſt Interpreters is ſuppos'd to be the Elephant) is thus expreſs'd in the Book of Job: (a) His Bones are as ſtrong Pieces of Braſs, and his ſmall Bones like Bars of Iron; and therefore it is no Wonder, that Creatures of this prodigious Strength (when the Method of fighting was chiefly by Force) ſhould be made uſe of in all military Expeditions. (b) Some of theſe Creatures have been known to carry two Cannons, faſten'd together by a Cable Rope, of three Thouſand Pound Weight each for five hundred Paces together, with their Teeth; and what Reaſon have we to doubt, but that they are able to carry a much greater Weight upon their Backs?

THE largeſt and ſtrongeſt Species of theſe Animals is ſaid to be bred in India, (for thoſe that come out of Africa are not near ſo big) and therefore, if we ſuppoſe that the Elephants, which Antiochus carry'd to the Wars with him, were of this Indian Breed, (as (c) the Circumſtances of the whole Story make it highly probable that they were) there cannot be ſo much Difficulty, as is imagin'd, in one of theſe Creatures carrying upon its Back two and thirty Men light-arm'd, (as Archers are known to be) with Towers, or other ſuch Vehicles, as might be thought proper to give them an Aſcendant in the Fight, and ſo ſecure them from the Darts, and other Weapons of the Enemy. For, upon Suppoſition, that each of thoſe Men, one with another, weigh'd an hundred and fifty Pounds, the Amount of the Weight of thirty-two will be no more than four Thouſand eight hundred Pounds; and yet it is a common Thing to meet with Elephants of a moderate Size, that will carry you five or ſix Thouſand Pound Weight; ſo that, upon the loweſt Computation, we have full two Thouſand Pound Weight allow'd for the wooden Machine, wherein the Slingers and Archers were ſeated, and ſecur'd.

THE Danger indeed of approaching this Animal, with ſuch a Number of arm'd Men upon its Back, is very viſible; but moſt of the Jewiſh Doctors, and Fathers of the Chriſtian Church, look upon Eleazar's Action in killing the Royal Elephant (as he took it to be) tho' at the Expence of his own Life, as a ſingular Inſtance of Courage and Magnanimity. Fool-Hardineſs it would have been, had he been certainly perſuaded, that the Creature would have fallen upon him ſo directly, and ſo ſuddenly, as he did; but why might he not rather think, that it might poſſibly tumble down on one Side, ſo as to miſs him, or live for ſome Moments, after it had receiv'd the Wound, ſo as to give him an Opportunity to eſcape?

(d) THE Motives, which the Hiſtory aſſigns for his adventuring upon this Exploit, are not diſcommendable. The Preſervation of our Laws, Liberties, and Religion, requires, upon a proper Occaſion, the hazarding our Lives: Our Reputation too is a natural Good, which we are not only bound to preſerve, but, by all lawful Means, allow'd to improve and increaſe; and therefore Charity (e) will not ſuffer us (without very good Reaſons) to believe, that theſe Motives, which in themſelves were laudable, loſt all their Merit, and were adulterated by any ſiniſter Ends, that Eleazar might propoſe to himſelf. We cannot, I ſay, without Raſhneſs, blame him, or deny him that Juſtice, which we owe to all Actions, that are apparently commendable, i. e. to believe them really good, ſo long as we have no Proofs to the contrary: And, as it is no uncommon Thing, in ſuch heroick Acts as theſe, to find Perſons (under the Jewiſh OEconomy more eſpecially) inſtigated by a Divine Impulſe, it will beſt become us to ſuſpend our Judgments concerning this Action of Eleazar's, until we can find Arguments to prove, that he had no Motive extraordinary to attempt it.

The Action of Razis diſcountenanc'd.

BUT there is not the like Reaſon, I think, to ſuſpend our Judgment concerning the Action of Razis, which, upon due Conſideration, was no better than Self-Murther. (f) To conſider it, indeed, according to the Notion, which ſome Heathens had of Courage and Magnanimity, Contempt of Death, and Love of Liberty, it comes nearer to what they called true Heroiſm, than all the great Actions that Hiſtory has recorded of the Greeks and Romans. Nay, the Jews themſelves are willing to place this Man in the Number of their moſt illuſtrious Martyrs, and from his Example (as well as ſome others) pretend, that, upon certain Occaſions, Self-Murther is not only allowable, but highly commendable; never conſidering, (g) that, in the ſixth Commandment, it is as much prohibited, as the Murther any one elſe; and that, if I muſt not ſhed the Blood of another Man for this very Reaſon, becauſe (h) he is made in the Image of God, I muſt not ſhed the Blood of myſelf, becauſe I alſo am a Man, and made in the Image of God, as well as he.

(i) RAZIS indeed was ſorely beſet, and ready to have been taken by his Enemies on every Side; but then he ſhould have ſurrender'd himſelf to their Treatment, and teſtify'd his Magnanimity, not in butchering himſelf, but in manfully enduring whatever Inflictions they laid upon him. Had the Martyrs of old thought themſelves at Liberty to diſpoſe of their own Lives upon any emergent Danger, or Apprehenſion of ſuffering, we had read little of their being (k) mocked and ſcourged, and tormented, and leſs of their being ſtoned, and ſawn aſunder, but a great deal of their ſtepping out of the World (as ſome call it) when any Difficulty, culty, or Perſecution came to preſs upon them.

UPON the whole, therefore, we may conclude, that, as this was not the Practice of thoſe Worthies of old, (l) who obtained a good Report by Faith, it was not true Courage, but the Want of it, that put Razis upon committing this barbarous Cruelty to himſelf; that it was Pride, not Patience, (which is the proper Virtue of a Martyr) that made him fly to Death, merely for Refuge againſt thoſe Outrages, which he had not Strength of Mind to withſtand; and therefore St Auſtin's ſhort Reflection upon the whole is, —— (m) Factum narratum eſt non laudatum, & judicandum potius, quàm imitandum.

Jonathan not to blame in joining an Uſurper.

THIS Reflection indeed will hold good in ſeveral other Matters related in the Hiſtory of the Maccabees, viz. that the Author of it neither commends nor diſcommends, but only relates them. Demetrius Soter, for Inſtance, was the rightful Heir to the Crown of Syria, and Alexander Balas no more than a vile Impoſtor; and yet Jonathan thought proper to adjoin himſelf to him, becauſe (n) he remember'd what a bitter Enemy Demetrius had all along been to the Jewiſh Intereſt; how oft he had ſent his Generals with poſitive Orders to take his Brother Judas dead or alive; and what Ruin and Oppreſſion his frequent Invaſions had brought upon the whole Nation. And therefore no Wonder, that we find him taking a contrary Part to the Man, whom he looked upon as an Enemy to his Country. Demetrius Nicanor, in like Manner, was the true Heir to the ſame Crown, and Alexander Zabina no more than a Broker's Son of Alexandria; and yet we find John Hyrcanus entering into a League and Alliance with the latter, becauſe indeed Demetrius had behav'd ſo ungratefully to the Jews, (who had reſcu'd him from the Rebellion of his Subjects) as to load them with heavy Taxes, even tho' he had promis'd them an Immunity from them to engage their Aſſiſtance.

THE Truth is, the Kingdom of Syria was always in Hoſtility with Judea. Its Kings were Tyrants, and great Perſecutors of the Jewiſh Religion; and therefore what Reaſon had any Jewiſh Prince to trouble himſelf with the Right of Succeſſion in an Enemy's Country? All that he ſeem'd to be concern'd in was, (o) to make what Advantages he could of their Diviſions, and, by adjoining himſelf to the Party, from whence he might expect the beſt Treatment and Support, to ſecure and eſtabliſh his own, and his Country's Intereſt.

Hyrcanus did not deſtroy Samaria out of Enmity to the Sect of Samaritans.

IT is a Miſtake however to think, that Hyrcanus deſtroy'd Samaria, out of the Hatred, which the Jews bore to the Sect of the Samaritans, becauſe, upon Examination, we ſhall find, that none of that Sect did, at that Time, live in that Place. (p) The ancient Samaritans, who were of the Sect that worſhipp'd God on Mount Gerizzim, had ſlain, in a Tumult, (as we related before) one Andromachus, a Favourite of Alexander the Great, whom he had conſtituted Governor of Syria; and, in Revenge for this baſe Act, Alexander had expell'd them all from Samaria, and, in their Stead, new-planted the City with a Colony of Macedonians, Greeks, and Syrians mix'd together, and they were the Deſcendants of thoſe, who inhabited Samaria, when Hyrcanus made War againſt it; for the expelled Samaritans retir'd to Sechem, where they ſettled their Abode, and made it the head Seat of their Sect ever ſince.

Nor follow the Sadducees in any wicked Tenets.

IN like Manner, it is a Miſtake to think, that, becauſe Hyrcanus is ſaid to have left the Phariſees, and adjoined himſelf to the Sadducees, that therefore he eſpous'd their Doctrine againſt the Reſurrection and a future State. (q) On the contrary, it ſeems highly probable, that, at this Time, the Sadducees had gone no farther in the Doctrine of their Sect, than their rejecting all the unwritten Traditions, which the Phariſees held in ſo much Veneration. Joſephus mentions no other Difference in his Time, between them; nor does he ſay, that Hyrcanus went over to the Sadducees in any other Particular, than in the aboliſhing the traditional Conſtitutions of the Phariſees; and therefore we can hardly think, that ſo good and righteous a Man, as he is repreſented to have been, would, upon any Provocation whatever, have been induc'd to renounce the great and fundamental Articles of his Religion; but it can be no Diminution to his Character, we hope, that he made it his Buſineſs to oppoſe thoſe falſe Interpretations of the Law, which our bleſſed Saviour, in the Courſe of his Miniſtry, ſo ſeverely condemn'd.

DISSERTATION IV.

Of the Original and Tenets of the Jewiſh Sects.

When Sects firſt began.

IT ſeems very probable indeed, that, during the Times of the Prophets, who, by their Commerce with God, were immediately inſtructed to his Will, no Diſputes about Matters of Religion could poſſibly ariſe, becauſe their Authority was ſufficient for the Deciſion of every Controverſy; but that, when this Race of Prophets diſappear'd, and their Authority ceas'd, Men ſoon began to wrangle and diſpute, and to form themſelves into different Sects, and Parties, upon the firſt Occaſion that offer'd.

After the Return of the People from Babylon, Joſhua, the High-Prieſt, and Zerubbabel the Governor, together with the chief Elders their Contemporaries, and others, that afterwards ſucceeded them, collected together all the antient and approv'd Uſages of the Jewiſh Church, which had been in Practice before the Captivity. Theſe, and whatever elſe pretended to be of the like Nature, Ezra brought under a Review, and, after due Examination, having ſettled them by his Approbation and Authority, he thereby gave Birth to what the Jews call their Oral Law. For (r) they pretend, that, when God gave unto Moſes the Law on Mount Sinai, he gave him, at the ſame Time, the Interpretation of it, with a ſtrict Injunction to commit the former to Writing, but to deliver the other down to Poſterity only by Word of Mouth; that, purſuant to this Injunction, Moſes wrote ſeveral Copies of the Law, which he left behind him among the ſeveral Tribes, but, in the Interpretation of it, he took care more eſpecially to inſtruct his Succeſſor Joſhua; that, after his Death, Joſhua deliver'd this Interpretation, or Oral Law, to the Elders, who ſucceeded him, and that they deliver'd it to the Prophets, who tranſmitted it down to each other, until it came to Jeremiah; that Jeremiah deliver'd it to Baruch; Baruch to Ezra; Ezra to the Men of the great Synagogue, until it came to Simon the Juſt; and that Simon deliver'd it to others, who handed it down, in a continu'd Succeſſion, until it came to Rabbath Judah Hakkadoſh, who wrote it into the Book, which they call the Miſhnah.

(r) Prideaux's Connection, Anno 446.

BUT all this is a mere Fiction, ſpun out of the fertile Invention of the Talmudiſts, and the little Truth that there ſeems to be in it, is only this, —— That, after the Death of Simon the Juſt, there aroſe a Sort of Men, (whom the Jews call the Tannaim, or Miſhnical Doctors) that made it their Buſineſs to ſtudy and diſcant upon theſe Traditions, which had been receiv'd and allow'd by Ezra and the Men of the great Synagogue, to draw ſuch Conſequences, and Inferences from them, as they thought proper; to ingraft theſe into the Body of the antient Traditions; and to expect from others, that they ſhould receive them, as if they had been as authentick as the other. But this Impoſition was too groſs and palpable not to be attended with Remonſtrances from ſeveral: So that, in a ſhort Time, the Jewiſh Church came to be divided into two grand Parties, viz. thoſe, who adher'd to the written Law only, among whom the Sadducees were the chief; and thoſe, who, over and above this, receiv'd the Traditions and Conſtitutions of the Elders, among whom the Phariſees made the greateſt Figure.

The Saddu-cees.

(s) THE moſt antient Sect among the Jews was that of the Sadducees, which took its Name from Sodock, the Founder of it. This Sodock (as the Talmudick Story is) was the Diſciple of Antigonus Socho, who liv'd, according to the Jewiſh Calculation, about three hundred Years before Chriſt, and us'd often to inculcate to his Diſciples, that they ought to ſerve God diſintereſtedly, without any View of Compenſation, and not like Slaves, who only ſerve their Maſter for the Sake of a Reward: And from hence his Diſciples Sodock and Baithus made this wrong Inference, viz. that there was no Reward to be expected in another World, and, conſequently, that the Soul dies, and the Body will not riſe again. Whether this Miſtake of the Doctrine of Antigonus, or (as others ſuppoſe) the Diſſoluteneſs of Manners, which at that Time might prevail, gave occaſion to the Opinion of the Sadducees, but ſo it was, that, in Proceſs of Time, they grew to be very impious and deteſtable.

Their Princi-ples.

THEY deny'd the Reſurrection of the Dead, the Being [†] of Angels, and the Exiſtence of the Spirits, or Souls of Men departed. Their Notion was, that there was no ſpiritual Being, but God only; that, as to Man, this World was his All; that, at his Death, his Soul and Body die together, never to live any more; and that therefore there is no future Reward or Puniſhment. They acknowledg'd indeed, that God made this World by his Power, and governs it by his Providence, and, for the carrying on of this Government, hath ordained Rewards and Puniſhments; but then they ſuppoſe, that theſe Rewards and Puniſhments are in this World only; and for this Reaſon alone it was, that they worſhipp'd him, and paid Obedience to his Laws. All unwritten Traditions, as well as all written Books [*], except the five Books of Moſes, they abſolutely

[†] In what Senſe the Sadducees deny'd the Exiſtence of Angels, 'tis difficult to determine, ſince they certainly acknowledg'd the Authority of the Pentateuch. Some pretend, that they accounted the Invention of Angels but a novel Thing, and that their very Name was never heard of, until the Return from the Captivity, and therefore they rejected them; whilſt others ſuppoſe, that they look'd upon them as the inſeparable Powers of God, which, like the Rays of the Sun, without being parted from that Planet, ſhine and ſhed their Influence here below. But now, conſidering that the Sadducees receiv'd the five Books of Moſes, they could hardly entertain any ſuch Notions as theſe. As therein they read of frequent Apparitions of Angels, they could not fancy them a new Invention of the Rabbins, that return'd from the Captivity. As they ſaw in theſe Books, that they properly came down from Heaven upon Earth, they could not imagine, that they were Beings inſeparable from the Deity; and therefore we may ſuppoſe, that they rather look'd upon them only as ſo many Phantaſms, and that, as the Bodies, which theſe Angels put on, had perhaps only the Appearance of human Bodies, the ſame Notion they might have of the Spirits, which inanimated them; becauſe every Thing, (except God) in their Opinion, was material. Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, lib. ii. c. 6.

[*] Mr. Baſnage, in his Hiſtory of the Jews, (lib. ii. c. 6.) tho' he allows the Queſtion to be difficult, ſeems to be of a contrary Opinion. 1ſt, Becauſe the Sadducees taught and pray'd in the Temple, where the Prophets, and other holy lutely rejected; and the probable Reaſon why they did ſo, is, that they could not ſo well maintain theſe Opinions, which are not ſo flatly contradicted in the Pentateuch, as in the other ſacred Books, if once they admitted theſe Books to be Canonical. All ſupernatural Helps to their Duty they utterly deny'd: For their Doctrine was, that God had made Man perfect Maſter of all his Actions, with a full Freedom to do either Good or Evil as he thinks fit, without any Aſſiſtance to him for the one, or Reſtraint upon him, as to the other; and for this Reaſon, becauſe they look'd upon all Men to have an inherent Power to make their Condition better or worſe, according as they took right or wrong Meaſures, whenever they ſat in Judgment upon Criminals, they were always remark'd to paſs the ſevereſt Sentences: As indeed their general Character was, that they were a very ill-natur'd Sort of Men, churliſh, and moroſe in their Behaviour even to each other, but cruel and ſavage to every one beſides. Their Principles, one might ſuppoſe, would have naturally led them into all Manner of Riot and Exceſs; but it was not always ſo. Some of them were Men of rigid Virtue and ſtrict Probity; for, (t) tho' they had caſt off the Belief of a future State, yet, as they admitted of a Providence to puniſh Vice, and reward Virtue, in this Life, their Deſire of preſent and temporal Happineſs put a Reſtraint upon their Appetites, and kept them within the Bounds of their Duty. And, for the ſame Reaſon, they were not without their Expectations of a Meſſias to come. Nay, upon this Subject they argu'd with more Conſiſtency, than the other Jews did. For, confining all their Hopes to the preſent State of Things, and looking upon him as a temporal King and Deliverer only, they had a more than ordinary Intereſt and Concern in his Appearance in their Life-Time, that thereby they might reap the Fruits of his Conqueſts, and enjoy the Happineſs, which the Prophets had promis'd, during his Reign. Their Number was the feweſt of all the Sects of the Jews, but they were Men of the beſt Quality and greateſt Eſtates: And, as all thoſe, who were of the greateſt Power and Riches, were cut off in the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Romans, 'tis generally ſuppos'd, that this whole Sect then periſh'd with them.

The Karraites.

(u) THE Jews, who were carry'd captive into Egypt, tho' they kept themſelves clear from the Idolatry of the Country, did nevertheleſs (about the Time of Ptolemy Philometor) fall into their Method of handling Divinity, and were not a little fond of their allegorical Interpretations. This myſtical Treatment of the Scriptures alarm'd others, who, from the Word Kara, (x) which ſignifies to read, obtain'd the Name of Karraites, i. e. ſuch as adher'd to the Text, and were literal Expounders of Scripture. Joſephus indeed takes no Notice of any People of this Denomination; holy Writers were read, as appears from the Example of Chriſt, who explain'd a Paſſage out of Iſaiah. 2dly, Becauſe Joſephus, who ought to have been well acquainted with the Principles of this Sect, relates of them, (lib. vi. c. 9.) that they receiv'd what was written. And 3dly, Becauſe the Phariſees, in their Diſputes with them about the Doctrine of the Reſurrection, quote, not only the Writings of Moſes, but thoſe of the Prophets likewiſe, and other Hagiographers, whoſe Authority the others do not deny, but only endeavour to elude the Force of the Paſſages, that are thence produc'd againſt them. Upon the whole therefore, Scaliger (Elench. Trihær. c. 16.) is of Opinion, that theſe Sadducees did not abſolutely reject all the ſacred Writings, but rather look'd upon them, as Books compos'd by holy Men, whoſe Memories they reverenc'd, tho' they could not believe them of the like Authority with the Law of Moſes, which to them was the only Rule of Faith. But notwithſtanding this, "the Account, which is given "us in the Goſpel (ſays the Learned Prideaux) of the Diſputation, which Chriſt had with the Sadducees, plainly proves "the contrary. For ſeeing there are ſo many Texts in the Prophets and Hagiographa, which plainly and directly "prove a future State, and the Reſurrection from the Dead, no other Reaſon can be given, why Chriſt wav'd all "theſe Proofs, and drew his Argument, only by Conſequence, from what is ſaid in the Law, but that he knew, "that the Sadducees had rejected the Prophets, and the Hagiographa, and therefore would admit of no Arguments, "but from the Law only." Denomination; but his Silence is no Argument againſt their Exiſtence, becauſe we find him omiſſive in other Particulars of the like Nature. The Herodians, for Inſtance, a Sect well known in the Goſpel, and remarkable for their political as well as doctrinal Principles, he makes no Mention of, and might therefore well paſs by the Karraites, who, having no peculiar Tenets, but only that of teaching and expounding the Law according to its literal Senſe, could not well be diſcriminated by the Name of any particular Sect. Theſe Scripturiſts, as they were called, (y) when they came to be headed by Shammai, a learned Doctor of the Law, (who, about an hundred Years before our Saviour Chriſt, open'd a great School againſt Hillel, who was for the myſtical Way of Interpretation) made a conſiderable Figure; But at length the School of Hillel, by the Determination of a Voice from Heaven, (as was pretended) carry'd it againſt the School of Shammai; ſo that the Karraites were quite abſorb'd, till they appear'd again, about the ſixth Century after Chriſt.

---

At this Time the Talmud, a vaſt voluminous Book, which contain'd all the Traditions of the Jewiſh Church, was publiſh'd, and a great deal of Deference and Veneration was requir'd to be paid to it: But when Men of Learning and Judgment came to look into it, and found it (as it is) ſtuff'd with trifling and incredible Stories, they rejected its Authority, as not deſerving their Belief, and betook themſelves wholly to ſuch, as were of undoubted Credibility, the Writings of the Law and the Prophets. In Conſequence of which there aroſe two Parties, one ſtanding up for the Talmud and its Traditions, and the other diſavowing both, as containing, in their Opinion, the Inventions of Men, and not the Doctrines and Commands of God. Thoſe, who ſtood up for the Talmud and its Traditions, were chiefly the Rabbins, and their Followers, from whence their Party had the Name of Rabbiniſts; and the other, who were for the Scripture only, were again called Karraites, under which two Names the Controverſy was at that Time carry'd on between them, and ſo continues even to this Day.

From 1 Macc. v. 1. 2 Macc. x. 11. and Joſ. lib. xii. c. 14. to the End of 1 and 2 Macc. and of Joſ. lib. xiii. c. 19.

Among all the Jewiſh Doctors, theſe Karraites are juſtly accounted the moſt learned Set of Men, but their Number (in theſe Weſtern Parts eſpecially) is but ſmall. (z) About the Middle of the laſt Century, there was a particular Account taken of them, wherein it appear'd, that, in Poland, there were two Thouſand; at Caffa in Crim-Tartary, twelve Hundred; at Cairo, three Hundred; at Damaſcus, two Hundred; at Jeruſalem, Thirty; in Babylon, an Hundred; and in Perſia, ſix Hundred, which, in all, amount to no more, than four Thouſand four Hundred and thirty; a ſmall Number, in Compariſon of the Bulk of the Nation, which is of the Party of the Rabbiniſts.

The Phariſees.

The Phariſees were ſo called from the Hebrew Word Pharas, which ſignifies to ſeparate; becauſe the prevailing Paſſion, or rather Ambition of this Sect was, to diſtinguiſh, and ſeparate itſelf from the reſt of the People, by a greater Degree of Holineſs and Piety, but accompany'd with very much Affectation, and Abundance of vain Obſervances. (a) At what Time this Sect began firſt to appear, is no eaſy Matter to determine: Joſephus makes mention of them in the Government of Jonathan, an hundred and forty Years before Chriſt, as a very powerful Body of Men at that Time; nor is it improbable, that their Origin was ſomewhat earlier, and that, as ſoon as the Sadducees diſcover'd their Principles to the World, theſe Men of different Sentiments might not long after riſe up in Oppoſition to them: For 'tis evident from the Character, which the Jewiſh Hiſtorian gives of them, that, in the main Articles of their Belief, they were entirely repugnant to the Sadducees. (b) The Phariſees believe in a Fate, a Fate, ſays he, and attributed all Things to it, but nevertheleſs they acknowledge the Freedom of Man; but how they made theſe two apparent Incompatibles conſiſt together, is no where ſufficiently explained. They teach, that God will one Day judge the World, and puniſh or reward Men according to their Merits. They maintain, that Souls are immortal, and that, in the other World, ſome will be ſhut up in an eternal Priſon, and others ſent back again; but with this Difference, that thoſe of good Men ſhall enter into the Bodies of Men, thoſe of wicked Men into the Bodies of Beaſts; which exactly agrees with the famous Tranſmigration of Pythagoras. Their Adherence to the Law was ſo exact, that, for Fear of violating the leaſt Precept of it, they ſcrupulouſly obſerv'd every Thing, that had the leaſt Relation to it, even tho' the Law had neither commanded, nor forbidden them. Their Zeal for the Traditions of the Elders was ſuch, that they deriv'd them from the ſame Fountain with the written Word itſelf, pretending, that Moſes receiv'd both of them from God on Mount Sinai, and therefore aſcribing an equal Authority to both. They had a Notion, that good Works were meritorious, and therefore they invented a great Number of ſupererogatory ones, upon which they valu'd themſelves more, than upon a due Obſervance of the Law itſelf. Their frequent Waſhings and Ablutions, (c) their long Prayers in publick Places, their (d) nice Avoidance of reputed Sinners, their Faſting and great Abſtinence, their Penance and Mortification, (e) their minute Payment of Tythes, their (f) ſtrict Obſervance of the Sabbath, and (g) oſtentatious Enlargement of * Phylacteries, were all Works of this Kind; which nevertheleſs gain'd them ſuch Eſteem and Veneration, that, while the common People lov'd, the greater ones dreaded them, ſo that their Power and Authority in the State was conſiderable, tho' generally attended with pernicious Conſequences, becauſe their Hearts were evil: For, notwithſtanding their Shew of mighty Zeal and great Auſterity, they were, in Reality, no better, than what our Saviour calls them, vain and oſtentatious, ſpiteful and malicious, griping and voracious, Lovers of themſelves only, and Deſpiſers of others; inſomuch, that it was hard to ſay, which was moſt predominant in them, their inſatiable Avarice, their inſupportable Pride, or abominable Hypocriſy.

The Scribes.

In Conjunction with the Phariſees, the Scribes are often mention'd in the Scriptures of the New Teſtament. They were not however any particular Sect, but a Profeſſion of Men of divers Kinds, following Literature. For generally all, that were any way learned among the Jews, were, in the Time of our Saviour and his Apoſtles, called Scribes, but eſpecially thoſe, who, by their Skill in the Law, and Divinity of the Jews, were advanc'd to ſit in Moſes's Seat, either as Judges in their Sanhedrim, or Teachers in their Schools, or Synagogues. Both their Name and Profeſſion began immediately after the Babyloniſh Captivity, about five hundred

* The Word Phylactery, in the Greek, ſignifies a Place to keep any Thing in; in the Hebrew, it is called Tephillim, which ſignifies Prayers, becauſe the Jews wear their Phylacteries chiefly, when they go to their Devotion. It is a common Opinion, that theſe Phylacteries were long Pieces of Parchment, whereon were written certain Paſſages out of Exodus and Deuteronomy, which they ty'd to their Foreheads and left Arm, in Memory of the Law; but a late Explainer of the Jewiſh Cuſtoms aſſures us, that they were Parchment-Caſes, form'd with very great Nicety, into their proper Shapes; that the Caſe for the Head had four Cavities, into each of which they put a Piece of Parchment rolled up, wherein were written ſome Sections of the Law; but that, which was for the Arm, had but one Cavity, and into it they put one Piece of Parchment, wherein four Paſſages of Scripture were written. Lamy's Introduction, lib. i. c. 16. The whole of this Cuſtom is founded on Exod. xiii. 9. and Deut. vi. 8, but the Words are only metaphorically to be underſtood, as a Command to have God's Laws perpetually before our Eyes, and his Deliverance always in Remembrance. It cannot be deny'd however, that theſe Phylacteries were generally worn by the Jews in our Saviour's Time, and were not diſus'd ſo late as St Jerom's. Lamy, ibid.

hundred Years before the Birth of Chriſt; for Ezra himſelf was one of the firſt. They were a Body of the moſt learned Men of the Nation, and chiefly of the Sect of the Phariſees, tho' ſome of them might poſſibly be Karraites, or Antitraditioniſts, as it ſeems to appear by one of them aſking our Saviour (b) Which was the firſt Commandment of all, and being ſo highly pleas'd with his Anſwer.

THOSE, who were deſcended from the Stock of Levi, were uſually called Scribes of the Clergy; but ſuch, as were ſprung from any other Tribe, were nam'd Scribes of the People. The Buſineſs of the latter, was to take care to preſerve the Purity of the Text in all the Bibles, which they copy'd out, and to ſee that no Corruption was crept into the Original. It was not held proper for every vulgar Pen to tranſcribe the great Myſteries of the Law, and therefore this peculiar Order of Men was appointed to that Purpoſe; but they did not ſo entirely apply themſelves to it, as not to take in many other Matters both of Civil and Religious Concern, being Publick Notaries in the Sanhedrim, and Courts of Juſtice, as well as Regiſters in the Synagogues. The Office of the Scribes of the Clergy, was to teach in publick, and inſtruct the People by expounding to them the Law in their Sermons, and ſet Diſcourſes; by which Practice, they grew into ſuch Repute in the Jewiſh State, that it was hard to ſay, whether the Phariſees, or they, were held in the greater Veneration: For what the Phariſees gain'd among the common People by their Pretences to extraordinary Sanctity, theſe more juſtly obtain'd by their Zeal for the written Word, in preſerving it from the Dangers of Corruption, and expounding it in the Ears of the People.

Eſſenes.

IT is ſuppos'd, with a good deal of Probability, that the Sect of the Eſſenes began about an hundred and fifty Years before Chriſt, and during the Perſecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, when great Numbers of Jews were driven into the Wilderneſs, where they inur'd themſelves to a hard and laborious Courſe of living. Why we find no Mention made of them in all the New Teſtament, the probable Reaſon may be, that the major Part of them liv'd in Egypt, at a conſiderable Diſtance from Judea, which, at this Time, was infeſted with ſuch Perſecutions, and inteſtine Broils, as were abhorrent to their retir'd and Hermetic Courſe of Life, which, as it ſecluded them from all Places of great Reſort, might make them leſs curious to enquire after our Saviour's Perſon and Doctrine, thinking very probably, that, if he was really the Meſſiah, he would not fail to ſeek and find out them; but that, if he was not, he had already Enemies enough to oppoſe him, without their leaving the ſolitary and contemplative Life, they were accuſtom'd to, merely to bear Teſtimony againſt him. Philo, who gives us a full Account of theſe People, tells us, that they were called Eſſenes, from the Greek Word ὅσιος, which ſignifies holy, and that there were two Sorts of them: Some, who living in Society, and marrying, (tho' with a great deal of Warineſs and Circumſpection) liv'd in Villages, and apply'd themſelves to Huſbandry, and other innocent Trades and Occupations, and were therefore called practical; but others, who living a Kind of monaſtick Life, gave themſelves wholly up to Meditation, and were therefore called the contemplative Eſſenes: But however they differ'd in their Manner of Life, they were both of the ſame Belief, and follow'd the ſame Maxims.

Their Principles.

THEY had not indeed the like Traditions with the Phariſees, but, as they were Allegoriſts, they had ſeveral myſtical Books, which ſerv'd them for a Rule in explaining the ſacred Writings, all of which (contrary to the Sadducees) they acknowledg'd and receiv'd. They believ'd, that God governs the World, but by ſuch an abſolute Predeſtination of every Thing, as allow'd Mankind no (b) Mark xii. 28, &c.

---

Liberty of Choice in all their Actions. They acknowledg'd a future State, thinking, that the Souls of good Men went into the fortunate Iſlands, while thoſe of the Wicked were ſhut up in ſubterraneous Places; but as for the Reſurrection of the Body, and the Soul's returning to it again, after they were once parted, of this they had no Manner of Notion. All Practical Religion they reduc'd to theſe three Kinds. 1. The Love of God. 2. The Love of Virtue. And, 3. The Love of Mankind. 1. Their Love of God expreſs'd itſelf in accounting him the Author of all Good, and, conſequently, applying to him every Morning and Night for the Bleſſings they wanted; in their abſtaining from Swearing, from Lying, and all other Sins, that are abhorrent to his Nature; and in their ſtrict Obſervance of the Sabbath, and all other holy Rites, except ſacrificing; for, tho' they ſent their Gifts to the Altar, yet they themſelves went not thither, preſuming, that the Sanctity of their Lives was the pureſt and moſt acceptable Sacrifice to God that they could offer. 2. Their Love of Virtue was ſhewn in the Government of their Paſſions, their refraining from Pleaſures, their Contempt of Riches, their Abſtinence in eating, their Continence, their Patience, the Simplicity of their Speech, and the Modeſty of their Carriage. And, 3. Their Love of Mankind appear'd in their great Benevolence and ſtrict Juſtice; their Charity to the Poor, and Hoſpitality to Strangers; and there needs no other Proof of their Love to one another, than the Union, in which they liv'd. For they had the ſame Houſes, the ſame Proviſions, the ſame Habits, the ſame Tables; their Gains were put in the common Stock; they divided the Care of the Sick among them; and honour'd the elder Men of their Society with the ſame Reverence, as if they had been their Fathers.

From 1 Macc. v. 1. 2 Macc. x. 11. and Joſ. lib. xii. c. 14. to the End of 1 and 2 Macc. and of Joſ. lib. xiii. c. 19.

This Strictneſs and Regularity of theirs gave them an eminent Character, and made it a Matter of no ſmall Conſequence to be admitted into their Society. For when, after a due Courſe of Probation, any one preſented himſelf for that Purpoſe, they bound him under the moſt ſolemn Vows and Proteſtations, "To love and worſhip "God, and do Juſtice to all Men; to "profeſs himſelf an Enemy to the Wick-"ed, and a Friend to the Lovers of Vir-"tue; to keep his Hands from Theft, "and all fraudulent Dealings, and his "Soul unpolluted with the Deſire of unjuſt "Gain; not to uſurp upon his Inferiors, "nor diſtinguiſh himſelf from them by "any Ornaments of Dreſs or Apparel; "not to conceal any of the Myſteries of "Religion from his Brethren, nor to diſ-"cloſe any to the Profane, tho' it were "to ſave his Life; but to preſerve the "Doctrine he profeſs'd, the Books that "were written of it, and the Names of "thoſe, from whom he had it." This was the Form of Admiſſion into their Communion, which whoever violated, in any groſs Inſtance, was immediately excluded, and never receiv'd again, without the deepeſt Humiliation and Repentance. And, if ſuch was the Religion and Manner of Life of the Eſſenes, we have leſs Reaſon to be ſurpriz'd, at our finding ſome Authors ſo much extolling their Courage and Magnanimity upon ſeveral Occaſions, as Perſons, who, under Diſtreſſes and Perſecutions, ſuffer'd Death, and the moſt grievous Torments, even with Joy and Chearfulneſs, rather than ſay, or do any Thing contrary to the Law of God. They are ſaid however to have (k) greatly degenerated from their primitive Purity of Life and Doctrine. In the Time of Trajan, and the Reign of Juſtinian, tho' they were known under the pompous Title of Angels, or angelick Perſons, yet were they found to come infinitely ſhort of the Beings, whoſe Names they aſſum'd, and, upon that Account, falling into into a great Diſeſteem, in a very ſhort Time † they dwindled into nothing.

A. M. 3841, &c. Ant. Chriſ. 163, &c.

The Herodians.

THERE was another Sect among the Jews, (k) mention'd in the Goſpels, which, tho' of later Original, may not improperly be conſider'd in this Place; and that is the Herodians *, who, in their main Principles, were not very different from the Sadducees. They ſprang up, no doubt, in the Time of Herod the Great, ſome twenty or thirty Years before Chriſt, and had their Denomination from him, but upon what Account it is not ſo well agreed. The common Opinion is, that they look'd upon Herod as the promis'd Meſſiah: But it is a very improbable Thing, that any Jews ſhould, in the Time of our Saviour's Miniſtry, above thirty Years after the Death of Herod, hold him to have been the Meſſiah, when they had found no one of thoſe Particulars, which they expected from the Meſſiah, perform'd by him, but rather every Thing quite contrary. (l) Others therefore ſuppoſe, that they were called Herodians, becauſe they conſtituted a Sodality, (or Club as we call it) in Honour of Herod at Jeruſalem, as there were ſeveral in Rome, in Honour of their Emperors *. But ſince the earlieſt of theſe Sodalities in Rome were not inſtituted, till after the Death of Auguſtus, who out-liv'd Herod ſixteen Years and upwards, this could be no Pattern, or Foundation for the Inſtitution of the like in Memory of Herod, who dy'd ſo long before.

From 1 Macc. v. 1. 2 Macc x. 11 and Joſ. lib. xii. c. 14. to the End of 1 and 2 Macc. and of Joſ. lib. xiii. c. 19.

HEROD, no doubt, came into the Government with great Oppoſition; and, as he was by Birth a Foreigner, and had made his Entrance with much Blood, his Title was not acknowledg'd by the greater Part of the Jews, eſpecially as long as Antigonus was alive. Thoſe therefore that would own his Title, and eſpouſe his Intereſt, might, for this Reaſon, perhaps go under the Name of Herodians; but this ſeems not to be the whole of the Matter. Our bleſſed Saviour cautions his Diſciples, (m) againſt the Leaven, (i. e. againſt the evil and erroneous Tenets) of Herod; which ſeems to imply, that Herod himſelf was the Author of ſome falſe Notions, which conſtituted a particular Sect, differing from the other Sects of the Jews; and that his Followers, imbibing theſe Principles from him, had the Denomination of Herodians. (n) For as much then, that Herod (o), the better to ſecure his Poſſeſſion of the Throne, had put himſelf under the Roman Protection, (p) contrary to an expreſs Precept of the Law; and, to ingratiate himſelf with the great Men at Rome, built Temples and erected Images in them for idolatrous Worſhip, excuſing himſelf to the Jews, that all this he did, purely in Compliance to the Commands, he was neceſſitated to obey, and might probably lay it down for a Maxim in Religion, that, in Caſe of Compulſion, it was lawful to ſubmit to unjuſt Injunctions; there is no Wonder at all, that ſome bold Men ſhould riſe up to juſtify the King's Practice, and (by the Royal Permiſſion) call themſelves by his

† Some indeed are of Opinion, that theſe Eſſenes did renounce Judaiſm, and were Converts to Chriſtianity, and that ſuch among them, as were called Therapeutæ, became Monks, and were form'd into that Order by St Mark, who was the firſt Founder of the Chriſtian Church in Alexandria. But tho' it ſeems not unlikely, that ſome of this Sect might be converted, yet, that the main Body of them ſhould embrace Chriſtianity, and ſo be loſt in the Societies of Chriſtian Hermits, is far from being probable; eſpecially, ſince we find no Traces of any ſuch Inſtitution as Monkiſm, till after the Beginning of the Second Century, when theſe Aſcetics, who had formerly fled from Perſecution, finding the Sweets of their Retirement and Solitude, began to multiply, and ſo erected themſelves into Bodies. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 107, and Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, lib. ii. c. 13.

Name, whoſe diſtinguiſhing Tenet might probably be, "That, altho' they profeſs'd the Jewiſh Religion, and abominated Idolatry in their Hearts; yet, to humour the Romans, and make themſelves eaſy with their Governors, it was not unlawful to comply ſometimes with their Demands, and, at leaſt outwardly, to become occaſional Conformiſts." This is the Leaven of the Herodians, which our Saviour cautions his Diſciples againſt, but it was not of long Continuance in the Jewiſh Church. For, Herod Antipas (q) having loſt his Credit at Rome, and being depos'd and baniſh'd out of Judea, the Sect that was inſtituted by his Father, and ſupported by his Favour and Countenance, could not ſupport itſelf after his Diſgrace.

Zealots.

Another Sect, mention'd by Joſephus (r), as riſing after this Time, was that of Judas of Galilee: For when Archelaus, Son of Herod the Great, was ſent into Baniſhment, and Judea reduc'd to a Roman Province, Judas †, a Native of Galamala, took occaſion, from ſome new Exactions, to exhort his Countrymen to ſhake off the Roman Yoke; pretending, that to pay Tribute to any foreign Power was a ſhameful Badge of their Slavery. An Averſion to the Roman Dominion, and an Hatred of the Publicans (who had the Care of receiving the Taxes and Tributes) was natural enough to all the Jews; but they, whoſe Zeal led them to join Judas, and form a particular Sect, valu'd themſelves upon their Holineſs and Juſtice, becauſe they would not acknowledge any other Sovereign but God; and, rather than ſubmit to the Dominion of Man, or give him the Title of Lord, they choſe to ſubject themſelves to any Torments, or even to Death itſelf. Judas indeed periſh'd, and all, as many as obeyed him, were diſperſed for a While; but, in the Time of the Jewiſh Wars, they gather'd again, and ſoon became a Faction, ſtrong and conſiderable enough, to put every Thing into Confuſion. They affected the Title of Zealots, (ſays (s) Joſephus) as if their Undertakings had been good and honourable, even while they out-did the very worſt of Men in Wickedneſs. They look'd upon themſelves indeed, as the true Succeſſors of Phinehas, (t) who, out of Zeal for the Honour of God, did immediate Execution upon Zimri and Coſbi, for which he receiv'd the Divine Thanks and Approbation. And, in Imitation of him, theſe Men took upon them to execute Judgment upon ſuch, as they called notorious Offenders, without ſtaying for the ordinary Formalities of Law. And therefore, they made no Scruple of robbing, and plundering, and killing the principal of the Nobility, under Pretence of their holding Correſpondence with the Romans, and betraying the Liberty of their Country. At laſt, joining with the Idumæans, they committed all Manner of Outrage, ſeiz'd on the Temple, and profan'd the Sanctuary, and ſlew many of the High-Prieſts themſelves. So that, when Jeruſalem came to be beſieg'd, they were perpetually raiſing Tumults and Diſtractions within, which ended at laſt in the Deſtruction of their City and Temple, and the total Diſſolution of their State.

These were the ſeveral Sects, which, much about this Period of Time, ſprang up in the Jewiſh Church; and, if the like Differences in Opinion have ſince appear'd in the Chriſtian, 'tis no more, than what the Spirit of God has foretold: (u) For there muſt be Hereſies among you, that they who are approved, may be made manifeſt among you.

The HISTORY.

A. M. 3897, &c. Ant. Chriſ. 107, &c

Ariſtobulus ſucceeds his Father, makes himſelf King of Judea, but murthers his Mother and Brother.

HYRCANUS, when he dy'd, left five Sons: Ariſtobulus, Antigonus, and Alexander were the three firſt: Who the fourth was, we no where read; but the Name of the fifth was Abſalom. Ariſtobulus, as eldeſt, ſucceeded his Father, both in the Pontificate and Principality of the Nation, and (as we ſaid before) was the firſt in Judea, ſince the Babyloniſh Captivity, who put on a Diadem, and aſſum'd the Title of a King; but he was a Man of a bloody and ſuſpicious Diſpoſition. His own Mother, becauſe, in Virtue of his Father's Will, ſhe claim'd ſome Share in the Sovereignty, he firſt caſt into Priſon, and there ſtarv'd to Death. All his Brothers he put under the like Confinement, except Antigonus, who was his great Favourite, and, at firſt, ſhar'd in the Government with him; but he ſoon cooled in his Affections, and at laſt had him put to Death; tho', in this Piece of Cruelty, the Inſtruments about him were more to blame, than he.

From Joſeph. lib. xiii. c. 19. to the End of lib. xv.

As ſoon as he was ſettled in the Throne, he engag'd in a War with the Ituræans †; and having ſubdu'd the greateſt Part of them, he forc'd them to become Proſelytes to the Jewiſh Religion, in the ſame Manner, as his Father had done to the Idumæans; but returning ſick from the War to Jeruſalem, he left his Brother behind him to finiſh it, which accordingly he did with Succeſs; and ſo returning in Triumph, at a Time when the Feaſt of Tabernacles was celebrating, he went directly to the Temple (as did the Guards that attended him) with his Armour on, to pay his Devotions to God.

THE Queen, and the Courtiers of her Party, who envy'd the Intereſt, which Antigonus had with the King, were always buzzing in his Ears ſuch Stories, as they thought would excite his Jealouſy; and now they come and tell him, "That "it was high Time for him to look to "himſelf; that his Brother was gone into "the Temple in an Equipage, not be- "coming

This Repreſentation made ſome Impreſſion upon Ariſtobulus, ſo that he ſent to his Brother to put off his Armour, and immediately come to him; concluding, that if, purſuant to his Orders, he came unarm'd, there was no Miſchief intended, but that, if he did otherwiſe, there might be ſomething in what the Queen had ſuggeſted: And therefore placing his Guards in a ſubterraneous Paſſage [†], which led from the Palace to the Temple, and thro' which his Brother was to come to the King's Apartment, he order'd them, that if he came unarm'd, they ſhould let him paſs, but, if otherwiſe, they ſhould inſtantly fall upon him, and diſpatch him.

The Queen, knowing this, prevailed with the Meſſenger, whom Ariſtobulus ſent to bid his Brother come unarm'd, to tell him, on the contrary, that the King, being inform'd of a very beautiful Suit of Armour, which he had brought with him from the Wars, was minded to ſee how it became him, and therefore deſir'd him to come in it, which accordingly he did, ſuſpecting no Ill. When he came to the Place, where the Guards were poſted, they, ſeeing his Armour on, executed their Orders, and immediately ſlew him; but, no ſooner was the Fact committed, than Ariſtobulus ſeverely repented it.

Ever ſince his Father's Death, he had been kept in Priſon by the late King; but, upon his Deceaſe, his Widow Salome releaſ'd him, and his other two Brothers from their Confinement; ſo that, being now on the Throne, and having diſcover'd that the elder of theſe Brothers had form'd a Deſign to ſupplant him, he cauſ'd him to be put to Death; but the other, who was called Abſalom, deſiring to live quietly, and in a private Condition, he took into his Favour, and under his Protection.

[†] When Hyrcanus built the Palace of Baris, he cauſ'd this Paſſage, which led from thence to the Temple, to be made, that, upon all Occaſions, he might have a ready Communication with it: And as, over this Paſſage, there was a Turret, or Tower of the Palace, called Straton's Tower; Joſephus tells us a very remarkable Story concerning it, viz. That one Judas, an Eſſene, having foretold that Antigonus ſhould, that very Day, be ſlain in Straton's Tower, which he took to be a Town ſo called, lying on the Sea-Coaſt, and two Days Journey from Jeruſalem, and ſeeing Antigonus come into the Temple, he fell into a great Paſſion, and began to exclaim againſt Truth itſelf, as ſuppoſing his Prediction impoſſible now to be fulfilled; but, while he was in this Agony, News being brought, that Antigonus was ſlain in that Part of the ſubterraneous Gallery, which was directly under the Turret, called Straton's Tower, the Eſſene rejoic'd in the Comfort and Satiſfaction of having his Prophecy verify'd, at the ſame Time that every one elſe was lamenting the Murther of this young Prince. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. xii. c. 19.

with one Part he beſieg'd Ptolemais, and employ'd the other in ravaging the Territories of Zoilus, and thoſe of Gaza. In the mean Time the Beſieg'd had ſent to Ptolemy Lathyrus [*], the expelled King of Egypt, who reign'd then in Crete, to come to their Relief; but afterwards, bethinking themſelves better, they came to a Reſolution (which they communicated to Ptolemy) to truſt to their own Strength, rather than admit of any Auxiliaries.

PTOLEMY however was already ſet to Sea, when he heard this News; and therefore proceeding in his Voyage, and landing his Army in Phœnicia, he advanc'd towards Ptolemais: But the People in the Town would neither receive his Meſſengers, nor ſend him any Anſwer, ſo that he was in no ſmall Perplexity what Courſe to take, when Zoilus and the Gazeans ſent Embaſſadors, deſiring his Aſſiſtance againſt Alexander's Forces, which they were not able to oppoſe.

PTOLEMY, being very glad of any Opportunity to make an honourable Retreat from before Ptolemais, readily march'd his Army to their Relief; but Alexander, not thinking it adviſable to hazard an Engagement with him, withdrew his Army into their Quarters, and there thought to gain by Policy, what he could not attain by Force.

His Perfidy to Ptolemy, who defeats his Army, and waſtes his Country.

TO this Purpoſe he enter'd into a Treaty with Lathyrus, and engag'd to pay him four hundred Talents of Silver, on Condition, that he would deliver Zoilus and his Territories into his Hands, which Lathyrus agreed to do, and, accordingly, had got Zoilus into his Cuſtody; but when he came to underſtand, that at the ſame Time Alexander was clandeſtinely treating with Cleopatra, to bring her upon him with all her Forces, he, deteſting ſuch double Dealing, broke off all Friendſhip with him, and reſolv'd to do him what Miſchief he could.

THE two Armies therefore met the next Year, and a very fierce Battle enſu'd near Aſophus, not far from the River Jordan wherein Alexander being vanquiſh'd loſt thirty Thouſand of his Men, beſides thoſe that were taken Priſoners. After this Victory, Ptolemy made every where great Havock, and ſpread the Terror [*] of his Name throughout all the Province; but his Mother Cleopatra being fearful, leſt ſo much Succeſs ſhould make him powerful enough to invade Egypt, ſet out with a large Fleet, and a numerous Army, which ſhe landed in Phœnicia, and thence proceeded to Ptolemais, expecting that the People would have open'd their Gates to her, but, finding the contrary, ſhe inveſted the Place to take it by Force; while Ptolemy, believing that it would be eaſy for him to recover Egypt in the Abſence of his Mother and her Army, left Syria, and went upon that Expedition; but meeting with more Oppoſition, than he expected, he was oblig'd to return to Gaza, where he paſs'd the Winter, and from thence went back again to Cyprus.

[*] This Ptolemy Lathyrus, by his Mother Cleopatra, was made King of Egypt, but, by his affecting to reign without her, he ſo far incurr'd her Diſpleaſure, that ſhe procur'd his Expulſion by this Artifice:——— Some of her favourite Eunuchs ſhe caus'd to be wounded; and then bringing them out into the publick Aſſembly of the Alexandrians, ſhe there pretended, that they had ſuffer'd this from Lathyrus, in Defence of her Perſon againſt him, and thereupon accus'd him of having made an Attempt upon her Life; and by this Means ſhe ſo far incens'd the People, that they roſe in a general Uproar againſt him, and would have torn him in Pieces, had he not fled for his Life. Hereupon Cleopatra ſent for Alexander, her younger Son, who for ſome Time had reign'd in Cyprus, and, having made him King of Egypt, forc'd Lathyrus to be content with Cyprus, upon his Brother's leaving it. Juſtin, lib. xxxix. c. 4.

[*] There is a very cruel and barbarous Act, which he is ſaid to have done at this Time, viz. that, coming with his Army, in the Evening after the Victory, to take up his Quarters in the adjoining Villages, and finding them full of Women and Children, he caus'd them to be all ſlaughter'd, and their Bodies to be cut in Pieces, and put in Caldrons over the Fire to be boiled, as if they had been for Supper; that ſo he might leave an Opinion in that Country, that his Men fed upon human Fleſh, and thereby create the greater Dread and Terror of his Army. This barbarous Cruelty Strabo and Nicholaus (as Joſephus tells us) make mention of. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. xiii. c. 21.

derable Preſents, and was kindly receiv'd, as an unhappy Prince, who was Ptolemy's Enemy, and had no other Refuge, but the Queen's Protection: And therefore, when ſome about her ſuggeſted, that now ſhe had an Opportunity to ſeize on him and his Dominions, Ananias, one of her Generals, who by Birth was a Jew, and by Deſcent a Relation to Alexander, by repreſenting to her the Danger and Injuſtice of ſuch a Procedure; how baſe and injurious to her own Honour, which for no Conſiderations whatever ought to be tarniſh'd; how prejudicial to her Intereſt, by provoking all the Jews in the World againſt her; and how contrary to the Rules of Faith and common Honeſty, which are obſerv'd among all Mankind, it would be to treat a Friend and Ally in this Manner; he prevailed with her to deſiſt from all Thoughts of it, ſo that, having concluded an amicable Alliance with Alexander, ſhe return'd with her Army into Egypt.

As ſoon as the Country was clear of theſe Foreigners, and Alexander had recruited his ſhatter'd Forces, he march'd into Cœlo-Syria, where (after a Siege of ten Months) he took Gadara, and, after that, the ſtrong Fortreſs of Amathus, where Theodorus, the Son of Zeno, Prince of Philadelphia, had laid up all his Treaſure: But Theodorus falling ſuddenly upon him, as he was returning from the Conqueſt, not only recover'd his Treaſure again, but ſlew ten Thouſand of his Men, and took all his Baggage from him.

Beſieges Gaza and puts the Inhabitants to the Sword.

All theſe Misfortunes however did not diſcourage this Prince. The next Year he march'd his Forces again over the Jordan; and, after having taken ſome neighbouring Places, came, and ſat down before Gaza, with a Deſign, if he took it, to uſe the People with the utmoſt Severity; but Apollodotus, who commanded the Town, made a gallant Defence, and, in a Sally with twenty Thouſand of his Men, one Night fell ſo furiouſly upon Alexander's Camp, that he had like to have ruin'd him, and his whole Army; but, as ſoon as the Day appear'd, the Jews diſcovering who they were, (for they thought in the Dark that Lathyrus was come again to the Aſſiſtance of Gaza) rally'd again, and repuls'd the Gazeans into the City, with the Loſs of a Thouſand of their Men.

The City however ſtill held out, till Lyſimachus, envying the Credit and Eſteem, which his Brother Apollodotus had gain'd in the Defence of the Place, treacherouſly ſlew him, and then as treacherouſly deliver'd up the City to Alexander; who, as ſoon as he had got Poſſeſſion of it, let looſe his Soldiers upon it, with a full Licence to kill, plunder, and deſtroy, which produc'd a ſad Scene of Barbarity. The Gazeans, thus finding that they were to have no Quarter, ſtood upon their Defence, and ſold their Lives at ſo dear a Rate, that in the Carnage and Saccage of the Place Alexander loſt as many Men of his own, as he killed of the Enemy; but had the horrid Pleaſure, before he went away, to ſee this antient and famous City reduc'd to utter Ruin and Deſolation.

Is inſulted and hated by his own Subjects, who run into open Rebellion againſt him.

When he return'd to Jeruſalem, he was far from finding Matters there in any peaceable Poſture. For, in the Feaſt of Tabernacles, while he was offering the uſual Sacrifices as High-Prieſt, the People, who were aſſembled in the Temple, had the Inſolence to pelt him with Citrons, (for during this Feſtival it was a Cuſtom among the Jews to carry † Branches of Palm-

† The Word in the Original is Attrog, which the Jews imagine to have been the forbidden Fruit, that our firſt Parents eat in Paradiſe. It very much reſembles a Citron or Lemon, except that it has a very rough and uneven Rind, which, they fondly imagine, was originally occaſion'd by Eve's impreſſing her Teeth on it, and that theſe Marks it has ſtill retain'd. The Cuſtom of carrying theſe in their Hands is in Teſtimony of their Joy, but on the Seventh Day, which cloſes the Feſtival, they break their Branches, and throw them away; and therefore it is ſuppos'd, that it was on this Day, when the mutinous Multitude pelted the High-Prieſt with theſe Attrogs, which, at this Time, were very common in Paleſtine. Palm-Trees, and Lemon-Trees in their Hands) and to give him very opprobrious Language, telling him, that he was a Slave [†], and unworthy to go up to the holy Altar to offer ſolemn Sacrifices, which enrag'd him to ſuch a Degree, that he fell upon them with his Soldiers, and ſlew ſix Thouſand of them. After this he ſurrounded the Court of the Prieſts, wherein the Altar and the Temple ſtood, with a wooden Partition, to hinder the People from coming near him, while he was officiating, and, to ſecure his Perſon againſt all future Attempts, he took Guards into his Pay from Piſidia and Cilicia, (for he durſt not truſt his own Countrymen) and of theſe he had ſix Thouſand always about him.

Having thus, in ſome Meaſure, laid the Storm at home, he march'd his Forces againſt the Moabites and Ammonites, and made them become tributary to him. He attack'd again the Fortreſs of Amathus; but Theodorus, not daring to ſtand his Coming, had remov'd his Treaſure, and withdrawn the Garriſon, ſo that he took it without Oppoſition: But in his War with Thedas, an Arabian King, he had not the like Succeſs; for, falling into an Ambuſcade, which that Prince had laid for him near Gadara, he there loſt moſt of his Army, and, not without ſome Difficulty, eſcap'd himſelf.

From Joſeph. lib. xiii. c. 19. to the End of lib. xv.

This Loſs, added to the Hatred, which the Jews had conceiv'd againſt him, made them fly out into an open Rebellion, ſo that here a Civil War commenc'd, which laſted for ſix Years. In moſt Encounters he had the Advantage of his Subjects, but ſo exaſperated were they againſt him, that he could never bring them to ſubmit: For, having one Day aſk'd them, what they would have him do to pleaſe them, they all with one Voice reply'd, “That he ſhould cut his own Throat; for, upon no other Terms, would they be at Peace with him; and well it were, they ſaid, conſidering the great [†] Miſchiefs he had done them, if they could be reconciled to him, even after he was in his Grave;” and thereupon they ſent Deputies to Demetrius Euchærus, who was then King of Damaſcus, to deſire Succours from him againſt their Sovereign.

His Succeſs againſt them and unheard-of Cruelty.

DEMETRIUS, at their Requeſt, came into Judea with an Army of three Thouſand Horſe, and forty Thouſand Foot, Syrians and Jews. Alexander march'd againſt him with ſix Thouſand Greek Mercenaries, and twenty Thouſand Jews, who continu'd faithful to him; but in the Engagement he was quite vanquiſh'd. All his foreign Troops were loſt to a Man; and the greateſt Part of his other Forces was ſo miſerably broken, that he was forc'd to flee for Shelter to the Mountains, with the poor Remnant he could get together.

This Misfortune, which, in all Appearance, muſt have totally ruin'd his Affairs, prov'd the very Means of reeſtabliſhing them. Six Thouſand of thoſe very Jews, who had ſo lately appear'd in Arms againſt him, when they ſaw him reduc'd to this diſtreſs'd Condition, were mov'd with Compaſſion, and went over to him: And Demetrius, being content with the firſt Advantage he had gain'd, or fearing perhaps that the reſt of the Jews would do the ſame, retir'd into Syria, leaving the Rebels to make War againſt their King with their own Forces.

[†] In this they alluded to what Eleazar, a leading Phariſee, had ſaid to his Father Hyrcanus, viz. That his Mother was a Captive taken in the Wars, and he, conſequently, diſqualify'd to be their High-Prieſt, vide page 1127. But the true Reaſon of their Exaſperation againſt him, was, that he follow'd his Father's Steps, and not only gave Countenance to the contrary Sect, but continu'd the Penal Laws againſt thoſe, who ſhould obſerve the Traditions and Cuſtoms introduc'd by the Phariſees. Univerſal Hiſtory, lib. ii. c. 11.

[†] The fourth Book of the Maccabees (Chap. xxix.) tells us, that this War was chiefly between the Phariſees and Sadducees, and that Alexander, having declar'd himſelf againſt the former, had put fifty Thouſand of them to Death within the Space of ſix Years, which ſo exaſperated the reſt, that they would hearken to no Accommodation. Univerſal Hiſtory, lib. ii. c. 11.

IN moſt of the Conflicts that happen'd between them Alexander defeated them, but ſtill he could bring them to no Terms of Peace; till at laſt, coming to a deciſive Battle, he cut off the major Part of them; and the reſt he ſhut up in a Place, called Bethome. This he beſieg'd, and took; and, having carry'd eight Hundred of the Rebels Priſoners to Jeruſalem, he there caus'd them to be crucify'd all on one Day, and their Wives and Children to be ſlain before their Faces, as they were hanging on the Croſſes, whilſt he made an Entertainment for his Wives and Concubines near the Place, where this Scene of Terror was acting, with an Intent chiefly to feaſt himſelf and them with this horrid Sight. This was a ſavage and unheard-of Cruelty: And, upon this Occaſion, the People of his own Party called him Thracides, i. e. as cruel as a Thracian, as no Name indeed could be bad enough to expreſs ſo inhuman a Procedure.

His Death, and political Advice to his Queen.

AFTER theſe Civil Wars were ended, Alexander led his Army againſt the two Kings of Damaſcus, Antiochus firſt, and afterwards Aretas †, who, at different Times, had invaded his Kingdom. He took ſeveral ſtrong Places in the neighbouring Territories, and, after an Expedition of three Years Continuance, return'd to Jeruſalem, and was well receiv'd by his Subjects. But that Felicity he did not long enjoy: For, having at a certain Time drank to a great Exceſs, he thereupon fell ſick, and was afterwards ſeiz'd with a Quartan Ague, which he was never able to ſhake off. This however did not interrupt his military Undertakings, till, being quite exhauſted, he was forc'd to ſubmit to Fate, while he was beſieging the Caſtle of Ragaba, in the Country of the Geraſens. His Queen Alexandra, who was with him at the Siege, obſerving him to draw near his End, was exceedingly troubled at the ill State, wherein ſhe and her Children ſhould be left at his Death. She knew how much he had exaſperated the Phariſees, then a powerful Sect among the Jews, and how great Hatred the Generality of the People, at their Inſtigation, had contracted againſt them; and therefore ſhe ſaw nothing elſe, but that ſhe and her Family would be given up to Deſtruction, and made Victims to the publick Rage; and thus ſhe ſat by his Bed-Side, lamenting, and bemoaning herſelf, while he lay a-dying.

TO eaſe her Mind from theſe diſmal Apprehenſions, the Advice, which he gave her, was this, —— (a) "That ſhe "ſhould conceal his Death, till the Caſtle "was taken, and then, carrying his dead "Body with her, ſhould lead back the "Army in Triumph for this Succeſs; "that, as ſoon as ſhe was come to Jeruſalem, ſhe ſhould ſend for ſome of the "leading Men of the Sect of the Phariſees, lay his dead Corps before them, "and tell them, that ſhe reſign'd it "wholly to their Pleaſure, either to treat "it with Indignity, (as his Treatment of "them had deſerv'd) or to diſpoſe of it as "they thought fit; and, withal, that ſhe "ſhould not forget to aſſure them, that, "as her Huſband had made her Regent, "during her Children's Minority, ſhe "would do nothing in the Adminiſtration without their Advice and Participation."

AFTER the Reduction of Ragaba, Alexandra return'd to Jeruſalem in the Manner that was preſcrib'd, and in every Thing elſe obſerv'd her Huſband's Directions moſt punctually; which ſucceeded ſo well, that the uſual Invectives againſt him were chang'd into Encomiums. All deplor'd the Loſs of ſo valiant a Prince, and honour'd his Funeral with a more than ordinary Pomp and Solemnity; all pity'd the Queen-Dowager, and, in Obedience to her her Huſband's Will, ſettled her in the ſupreme Government of the Nation.

ALEXANDER, when he dy'd, left behind him two Sons, Hyrcanus and Ariſtobulus, but the Regency he inveſted in the Queen, who had indeed the Name of the Government, but the Adminiſtration was entirely in the Power of the Phariſees. The firſt Thing therefore, that they did, was to have the Decree of John Hyrcanus, againſt their traditionary Conſtitutions, aboliſh'd; next to releaſe all the Priſoners, and re-call all the Exiles, that were concern'd with them in the late Civil Wars; and then, to demand Juſtice againſt all thoſe, by whoſe Inſtigation and Advice, the eight hundred Rebels abovemention'd had been crucify'd.

TO this Purpoſe they exhibited Articles againſt one Diogenes, a noted Confident of the late King's; had him condemn'd and executed; and proceeded in like Manner againſt ſeveral others; ſo that the late King's Friends and Adherents, ſeeing no End of theſe Perſecutions, went at length to the Queen in a Body, with Ariſtobulus her younger Son at the Head of them, to remonſtrate againſt theſe Proceedings. They had been old Officers to the King, and had faithfully adher'd to him in all his Wars and Difficulties; and therefore they requeſted, that, if no Regard were to be had to their Services, they might at leaſt be permitted to depart the Land, and ſeek their Safety elſewhere, or elſe, to be out of the Reach of their Enemies, might be ſent into the ſeveral Garriſons of the Kingdom: And to this laſt Demand of theirs the Queen conſented.

From Joſeph. lib. xiii. c. 19. to the End of lib. xv.

IN the mean Time, News was brought to Jeruſalem, that Tigranes King of Armenia, with an Army of five hundred Thouſand Men, had invaded Syria, and would in a ſhort Time be in Judea. This put the Queen and all the Jews into a terrible Fright; and therefore they immediately diſpatch'd away Embaſſadors, with Preſents of great Value, to court his Friendſhip, and divert the Storm. The Embaſſadors found him laying cloſe Siege to Ptolemais, and, when they were introduc'd, (for he was a Man * of great Pride and State) he commended their Forwardneſs in applying to him, accepted their Preſents, and aſſur'd them of his good Inclinations: But the true Reaſon of all this Civility was, that Lucullus, the Roman General, in Purſuit of Mithridates had enter'd Armenia, and was putting the Country under Military Contribution, which oblig'd Tigranes to return home, and ſo deliver'd the Jews from the Apprehenſions of an Invaſion from that Quarter.

Alexandra makes Hyrcanus her Succeſſor, but he is ſupplanted by Ariſtobulus.

ALEXANDRA, when ſhe was declar'd Queen, made Hyrcanus High-Prieſt, and left Ariſtobulus to lead a private Life; but a private Life was not agreeable to his aſpiring Temper. As ſoon therefore as he perceiv'd that the Queen was ſick and paſt all Hopes of Recovery, he privately in the Night went out of Jeruſalem, attended only with one Servant; and, having viſited all the Caſtles, in which, by his Procurement, his Father's Friends had been plac'd in Garriſon, in fifteen Days Time he ſecur'd to his Intereſt twenty of theſe Fortreſſes, and thereby in a Manner made himſelf Maſter of the reſt of the Strength of the Kingdom; ſo that, when his Mother dy'd, (which was not long after his Departure from Jeruſalem) tho' ſhe had declar'd his Brother

He never went abroad, but he had four of them to attend him; two running by him on one Side of his Horſe, and two on the other; and thus, in like Manner, he was ſerv'd by ſome of them at his Table, in his Bedchamber, and on all other Occaſions, but more eſpecially when he gave Audience to Embaſſadors; for then, to make the greater Oſtentation of his Glory to foreign Nations, he made all theſe captive Kings, in the Poſture and Habit of Servants, to range themſelves on each Side of him. But, as proud as he was, when once he came to feel the Power of the Roman Arms, he was ſoon brought into ſuch a State of mean and abject Humiliation, that, when he appear'd before Pompey, he pluck'd his Crown, or Royal Tiara, from off his Head, and caſt himſelf proſtrate on the Ground before him. Plutarch. in Lucullo & Pompeio.

Brother Hyrcanus her Succeſſor, he nevertheleſs met him in the Plains of Jericho: But, as the two Armies were going to engage, moſt of the Forces of Hyrcanus deſerted, and went over to Ariſtobulus, which oblig'd Hyrcanus to come to a Treaty with his Brother, in which it was agreed, that he ſhould make a Reſignation of the Crown and High-Prieſthood to Ariſtobulus, and ſubmit to live quietly upon his own private Fortune, which accordingly was ratify'd by publick Sanction.

Hyrcanus, aſſiſted by Aretas, defeats Ariſtobulus, and they both appeal to Pompey.

HYRCANUS was a quiet and peaceable Man, a Lover of Retirement and Eaſe, and therefore his Reſignation of the Crown was not ſo great a Grievance to him, as it was to ſome about him. Among theſe Antipater †, the Father of Herod, ſirnam'd the Great, was the chief; who, having perſuaded Hyrcanus, that, while he continu'd in Judea, his Life was in Danger, and that he had no other Choice left, but either to reign or die, adviſ'd him to make his Eſcape to Aretas King of Arabia, and with him to ſtipulate for Forces for the Recovery of his Kingdom. Hyrcanus did ſo; and, upon Condition that he would reſtore the Towns, which his Father Alexander had taken from him, Aretas ſupply'd him with fifty Thouſand Men, who, being join'd with the Jews, that were of Hyrcanus's Party, gave Battle to Ariſtobulus, and, having obtain'd a compleat Victory, purſu'd him to Jeruſalem, and thence to the Mount of the Temple, where they beſieg'd him, and committed ſome outrageous Acts *. In the mean Time, Scaurus, one of Pompey's Lieutenants, being come with a Roman Army as far as Damaſcus, Ariſtobulus took care, with the Promiſe of four hundred Talents, to engage him on his Side; ſo that he ſent to Aretas to withdraw his Forces from Jeruſalem, and threatened him with the Roman Arms in Caſe of Refuſal. Hereupon Aretas was forc'd to raiſe the Siege, and march off: But in his Retreat Ariſtobulus fell upon his Rear, and deſtroy'd about ſeven Thouſand of his Men.

Not long after this, Pompey himſelf came into Syria, and took up his Reſidence at Damaſcus, where he was attended with Embaſſadors from ſeveral Nations, and, among the reſt, Hyrcanus and Ariſtobulus ſent their Deputies, deſiring both his Protection, and Determination of the Controverſy depending between them. But when † Euſebius and Julius Africanus tell us, that the Father of this Antipater was an Heathen, and an Inhabitant of Aſcalon; that a Company of Robbers, having pillag'd a Temple, near Aſcalon, took this young Antipater, the Father of Herod the Great, who, at that Time, was the Prieſt of the Temple, away with them; and that, his Father being not able to redeem him, they carry'd him into Idumæa, where he ſettled, and made his Fortune. But there is much more Probability, that what Joſephus in the Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Wars, lib. i. c. 5, tells us of this great Man may be true; viz. that he was the Son of another Antipater, who was made Governor of Idumæa by Alexander Jannæus, and, as to his Religion, there is no Queſtion to be made, but that he was a Jew and circumcis'd; becauſe the Idumæans had, long before, receiv'd Circumciſion and the Religion of the Jews, even when Hyrcanus made a Conqueſt of their Country. This Antipater, having had his Education in the Court of Alexander Jannæus, and Alexandria his Queen, who reign'd after him, and wrought himſelf into the good Graces of Hyrcanus, the eldeſt of their Sons, in Hopes to riſe by his Favour, when he ſhould come to the Crown after his Mother; but when Hyrcanus was depos'd, and Ariſtobulus made King in his Place, all the Meaſures, which he had taken for his Advancement, were broken; and, being too obnoxious to Ariſtobulus, ever to have any Proſpect of Favour from him, he thought himſelf oblig'd, both in his own Intereſt, and Defence, to act the Part we find he did. Calmet's Dictionary, under the Word, and Prideaux's Connection, Anno 65.

* One barbarous Action of this Kind is thus related by Joſephus. ——— At this Time, there was at Jeruſalem one Onias, a Man of great Reputation for the Sanctity of his Life, and who, by his Prayers, had been thought to have once obtain'd Rain from Heaven in an Extremity of Drought. Upon a fond Imagination therefore, that his Curſes would be as prevalent as his Prayers, the Beſiegers brought him into the Camp, and there preſs'd him to curſe Ariſtobulus, and all that were with him. He oppos'd their Requeſt, as long as he could; but at length, finding no Reſt from their Importunities, he lifted up his Hands to Heaven, and, as he was ſtanding in the Midſt of them, ſaid, O Lord God, Ruler of the Univerſe, ſince both we, that ſtand here before thee, are thy People, and they, that are beſieg'd in the Temple, are thy Prieſts, I humbly beſeech thee not to hear the Prayers of either of them againſt the other. Whereupon they, who brought him thither, were ſo enrag'd againſt the good Man, that they fell upon him, and ſton'd him to Death. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. xiv. c. 3.

Their Pleadings on both Sides.

THE two Brothers accordingly waited upon Pompey to receive his Deciſion; and, at the ſame Time, ſeveral chief Men of the Jews came to remonſtrate againſt them both. The Jews pleaded, "That it had "been formerly the Uſage of their Na"tion to be govern'd by the High-Prieſt "of the God whom they worſhipp'd, who, "without aſſuming any other Title, ad"miniſtred Juſtice to them, according to "the Laws and Conſtitutions tranſmitted "down to them from their Fore-Fathers. "They own'd indeed, that the two con"tending Brothers were of the ſacerdotal "Race, but then they alledg'd, that they "had chang'd the old, and introduc'd a "new Form of Government, in order to "enſlave the People, and thereupon they "pray'd, that they might not be govern'd "by a King."

HYRCANUS on his Part urg'd, "That, being the elder Brother, he was "unjuſtly depriv'd of his Birthright by "Ariſtobulus, who, leaving him only a "ſmall Portion of Land for his Subſiſtence, "had uſurp'd all the reſt, and, as a Man "born for Miſchief, practis'd Piracy at "Sea, and Rapine and Depredation at "Land, upon his Neighbours." And, for the Atteſtation of all this, there appear'd above a Thouſand of the principal Jews. What Ariſtobulus had to ſay, in Anſwer to this, was, "That Hyrcanus was ſuper"ſeded in the Government, by Reaſon "of his Incapacity to rule, and not thro' "any Ambition of his; that his Sloth and "Inactivity had brought upon him the "Contempt of the People; and that there"fore he was forc'd to interpoſe, merely "to preſerve the Government from falling "into other Hands." And, to witneſs the Truth of this, he produc'd ſeveral young Gentlemen of the Nation, who by the Gaudineſs of their Dreſs, and the Levity of their Carriage, did no great Credit to the Cauſe, which they pretended to ſupport.

Ariſtobulus takes up Arms againſt Pompey, who conquers Jeruſalem, and reſtores Hyrcanus.

UPON this Hearing, Pompey could not but perceive the Injury, which Ariſtobulus had done his Brother; but for the preſent he diſmiſs'd them with fair Words, and referr'd the full Determination of the Matter, until himſelf ſhould come to Jeruſalem, which he would not fail to do, as ſoon as he had finiſh'd the Arabian War. Upon the whole, Ariſtobulus, perceiving which Way Pompey's Diſcourſe and Inclinations tended, left Damaſcus without ever taking Leave, and, returning to Judea, there arm'd the Country in his Defence. Pompey had ſoon done his Buſineſs in Arabia, and thence coming to Judea, found, that, upon his Approach, Ariſtobulus had ſhut himſelf up in the Caſtle of Alexandrion, which was a ſtrong Fortreſs, built by his Father (and therefore called by this Name) on an high Mountain, that ſtood in the Entrance of the Country of Judea, towards the Samaritan Side. Hither Pompey march'd his Army; and, having encamp'd before it, ſent a Meſſenger to Ariſtobulus to come down to him. Ariſtobulus, tho' with much Reluctancy, was forc'd to comply; and when Pompey demanded of him to deliver up his Caſtles, and to ſign Orders to that Purpoſe to all, who commanded in them, he durſt not refuſe doing it, tho' he complain'd of the Force, that was thus put on him; and, as ſoon as he got out of Pompey's Hands, fled to Jeruſalem, and there prepar'd for War.

† The fourth Book of Maccabees (Chap. xxxvi.) ſays nothing of this Submiſſion of Ariſtobulus to the Roman General, but tells us, that Pompey march'd directly againſt Jeruſalem, where obſerving the Situation of the Place, the Strength of its Walls, Towers, &c. he reſolv'd to try to gain Ariſtobulus by fair Means; that he invited him to come into his of what he had done went out to him, and, endeavouring to reconcile Matters with him, promiſ'd an entire Submiſſion for the future, and a conſiderable Sum of Money beſides, if he would but withdraw his Forces. Pompey accepted the Propoſal; and, accordingly, ſent Gabinius, one of his Lieutenants, with a Body of Men, to receive the Money; but, when he came to Jeruſalem, he found the Gates ſhut againſt him, and was told from the Walls, that thoſe within would ſtand to no ſuch Agreement.

THIS was ſuch Treatment, that the Roman General, without any more to do, clapp'd Ariſtobulus (whom he had taken with him) in Chains, and ſo marching forward with his whole Army, was, by the Prevalence of Hyrcanus's Party, receiv'd into Jeruſalem; but the other Faction, retiring to the Mount of the Temple, broke down the Bridges over the deep Ditches and Valleys that ſurrounded it, and ſo reſolv'd to defend the Place: But there was no withſtanding a Roman Army long. In three Months Time Pompey [†] became Maſter of the Mount, which he carry'd Sword in Hand; and, having made a dreadful Carnage upon this Occaſion, he cauſ'd afterwards all ſuch Priſoners [†] to be put to Death, as were found to have been the principal Incendiaries of this War.

BEFORE he left Jeruſalem, he, with ſeveral other chief Officers accompanying him, went into the Temple, and cauſ'd the moſt ſacred Parts of it, even the Holy of Holies, (into which himſelf enter'd) to be open'd. He viſited the Treaſuries likewiſe, where he found two Thouſand Talents of Silver, beſides Veſſels, and other Things of great Value; but [*] touching nothing of all this, he left it entire for the ſacred Uſes, to which it was appropriated. He thought it adviſable however to deſtroy the Walls of Jeruſalem; and tho' he reſtor'd Hyrcanus to the High-Prieſthood, and made him Prince of the Country, yet he depriv'd him of all the new Conqueſts, which his Predeceſſors had made; would not permit him to wear a Diadem; and oblig'd him to pay an annual Tribute to the Romans: And, having thus regulated all Matters, he ſet forward on his Journey home, carrying with him Ariſtobulus, his two Sons Alexander and Antigonus, and two of his Daughters, as Captives, to be led before him in his Triumph.

Univerſal Hiſtory, lib. ii. c. 11.

[†] It is ſuppoſ'd by Joſephus, that the Mount of the Temple would have hardly been taken ſo ſoon by the Romans, had it not been for the Superſtition of the Jews in their Obſervation of the Sabbath. For, tho' they now held it lawful to defend themſelves vigorouſly on that Day, yet they would not ſtir an Hand to annoy the Enemy, or obſtruct them in any of their Works. This Pompey obſerving, order'd his Men to employ the Sabbath Day in nothing elſe, but in making their Approaches, wherein the Beſieg'd giving them no Moleſtation, their Engines of Battery were brought forward, and without Oppoſition plac'd juſt as they pleas'd; and ſo being fitted, and rais'd to Advantage, ſoon made a Breach in the Wall large enough for an Aſſault. Joſephus de Bello Jud. lib. i. c. 5.

[†] Among theſe, it is ſuppoſ'd, that Abſalom, a younger Son of the famous John Hyrcanus, ſuffer'd; he had liv'd a private Life, without meddling with publick Affairs, under the Protection of his Brother Alexander Jannæus: But having unhappily marry'd his Daughter to his Nephew Ariſtobulus, he was, by that Means, drawn into his Son-in-Law's Party, and being taken Priſoner, in all Probability, was put to Death; becauſe from that Time we find no farther Mention made of him. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiv. c. 8. and Univerſal Hiſtory.

[*] But tho' Pompey was thus modeſt, yet Craſſus, ſoon after coming that Way, not only extorted the two Thouſand Talents, and a large Bar of Gold, by Way of Bribe, to reſtrain him from farther Plunder; but, contrary to the Promiſe, which he had given upon Oath, ranſack'd the Temple all over, and robb'd it of every Thing, that he thought worth taking away, inſomuch, that the whole of his ſacrilegious Plunder amounted to the Value of ten Thouſand Talents, which is above two Millions of our Money. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiv. c. 12. & de Bello, lib. i. c. 6.

ALEXANDER, by the Way, found Means to make his Eſcape; and, after three Years, returning into Judea, gather'd Forces, and poſſeſs'd himſelf of ſeveral Places; but Gabinius, the Roman Governor in Syria, defeated him in all his Attempts, and then, coming to Jeruſalem, confirm'd Hyrcanus in the Prieſthood, but the civil Adminiſtration † he took from the Sanhedrim, and put it into the Hands of ſuch Magiſtrates, as himſelf made choice of; and having divided the whole Land into five Provinces, appointed a Court of Juſtice (with Power ultimately to determine every Thing) over each of them. Ariſtobulus, late King of Judea, after he had been five Years a Priſoner at Rome, having with his Son Antigonus made his Eſcape, return'd into Judea, and, with ſome few Forces, which he had got together, was endeavouring to raiſe freſh Troubles. But Gabinius came upon him, before he was prepar'd to make a ſufficient Reſiſtance; and, having taken him and his Son Priſoners, ſent them both again to Rome, where his Father was kept in Durance; but his Children, upon the Interceſſion of Gabinius, were immediately ſent back to Judea.

NOT long after this, the Difference between Cæſar and Pompey occaſion'd a Diſtraction in the Roman Affairs, and a general Contention all the Empire over. Pompey had left ſome Forces in Syria; and Cæſar, to oppoſe againſt theſe, had ſet Ariſtobulus at Liberty, and propos'd to have ſent him with two Legions into Judea, in order to ſecure that Province: But, before he could get out of Rome, he was poiſon'd by ſome of Pompey's Party, and his Body remain'd a long Time there embalm'd in Honey, till *M. Of the firſt Sort, there was one in every City; only in Jeruſalem (becauſe of the Greatneſs of the Place) there were two, which ſat apart from each other in two diſtinct Rooms. The great Sanhedrim preſided over the Affairs of the whole Nation, receiv'd Appeals from the leſſer Sanhedrims, interpreted the Laws, and, by new Inſtitutions from Time to Time, regulated the Execution of them. All this Gabinius aboliſh'd; and, inſtead thereof, erected five Courts, or Sanhedrims, and inveſted them all with ſovereign Power, independent on each other. The firſt of them he plac'd at Jeruſalem; the ſecond, at Jericho; the third, at Gadara; the fourth, at Amathus; and the fifth, at Sepphoris; and having, under theſe five Cities, divided the Land into five Provinces, he order'd the Inhabitants of each to repair to the Court, which he had there erected, and from which there was no Appeal, except it was to Rome. Herod's inſolent Carriage and Aſſumption of Power.

THIS Antipater, who was a Perſon of great Wiſdom, of powerful Intereſt in ſeveral Places, and in high Favour with the Romans, had two Sons, Phaſael and Herod; to the former of which he gave the Government of the Country about Jeruſalem, and to the other that of Galilee. Phaſael behav'd himſelf, in his Adminiſtration, with great Lenity; but Herod was a Man of a different Character, and his boiſterous Temper made him leſs acceptable to the Jews.

AT this Time there was a Gang of Thieves, that infeſted Galilee, and the neighbouring Parts of Cælo-Syria, whom Herod fell upon, and, having taken one Hezekiah their Ring-leader, with ſeveral of his Aſſociates, put them all to Death. Thoſe, who envy'd the Proſperity of Antipater, and the Growth and Greatneſs of his Power, made this an Handle to accuſe Herod to Hyrcanus for executing Men without a legal Trial, and obtain'd a Citation from him to ſummon Herod to anſwer for it before the Sanhedrim. He came, but as he made his Appearance in a purple Robe, and ſurrounded with his Guards, he ſo over-aw'd that great Council, that they all ſat ſilent without ſaying a Word againſt him, until Simeas, a Man of great Juſtice and Integrity, roſe up, and, with a becoming Preſence of Mind, complain'd, that he never ſaw a Criminal appear in a Court of Juſtice ſo attended; that it look'd as if he meant to make the Adminiſtration thereof more dangerous to the Judges, than the Malefactor: "But this, ſays he, (turning to the High-Prieſt) is not ſo much to be imputed to his Inſolence, as to your Connivance, which encourages it: Yet know, continu'd he, that his Perſon, whom you ſkreen from the Juſtice of the Laws, will be a Scourge to you all." Nor was he in this a falſe Prophet.

FOR Herod having, by the Perſuaſion of the High-Prieſt, for Fear that the Sentence of the Sanhedrim ſhould paſs againſt him, made his Eſcape from Jeruſalem, and retir'd to Damaſcus, where Sextus Cæſar, the Præfect of Syria, then reſided, and put himſelf under his Protection, he ſo far inſinuated himſelf with him, that for a Sum of Money, with which he preſented him, he obtain'd the Government of Cælo-Syria, where he ſoon rais'd an Army, and march'd it into Judea, with an Intent to have depos'd Hyrcanus, and cut off the whole Sanhedrim for the Indignity they had put upon him by their late Proceſs; but his Father Antipater and his Brother Phaſael met him and diſſuaded him from it, ſo that, for the preſent, he dropp'd his Reſentment.

untimely Death, their Country became a Prey to every hungry General of Rome. Caſſius, having made himſelf Maſter of Syria, exacted of the Jews above ſeven hundred Talents of Silver, which Antipater prevailed with his two Sons to pay him, and ſo preſerv'd himſelf the longer in the Government of Judea. He was (as we ſaid) Procurator of the Province under Hyrcanus, and the next Man to him in Power and Authority was Malicus: But, not being contented to be the ſecond Man next the Prince, he would fain have been the firſt; eſpecially ſince he was a natural Jew, and Antipater but an Idumæan. Antipater had all along been his faſt Friend, and, upon more Occaſions than one, ſav'd his Life: But he, like an ungrateful Wretch, was continually laying Plots againſt him; and, at length, taking the Opportunity * of his dining one Day with Hyrcanus, he brib'd the Butler to give him Poiſon in his Wine, of which he dy'd, and then, with an arm'd Force, ſeiz'd on the Government of Jeruſalem. Hazael and Herod had, for a long Time, ſuſpected this Traytor's Deſign againſt their Father, and, when they heard of his Death, they concluded that he was the Author of it. They thought proper however to conceal their Reſentment for the preſent, but, as ſoon as Herod found a fit Opportunity, he had him taken off.

No ſooner was the Death of Malicus, and the Manner of it known in Jeruſalem, but a Party of his Friends roſe in Arms to revenge it on the Sons of Antipater; and having gain'd Hyrcanus, and Fœlix the Commander of the Roman Forces on their Side, put the whole City in an Uproar. Herod was then with Fabius, the Roman Governor of Damaſcus, and there laid up with Sickneſs; ſo that the whole Storm fell upon Phaſael, which he weather'd with full Succeſs: For he drove Fœlix, and all that tumultuous Party, out of Jeruſalem, and, when his Brother recover'd and return'd, they both together ſoon quelled the Faction, and would doubtleſs have reſented the High-Prieſt's Behaviour upon this Occaſion, with more Severity, but that, at this Time, a Match was ſet on Foot between Herod and his Grand-Daughter Mariamne †, which reconcil'd all Differences. But, tho' the Faction was, for the preſent, ſuppreſs'd, it was not long before it reviv'd.

very Perſons, whom Cæſar in the higheſt Manner had oblig'd, yet it was executed under the Notion of an high heroick Virtue, in thus freeing their Country from one, whom they called a Tyrant; and the Manner in which it was executed, is this, ——— As ſoon as he came into the Senate-Houſe, Attilius Cimber, who was one of the Conſpirators, preſented himſelf (according as it was agreed among them) to demand his Brother's Pardon, who was baniſh'd; but, upon Cæſar's Refuſal, under Pretence of begging it with greater Submiſſion, laid hold of the Bottom of his Robe, and pulled him ſo hard, that he made him bend his Back: Then Caſca drew his Dagger, and ſtabb'd him in the Shoulder, but the Wound prov'd but ſlight, ſo that Cæſar fell upon him; but, as they were ſcuffling, another of the Conſpirators came behind, and ſtabb'd him in the Side. Caſſius, at the ſame Time, wounded him in the Face, and Brutus pierc'd his Thigh. With much Courage he ſtill defended himſelf; but, the Blood he loſt through ſo many Wounds having much weaken'd him, he went to the Foot of Pompey's Statue, where he fell and expir'd, after having been ſtabb'd in three and twenty Places, by the Hands of thoſe, whom he thought he had diſarm'd by his good Offices. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 44. and Vertot's Revolutions of Rome, c. 13.

* The Matter was conducted thus, ——— Caſſius, being inform'd by Herod of the Manner of his Father's Death, gave him Leave to revenge himſelf on the Murtherer, and ſent his Orders to the Forces, under his Command at Tyre, to be aſſiſtant to him therein. On Caſſius's taking Laodicea, all the Princes and chief Lords of Syria and Paleſtine haſten'd thither with their Preſents a Congratulations. Hyrcanus, together with Malicus and Herod, put himſelf upon the Road for the ſame Purpoſe; and, as they drew near to Tyre, where they were to lodge that Night, Herod invited all the Company to ſup with him; and, ſending his Servants before, under Pretence of providing the Supper, by them he communicated the Orders of Caſſius to the Commanders of the Roman Garriſon in the City, who accordingly ſent out a Party of arm'd Men, that fell upon Malicus, as he drew near to the Place, and ſlew him. Joſeph. After the Defeat of Brutus * and Caſſius, by M. Anthony and Cæſar Octavianus † at Philippi, Anthony, coming into Aſia, was attended by the Deputies of moſt Princes and States in that Part of the World, and, among others, with ſeveral principal Perſons of the Jewiſh Nation, who were ſent to accuſe Phaſael, and Herod, of uſurping the Government from Hyrcanus: But partly by Money, and partly by Intereſt, Herod had ſo far prevailed with Anthony, that he would not ſo much as hear them. This, however, did not diſcourage the Jews, that were his Enemies: For, when Anthony came to Daphne near Antioch, an hundred of the moſt conſiderable among them waited upon him with the like Complaints. Here Anthony gave them an Hearing; and, when he put it to Hyrcanus, whether the two Brothers, or their Accuſers, were, in his Opinion, fitteſt to govern the State under him, he gave it for the two Brothers; and Anthony, being minded to do them a farther Favour, made them both Tetrarchs †, and committed all the Affairs of Judea to their Adminiſtration. This he confirm'd by Letters to the Jews; and, to oblige them to obey what he had done, he detain'd fifteen of the hundred as Hoſtages, and would have put them to Death, had not Herod ſav'd them by his Interceſſion.

This notwithſtanding, they did not ſtill give over their Sollicitation; but, when Anthony came to Tyre, they ſent a Thouſand of their principal Men with the like Accuſations againſt the two Brothers: But looking on this, as a Tumult, rather than an Embaſſy, he directed his Soldiers to fall upon them, ſo that ſome of them were ſlain, and more wounded; and, at the ſame Time, he ſent a peremptory Order to the Magiſtrates to aſſiſt Herod in the Recovery of his Government. * Philippi is a Town of Macedonia, to the Inhabitants of which St Paul wrote this Epiſtle; but what made this Place the moſt remarkable, was the famous Battle, that was fought near it, between the Army under Octavianus and Anthony, and that under Brutus and Caſſius, conſiſting of near an hundred Thouſand Men each. Brutus and Caſſius both commanded in the Action; but, Octavianus being ſick in his Tent, the Command of the other Army fell wholly upon Anthony. The Forces commanded by Caſſius were ſoon repuls'd, ſo that he retir'd to an Hill, there to wait for an Account of that Part of the Army, which was commanded by Brutus: But, in the Confuſion and Duſt, not being able to perceive what was doing, his Mind miſgave him that Brutus was overcome, and thereupon he commanded his Servant Pindarus to cut off his Head. Brutus, in the firſt Day of Action, was ſo ſucceſsful, that he made the Enemy retire, and took Octavianus's Camp; but, in a few Days after, coming to a ſecond Engagement, he was entirely routed, and, being loth to fall into the Enemies Hands, prevailed with his Friend Strabo to diſpatch him: And, what is very remarkable in theſe two Mens Deaths is, that they were both killed with the ſame Swords, wherewith they had murther'd Cæſar. Plutarch. de Bruto, Valerius Paterculus, lib. ii. c. 70. Apion, de Bellis Civilibus, lib. iv. and Dion Caſſius, lib. xlvii.

Antigonus, by the Aſſiſtance of the Parthians, gains the Kingdom of Judea.

In the mean Time Antigonus, the Son of Ariſtobulus, having not long before attempted to poſſeſs himſelf of Judea, but being defeated, and expell'd by Herod, fled to Parthia, and was there kindly receiv'd and protected. After he had been there ſome Time, and eſtabliſh'd an Intereſt among the moſt conſiderable Perſons of that Nation, he promis'd them a Thouſand Talents, and five hundred of the fineſt Women † in the Country, if they would aſſiſt him in the Recovery of his Father's Kingdom. The Parthians accepted of the Propoſal, and the King ſent his General along with Antigonus at the Head of a powerful Army, to invade Judea. As ſoon as they were enter'd the Country, great Numbers of the Jews join'd them in their March; and, when they came to Jeruſalem, the Faction, that hated the two Brothers, declar'd for them: So that Herod, not being able to defend the City, eſpecially after he found that Hyrcanus and his Brother Phaſael were taken by the Parthians, and put in Chains, made his Eſcape by Night; and, taking his Mother Cypros, and his Siſter Salome, Mariamne his Bride, and Alexandra the Mother of Mariamne with him, made the beſt of his Way to Maſſada, a prodigious ſtrong Fortreſs, built on the Top of a very high Mountain, near the Weſt Side of the Lake Aſphaltites; and, having furniſh'd it with Proviſions for ſeveral Months, he there left his Mother, and the other Women of Quality, whom he had brought with him from Jeruſalem, under the Care and Government of Joſeph, another of his Brothers, and ſo took his Way to Petra in Arabia, hoping to procure ſome Aſſiſtance from Malchus, who had ſucceeded Aretas, as King of that Country: But, before he reach'd Petra, he receiv'd a Meſſage from Malchus, deſiring him to depart his Dominions, becauſe he was afraid he ſhould offend the Parthians, who were his Neighbours, if he ſhould receive him.

The Parthians, when they found that Herod was gone from Jeruſalem, after they had plunder'd the Place, and the Country round about, made Antigonus (as they had agreed) King of Judea, and deliver'd to him Hyrcanus, and Phaſael, in Chains. Phaſael, knowing that his Death was determin'd, put a voluntary End to his Life and Sufferings. For, not having the Liberty of his Hands to diſpatch himſelf, he beat out his Brains againſt the Wall of the Priſon, and Hyrcanus (to (b) incapacitate him from being any longer High-Prieſt) had his Ears cut off, and was then deliver'd back again to the Parthians, by them to be carry'd into the Eaſt, who, upon their Return, left him at Seleucia.

Herod goes to Rome, and by the Means of Anthony and Auguſtus, obtains from the Senate a Grant of the Kingdom of Judea.

HEROD, having met with this unworthy Treatment in Arabia, made what Haſte he could into Egypt; but, when he came to Rinocorura, he there was inform'd of his Brother's Death, and in what Manner he had effected it; from thence he went to Peluſium, and ſo to Alexandria, where he took Ship, and, after a Voyage of no ſmall Danger and Difficulty, landed at Brunduſium, from whence he proceeded to Rome; and, having acquainted M. Anthony with the miſerable State of his Affairs in Judea, he moſt earneſtly pray'd his Aid.

Roman People, and not a little affected with the Promiſes, which Herod had made of giving him a large Sum of Money, if ever he ſhould be re-inſtated; not only warmly eſpous'd his Cauſe himſelf, but engag'd likewiſe Octavianus (who was afterwards called Auguſtus) ſo cloſely in his Intereſt, that, by the Help and Influence of theſe two Men, the Senate unanimouſly decreed, that Herod ſhould be King of Judea, and Antigonus declar'd an Enemy to the Commonwealth. Having, in the ſhort Space of ſeven Days, diſpatch'd his Affairs thus proſperouſly, he left Rome, and landing at Ptolemais began to raiſe Forces, with a Deſign to march againſt Antigonus, who, ever ſince his Departure, had beſieg'd the Fortreſs of Maſſada. With theſe, and ſuch Roman Auxiliaries, as he receiv'd from Ventidius Anthony's General, and Silo his Lieutenant in Paleſtine, he made himſelf Maſter of the greateſt Part of the Country, took Joppa, reliev'd Maſſada, and, taking the Caſtle, of Reſſa in his Way, march'd directly to Jeruſalem, and there encamp'd on the weſt Side of the City. Antigonus had provided the Place with all warlike Munitions, and a good Garriſon, which, with Darts and Stones from the Walls, and flying Parties, frequently making Excurſions, very much infeſted Herod's Army. Herod, in Hopes of making eaſy Work of it, ſent an Herald about the Walls, to proclaim Indemnity to all, that would ſubmit. Antigonus, on the contrary, directing his Speech to Silo, and the Romans, complain'd of the Injuſtice they did him, in transferring the Crown from him, who was of Royal Deſcent, to a Plebeian, and half Jew, as Herod was: And from theſe, and ſuch like Reproaches on both Sides, they came at length to Acts of Hoſtility, wherein Antigonus and his Men behav'd themſelves ſo valiantly, that they ſoon drove the Enemy from the Walls.

But is oppos'd by Antigonus, and but badly aſſiſted by the Romans.

VENTIDIUS, indeed, had left Silo in Judea, to be aſſiſtant to Herod in the Reduction of Jeruſalem; but in his Manner of managing the War (which was to get great Sums from Herod to promote his Intereſt, and greater from Antigonus to hinder it) he did him more Harm, than Good: For, he did not only take all Methods to ſqueeze him, but encourag'd his Soldiers likewiſe to mutiny, on Pretence of wanting Forage and Proviſions, more commodious Quarters, and better Pay; which when at any Time Herod endeavour'd to remedy, Antigonus, having Notice of all that paſs'd, with flying Parties, and Ambuſcades, frequently intercepted and cut off the Convoys, that were deſign'd for the united Army: Tho' Herod, who was as active and diligent as the Enemy, very often came up with them, and purſu'd his Advantage ſo cloſely, that, having with ſome Difficulty recover'd all Galilee from Antigonus, he, after that, betook himſelf to rid it of thoſe Gangs * of Thieves and Banditti, which at that Time very much infeſted it.

ALL this while the Siege of Jeruſalem went on but ſlowly; and Herod, perceiving that the Roman Generals were very cool to his Intereſt, was reſolv'd to go again to Anthony, (who was then beſieging Samoſata, a City upon the Euphrates) to make a Repreſentation of their Behaviour. During his Abſence, he left his Brother Joſeph to command in Judea, giving ſtrict Orders to put nothing to the Hazard, until his Return; but Joſeph, forgetting this, ventur'd upon an Expedition againſt Jericho, where, being circumvented by the Enemy, he was ſlain himſelf, and moſt of his Forces cut to Pieces; which gave thoſe

UPON his Return from Anthony, Herod, while he was at Daphne, had an Account of his Brother's Death and Defeat, which made him haſten to Mount Lebanon, where he rais'd eight hundred of the Natives, and with theſe, and the Roman Forces, came to Ptolemais, and thence marching by Night he paſs'd thro' Galilee, ſubdu'd all that came in his Way, and forc'd the reſt into their ſtrong Holds. But while he was haſtening towards Jericho, with an Intent to avenge his Brother Joſeph's Death, a Party of ſix Thouſand of the Enemy came reſolutely down the Hills, and put the Romans into a great Conſternation, beating back the Van-Guard, and purſuing them home to their Camp, where they ſo warmly engag'd them, that Herod himſelf was wounded in the Conflict: But, not long after, when Antigonus, fluſh'd with this Succeſs, had ſent Pappus his General with the main Strength of his Forces againſt him, he gave them an entire Defeat; ſlew Pappus in the Rout, and (had it not been for the Severity of the Winter, which was now approaching) had gone immediately to Jeruſalem, and ſo made an End of the War: But that he was forc'd to refer to the Operations of the next Campaign.

Herod beſieges Jeruſalem, takes Antigonus Priſoner, and prevails with Anthony to have him put to Death.

WHEN Herod came before Jeruſalem, his own Army conſiſted of about thirty Thouſand, to which Socius † brought eleven Legions of Foot, and ſix Thouſand Horſe, beſides the auxiliary Troops of Syria. However the City held out ſeveral Months with a great deal of Reſolution; but, at laſt, the Beſieg'd being beaten out of all their Places of Defence, and the Enemy exaſperated at the Length and Tediouſneſs of the Siege, all Things were in the utmoſt Confuſion. Rapine and Devaſtation was the general Work; and Death and Slaughter rag'd every where, without Diſtinction of Age or Sex. In vain did Herod endeavour to put a Stop to this Ravage and Cruelty. "The "Spoils of the City, he was told, was the "Soldiers Due, as a Reward for their "Labour and Valour in taking it." So that, with a large Sum of Money, he was forc'd to preſerve and redeem it.

ANTIGONUS, ſeeing all loſt, ſurrender'd himſelf to Socius, and, in a ſubmiſſive and abject Manner, fell at his Feet imploring Mercy: But Socius, inſulting his Meanneſs of Spirit, and Want of Courage, had him put in Chains, and ſo leaving Herod in full Poſſeſſion of the Kingdom, took his Priſoner along with him to Anthony. Anthony, at firſt, intended to have reſerv'd Antigonus in order to grace his Triumph, but Herod, not thinking himſelf

He revenges himſelf of his Enemies, makes his Wife Mariamne's Brother, Ariſtobulus, High-Prieſt, and gets Hyrcanus into his Power.

As ſoon as Herod had got full Poſſeſſion of the Kingdom of Judea, he began to revenge himſelf on all thoſe, whom he look'd upon as his Enemies; and, among theſe, put all the Members of the great Sanhedrim to Death, except Pollio[†] and Sameas, who, during the Siege, were all along for delivering up the City to Herod, whereas all the reſt oppos'd the Motion, and did what they could to excite the People to that fierce and obſtinate Reſiſtance, which they made. All this while Hyrcanus was Captive in Parthia; and, as the People wanted an High-Prieſt, Herod's Buſineſs was to chuſe a Man of Obſcurity to that Office, who, having no Credit or Intereſt at Jeruſalem, might not be capable (notwithſtanding his high Station and Dignity in the Church) to interfere with the Regal Authority: And, accordingly, he ſent for one Ananel from Babylon, (who was of the Pontifical Family indeed, but of no farther Merit, than that he was an Acquaintance of Herod's) and put him into the Office.

MARIAMNE, his beſt belov'd Wife, had then a Brother, whoſe Name was Ariſtobulus, to whom by Right of Birth the High-Prieſthood did belong; and, as ſhe was continually ſolliciting him in Behalf of her Brother, ſo her Mother Alexandra, who was the Daughter of Hyrcanus, and a Woman of an high Spirit, wrote to Cleopatra Queen of Egypt, (who had an abſolute Aſcendant over Anthony) to incline him to beſtow the Pontifical Honour upon her Son: So that, for Fear of offending Anthony, more than for gratifying of the Ladies, he depos'd Ananel[†], and made Ariſtobulus (who was

[†] They are ſo nam'd by Joſephus, but the Jewiſh Writers generally call them Hillel and Shammai; and of Hillel, in particular, they give us this Account, viz. That he was born in Babylonia, and there liv'd till he was forty Years old; that, when he came to Jeruſalem, he betook himſelf to the Study of the Law, in which he grew ſo eminent, that, after forty Years more, he became Preſident of the Sanhedrim, and that, in this Office, he continu'd forty Years after, ſo that, according to this Account, he liv'd full an hundred and twenty Years; but the Jewiſh Writers, for the Sake of a round Number, are frequently negligent whether they are exact or not in their Chronological Computations. Of Shammai they likewiſe tell us, that he was for ſome Time the Scholar of Hillel, and, upon the Removal of Manahem into Herod's Service, was made Vice-Preſident of the Sanhedrim in his Room; and that, of all the Tannaim, or Miſhnical Doctors, he came neareſt to his Maſter in Eminence of Learning, tho' in many Points he differ'd in Opinion from him. What we are chiefly to obſerve, in Relation to theſe two Men at preſent, is ——— That Herod ſhould thus generouſly forgive them both, tho' Shammai, or Simeas, was the Perſon, who appear'd ſo intrepid againſt him at his Trial before the Sanhedrim, and Hillel, or Pollio, had all along warmly eſpous'd the Party of Hyrcanus. It muſt be preſum'd however, that theſe two great Men, whom he not only ſpar'd above all the reſt, but took into his eſpecial Favour and Confidence, had, during the Siege, taken care to make their Peace with him, by exhorting the beſieg'd to a Surrender. For, while the contrary Faction was encouraging the People with crying out, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, and making them expect ſome miraculous Deliverance, theſe two wiſe Politicians, foreſeeing that the City could not hold out much longer againſt ſuch a vigorous Siege, and under the exceſſive Want of all Proviſions, told them, in ſhort, that all Reſiſtance was in vain, ſince God, for their Sins, was now bringing them into Subjection to this Foreigner; and this Piece of Service (had Herod been of a more vindictive Temper, than he really was) could not well fail of reconciling them to his Favour. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 37. and Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xv. c. 1.

[†] This is the third Perſon, that had been depos'd from the Pontifical Dignity, ſince the Time of the Return from the Babyloniſh Captivity; and Herod was ſo ſenſible of the Illegality of it, that when Anthony ſent to deſire him to put Ariſtobulus into Ananel's Place, at firſt he excus'd himſelf, by alledging, that ſuch Depoſitions were contrary to the Moſaic Law, which enjoin'd, that the Dignity ſhould laſt as long as the Life of the Poſſeſſor, unleſs ſome Defect happen'd to diſqualify him. The firſt Inſtance we meet with of this Kind, is that of Jaſon's ſupplanting his Brother Onias, and, by a larger Sum of Money, buying that Office of Antiochus, in Prejudice of the Incumbent. The other was was then but a Youth of ſeventeen Years old) High-Prieſt in his Stead.

When Phraortes came to be King of Parthia, and was inform'd of Hyrcanus's Character and Quality, he treated him with great Courteſy: For he order'd him to be releas'd from his Chains, and allow'd him to reſide at Babylon, which was then Part of the Parthian Empire, and where a great Number of Jews dwelt, who paid him both the Reverence due to an High-Prieſt, and the Honour due to a King.

In this Condition Hyrcanus might have liv'd, and ended his Days very happily; but, being deſirous of returning to his native Country, he began to entertain great Hopes of Herod's Friendſhip, as having been once the Preſerver of his Life, when he was arraign'd before the Sanhedrim, and the Founder indeed of all his Fortunes. Herod, on the other Hand, was as deſirous to have Hyrcanus in his Power, as the other was to come; and therefore, he not only invited him with great Earneſtneſs, and greater Promiſes, but ſent an Embaſſy to Phraortes, to ſollicit his Return. Thus having obtain'd the King's Diſmiſſion, the unfortunate old Prince was carry'd back to Jeruſalem, and, for ſome Time, treated by Herod with all the outward Tokens of Kindneſs and Reſpect.

His Daughter Alexandra, having, by her Intereſt with Cleopatra, obtain'd the High-Prieſthood for her Son, thought that (as it was his Right) ſhe might by the ſame Means procure him the Crown, and therefore went on intriguing with Cleopatra; which when Herod came to underſtand, he confin'd her to the Palace, and ſet Spies upon her. This ſhe reſented with great Indignation as being made a Priſoner, and therefore form'd a Deſign to make her Eſcape, and to carry her Son with her into Egypt to Cleopatra, who, upon this Occaſion, had invited them thither. But the Deſign was diſcover'd, and their Journey ſtopp'd. Herod however, for Fear of Cleopatra, was forc'd to ſuſpend his Reſentment, and, making a Virtue of Neceſſity, pretended, with great Clemency, to pardon in both what he could not well puniſh in either: But, in a ſhort Time, he had his Revenge.

He cauſes Ariſtobulus to be drown'd, confines Alexandra, and puts his Uncle Joſeph to Death.

At the Approach of the Feaſt of Tabernacles, Ariſtobulus was to officiate as High-Prieſt. He was a very beautiful Perſon, tall, and well ſhapen, and in the eighteenth Year of his Age. In the Time of his officiating he diſcharg'd himſelf with ſo becoming a Reverence, and the Splendor of the pontifical Robes added ſuch a Luſtre to the Gracefulneſs of his Perſon, that by both theſe he captivated the Affections of the People, and every Man's Mouth was full of his Praiſes; which rais'd the Tyrant's Jealouſy to ſuch a Degree, that, as ſoon as the Feſtival was over, he had him drown'd at Jericho †, tho' (to make his Death paſs for an unhappy Accident, wherein he had no Hand) he acted the Part of chief Mourner, and expended a large Sum in a ſplendid Funeral for him: But his Hypocriſy was ſeen thro', and deteſted by all.

ALEXANDRA, in particular, was inconſolable for the Loſs of her Son; nor could ſhe have ſurviv'd it, but for the Hopes of having an Opportunity of being reveng'd. To this Purpoſe having acquainted Cleopatra with the Murther, ſhe ſo repreſented Herod's Villainy, and her own Diſtreſs, as mov'd the Queen's Compaſſion, and engag'd her to do her utmoſt to revenge her Cauſe: For ſhe never left ſolliciting Anthony, till, at length, ſhe prevailed with him to call Herod to an Account for this wicked Fact. But when Herod was that of Hyrcanus, by his Nephew Ariſtobulus, who wreſted that Dignity from him by main Force. But theſe Depoſitions became afterwards ſo frequent, that there was hardly any other Way of coming into that Office, but by the Expulſion of the Incumbent. Univerſal Hiſtory, lib. ii. c. 11.

† Herod had invited him to an Entertainment at Jericho, and when, after Dinner, ſeveral of his Attendants bath'd themſelves in a Fiſh-Pond, Ariſtobulus was prevailed upon to bear them company; but no ſooner was he plung'd into the Water, but thoſe, that were in it before, (according as they were directed by Herod) duck'd and dipp'd him (by Way of Sport and Play, as they pretended) ſo long under Water, that at length he was actually drown'd. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xv. c. 3.

Herod appear'd before him, by fair Words and large Preſents he ſo effectually wrought upon Anthony, that, inſtead of condemning, he ſeem'd to vindicate him for what he had done: Whereupon, returning with much Joy, and in Triumph, as it were, over his Accuſers, he grew more tyrannical than ever, and, in a ſhort Time ſhut up Alexandra in cloſe Confinement.

WHEN he went to appear before Anthony, he left his Uncle Joſeph in the Adminiſtration of the Government, and gave him particular Charge, that, in Caſe Anthony ſhould put him to Death, he ſhould not ſuffer Mariamne, his beſt beloved Wife, to ſurvive the firſt News of it, that none (as he pretended) [†] might enjoy ſo rare a Beauty, but himſelf. In his Abſence ſome Words had paſs'd between Mariamne and his Siſter Salome, wherein the Queen reproach'd her with the Meanneſs of her Original, in Compariſon of the Royal Stock of the Aſmonæans, from whom ſhe deſcended. This the other was reſolv'd to revenge; and therefore, as ſoon as Herod return'd, ſhe accus'd Mariamne of having too great a Familiarity with Joſeph, whom (tho' he was her own Huſband, as well as her Uncle) ſhe was content to ſacrifice, rather than not obtain her Will upon the other. One Thing, that might contribute to the Increaſe of Herod's Jealouſy, and the Confirmation of what his Siſter had told him, was, the fatal Secret, which Joſeph had indiſcreetly blabbed out, and Mariamne, in her Paſſion, could not retain; for nothing leſs than an adulterous Converſation (he thought) could have produc'd ſuch a Diſcovery: And therefore, when ſhe upbraided him with it, he was going to draw his Dagger, and ſtrike her to the Heart; but, tho' his Love interpos'd to ſave her, he order'd his Uncle immediately to be executed, without allowing him Leave ſo much as to ſpeak for himſelf; which, when he came to know his Innocence, and the Queen's Virtue, he could not but regret.

He executes old Hyrcanus, ſecures his Wife and her Mother, and ſo goes to meet Auguſtus.

WHILE theſe Things were thus going on in Judea, there happen'd a grievous Breach [*] between Anthony and Octavianus, which terminated in a Civil War, wherein Anthony, at the Battle of Actium, was quite ruin'd and undone. During the whole Courſe of this War, Herod had always follow'd Anthony's Party, and had therefore Reaſon to fear, that the Conqueror would deprive him of his Kingdom for being ſo firm a Friend to his Enemy, and perhaps reſtore again Hyrcanus, who had once reign'd under the Protection of the Romans; and therefore, to prevent this, upon Pretence of his holding Correſpondence with Malchus King of Arabia, in order to accompliſh ſome treaſonable Deſigns againſt him, he [*] caus'd him to be put to Death, after he had paſs'd the eightieth Year of his Age. His Wife Mariamne,

[†] This he did, not ſo much that none elſe might have the Enjoyment of the beautiful Mariamne, as that none might be left alive of the Aſmonæan Family to claim the Crown, in Oppoſition to that Diſpoſal, which he had made of it to his Brother Pheroras. Alexandra, the Mother of Mariamne, he knew very well, was a crafty and aſpiring Woman; and therefore, being apprehenſive, that the Scheme, which he had laid for the Succeſſion, could not take place, if either ſhe, or her Daughter, were left alive after him, he order'd, that both of them ſhould be put to Death, in caſe he ſhould miſcarry in his Application to Anthony. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xv. c. 11.

[*] Anthony had provok'd Octavianus againſt him, by the Wrong done to Octavia his Siſter, whom Anthony had marry'd, and yet divorc'd her for the Gratification of his adulterous Love to Cleopatra, though Octavia was much the handſomer of the two. Anthony had likewiſe given out, that Cleopatra had been marry'd to Julius Cæſar, and that Cæſarion, whom ſhe had by him, was his lawful Son, and, conſequently, had the proper Right to the Inheritance, which Octavianus held only as his adopted Son. Theſe Things were objected againſt Anthony; and Anthony, by his Agents and Letters, was not forgetful to recriminate. But theſe Things were no more than Pretences: The true Reaſon of their Diſagreement was, that both theſe two great Men, being not contented with Half of the Roman Empire, were each reſolv'd to have All, and accordingly agreed to throw the Die of War for it. Plutarch de Antonio, and Prideaux's Connection, Anno 33.

[*] The Character, which Joſephus gives of this Prince, is to this Effect: —— He was a Man of eminent Candour, Juſtice, and Moderation; but a Lover of his Eaſe, and ſo conſcious to himſelf of his own Inſufficiency for the Offices of publick Adminiſtration, that, for the moſt Part, he entruſted that Charge in other Hands. This Facility of his was the making of Antipater and Herod's Fortune, though (without any Colour of Law or Equity) it coſt him his Life. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. xv. c. 9.

Mariamne; and her Mother, he ſecur'd in the Caſtle of Alexandrion, with a ſtrong Guard, under the Command of Sohemus, and with the ſame Order, that he had left with his Uncle Joſeph before; and, having committed the Government of the Kingdom to the Care of Pheroras, another of his Brothers, he ſet forward on his Journey to meet Octavianus.

Who confirms him in the Kingdom of Judea, but, upon his Return, he meets with Family-Uneaſineſſes.

OCTAVIANUS was then at Rhodes, where Herod having obtain'd Audience, as he enter'd into his Preſence, laid aſide his Diadem, and, in his Addreſs to him, freely own'd all that he had done for Anthony, and what he was farther ready to have done, had he requir'd it of him. "This, he ſaid, he thought himſelf " oblig'd to, by the Friendſhip, that was " between them; and would he be pleas'd " to think the like Friendſhip worthy of " his Acceptance, (ſince Anthony was now " quite loſt) he would not fail to ſerve " him with the ſame Zeal and Fidelity." This Herod deliver'd with ſuch an Intrepidity, that Octavianus, pleas'd with the Spirit of the Man, caus'd him to put on his Diadem again, accepted of his Friendſhip, and confirm'd him in the Kingdom of Judea.

Pleas'd with this good Succeſs, Herod went back to Judea with great Joy; but, on his Arrival, found all his Felicity ſour'd with the Troubles of his own Family. Mariamne, his moſt belov'd Wife, in whoſe Converſation he took the greateſt Delight, having brib'd the Secret out of Sohemus, conceiv'd thereupon ſuch a ſtrong Hatred and Averſion to him, that ſhe refus'd his Embraces with Scorn, and, concealing the true Cauſe of her Reſentment, was perpetually upbraiding him, with the Murther of her neareſt Relations; ſo that, by this provoking Treatment, his Patience was almoſt quite worn out. Hearing however of the Death of Anthony and Cleopatra, and how Octavianus had thereupon made himſelf Maſter of all Egypt, he thought himſelf oblig'd to wait on him there likewiſe.

Goes to Auguſtus again, and, when he returns, puts his Wife Mariamne and her Mother to Death.

He was receiv'd with great Kindneſs, and having, in his Return, accompany'd him to Antioch, he ſo far ingratiated himſelf with him on the Way, that he granted him ſeveral Places in Augmentation of his Dominions, and, for ever after, of all the Tributary Princes in the Roman Empire, gave him the firſt Place in his Favour. But how proſperous ſoever he was in his Affairs abroad, when he return'd, he found nothing but Trouble and Vexation at Home. Mariamne ſtill retain'd her Reſentment, for the cruel Commiſſion given to Sohemus; ſo that, when he offer'd her his Careſſes, ſhe not only rejected them (as uſual) with the utmoſt Averſion, but added over and above ſuch bitter Reproaches for the Death of her Relations, as provok'd and enrag'd him to ſo high a Degree, that he could hardly forbear laying violent Hands upon her. This Fit of Rage her implacable Enemy Salome took the Advantage of, and ſent in his Butler (whom ſhe had before ſuborn'd for that Purpoſe) to accuſe the Queen of having tempted him to give the King Poiſon; whereupon he order'd her favourite Eunuch, without whoſe Privity, he knew ſhe did nothing, to be put upon the Rack; but all that he confeſs'd was, that ſomething, which Sohemus had told Mariamne, was the Cauſe of her being out of Humour.

Upon the hearing of this, Herod fell into a Rage of Jealouſy; and, ſuppoſing that nothing, but a criminal Intimacy, could have induc'd Sohemus to betray this Secret to her, he order'd him immediately to be put to Death; and then, calling together a Council of his Friends, and accuſing her of an Intention to take away his Life, he had her condemn'd, but not with a Deſign to have her put to Death; but the Malice of his Mother and Siſter was ſo bitter againſt her, they would not let him be quiet. They knew very well his Temper; and, being apprehenſive, that as long as ſhe was alive, he might eaſily relapſe into his former Fondneſs, they urg'd the Neceſſity of her ſpeedy Execution, and had that Influence over him, that he commanded her immediately to be put to Death. But he ſoon repented him of his Raſhneſs. For, after that his Rage was quench'd by her Blood, his Love reviv'd, and the Conſideration of what he had done filled his Mind with the Agonies of Remorſe, and the Regret of her Loſs affected him ſo, that he fell dangerouſly ill; but, upon Recovery, he nevertheleſs gave Orders for the Execution of Alexandra, for having too eaſily credited the News that was ſpread abroad of his Death.

And three of his own Sons.

He had two Sons by Mariamne, Alexander and Ariſtobulus, whom he had ſent to Rome for the Benefit of Education; but, upon their Return home, by the ſame Inſtruments, that had procur'd their Mother's Death, they fell under their Father's Diſpleaſure. For having in the Heat of their Youth let fall many raſh Words, which expreſs'd their Reſentment of their Mother's hard Uſage, with Threats of Revenge upon thoſe, that had been the chief Authors of it; all this was carry'd to their Father, with ſuch malicious Gloſſes and Comments upon it, as made him believe, that they were hatching ill Deſigns againſt his Perſon. He was naturally of a jealous Temper, and this was ſo improv'd by the Artifices of Pheroras and Salome, his Brother and Siſter, that, in a Council, which conſiſted of none but his own Creatures, he procur'd their Condemnation *, and ſo order'd them to be ſtrangled: And it was upon the Account of their Fate, and the Execution of Antipater †, another of his Sons after this, (who was, in Reality, for procuring his Father's Death) that Octavianus (then called

* Joſephus has repreſented this whole Proceeding in this Light. When Herod had complain'd to Auguſtus of the undutiful Behaviour of his Sons, how they had plotted againſt his Life, and deſign'd to have made their Eſcape out of his Dominions, Auguſtus advis'd him to call together a Council at Berytus in Phœnicia, and ſo to enquire into the Nature of their Offences. This Herod accordingly did; but when he came into the Aſſembly, (which conſiſted of an Hundred and fifty Perſons) ſuch as Auguſtus had directed him to, (except Archelaus, King of Cappadocia, who, being Father-in-Law to Alexander, was thought by Herod too much engag'd by that Relation, to be an impartial Judge in this Matter) he began to accuſe his Sons with great Vehemence and Paſſion, and, after having ſpoken in Terms very unbecoming a Father, he ſaid, "That not only Auguſtus had made him Maſter of his Son's Deſtiny, but that the very "Laws of the Jews declar'd, that, if a Son was accus'd by his Parents, and they put their Hands upon his Head, all "who were preſent, ſhould ſtone him, and put him to Death; and therefore, tho' he might treat his Sons in this "Manner, after the Crimes whereof they ſtood convicted, yet he choſe rather to have their Opinions upon the "Matter, not doubting, but that they would join with him in giving an Example, to future Ages, of that juſt "Severity, which ought to be exercis'd upon unnatural Children." Saturninus, a Man of a Conſular Dignity, who was at the Head of the Council, was for puniſhing Alexander and Ariſtobulus, but not with Death, and his three Sons, who were preſent with him, concurr'd in the ſame Opinion; butt Volumnius pronounc'd, that they were worthy of Death, which the Majority of the Aſſembly too readily coming into, carry'd the Queſtion. On this Occaſion every one pitied the two Princes, but no one durſt ſpeak plainly for Fear of incurring the King's Diſpleaſure: But, at laſt an old Soldier of the King's, who had a Son about Alexander's Age, and his particular Friend, took the Liberty to make ſome ſharp Remonſtrances to the King, telling him withal, that not only the Officers and Soldiers, but the whole Body of the People, were mov'd with Compaſſion for the young Princes, and pitied their ſad Fate. Whereupon the King, loſing all Patience, commanded the Soldier and his Son to be ſeiz'd, and all beſides, whom he had nam'd. When the old Man was put upon the Rack, he confeſs'd, that he had taken up a Reſolution to kill the King, and to expoſe himſelf, for the Love of Alexander, to all Sorts of Puniſhment. This Confeſſion both enrag'd, and intimidated Herod, ſo that he ſent his Sons immediately to Sebaſte, (formerly called Samaria) and there order'd them to be ſtrangled. And thus ended the Life of theſe two unfortunate Brothers, who, by too much expreſſing their Reſentment for their Mother's Death, provok'd thoſe, who had been the chief Authors of it, by the like Artifices, to procure theirs. Vid. Joſephus's Reflection hereupon, Jewiſh Antiq. lib. xvi. c. 17.

† This Antipater was Herod's eldeſt Son by Doris, a Woman of no Quality, and whilſt himſelf was a private Man; for which Reaſon he kept him, and his Mother, for ſome Time, at a Diſtance from Court: But when he began to take Offence at Alexander and Ariſtobulus his two Sons by Mariamne, he thereupon treated him with a great deal of Diſtinction, and, in a full Aſſembly of the People, declar'd him his immediate Heir to the Crown. After the Death of Mariamne's Sons, he had nothing, that ſtood in his Way, but only the Life of his Father Herod: And, to get rid of him, he form'd a Conſpiracy with his Uncle Pheroras, (who, at this Time, was in ſome Diſgrace with his Brother the King) to have him poiſon'd: But, that there might be no Suſpicion of his being concern'd in the Thing, he procur'd ſome of his Friends to ſend for him to Rome, (where he had been before under Agrippa's Protection) on Pretence of waiting upon Auguſtus. Herod however, having found out the whole Plot, wrote to his Son, without giving called Auguſtus) was us'd to ſay, that it was better to be Herod's Hog, than his Son.

But whatever Opinion Auguſtus might have of Herod, 'tis certain that Herod had no ſmall Veneration for him, or, at leaſt, carry'd his Compliments very far. For he not only built two ſtately Cities, and called them both by his Name [*], but, in the very City of Jeruſalem, built a Theatre, and an Amphitheatre, and, in Honour of Auguſtus, celebrated Games and exhibited Shows, which gave great Diſguſt to the Jews, as Things inconſiſtent with the legal Conſtitutions and Religion of their Country. Nay, to ſuch a Degree of Complaiſance proceeded he, as not only to ſet up the Roman Enſign [†] (which was the Figure of an Eagle) over one of the Gates of the Temple, but even to raiſe a ſumptuous Temple all of white Marble in Memory of the Favours, which Auguſtus had conferr'd on him; tho', by this Act of idolatrous Flattery, he alienated the Hearts of the Jews, and rais'd ſome Conſpirators [†] againſt his Life.

To recover therefore their good Opinion, and to make ſome Amends for theſe Breaches upon their Law, in the nineteenth Year of his Reign, he form'd a Deſign of re-building the Temple [*], which, by Length of Time, (having now ſtood five giving him the leaſt Hint of it, to haſten his Journey home, leſt ſomething ſhould happen in his Abſence to his great Diſadvantage, whereupon he return'd into Paleſtine, without the leaſt Suſpicion of what had paſs'd. When he came to Jeruſalem, his Friends who attended him were not permitted to enter the Palace; and when he went to embrace the King, the King thruſt him from him, upbraiding him with the Murther of his Brothers Alexander and Ariſtobulus, and with the Parricide, which he intended to have committed on his Perſon, and whereof he accus'd him the next Day, before Quintilius Varus, the Governor of Syria. The Proof was ſo plain againſt him, that Antipater, having nothing to ſay in his Juſtification, was loaded with Irons, and put in Priſon. But while he was there, a falſe Report being ſpread, that Herod was dead, he begg'd of his Keeper to ſet him at Liberty, and made him large Promiſes if he would do it, which being brought to his Father's Ear, as weak as he was, (for he died in a few Days after) he rais'd himſelf upon his Elbow, and calling one of his Guards, ſent him that Moment to diſpatch his Son. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xvii. c. 7, and 9. & de Bello, lib. i. c. 21.

[*] The one was Sebaſte, which ſignifies the ſame in Greek, as Auguſtus does in Latin. It was ſituated on the ſame Place, where ſtood Samaria, which Hyrcanus had deſtroy'd, and was in Part rebuilt by Gabinius, when he was Governor of Syria, and called after his Name: But, as he was ſoon turn'd out of his Government, it advanc'd no farther, than a good large Village, until Herod (who from his ſtately Structures was afterwards called the Great) undertook to finiſh it, and, in ſo doing, ſpar'd no Coſt to make it one of the richeſt and moſt beautiful Cities in his Kingdom. ——— The other was Cæſaria, ſo called in Honour of the Emperor, tho' its former Appellation was the Tower of Straton. It ſtood by the Sea-Side, on the Coaſts of Phœnicia, upon the Paſs into Egypt, and was very convenient for Trade, but that it had a bad Harbour. To remedy this therefore, he order'd a Mole to be made in the Form of an Half-Moon, and large enough for a Royal Navy to ride in. The Buildings of the Town were all of Marble, private Houſes as well as Palaces, but the Maſter-Piece of all was the Port; whereof we meet with a Deſcription in Joſephus's Antiq. lib. xv. c. 13.

[†] This gave great Offence to the Jews, becauſe the Romans were known to pay Divine Honours to their Enſigns, which they us'd to ſet up in ſome eminent Place in their Camp; according to that known Paſſage of Tertullian, Religio Romanorum tota caſtrenſis, Signa veneratur, Signa jurat, Signa omnibus Diis præponit.

[†] There is a remarkable one of this Kind, which is related by Joſephus, to this Effect: ——— Ten Citizens, taking Offence at Herod's bringing in the Rites of heatheniſh Superſtition, enter'd into a Conſpiracy to cut him off by an Aſſaſſination. One of theſe Conſpirators was blind, and, tho' in no Condition to act any Thing for the publick Good, offer'd to bear his Part in ſuffering for it, and, by this generous Offer, ſettled them all in their Determinations. They therefore provided themſelves with Daggers under their Garments, and went to the Theatre, where Herod was to come, with a full Intent to ſlay him there. But, as he was entering the Theatre, one of his Spies (for he had great Plenty of them) having got ſome Notice of the Matter, made a Diſcovery of it to him; ſo that, returning to his Palace, he ſent for the Conſpirators, who were ſo far from denying their Deſign, that they produc'd the very Daggers that were to have done the Execution, alledging for themſelves, that they were not engag'd in any criminal Combination, to gratify their Paſſions or Intereſts, but in a ſecret League, for the common Good, and the Defence of their Laws, which all true Patriots and Profeſſors were bound to maintain with their Lives. After this Declaration they were hurry'd away to Death, and made to undergo the moſt exquiſite Torments. But the infamous Informer did not long ſurvive them; for, having incurr'd the general Odium of the People, he was met by ſome in a private Place, and torn to Pieces. Jewiſh Antiq. lib. xv. c. 11.

[*] Whatever ſome Jewiſh Rabbins may tell us, 'tis certain, that the Temple of Herod was widely different from that of Solomon's, and from that, which was built by Zerubbabel after the Captivity; for the Deſcription of it, according to Joſephus, who himſelf had ſeen it, is much to this Purpoſe: ——— The Front of this magnificent Building, which reſembled that of a Royal Palace, was adorn'd with many rich Spoils, which the Kings of the Jews had dedicated five hundred Years) as well as the Violence of Enemies, was in a very decay'd and ruinous Condition. In two Years Time he got together all proper Materials, and, in nine ‖ and an half more, had it ſo far finiſh'd, as to make it fit for Divine Service; tho', to carry on the Out-Buildings, Workmen were continu'd about it, to the Time of our Saviour's Miniſtry, and longer.

WHILE theſe Things were doing in Judea, the Temple of Janus was ſhut at Rome. In Times of War the Cuſtom was to have its Gates laid open, but ſhut in the Time of Peace; and 'twas now the fifth Time, ſince the Building of that City, that the Gates of this Temple had been ſhut. The firſt Time was, in the Reign of Numa; the ſecond, after the End of the firſt Punick War; the third, after Auguſtus's Victory over Anthony and Cleopatra; the fourth, upon his Return from the Cantabrian War in Spain; and the fifth now, in the twenty-ſixth Year of his Reign, and in the thirty-third of Herod's, when a general Peace (which laſted for twelve Years together) prevailed over the World, and was a proper Prelude for uſhering in the Advent ‖ of the Prieſt of Peace, even Chriſt dicated to God as the Monuments of their Victories. The Middle of it, which was much higher than the two Extremes, afforded a very agreeable Proſpect to the Extent of ſeveral Furlongs to thoſe, that either liv'd in the Country, or were travelling to the City. The Gate of it was a very curious Piece of Workmanſhip. From the Top of it hung a Variety of rich Tapeſtry of ſeveral Colours, embelliſh'd with purple Flowers. On each Side of it ſtood a ſtately Pillar, with a golden Vine creeping and twining about it, whoſe Branches were laden with a Cluſter of Grapes, that hung dangling down from the Cornices. Round about the Temple were large Galleries, anſwerable to the reſt of the Work in Magnificence, and in Beauty much exceeding all, that had been before. The Temple was ſurrounded by three Courts or Encloſures. The firſt Encloſure, which was a Square of a Furlong on every Side, had a Gate on the Eaſt, another on the South, and another on the North Side; but it had four towards the Weſt; one leading to the Palace, another into the City, and two more into the Fields. It was ſecur'd without by a ſtrong Wall, and within was adorn'd with ſtately Portico's or Galleries, ſuſtain'd by no leſs than 162 Columns of Corinthian Work, and alſo very thick, that hardly three Men could graſp one with their Arms. They ſupported a Roof of Cedar very curiouſly wrought, and made three Galleries; the two outermoſt of which were of the ſame Dimenſions, i. e. thirty Feet in Breadth, fifty in Height, and a Furlong in Length; but that in the Middle was half as broad again as the other, and twice as high. The Court or Area before theſe Galleries was pav'd with Marble of ſeveral Colours, and, at a little Diſtance, was a ſecond Encloſure, form'd by an handſome Balluſtrade of Stone, with Pillars at equal Diſtances, whereon were Inſcriptions in Greek and Latin, giving Warning to all Strangers not to proceed any farther, upon Pain of Death. To this Encloſure there was but one Entrance towards the Eaſt, but towards the North, and South, at equal Diſtances, three. In the Middle of theſe two Encloſures, there was a third, which included the Temple, ſtrictly ſo called, and the Altar of Burnt-Sacrifices, which was fifty Cubits high, and forty Cubits wide every Way, all built of rough Stones, on which no Tool had ever been us'd. Into this Court (which none but Prieſts were permitted to enter) there were nine Gates; one towards the Eaſt, four towards the South, and as many towards the North; but towards the Weſt there was no Gate, only one great Wall ran all along from North to South. At the Entrance of each Gate within were large Rooms in Form of Pavilions, of thirty Cubits ſquare, and forty high, ſupported by a Pillar of eighteen Feet in Circumference; and the whole was adorn'd with Portico's, ſuſtain'd by two Rows of Pillars, to the Eaſt, North, and South, but towards the Weſt there was nothing but the Wall juſt now mention'd. This is the Deſcription of the Temple, as it was repair'd by Herod, that may be extracted from Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xv. c. 13. but whoever is deſirous to know theſe Things more minutely, muſt conſult thoſe Authors, that have wrote upon them ex profeſſo: Among which Meſſrs de Beauſobre and Lenfant, in their general Preface to the New Teſtament, have given us no bad Sketch; and Jurieu, in his Hiſt. des Dogmes, &c. has rectify'd ſome Miſtakes in the Account of Joſephus, Part ii. c. 4.

‖ And yet the Jews could tell our Saviour, that forty and ſix Years had the Temple been building, John ii. 20. but this is eaſily reconciled. For though, at the Time, when the Jews ſpake to our Saviour, ſix and forty Years had paſs'd, from the Time that this Building was begun, yet, in nine Years and an half it was made fit for Divine Service. The Out-Buildings however were far from being finiſh'd; and therefore a great Number of Labourers and Artificers were continu'd at Work, all the Time, that our Saviour was upon the Earth, and for ſome Years after; till, upon the coming of Geſſius Florus, to be Governor of Judea, eighteen Thouſand of them were diſcharg'd at one Time, and theſe, for Want of other Employ, began thoſe Mutinies and Seditions, which, at laſt, drew on the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the Temple with it. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xx. c. 8.

the Æra of Diocleſian; for his terrible Perſecution had made ſuch an Impreſſion on their Minds, that the Time, when it happen'd, was long had in Remembrance. It was in the Year 527 of the Vulgar Chriſtian Æra, and not ſooner, that the World began to compute Time from our Saviour's Birth; and therefore the Wonder is leſs, that, after ſo great a Diſtance of Time, this Roman Abbot ſhould make a Miſtake in fixing the firſt Year of it: But the Misfortune was, that, before the Miſtake was diſcover'd, our Countrymen Bede's taking it without Examination from him, and uſing it in all his Writings, gave it a Sanction; nor has the learned World as yet thought fit to correct it, out of a Perſuaſion, I preſume, that there may be ſome Danger in altering of Things that are ſettled. It is thought ſufficient for the Purpoſes of Chronology, that there is a certain Chriſtian Æra fix'd, which every one knows, and reckons by, though there may be ſome Miſtake, as to the particular Time, when it ſhould have commenc'd. In ſhort, this Error has been too long follow'd to be corrected, which muſt of courſe alter all Dates, and give the World too much Trouble; and therefore it is but calling it a Vulgar Chriſtian Æra, and remembering that Chriſt was born four Years before it began; 'tis but remembering, I ſay, that the Year, which we now write 1743, ought to be 1747, and all is well. Prideaux's Preface to the firſt Part of his Connection, and Hearne's Syſtem of Univerſal Hiſtory, lib. i. c. 3.

* This, we may obſerve, falls in exactly with the Time, where an old Tradition of the Jews places the Beginning of the Days of the Meſſiah. According to that Tradition, the World was to laſt ſix Thouſand Years; two Thouſand before the Law, two Thouſand under the Law, and two Thouſand under the Meſſiah. This Tradition is of great Antiquity, and look'd upon as authentick, as any of this Sort; and though its pretending to foretel when the World ſhall end (which the Scriptures makes a Secret, that God has reſerv'd for himſelf) ſufficiently ſhews its Vanity, yet, ſince the Jews have thought fit to place it among the moſt authentick of their Traditions, it ſerves againſt them, 1ſt, To prove the Time, when, according to their own Doctrine, the Meſſiah was to come; and 2dly, To convict them of their groſs and moſt perverſe Infidelity, in that, tho' Chriſt was born in the four thouſandth Year of the Creation, from which (according to this their Tradition) his Appearance was to commence, they have now ſuffer'd above ſeventeen Hundred and twenty Years to paſs, and have not yet acknowledg'd him. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 4.

“extended to the captive Jews in Babylonia and Media, when (as yet) he had not made the leaſt Conqueſt in either of theſe Countries.

“Upon the whole therefore we may conclude, that, as the Jews (g) at this Time were very much addicted to religious Romances, Joſephus might give his Invention ſome Scope in this Matter, as thinking it a Diminution to the Honour of his Nation, to have ſo great a Man, as this ſovereign Conqueror of the World, come into the neighbouring Nations, without paying a Viſit to Jeruſalem; and when he was once there, 'twas neceſſary that ſomething extraordinary ſhould happen at his Reception.

“The like Piece of Fiction, we may reaſonably preſume, is the Account, which this Hiſtorian gives us of the Septuagint Verſion at Alexandria. For, beſides the Difficulty of conceiving, how theſe ſeventy-two Elders, who were ſent from Judea (h), (where neither Greek nor Hebrew were, at this Time, in common Uſe) ſhould ſo far become Maſters of both Languages, as to be able, in the Space of ſeventy-two Days, to finiſh a Tranſlation of the Scriptures: It appears from other Hiſtories, that Demetrius Phalerius (who is made the chief Agent in this whole Affair) was, at this Time, in no Manner of Confidence with Ptolemy Philadelphus; and, tho' it may not be thought beneath his Dignity to be the King's Librarian, yet he was now in Priſon, if not in his Grave, for being an Enemy to the King's Succeſſion.

“It ſeems improbable however, that, if he was alive, and in Favour, the ſhould addreſs the King, concerning this Interpretation, by Way of Epiſtle, (as we find he does in (i) Joſephus) when he was every Day at Court, and had an eaſy Acceſs to him; that the King ſhould trouble himſelf about aſking the Interpreters ſuch Queſtions, as are related in the Hiſtory of Ariſteas, to which the ſame Joſephus (k) refers us; and, above all, that he ſhould advance ſuch an incredible Sum of Money †, as, one Way or other, amounts to two Millions Sterling, (more than his whole Library was worth) and all for the Verſion of one ſingle Book, which neither he, nor any of his Court (as long as they continu'd Heathens) could have any other Value for, than as it was a true and genuine Hiſtory. But all this Joſephus might ſay, out of a pious Deſign perhaps, to gain among the Vulgar the greater Veneration, and Authority to a Tranſlation of the Scriptures, which was then more in Uſe, than the Original itſelf.”

Anſwer'd by ſhewing the Truth of Joſephus's Hiſtory.

It cannot be expected indeed, that any human Compoſition ſhould be without Faults, and, leaſt of all, can Hiſtory promiſe itſelf that Exemption, when it has ſo many diſtant and abſtruſe Matters to enquire into, and is forc'd in many Caſes to take up with the Teſtimony, and ſometimes the Conjectures of others. It may be ſaid however in Favour of Joſephus, that the Records, from whence he compiled his Hiſtory of the Jews, were either thoſe of their own ſacred Hebrew Books; thoſe of the Prophets during the Continuance of their Succeſſion; or thoſe of the moſt authentick Writers, that flouriſh'd in their Nation all along afterward. For, in the main, he was not ſo much an original Hiſtorian himſelf, as an Abridger of ſuch antient Hiſtories, as he found in the higheſt Eſteem and Veneration; and how fair and impartial he has been (about theſe Times more particularly) in making this Compilation, any one may perceive, that will but give himſelf the Trouble of comparing his Abridgment of the firſt Book of the Maccabees with the Book itſelf. So juſtly might Suidas (l) give Joſephus the Title of a Lover of Truth; and ſo truly might Joſephus ſay of himſelf, at the Concluſion of his Antiquities as well as of his Jewiſh Wars, "As for the Stile "and Manner of my writing them, that "I ſubmit to the Judgment of my "Readers; but as for the Candour and "Sincerity of my Accounts, I do here "declare to the World, that I have kept "ſtrictly to the Truth, and have had "nothing elſe in View, through the "Courſe of my whole Work."

† According to Ariſteas, Ptolemy expended, in redeeming the Captive Jews, that were in his Kingdom, 650 Talents; in Veſſels of Silver ſent to the Temple, 70 Talents; in Veſſels of Gold for the ſame Uſe, 50 Talents; in precious Stones to adorn theſe Veſſels, 250 Talents; in Gifts for Sacrifices, 100 Talents; to the Interpreters, at their firſt coming, three Talents a-piece, in Silver, 12,216 Talents in the whole; and, laſtly, to each of them, at their parting, two Talents of Gold, and a Golden Cup of a Talent Weight, which, in the Sum total making 1046 Talents of Silver, and 516 Talents of Gold, will, when reduc'd to our Sterling Money, amount to one Million, nine hundred and eighteen Thouſand, five hundred and thirty-ſeven Pounds, ten Shillings; beſides the Charges he was at in fetching theſe Interpreters to Alexandria, maintaining them there, and ſending them back again to Jeruſalem. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 277.

That Alexander was at Jeruſalem.

(m) THAT Alexander the Great, after his having taken the City of Tyre, invaded the Northern Parts of Judea, and went as far as the Balſam-Trees, near Jericho, not only Euſebius in his Chronicon, but Pliny *, in his Natural Hiſtory likewiſe, directly informs us; and that he not only ſubdu'd that Part of Syria, which is called Paleſtine, but went alſo about at this Time to thoſe Cities, that refus'd to ſubmit to him, we have the concurring Teſtimony both of Curtius (n), and Arrian (o); and, if their Teſtimony be true, 'tis very preſumable, that he did not forget to viſit Jeruſalem in his Indignation for its having refus'd to ſend him Supplies.

That the Chaldeans are wrong nam'd.

THE Samaritans indeed acted another Part: They obey'd Alexander's Summons, and went, in a Body of eight Thouſand Men, to his Aſſiſtance at Tyre. As ſoon as he had carry'd the Place, they march'd with his Army to Jeruſalem, and theſe are the Men, whom Joſephus joins with the Phœnicians, tho', by an Error of the Preſs, or Tranſcription at firſt, they are called Χαλδαίȣς inſtead of Χυθαίȣς (according to Biſhop Loyd's Emendation) Chaldeans, inſtead of Cuthians, or Samaritans, the old inveterate Enemies of the Jews, and who therefore were glad of this Opportunity of deſtroying them, and promis'd themſelves "(as Joſephus (p) ex-"preſſes it) all the Licence of Blood and "Pillage upon the High-Prieſt himſelf, "as well as upon the Citizens, that Rage "or Revenge could draw from a victo-"rious Prince, under the Senſe and "Provocation of the Affront, he had "receiv'd."

A providential Interpoſition in this Affair.

ALEXANDER accordingly comes, breathing out Wrath againſt the Jews, and, with his victorious Army, is ready to revenge the inſolent Meſſage of their being unwilling to fight for any, but his Enemy Darius: But, inſtead of that, in a Day or two, he goes away with the greateſt Love and Kindneſs for them; permits them to live by their antient Laws; forgives them the Tribute of the Sabbatical Year; readily invites them to fight for him as his Allies, and, the very next Year, in his own new built City of Alexandria, gives them all equal Privileges, with the Macedonians themſelves. Now this ſudden Alteration of his cannot well be imputed to any Thing elſe, but a Divine Interpoſition; and therefore, ſince Plutarch (q) informs us, that it was no unuſual Thing for this great Man to be influenc'd in his Conduct by Dreams and Viſions on other Occaſions, 'tis highly probable, that this remarkable Change in him did likewiſe depend upon the Remembrance of the Viſion, which he had at Dio,

* Therein he tells us, that as this Tree was peculiar to Judea, (he might have ſaid to that Part near Jericho) Alexander, when he wag'd War there, caus'd an Experiment to be made of the Quantity of Balſam, that diſtilled from one of theſe Trees, and upon Trial it was found, that, on a Summer's Day, ſo much would drop from one, as filled a Concha. Dio, in Macedonia, as himſelf relates in the Hiſtory.

(r) The like is to be ſaid of the Change that was made at this Juncture in the Conduct of the High-Prieſt, and all the People. For ſince, before this, they durſt not fight againſt Darius for their Oaths ſake, and yet could now, without any Scruple, go into that very Army, which had twice conquer'd his Forces, and was then going to take away all his Dominions; they muſt have had ſuch a Divine Warrant for doing this, as the Viſion and Admonition, which, the Night before, was given to the High-Prieſt, may be interpreted to imply. This indeed, we own, is all providential, and miraculous: But, if we look into their Hiſtories, (whether Canonical, or Apocryphal) we ſhall find, that, from the Days of Abraham, to the Days of Joſephus himſelf, Things of this Nature were very common among the Jews.

The Short of the Matter is this —— The Jews, at this Time, had certainly a great and eminent Deliverance; but then the Queſtion is, whence did this Deliverance come? (s) If we judge by the entire Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Nation, we ſhall expect it to have been after ſome extraordinary and providential Manner. The Jewiſh Records tell us, that it was really ſo, and give us the particular Account of it. The Heathen Records ſay nothing at all, either againſt it, or about it; and therefore we muſt be left at Liberty to think, that the Authority of the Jewiſh Hiſtorian, who relates it, (if nothing abſurd or incongruous appears in his Relation) does certainly preponderate ſuch a negative Argument, as the bare Omiſſion of one Tranſaction by ſome later Heathen Hiſtorians can amount to.

And that Alexander might very well do what he did at Jeruſalem.

Upon the Suppoſition then, that Alexander, by this ſupernatural Direction, enter'd Jeruſalem in a peaceable Manner, his offering Sacrifice to the God of Iſrael, whom (according to the Principles of his own Religion) he might take for the National God of the Jews, was exactly agreeable (as appears by the ſeveral Accounts of his Life) to his uſual Method upon the like Occaſions; and his promiſing to grant the ſame Immunities, he had given to them in Judea, to the Jews in Midea and Babylonia, (tho' he had not as yet conquer'd theſe Countries) was the natural Reſult of his having ſeen the Prophecy of Daniel, which, both he and the High-Prieſt fully perſuaded themſelves, that he was the Perſon appointed by Providence to fulfil.

That the LXX Interpreters might be ſkilled in the Greek Tongue.

Now whoever conſiders the natural Effects of Conqueſts, what Changes and Revolutions they make, not only in the Conſtitution, but in the Language likewiſe of any Kingdom, and how fatally prone the very Conquer'd are to learn the Speech, as well as imitate the Manners of thoſe, that have brought them under Subjection; will have no Occaſion to wonder, that, after the Reduction of Judea by a Grecian Prince, and a Prince, who had diſtinguiſh'd that Nation, above all others, with his Royal Favours, the Grecian Language ſhould ſoon grow into Requeſt, eſpecially among the People of the better Faſhion, and ſuch as made Learning their Profeſſion.

(t) The Macedonians had not long made themſelves Maſters of Babylon, before Beroſus (who is ſaid by Tatian to have liv'd in the Time of Alexander) became ſuch a Proficient in the Greek Tongue, that in it he wrote the Hiſtory of the Affairs of the Chaldeans, and the Actions of their Kings, whereof we have ſome Fragments in the Writings of Joſephus and Euſebius; and, (u) not long after him, Manetho, a Prieſt of Heliopolis in Egypt, in the ſame Language wrote his Commentaries of the Egyptian Affairs, which he dedicated to this very Ptolemy Philadelphus, for whoſe Uſe the Septuagint Tranſlation was made. wherever Alexander's Arms prevail'd, and ſoon became the univerſal Language of the Polite and Learned; and therefore we can hardly ſuppoſe, but that, in a populous Nation, there ſhould be found a competent Number of Perſons, duly qualify'd to tranſlate a ſhort Book, (for the Pentateuch [†] was all that they tranſlated, and this (every one knows) is far from being a long one) into a Language, that was then in the higheſt Vogue, from another, in which ſome of their Doctors are ſaid to have been ſo critically, ſo minutely ſkilled, as to be able to tell how often each Letter occurr'd in the whole.

That Demetrius might have the Direction of the King's Library.

DEMETRIUS Phalereus was not only a learned Philoſopher, but a Perſon likewiſe of great Wiſdom, Juſtice, and Probity, as appear'd by his Government of Athens [†], under Caſſander, one of Alexander's Captains: But, being expelled from thence by the prevailing Power of Demetrius, the Son of Antigonus, and, after the Death of Caſſander, forc'd to withdraw into Egypt, he was there receiv'd with great Favour and Honour by Ptolemy Soter, and became one of his chief Counſellors. He diſſuaded the King from making any of his Sons Co-Partner with him in the Kingdom, and (x) told him the Inconvenience of it; but we do not perceive from Laërtius, or any other Hiſtorian, that he any Ways oppos'd the Succeſſion of Philadelphus. The King indeed did not follow his Advice in this Particular; but ſtill we find him in great Favour and Requeſt at Court, both with the Father and Son: And therefore, if, after the Son's Acceſſion, he fell into ſome Diſgrace, (whatever the Occaſion of it might be) 'tis but ſuppoſing, either that this Misfortune befel him ſome Years after the King's Acceſſion, or that he, after a ſhort Diſgrace, was reſtor'd to Favour again, and then we may allow him Space enough (and without any Diſparagement to his Character) to have, at one and the ſame Time, both the Direction of the Septuagint Verſion, and the Superintendency of the Royal Library. For, whatever ſome may think of the ſervile Employment of looking after Books, 'tis very well known, (y) that, at Rome, one of the prime Cardinals always holds the Office of Librarian to the Pope; and, as to the King's Library in France, it is not long ſince the Archbiſhop of Rheims, who is by his Place Primate of the Gallican Church, and firſt Peer of the whole Realm, thought it no Diſparagement to his Honour to be appointed to the ſame Office.

That the King might put Queſtions to the Interpreters.

'TIS natural to ſuppoſe, that a Prince, who himſelf was a Man of great Learning, and had always a long Train of learned Men about him, ſhould be for making ſome Trial of the Abilities of the Jewiſh Interpreters, before he ſet them about the Work; and therefore, if the Queſtions, which the King made, and the Anſwers, which the Interpreters return'd, be but adapted to their reſpective Circumſtances, inſtead of being an Argument againſt, they will prove a Confirmation of the Truth of the Account, which Joſephus gives us of this Tranſaction. Now, whoever looks into theſe Queſtions and Anſwers, as they are ſet down in Ariſteas, will find, that the former (which are ſaid to have been ſuggeſted by Demetrius) are chiefly Philoſophical, ſuch as ſavour of the Muſæum or College of learned Men, that had lately been erected at Alexandria; (z) ſuch as became an inquiſitive heathen Philoſopher, who, in a great Meaſure, was grown weary of the groſs Polytheiſm and Idolatry of the Egyptians, and, by his Converſation with the Alexandrian Jews, more inclinable to the Belief of that one inviſible and true God, whom they worſhipp'd: And that the latter are every one one made with ſuch a diſtinct Regard to God, and his Providence, as is always uppermoſt both in the Words and Writing of every wiſe and religious Jew.

The Character, which Appian (a) gives us of Ptolemy Philadelphus, is, that he was the moſt ſplendid and magnificent of all the Kings of his Time in expending his Money; and therefore we may leſs wonder at his giving ſo much for the Redemption of the Captive Jews (b), when we find him beſtowing upon Aratus the Sicyonian, for his having been ſerviceable to him in the Collection of ſome Books and Pictures, the Sum of an hundred and fifty Talents to adjuſt the Properties, and ſettle the Peace of his City: (c) May leſs wonder at his ſending away the Jewiſh Interpreters ſo amply rewarded, when we find him preſenting the Roman Embaſſadors every one of them with a Crown of Gold, and, upon their taking their Leave, heaping upon them Gifts of ineſtimable Value: May leſs wonder, in ſhort, at his Profuſion in this Particular, when we find him (d) (as Athenæus aſſures us) ſpending two Thouſand two hundred Talents in one pompous Feſtival to Bacchus.

His own Inclination, (e) prompted by Demetrius Phalereus, led him to be prodigiouſly fond of the moſt compleat and authentick Copies of any curious Book. Fifteen Talents he gave for ſuch Copies of the Tragedies of Æſculus, Sophocles, and Euripides, and yet theſe were already written in Greek, and needed no Tranſlation; (f) whereas the bare Permiſſion of a Verſion of the Jewiſh Law (that Nation's peculiar and ineſtimable Treaſure) was a Favour, that had never been aſk'd before, and what, upon any common Application, would probably have been deny'd: And, as the Authenticknelſs of this Verſion muſt entirely depend on the Skill and Faithfulneſs of the Jewiſh Tranſlators, (ſince they were the only Perſons, that underſtood the Hebrew Language) the King had no other Way to obtain a Confidence herein, than by gaining the entire good Opinion of the High-Prieſt and People of the Jews.

Upon the Whole therefore we may conclude, that, tho' the Sums beſtow'd upon the Jews upon Account of this Tranſlation be very large, yet, conſidering the King's vaſt Liberality upon other Occaſions, the Objection would have been ſtronger, had the Sums been leſs; ſince, upon the higheſt Computation, his whole Expence in redeeming the Captives, in Preſents to the Temple and Altar, and in Rewards to the Interpreters and High-Prieſt, being all put together, does not amount to ſo much, as he ſpent in one Feſtival to Bacchus.

Other Teſtimonies for the Truth of Joſephus.

In ſo great and pompous a Court, as this of Philadelphus muſt needs have been, we need not be ſollicitous to anſwer the Objection of his being addreſs'd to by Way of Letter, or Memorial, even by Perſons, that had otherwiſe a conſtant Acceſs to him; becauſe, in Matters of great Importance, this, in moſt Courts, is the common Method of proceeding even now. But this we may ſafely add, that, how warmly ſoever ſome modern Criticks have attack'd the Hiſtory of this Septuagint Verſion, yet the antient Teſtimonies of ſuch Authors, as have made mention of it, viz. of Alexander Polyhiſtor (g), a learned Heathen, who was greatly inquiſitive about the Affairs of the Jews; of Ariſtobulus, the Peripatetick Philoſopher, and Tutor to Ptolemy Philopater; of Philo, who liv'd at Alexandria, the very Place where this Verſion was made; of Tertullian, one of the moſt accurate Writers of Chriſtian Antiquity; of Euſebius, a learned and faithful Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorian; of St Jerom, a vehement Enemy to this very Verſion, as compar'd with the Hebrew Copy; and of ſeveral others, that might be produc'd, are a Confirmation of what Joſephus (a Prieſt of that very Temple, to which the Preſents from Philadelphus were ſent) relates concerning it, and ſuch Strong-Holds and Faſtneſſes, as the Maintainers of its Antiquity have not yet been prevailed upon to give up.

DISSERTATION V.

Of the Profane Hiſtory during this Period.

The Succeſſion in the old Aſſyrian Empire.

MOST of the hiſtorical Facts in profane Authors, that had any Relation to the ſacred Records, we have, in the Courſe of this Hiſtory, endeavour'd to abridge, and reduce into Notes, at their proper Periods; and have nothing more now to do, but only to take notice of ſome extraordinary and remarkable Events, in the Perſian, Grecian, and Roman Empires, down to our Saviour's Time, which did not then ſo properly fall in with our Deſign.

AFTER the Diſſolution of the antient Aſſyrian Monarchy, by the Death of Sardanapalus, there aroſe up two leſſer Empires in its Stead; one founded by Arbaces, Governor of Media, and the other by Beleſis, Governor of Babylon, the two principal Commanders, who headed the Conſpiracy, whereby the former Empire was brought to an End.

ARBACES (who, in Scripture (h), is called Tiglath-Pileſer) had the larger Share of the Empire, and therefore fix'd his Seat at Nineveh, where the former Aſſyrian Kings us'd to have their Reſidence, and there govern'd his new-erected Empire for nineteen Years. He was ſucceeded by his Son Salmanaſſar; Salmanaſſar, by Sennacherib; Sennacherib, by Eſarhaddon; Eſarhaddon, by Suoſduchinus; (in (i) the Book of Judith called Nabuchodonoſor) Suoſduchinus, by Chyniladanus; Chyniladanus, by Nabopolaſſar; and Nabopolaſſar, by his Son Nebuchadnezzar the Great, of whom we have ſaid ſo many Things; Nebuchadnezzar the Great was ſucceeded by his Son Evilmerodach; Evilmerodach, by Nerogliſſor; and Nerogliſſor, by Belſhazzar; in whom the united Empire of the Aſſyrians and Babylonians terminated.

BELESIS (who in Scripture is called (k) Baladan) took up his Reſidence at Babylon, and was ſucceeded by his Son Merodach; but who were his Succeſſors, we have no Account to be depended on, only we know, that Eſarhaddon, King of Aſſyria, conquer'd the Kingdom of Babylon, and that he and his Succeſſors Suoſduchinus and Chyniladanus poſſeſs'd it, until Nabopolaſſar, Governor of Babylon, and General of the Aſſyrian Forces, joining his Arms with Aſtyages, the Son of Cyaxares King of Media, ſlew Chyniladanus, took and deſtroy'd Nineveh, and tranſlated the Empire to Babylon.

AFTER the terrible Blow which Sennacherib's Forces receiv'd in Judea, the Medes, underſtanding in what a low Condition he was, return'd to Nineveh, immediately ſhook of his Yoke, and made Dejoces (who in Scripture is called Arphaxad) their King; who, having beautify'd and enlarg'd Ecbatana, made it the Royal Seat of his Kingdom, and there reign'd for fifty-three Years. He was ſucceeded by his Son Phraortes; Phraortes, by Cyaxares I; Cyaxares I, by Aſtyages; Aſtyages, by Cyaxares II, called in Scripture Darius the Mede, who conquer'd Belſhazzar, and began to lay the Foundation of the Perſian Monarchy, which, during his Life, was called the Empire of the Medes and Perſians, but, after his Death, was united by Cyrus.

Cyrus founds the Perſian Empire.

CYRUS ſucceeding his Father Cambyſes in the Kingdom of Perſia, and his Uncle Cyaxares, in the Kingdom of the Medes, and Empire of Babylon, by this Means founded the ſecond great Monarchy, which was the Perſian. His Wars with the Aſſyrians, his Defeat of Cræſus King of Lydia, his wonderful Taking of Babylon, and obliging all the Eaſt to ſubmit to his Power, are Subjects, that we have already touch'd upon, either in our Hiſtory or Notes: But there are ſome Things in his War with the Scythians, (might we but credit their Story) that juſtly deſerve our Obſervation.

His Wars with the Scythians and Death.

thereof, a Woman of great Courage, and Bravery of Mind; for, tho' ſhe could have hinder'd Cyrus's Army from paſſing the River Araxes, ſhe permitted them to do it, in Confidence of fighting them with more Advantage within her own Dominions, and of making their Retreat more difficult, by their having the River on their Backs. Cyrus took this Opportunity to paſs the River, and, having march'd a little into the Country, and pitch'd his Camp, the next Day he abandon'd it as if he had fled for Fear, leaving Plenty of Wine, and other Proviſions behind him. Tomyris, having Intelligence of this, ſent her Son, with the third Part of her Forces, in Purſuit of the Enemy, but when he came to their Camp, as if he had been ſent to a Banquet, not a Battle, he ſuffer'd his Men (who were Strangers to that Kind of Liquor) to intoxicate themſelves with Wine to ſuch a Degree, that when Cyrus march'd his Army back again in the Night Time, and came upon them, he found them uncapable of fighting, or of making any Reſiſtance, and therefore put them all to the Sword.

Upon the Loſs of ſo great an Army, and (what more nearly concern'd her) the Loſs of her only Son, Tomyris did not betake herſelf to Tears, the uſual Refuge of Women upon ſuch Occaſions, but caſt about in her Mind how ſhe might revenge herſelf of the Enemy; which, in a ſhort Time, ſhe did by the like Stratagem, and with the like Succeſs. For, obſerving, that the Perſians were now grown ſecure by Reaſon of their late Victory, ſhe retir'd before them with her Army, as if ſhe had been afraid to venture the Deciſion of a Battle, until ſhe had drawn Cyrus unawares into a Defile, where, having plac'd an Ambuſcade in the Mountains, ſhe killed two hundred Thouſand of his Men, (inſomuch, that there was not one left to carry home the News) and himſelf upon the Spot. Thus fell this great Prince, in the ſeventieth Year of his Age, tho' Xenophon, and from him other Hiſtorians are clearly of Opinion, that he dy'd peaceably in his † Bed.

The Succeſſion of the Perſian Empire.

He was ſucceeded by his Son Cambyſes, and Cambyſes, by the Magian, who under the falſe Name of Smerdis uſurp'd the Throne, and brought Diſcredit upon the whole Sect, until its Character came to be reſtor'd again by the Management and Reformation of Zoroaſtres.

The Time when Zoroaſtres liv'd.

At what Time this Zoroaſtres (or Zarduſht, as the Perſians call him) liv'd, there is a wide Difference both among the Greek and Oriental Writers; ſince ſome of them will have it, that he liv'd many Years before the Flood, others in the Days of Abraham, and others again not before the Reign of Darius, the Son of Hyſtaſpes. Moſes (according to the Sentiments of ſeveral learned Men) ſpeaks of the Pyræa, or Temples conſecrated to the Worſhip of Fire, when he brings in God threatening the Iſraelites (m), to overthrow their High-Places, and deſtroy their Chaminim, or Places appointed for the Worſhip of Fire, and to caſt their Carcaſes upon the Carcaſes of their Idols; tho' they are certainly miſtaken who think, that the Fire, which he order'd to be kept always burning upon the Altar of the Lord, was in Imitation of the Fire of the Magians.

If then we ſuppoſe that Zoroaſtres was the firſt Author of the Worſhip of Fire, we muſt acknowledge him more antient than Moſes; but if we look upon him only as the Reformer, or Reſtorer of it, (tho' we cannot tell the preciſe Time when he flouriſh'd) it muſt not be long after the Magians fell into Diſgrace, and may therefore very probably be thought to be in the Reign of Darius Hyſtaſpes.

† Xenophon adds, (lib. viii.) that, finding his Death approaching, he called his Nobility together, his two Sons, Cambyſes and Tanaoxares, to his Bed-Side, and after a long Speech concerning the Immortality of the Soul, and the Rewards or Puniſhments conſequent upon every Man's good or ill Conduct in this Life, he exhorted his Sons by the ſtrongeſt Arguments, to a perpetual Concord and Agreement, and utter'd many other Things, which make it not improbable, that he receiv'd the Knowledge of the true God from Daniel, when he govern'd Shuſhan in Perſia. Strabo aſſures us, (lib. xv) that he was bury'd in a City, called Paſagardes, which himſelf had built, and where his Monument, even in his Time, was with this Inſcription: "O vir, quicunque es, & undecunque advenis, neque enim te "adventurum ignoravi: Ego ſum Cyrus, qui Perſis imperium conſtitui; puſillum hoc terræ, quo meum tegitur corpus, "mihi ne invideas." This very Tomb Alexander the great (according to Q. Curtius) open'd, either in Hopes of ſome Treaſure, which he imagin'd might have been there depoſited, or with a Deſire rather to do Honour to his Remains; for ſo we are told, that he caus'd the Coffin, wherein his Body lay, to be cover'd with his own Garment, and a Crown of Gold to be ſet upon it: All which gives Credit to the Account, we have in Xenophon, but derogates not a little from Herodotus, who leaves his Body in the Hand of Tomyris. Raleigh's Hiſt. An Account of him.

HE was a Man of a mean and obſcure Parentage; † by Birth and Education very probably a Jew, and (as ſome ſuppoſe) a Servant to the Prophet Daniel; becauſe he was certainly a Man of great Learning, and thoroughly acquainted with the Books of Moſes. As ſoon as he took upon him the prophetic Office, he retir'd into a Cave, and there liv'd a long Time as a Recluſe, pretending to be abſtracted from all worldly Conſiderations, and to be given wholly to Prayers and Divine Meditations. In this Retirement he compos'd the Book †, wherein all his pretended Revelations are contain'd. (n) The firſt Part of it conſiſts of a Liturgy, which the Magians, in all their Oratories and Fire-Temples, make uſe of to this Day. The Reſt is an hiſtorical Account of the Life, Actions, and Prophecies of its Author, the ſeveral Articles and Branches of his Superſtition, together with Rules and Exhortations to Morality, wherein he is very preſſing and exact, except his allowing of Inceſt; and the Whole being interſpers'd with ſeveral Things taken out of the Old Teſtament, abundantly ſhews that his Original was from the Jews.

UPON leaving his Retirement, he went into India among the Brachmans, where having learn'd all their Knowledge in Mathematicks, Aſtronomy, and Natural Philoſophy, he came back, and taught his Diſciples theſe Sciences, which gain'd them ſo great a Reputation, that, for many Years after, a learned Man and a Magian became equivalent Terms. Nay, he pretended, that, once upon a Time, he was taken up into Heaven to be inſtructed in thoſe Doctrines, which he was to deliver unto Men; that there he heard God ſpeak out of the Midſt of a great and bright Flame of Fire; and for this Reaſon he taught his Followers, that Fire was the trueſt Repreſentation of the Divine Preſence, and the Sun (as the moſt perfect Fire) the more immediate Throne of his Glory; that of the Fire, from whence God ſpake, he upon his Return brought ſome with him, and plac'd it on the Altar of the firſt Fire-Temple which he erected; from whence (as they ſay) it was propagated to all the reſt; and this is the Reaſon, they give, for keeping

† To this Purpoſe we may obſerve, that moſt of his Reformations in the old Religion of the Magians are taken either from the ancient Writings, or the ancient Uſages of the Jews. For, whereas Moſes heard God ſpeak to him out of a Flame of Fire in the Buſh; Zoroaſtres pretended, that he in like Manner heard God ſpeak to him, at the Time when he was taken up into Heaven. Whereas the Jews had a viſible Shechinah of the Divine Preſence among them, reſting over the Mercy-Seat in the Holy of Holies, unto which they turn'd themſelves, when they pray'd; Zoroaſtres taught his Diſciples, that in the Sun, and in the ſacred Fires in their Temples, God more eſpecially dwelt, and therefore he oblig'd them to offer up all their Prayers with their Faces turn'd to both theſe. Whereas the Jews had a ſacred Fire, which came down from Heaven upon their Altar of Burnt-Offerings, which, as long as Solomon's Temple ſtood, was preſerv'd with the utmoſt Care from extinguiſhing; Zoroaſtres pretended, that, when he was in Heaven, he brought ſome of that holy Fire out of which God ſpake unto him, and therefore he enjoin'd, that it ſhould be kept with diligent Care, and that all the Fires, on the Altars of new-erected Fire-Temples, ſhould at firſt be lighted only from thence: And whereas the Jews were very nice in uſing no Wood on the Altar of their Temple, but what was reputed clean, and had it therefore all bark'd, and examin'd, before it was laid on, and, when it was laid on, allow'd of no Bellows to blow it, but left it to kindle and flame out of itſelf; Zoroaſtres ordain'd his Followers, in Relation to the ſacred Fire of their Temples, to obſerve both theſe Particulars, commanding them to bark all their Wood, and uſe no other Means for the kindling it up into a Flame, but the pouring Oil, and leaving it to the Blaſts of the open Air: And that he ſhould, in ſo many ſingular and unobvious Things, imitate the Jewiſh Religion in the Scheme of his Reformations, it can hardly be imagin'd, without ſuppoſing, that at firſt he had his Education in it; nor is it improbable, that if (as ſome think) he was the Diſciple of Daniel, his ſeeing that great and good Man arrive to ſuch an Height of Dignity, by being a true Prophet of God, might put him upon the Thoughts of being a falſe one, in Hopes that, if he acted his Part well, he might obtain to himſelf the like Advancement. Lightfoot's Temple-Service, Hyde's Religio veterum Perſarum, and Prideaux's Connection, Anno 486.

† This Book is called Zendaveſta, and by Contraction Zend, which ſignifies a Fire-Kindler, ſuch as a Tinder-Box is with us; and this fantaſtical Name the Impoſtor gave it, becauſe, as he pretended, all that would read this Book, and meditate thereon, might from thence kindle in their Hearts the Fire of all true Love for God, and his holy Religion. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 486.

keeping it ſo carefully, and treating it with ſo much Superſtition.

And his Tenets.

Having thus qualify'd himſelf to be a Prophet, he made his firſt Appearance in Media, in the City of Ziz ſay ſome, or in Ecbatana, (now Tauris) according to others; where the principal Doctrines that he profeſs'd (as a Refinement upon what the old Magians maintain'd) were theſe, —— "That there was one ſupreme Being independent, and ſelf-exiſting from all Eternity; that, under him there were two Angels, one the Angel of Light, who is the Author and Director of all Good, and the other the Angel of Darkneſs, who is the Author and Director of all Evil, and that theſe two, out of the Mixture of Light and Darkneſs, made all Things; that they are in perpetual Struggle with each other, and that where the Angel of Light prevails, there the moſt is Good, where the Angel of Darkneſs, there the moſt is Evil; that this Struggle ſhall continue unto the End of the World, when there ſhall be a general Reſurrection, a Day of Judgment, and a Retribution to every one according to his Works; and that after this, the Angel of Darkneſs and his Diſciples ſhall go into a World of their own, where they ſhall ſuffer, in everlaſting Darkneſs, the Puniſhments of their evil Deeds; and the Angel of Light and his Diſciples ſhall go alſo into a World of their own, where they ſhall receive, in everlaſting Light, the Reward due unto their good Deeds, whereupon they ſhall remain ſeparated for ever, and Light and Darkneſs are to be no more mix'd together to all Eternity." And all this the Remainder of that Sect (which is now in Perſia and India) do, after ſo many Ages, ſtill hold without any Variation, even to this Day.

From Joſeph. lib. xiii. c. 19. to the End of lib. xv.

After Zoroaſtres had acted the Part of a Prophet in Media, and there ſettled all Things according to his Intentions, he remov'd from thence into Bactria, the moſt Eaſtern Province of Perſia, and there ſettling in the City of Balch (which lies on the River Oxus, in the Confines of Perſia) under the Protection of Hyſtaſpes the Father of Darius, he ſoon ſpread his Impoſture thro' all that Province with Succeſs. From Bactria he went next to the Royal Court at Suſa, where he manag'd his Pretenſions with ſo much Addreſs and Inſinuation, that he made Darius likewiſe a Proſelyte, and, from his Example, drew over the Courtiers, Nobility, and great Men of that City into the ſame Profeſſion: But when, upon his Return into Balch, he attempted the like upon Agarſp, King of the Oriental Scythians and a zealous Sabian, and pretended an Authority from Darius to that Purpoſe, the Scythian Prince reſented it with ſuch Indignation, that he invaded Bactria with an Army, and, having there defeated the Forces that oppos'd him, ſlew Zoroaſtres, with all the Prieſts of his Patriarchal Church, amounting to the Number of eighty Perſons, and demoliſh'd all the Fire-Temples in the Province: but, it was not long before Darius * fell upon him, and reveng'd the Injury.

Darius's Taking of Babylon.

This Darius was one of the ſeven Lords, who ſlew the falſe Smerdis; and by an Artifice he obtain'd the Kingdom of Perſia; but it was by the cruel Policy of Zopyrus, that he made himſelf Maſter of the City of Babylon. This City, having for many Years, during the Babyloniſh Empire, been Miſtreſs of the Eaſt, and domineer'd over all its neighbouring Countries, could not bear the Subjection it was fallen under to the Perſians; eſpecially, ſince the Removal of the Imperial Seat to Shuſhan, whereby its Wealth and Grandeur were much diminiſh'd. Taking the Advantage therefore of the late Revolution, which had happen'd in the Perſian Empire, the Babylonians reſolv'd to ſet up for themſelves, and, accordingly, having ſtor'd the City

* After he had overthrown him with a great Slaughter, and drove him out of the Province, he rebuilt all the Fire-Temples, and eſpecially that of Balch, which, as it was the Patriarchal Temple of the Sect, he failed not to erect with a Grandeur ſuitable to its Dignity, and had it called after his own Name. For he was a zealous Promoter of this Religion, and, after the Death of its Author, continu'd to propagate it with the ſame Ardor, as before. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 486.

with a ſufficient Quantity of Arms and Proviſions, in the fifth Year of the Reign of this Darius, they broke out into an open Revolt.

(o) THE City, by Reaſon of the Strength and Height of its Walls, was impregnable againſt all Storms, Batteries, and Aſſaults; and, as it was furniſh'd with Proviſions for a great many Years, and had large Quantities of void Ground within the Walls, from whence it might annually be ſupply'd by more, could never have been ſtarv'd into a Surrender, but muſt have worn out Darius, and all his Army, had it not been for a Stratagem of Zopyrus, one of his Commanders.

THE Army had now lain before the City a Year and eight Months, without having made any great Progreſs in the Siege, which rais'd the Indignation of Zopyrus to ſuch a Degree, that, having cut off his Noſe and Ears, and mangled his Body all over with Stripes, in this Condition he fled to the Beſieg'd, and feigning to them, that he had ſuffer'd all this by the cruel Uſage of Darius, he thereby inſinuated himſelf ſo far into their Confidence, that, at length, they made him the chief Commander of their Forces, which Truſt he made uſe of to deliver the City (which could not otherwiſe have been taken) into his Maſter's Hand; and, for this remarkable Piece of Service, was rewarded with the higheſt Honours, that his Prince could heap on him, all his Life after.

His Defeat in Greece.

BY this hardy Stratagem Darius recover'd the City of Babylon; but in his War with the Grecians he was ſo far from having any good Succeſs, that, (p) at the Battle of Marathon, his vaſt Army receiv'd a total Overthrow by Miltiades, Prince of the Thracian Cherſoneſus, and his two Generals, Dotis and Artaphernes, were forc'd to return home with Baffle and Diſgrace.

The Defeats of Xerxes.

HE was ſucceeded by his Son Xerxes, who, (q) after ten Years Preparation, renew'd the War with the Grecians, but with worſe Succeſs than his Father: For, at the Streights of Thermopylæ, Leonidas, the King of the Lacedemonians, with an Handful of Men, ſlew twenty Thouſand of his Forces: At the Streights of Salamis, Themiſtocles, the General of the Athenians, ruin'd the greateſt Part of his Fleet: In Sicily, Gelo, the King thereof, made great Havock among his Confederates the Carthaginians: At Platea, Pauſanias ſlew his General Mardonius, and cut his Army to Pieces; and at Mycale, Leotychides both vanquiſh'd his Troops by Land, and burnt the Remainder of his Fleet; ſo that never was there a Man, who ſet out with ſo great an Armament both by Sea and Land, and return'd in ſo abject and diſgraceful a Manner. He was ſucceeded by his Son Artaxerxes; Artaxerxes, by Xerxes II; Xerxes II, by his Brother Sogdianus; and Sogdianus, by his Brother Ochus, who is commonly called Darius Nothus. Ochus was ſucceeded by Artaxerxes II, ſirnam'd Mnemon; Artaxerxes II, by another Ochus, who took upon him the Name of Artaxerxes III; this Ochus, by Arſes; and Arſes, by Darius Codomannus; in whom the Perſian Monarchy, terminating by Alexander the Great, was tranſlated to Greece.

Alexander's Succeſſes, and Eſtabliſhment of the Grecian Monarchy.

THE Army, which Alexander carry'd into Aſia, according to the higheſt Computation, amounted to no more than thirty Thouſand Foot, and five Thouſand Horſe; and yet, with theſe few Forces, he not only attempted, but accompliſh'd likewiſe the Conqueſt of the whole Perſian Empire, and added India likewiſe to his Acquiſitions: But what was the moſt remarkable Thing, in this Expedition, is, that he ſet out upon it with no more than ſeventy Talents, which was ſcarce enough to ſupply the Army with Neceſſaries for thirty Days; but, as he truſted in Providence, Providence did not fail him. In a few Days, at the River Granicus, he encounter'd Darius, and having vanquiſh'd his Troops, tho' they were five times more in Number, he thereby got Poſſeſſion of a great Part of his Treaſure, and all the Provinces of the Leſſer Aſia. Not long after this, at Iſſus in Cilicia, he gave him another Defeat; where, having taken all his Camp, Bag and Baggage, Baggage, with his Mother, Wife, and Children, he left an hundred Thouſand Perſians dead upon the Field of Battle: And about two Years after, not far from Arbela, he gave him a final Overthrow; for there, with no more than fifty Thouſand Men, he vanquiſh'd the vaſt Army of the Perſians, which conſiſted of above twenty Times as many, and thereby determin'd the Fate of the Perſian, and eſtabliſh'd the third great Monarchy, which was the Grecian, in the Perſon of Alexander. It laſted no longer than ſix Years and ten Months: For, after his Death, it was divided among his Generals, and, as Judea lay between Syria and Egypt, according as their Arms prevailed, it was generally under the Dominion of one of theſe, until the Roman Power began to exert itſelf.

The Riſe of the Romans.

THE Romans, having built their City, and out of the neighbouring Villages (r) (as we related the Story before) furniſh'd themſelves with Wives for ſeven Succeſſions, liv'd under the Dominion of Kings; but in the Family of Tarquin, which had † juſtly incurr'd the People's Diſpleaſure; that Form of Government was quite diſſolv'd. Many, however, and fierce were the Wars, which, both in their Regal and Conſular State, the Romans wag'd with the Nations round about them, but their Conqueſts were confin'd to the Bounds of Italy only; nor was the Glory of their Name much known to foreign Nations, until the War, which they had with Pyrrhus, King of Epirus, gave them an Opportunity * to ſignalize their Bravery and Greatneſs of Mind, which excited Ptolemy Philadelphus, then King of Egypt, to ſend them an Embaſſy, congratulating their Succeſſes, and deſiring to enter into Alliance with them.

Their great Moderation.

(s) To make a Return of the like Reſpects, the Romans next Year ſent Q. Fabius Gurges, Cu. Fabius Pictor, and Q. Ogulinus, their Embaſſadors to the Egyptian Court, whoſe Behaviour, in that Capacity, was very remarkable; for when the

† To make his Way to the Throne, he murther'd his Father-in-Law Servius Tullus, and, upon his aſcending it, put all his Friends to Death. The Affairs of the State he manag'd by himſelf alone, ſlighted the Senate, diminiſh'd their Authority, cut off ſeveral of them upon frivolous Pretences, and ſeiz'd upon their Eſtates. Among theſe Marcus Junius was one, who left behind him a Son named Lucius Junius, but he, fearing the Fate that his Father and Brother had undergone, counterfeited the Fool (and was thence called Brutus) ſo very artfully, that he was taken by Tarquin into his Houſe to make his Children Sport. In the mean Time, Sextus, one of Tarquin's Sons, inflam'd with the Beauty of Lucretia, got privately to Collatia, where ſhe reſided, and raviſh'd her, whereupon ſhe ſent for her Father from Rome, and her Huſband Collatinus from the Camp, (which was then before Ardæa) deſiring them to bring along with them ſome of their particular Friends. Publius Valerius came with her Father Lucretius, and Lucius Junius Brutus with her Huſband; to whom, as ſoon as they were arriv'd, ſhe related the whole Story, and then with a Ponyard ſtabb'd herſelf to the Heart. Upon the Sight of this, they were all filled with Grief and Indignation; but, to their great Surprize, Brutus, throwing off the Diſguiſe of his Folly, declar'd his Reſolution, and made them ſwear upon the bloody Ponyard to aſſiſt him in revenging this, and the other Wickedneſſes of Tarquin, and his Family, by expelling him and them from the Government, which accordingly they did, thereby putting an End to the Regal Power at Rome, and turning it into a Conſular State. Hearne's Syſtem, lib. iii.

* One great Inſtance of this appear'd in the Courſe of this War, which is thus related by Plutarch, ——— When Fabricius was Conſul, and at the Head of his Army, an unknown Perſon came into the Camp, and deliver'd him a Letter from King Pyrrhus's chief Phyſician, offering to take him off by Poyſon, and ſo end the War without any farther Hazard to the Romans, if he might have a Reward proportionable to his Service. Fabricius, enrag'd at the Villainy of the Man, and diſpoſing the other Conſul to the ſame Opinion, ſent Diſpatches immediately to Pyrrhus to caution him againſt the Treaſon. His Letter was to this Effect:

" Caius Fabricius and Quintus Æmilius, Conſuls of the Romans, to Pyrrhus the King, Health.

" You ſeem to have a very ill Judgment both of your Friends and Enemies. You will underſtand by this Letter, " which was ſent to us, that you are in War with honeſt Men, and truſt Knaves and Villains: But we have not diſcover'd this to you to inſinuate into your Favour, but leſt your Ruin might bring a Reproach upon us, as if we had " ended this War with Treachery, when we were not able to do it by our Courage and Virtue." When Pyrrhus had read the Letter, and made ſtrict Enquiry into the Treaſon, he caus'd the Phyſician to be executed, and, in Acknowledgment of this Civility of the Romans, ſent to Rome the Priſoners without Ranſom, and again employ'd Cineas to negociate a Peace for him. The Romans, who were above receiving from their Enemy a Recompence for not having been guilty of the vileſt Injuſtice, diſdain'd to accept of the Priſoners, without returning to him an equal Number of Samnits, and Tarentines; but, as for the Peace, they would not ſuffer Cineas ſo much as to mention it, until Pyrrhus had remov'd his Arms and Forces out of Italy, and ſailed back to Epirus in the ſame Ships, that brought him over. Plutarch in Pyrrho.

the King, having invited them to Supper, in the Concluſion of the Entertainment preſented each of them with a Crown of Gold, they accepted of the Crowns, upon Account of the Honour, that was done them, but, next Morning, they crown'd therewith the Statues of the King, that ſtood in the publick Places of the City; and when again, at their Audience of Leave, he preſented them with very valuable Gifts, they took them indeed for Fear that their Refuſal ſhould give Offence, but, as ſoon as they were return'd to Rome, they deliver'd them all into the Publick Treaſury, before they appear'd in the Senate to give an Account of their Embaſſy, whereby they declar'd, that they deſir'd no other Advantage from the Service of the Publick, than the Honour of diſcharging it well.

This Spirit of Moderation and Diſintereſtedneſs, while it continu'd in the State, and the many great Inſtances of invincible Courage and Reſolution, which upon all Occaſions they ſhew'd, made the Romans of great Note in the World, and, after the Defeat of the Carthaginians in the ſecond Punick War, they became indeed the Terror of all other Nations.

Their Wars with the Carthaginians.

HANNIBAL was certainly the moſt dangerous Enemy that ever Rome had. As ſoon as War was declar'd between theſe two States, he left Spain, where he then was, and at the Head of fifty Thouſand Foot, and nine Thouſand Horſe, march'd directly towards Italy. He croſs'd the Pyrenæan Mountains into Gaul, croſs'd the Roſne, and came to the Foot of the Alps, which, in fifteen Days Time, he got over, but not without much Danger and Difficulty, as well as the Loſs of half his Army. When he got footing in Italy, he defeated Scipio one of the Roman Conſuls, at Pavia, and his Colleague Sempronius, in another Action near Trebia. Near the Lake Thraſymene, he cut off the Roman Army, and their Conſul Flaminius, even after he had deſtroy'd a Detachment of forty Thouſand, which the other Conſul Servilius had ſent to his Aſſiſtance; but, in the famous Battle at Cannæ, he made the greateſt Slaughter of them: For therein he defeated their whole Army, and ſlew Æmilius, one of their Conſuls; killed 50,000 Men, two Quæſtors, 21 Tribunes, 80 of the Senatorian, and of the Equeſtrian Order a much greater Number.

This laſt Defeat caus'd a dreadful Conſternation in Rome, but did not rebate the People's Courage, which ſtill refus'd to hearken to any Overtures of Peace; till, having ſent Scipio the Younger into Africa, they by that Means gave the Carthaginians ſo much Diſturbance, that they were forc'd to re-call Hannibal, who, coming to a deciſive Battle, was routed by the Romans, and his Countrymen forc'd to ſue for a Peace, which was granted them upon Terms, very honourable and advantageous to Rome.

After this Peace with the Romans, Hannibal (t) liv'd quietly at Carthage for the Space of ſix Years; but, being under a Suſpicion of holding Correſpondence with Antiochus, ſirnam'd the Great, (between whom and the Romans there was at that Time a Miſunderſtanding) and of plotting with him to bring a new War upon Italy, ſome of his Enemies at Rome procur'd Embaſſadors to be ſent to Carthage in order to enquire into the Matter, and, if they found any Reaſon for it, to have him deliver'd into their Hands; which when Hannibal underſtood, he made his Eſcape before the Embaſſadors had Time to deliver their Meſſage, and put himſelf under the Protection of Antiochus.

(u) ANTIOCHUS, at this Time, was in Debate with himſelf on the Point of entering into War with the Romans, but, at the Coming of Hannibal, he ſoon determin'd for War, and, had he taken Hannibal's Advice of carrying it into the Bowels of Italy, he might probably have met with a better Event; † but his Reſolution was to begin it in Greece, where being ſhamefully defeated in every Engagement, both by Sea and Land, he was forc'd at laſt to ſend an Embaſſy to the Roman Conſuls, deſiring Conditions of Peace, which were granted him upon theſe hard Terms,——That he ſhould pay the whole Expences of the War, which were eſtimated at fifteen Thouſand Talents of Eubœa ‖; ſhould quit all Aſia on that Side the Mount Taurus, and deliver up Hannibal the Carthaginian, and Thoas the Ætolian, as the chief Incendiaries of the War: But as ſoon as theſe heard, that a Treaty was began, they eaſily foreſaw what would be the Reſult of it, and therefore both took care † to get out of the Way before it came to a Concluſion.

With Mithridates.

† Next to the Carthaginian War, the longeſt, and moſt obſtinate that the Romans ever had, was the War, which Mithridates King of Pontus (in the Reign of Alexander Jannæus at Jeruſalem) wag'd with them. For, having very unjuſtly ſeiz'd on the Kingdoms of Cappadocia and Bithynia, when the Romans interpos'd for the Surrender of them to the Perſons, to whom they had decreed them, he refuſ'd to obey, and thereupon Hoſtilities enſu'd. (x) For ſome Time at firſt Mithridates was ſucceſsful; but * was very cruel, while he had the Superiority; till, having ſent into Greece

‖ There is a Difference between Livy and Polybius in this Matter; for, whereas in Polybius the Words are, that the Money to be paid the Romans ſhould be ἀργυρίȣ 'Αττικȣ ἀρίςȣ, Livy, miſtaking the Meaning of the Greek Phraſe, render'd it of Attick Talents; whereas Polybius meant it only of the Attick Standard: For, as the Eubœan Talent was of the greateſt Weight, ſo the Attick Money was the fineſt Silver of any in Greece, and by this Treaty the Money was to be paid according to both, i. e. the Romans, having conquer'd Antiochus, not only oblig'd him to pay this vaſt Sum for his Peace, but alſo made him pay it in Talents of the higheſt Weight, and of Silver of the beſt and fineſt Standard in all Greece. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 290.

† What became of the Ætolian we are not concern'd to enquire, but Hannibal, after that he was deſerted by Antiochus, fled to Parthias, King of Bithynia; where, being ſlighted by him, and in Danger of being deliver'd to the Romans, 'tis generally ſaid, that he put an End to his Days, for which Purpoſe he carry'd Poiſon always about him concealed under the Stone of his Ring. This is the Account, we have in Livy, lib. xxxix. c. 51. and what Plutarch, and the Roman Satiriſt does more than allude to:

> - - - - - - - - - O Gloria! vincitur idem,
> Nempe & in exilium præceps fugit, atque ibi magnus
> Miranduſque cliens ſedet ad prætoria regis,
> Donec Bithyno libeat vigilare tyranno.

He was born a Soldier; and a continual Exerciſe of Arms made him a great Captain. He was always juſt in his Schemes, and immenſe in his Views: Had an admirable Genius at hitting the true Means for the Execution of his Deſigns, and the greateſt Artifice in acting without being diſcover'd. He was infinite in Expedients, and as ſkilful in recovering himſelf out of Danger, as he was in drawing others into it. But then he was a Perſon of no Fidelity, no Religion, no Humanity, tho' he had the Art of putting on the Appearance of all theſe Virtues, whenever he thought it ſubſervient to his Intereſt. Vertot's Revolution of the Roman Republick.

† The War with Jugurtha interven'd indeed, but this was not of any long Continuance, nor is it any where referr'd to in the ſacred Hiſtory; however, it may not be improper to mention thus much of it,——That this Jugurtha was Nephew to Micipſa, King of Numidia, who left behind him two Sons, Adherbal and Hiempſal, both of whom Jugurtha murther'd, and then uſurp'd their Kingdom; that, when the Romans were for calling him to an Account for all this Wickedneſs, he for a long while brib'd the Commiſſioners, and Generals, that were ſent againſt him, till at length, being defeated firſt by Metellus, and afterwards by Marius, he was betray'd by Bocchus, King of Mauritania, who was both his Ally, and Father-in-Law; that being thus betray'd, and ſeiz'd, he was laden with Chains, and given up to Sylla, who deliver'd him into the Hands of the General Marius, and he, in the Triumph that was given him, dragg'd him like a Slave at the Wheels of his Chariot; and that, after this Ceremony was over, he was led to Priſon, ſtripp'd of his Royal Robes, and then puſh'd naked into a Dungeon, where he was condemn'd to be ſtarv'd to Death. Salluſtii Bellum Jugurthinum.

* To this Purpoſe Hiſtorians have obſerv'd, that when, upon a Defeat given to the Roman Forces, he had taken Manlius Aquilius and Quintus Oppius, the two Generals, Priſoners, he not only treated them with the utmoſt Indignity, but afterwards with equal Cruelty tortur'd them to Death; and that, finding a great Number of Romans and Italians, upon one Occaſion or other, diſpers'd through all the Provinces, and Cities of the Leſſer Aſia, he ſent ſecret Orders to all the Governors of theſe Provinces, and Magiſtrates of theſe Cities, to put them all to Death in one and the ſame Day, Greece an Army of three hundred and ten Thouſand Men, under the Command of three of his beſt Generals, Sylla alone, with no more than fifteen Thouſand Foot, and fifteen hundred Horſe, vanquiſh'd them all in ſeveral Battles; and Fimbria, the next Year, with another Roman Army, preſs'd Mithridates himſelf ſo very cloſe, that in Patana, a Maritime Town in Ætolia, he was in imminent Danger of being made Priſoner, (y) which terrify'd him to ſuch a Degree, that he ſu'd for Peace, which, upon theſe Conditions, was granted him, —— "That he ſhould reſtore Bithynia "to Nicomedes, and Cappadocia to Ariobarzanes, and to the Romans whatever "he had taken from them in the late "War; that he ſhould content himſelf "with his Paternal Kingdom of Pontus, "yield to the Romans ſeventy of his Ships, "and pay them three Thouſand Talents "for the Charges of the War."

BUT the Terms of this Peace were too hard long to be ſubmitted to by a Man of Mithridates's Spirit; and therefore, as ſoon as Nicomedes (who left the Roman People his Heirs) was dead, he again ſeiz'd on Bithynia and Paphlagonia, and the Romans again were forc'd to declare War againſt him.

(z) THE two Conſuls for the Year, Lucius Lucullus and Marcus Cotta, were ſent to carry on this War; but the latter of theſe, being no ways ſkilled in Military Affairs, was overcome by Mithridates not far from Chalcedon, with the Loſs of moſt of his Men, and a good Part of his Fleet, which was there to defend the Coaſts; till Lucullus, coming to his Aſſiſtance, not only drove Mithridates from the Siege of Cyzirus, a City on the Propontis, that was in the Roman Intereſt, but deſtroy'd his Fleet in the Helleſpont, re-took Bithynia and Paphlagonia from him, purſu'd him into his Kingdom, beſieg'd his very Capital, and in one Engagement ruin'd all his Forces, and compelled him to flee into Armenia, there to implore the Protection and Aſſiſtance of Tigranes, his Son-in-Law.

NOR was this all; for, as ſoon as Lucullus underſtood, that Tigranes was engag'd in the War with him, he immediately march'd his Army againſt him, paſs'd the Euphrates, paſs'd the Tigris, defeated the Forces that were ſent againſt him, and, having beſieg'd his Metropolis, with not the twentieth Part of their Number, in one Battle gain'd a compleat Victory over an Army of three hundred and ſix Thouſand Men, that were coming to relieve it. Lucullus, in ſhort, had in every Place the Advantage againſt theſe two confederate Kings, (a) until, by the Management of Publius Clodius, his own Soldiers began to mutiny againſt him, inſomuch, that having loſt all the Power and Authority of a General, he was forc'd to deliver up the Army to Pompey, and return to Rome.

POMPEY, at his firſt entering upon the War, had taken into Alliance with him Phraortes, King of Parthia; but the Mutiny, which had happen'd in the latter End of Lucullus's Time, had given Mithridates an Opportunity of recovering a good Part of his Kingdom, and of getting together a great Number of Forces, wherewith he endeavour'd to harrraſs and diſtreſs the Roman Army, till Pompey, at length, fell upon him by Surprize, vanquiſh'd his Troops, made him flee for Shelter Northward beyond the Springs of the Euphrates, and then march'd directly againſt his Confederate Tigranes: But Tigranes, terrify'd at this, and not ſufficiently provided to reſiſt the Power, that was coming againſt him, was reſolv'd to ſurrender himſelf, and his Kingdom, both into the Hands of the Roman General; who, upon his paying the Romans ſix Thouſand Talents for making a cauſeleſs War againſt them, and yielding up to them all his Conqueſts on this Side the Euphrates, order'd, that he ſhould ſtill reign in his Paternal Kingdom of of Armenia the Greater, and his Son [†] in Gordena and Sophena, two Provinces, that border'd upon it.

(b) In the mean Time Mithridates, having paſs'd thro' ſeveral Scythian Nations, came, at laſt, into the Cimmerian Boſphorus (now the Country of the Crim Tartars) which was Part of his Dominions, and where he had appointed one of his Sons, called Machares [*], to reign. From hence he ſent Embaſſadors to Pompey, offering in his Behalf, that in Caſe he might be allow'd to hold his Paternal Kingdom, (as Tigranes had been) he would pay Tribute to the Romans for it, and relinquiſh to them all his other Dominions; but, when he underſtood, that Pompey would liſten to no Propoſals of Peace, upon any other Condition, than that he ſhould come, and ſurrender himſelf, as Tigranes had done, he could not bring himſelf to ſubmit to that; and therefore, having got together a conſiderable Number of Forces out of the Scythian Nations, wherewith he augmented his own Army, and ſent Agents to engage the Gauls to join him, as ſoon as he approach'd the Alps, (c), he reſolv'd to make a deſperate Expedition [†] thro' the Way of Pannonia, and the Tarentine Alps into Italy itſelf, and there aſſault the Romans, as Hannibal had done, at their very Doors. But when the Army was to go upon their March, they were ſo frighten'd at the Thoughts of it, that they conſpir'd againſt him, and made Pharnaces, his Son, their King.

MITHRIDATES dreaded nothing ſo much as to fall into the Hands of the Romans, and be led in Triumph by them; and therefore, being apprehenſive, that his Son might deliver him to Pompey, and finding no Poſſibility of making his Eſcape, he retir'd into his Apartment, and, having there diſtributed Poiſon to his Wives, his Concubines, and Daughters, that were with him, he took a Doſe of it himſelf; but when he found it did not ſufficiently operate upon him, he had recourſe to his Sword, to finiſh the Work, [*] and ſo dy'd, after he had liv'd ſeventy-two Years, and reign'd ſixty of them.

[†] The Reaſon, why Pompey made this Partition of Tigranes's Kingdom, was, becauſe Tigranes's Son had put himſelf under the Protection of the Romans. The Father Tigranes had three Sons by Cleopatra, the Daughter of Mithridates, two of whom he had, upon light Occaſions, put to Death, and therefore this third, not thinking his Life ſafe within the Power of ſo cruel a Father, fled to Phraortes, King of Parthia, whoſe Daughter he had marry'd, and by him was aſſiſted to invade his Father's Dominions, and lay Siege to Artaxata, his Capital City; but, being routed by Tigranes the Father, and drove out of the Country, he betook himſelf to the Roman Camp, and there, by Way of a Supplicant, caſt himſelf at the Feet of Pompey. Pompey, at firſt, receiv'd him very kindly; but when he ſeem'd diſſatisfy'd with the Portion of his Father's Kingdom, that he had allotted him, and was for exciting the Nobility of Armenia to renew the War againſt the Romans, and the Parthians to join in it, Pompey put him among thoſe, whom he reſerv'd for his Triumph, and, after that Triumph, left him in Priſon. Prideaux's Connection, Anno 66.

By this Means he had much incens'd his Father, and dreaded his Approach. While therefore he was on the Way, he ſent Embaſſadors to him to make his Peace, and to urge in Excuſe, that what he had done in that Reſpect, was by the Neceſſity of his Affairs, and not by Choice. Their ſeveral Civil Wars.

The Romans, after they had overcome all foreign Powers and Potentates, that pretended to rival them, and thereby become Maſters of the greateſt Part of the then known World, fell ſoon into Conteſts with one another about the Government of it, and in every Age, ſome one appear'd, who, at the Expence of the publick Peace, affected to become the ſole Regent of it: But the moſt remarkable Struggles of this Kind, that any Way relate to the Scripture-Hiſtory, were between Sylla and Marius, Cæſar and Pompey, Anthony and Auguſtus.

Between Sylla and Marius.

The Occaſion of the Difference between Sylla and Marius was the Choice of a General to the Mithridatick War. Marius (d), who was by Birth a Plebeian, and of a very mean Parentage, had, by his military Proweſs, and Intereſt with the common People, rais'd himſelf to the chief Command in the Jugurthine War, and, in the War againſt the Teutones and Cimbri, had gain'd himſelf immortal Honour; but, being now upwards of ſeventy Years old, in the late Confederate War he had not ſo well maintain'd his Reputation; whether it was, that old Age rebated his Activity, or Fortune had not thrown Occaſions of ſignalizing himſelf in his Way. Sylla, on the contrary, a Patrician by Birth, and one of the moſt illuſtrious Families in Rome, was lively, active, and impetuous, had gain'd great Battles, taken conſiderable Towns, and, through the whole Courſe of the War, ſo diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by his many and glorious Succeſſes, that he ſoon had the Conſulate conferr'd on him, and was afterwards declar'd Governor of Aſia Minor, and Commander in chief in the War againſt Mithridates. Marius, who thought that all the Preferments of the Commonwealth did of Right belong to him, look'd upon this Preference as an Injuſtice done him, and was therefore reſolv'd to carry by Force, what he had not attain'd by the People's Choice.

To this Purpoſe, he drew over to his Intereſt a Tribune, called Publ. Sulpitius, an inveterate Enemy to Sylla, and who, by his Power and Authority among the People, procur'd a Law to paſs, which took from Sylla the Command of the Army againſt Mithridates, and conferr'd it upon Marius. Marius accordingly ſent ſome Officers of his Party to take Poſſeſſion of the Command of the Army, until he himſelf could come to them; but Sylla had prevented them, and made ſo ſure of the Affections of the Soldiers, that, inſtead of obeying the Orders ſent from Marius, they killed his Officers, and beſought Sylla to lead them againſt his Enemies at Rome, before he tranſported them into Aſia. Incens'd at the Death of his Officers, Marius had caus'd ſeveral of Sylla's Friends to be put to Death, and their Houſes to be plunder'd. This made Sylla haſten his March to Rome, where he ſoon defeated the Body, which Marius and Sulpitius had rais'd to oppoſe him, and enter'd the City Sword in Hand. The Decree, which transferr'd the Command of the Army from him to Marius, he caus'd to be repealed, and Articles of Impeachment drawn up againſt C. Marius, young Marius his Son, the Tribune Sulpitius, and twelve Senators, who were of their Party, for having been the Authors of the late Inſurrection. Hereupon

He was a Prince of great Undertakings; and tho' he failed in moſt of thoſe, wherein he had to do with the Romans, yet, after every Overthrow, we find him ſtill riſing up again with new Vigour; for his laſt Deſign of invading Italy ſufficiently ſhews, that, tho' his Fortune often forſook him, yet his ſtout Heart, his courageous Spirit, and his enterprizing Genius never did. After all, he was a Man of great Vices, as well as Virtues. His Cruelty was ſhewn in the Murther of his Mother, and his Brother, and the great Number of his Sons, Friends, and Followers, whom, at ſeveral Times, and often on ſlight Occaſions, he put to Death. His Ambition was manifeſt by his many unjuſt Invaſions of other Men's Rights for the Augmentation of his own Dominions, and the many wicked Methods of Treachery, Murther, and Perfidiouſneſs, that he took to accompliſh his End. And his Luſt appear'd in the great Number of Wives and Concubines he had to ſerve it: For, in the one or other of theſe Capacities, wherever he found an handſome Woman, he always took her to him, and carry'd ſome of theſe with him wherever he went: But, when reduc'd to any Diſtreſs, he always poiſon'd thoſe, whom he could not carry off, in like Manner, as he did his Siſters, and Daughters in this Caſe, that none of them might fall into the Enemy's Hands. Velleius Paterculus, lib. ii. c. 18. Valerius Maximus, lib. viii. c. 7. Appian. in Mithridaticis, and Plutarch, in Lucullo & Pompeio.

upon they were declar'd Enemies to the Roman Commonwealth; were interdicted Water and Fire, i. e. all Manner of Suſtenance, or Aſſiſtance from any Body; had Rewards ſet upon their Heads, and Troops on all Sides detach'd to hunt them down.

SULPITIUS in the Search was apprehended by ſome of Sylla's Soldiers, who cut off his Head, and carry'd it to Rome, and nail'd it to the Roſtrum; but Marius had the good Luck to make his Eſcape, tho' † he underwent many Dangers, and Hazards of his Life, during the Time of his Exile.

IN the mean Time, Cornelius Cinna, who, tho' a Patrician by Birth, had devoted himſelf to the Plebeian Party; when once he was created Conſul, and Sylla was gone to his Command in Aſia, was for reſcinding the Decree, whereby Marius was proſcrib'd: But, when the Senate perceiv'd his Deſign, they ſoon paſs'd Sentence upon him, declaring him fallen from the Right of a Citizen, and depriv'd of the Dignity of a Conſul, and in his Room they elected Lucius Merula. Cinna, who was naturally proud and fiery, upon hearing of this Sentence, rais'd an Army, with Purpoſe to revenge himſelf upon the Authors of it, and ſent to Marius to come to his Aſſiſtance, who, as he paſs'd thro' the Cities of Italy, was join'd by ſome Veterans, that had formerly ſerv'd under him, and, by promiſing Freedom to all Slaves, that would come under his Banner, had got together a good Body of Men. With theſe, and the Forces, that Cinna had collected, they both marched directly to Rome, where, of the two Conſuls, Octavius was killed on his Tribunal, and Merula (to prevent the Enemy from putting him to a worſe Death) had his Veins open'd; where ſeveral Senators of great Note were by the Order of Marius murther'd in the Streets, their Heads cut off, and laid upon the Roſtrum, and their mangled Bodies left to be devour'd by Dogs; and where he caus'd Sylla's Houſe to be raz'd, his Goods confiſcated, his Wife, Children, and Friends to be proſcrib'd, and himſelf to be declar'd an Enemy to the Commonwealth, even while he was adding large Provinces and Kingdoms to the Roman State.
